

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

no more of this

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,

---

HEARINGS

BEFORE A

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO
UNITED STATES SENATE

SIXTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS

FIRST AND SECOND SESSIONS

PURSUANT TO

S. RES. 112 . . . .

AUTHORIZING A SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INQUIRE INTO THE OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF
THE TERRITORIES OF THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI AND THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

---

Volume 1

---

Printed for the use of the Select Committee on Haiti and Santo Domingo

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

MEDILL McCORMICK, Illinois, Chairman.

PHILANDER C. KNOX, Pennsylvania.

ATLEE POMERENE, Ohio.

TASKER L. ODDIE, Nevada.

WILLIAM H. KING, Utah.

ELISHA HANSON, Clerk.

II 373598

1877

1878

1879

1880

1881

1882

1883

1884

1885

1886

1887

1888

1889

1890

1891

1892

1893

1894

1895

1896

1897

1898

1899

1900

LIST OF WITNESSES.

	Page.
Altidor, Capsine.....	911
Angell, Ernest.....	3
Baker, Frederick C.....	920
Barnett, Maj. Gen. George.....	423
Bautista, Luis.....	1130
Belloni, Heraux.....	916
Belloni, Mezier.....	905
Boco, A. J.....	816
Brigade, Illiodor Romain.....	922, 924
Butler, Brig. Gen. Smedley D.....	511, 529
Caperton, Admiral William B.....	285, 311, 319, 325
Catlin, Brig. Gen. Albertus W.....	355
Cheristil, Mercelus.....	920
Cole, Brig. Gen. Eli K.....	670, 683, 709
Coradin, Dr. Alejandro.....	1117, 1126
Cordero, Francisco Augusta.....	1106
Delerme, Joseph Victor.....	813
Derebier, Jose.....	898
Diendonno, Josef.....	907
Ducheepe, Marc.....	819
Dyer, Maj. Jesse F.....	729
Emanuel, Eria.....	899
Farnham, Roger L.....	105
Fleurina, Salnave.....	929
Forrest, Richard F.....	749
Fortuna, Madam Tilus.....	926
Freeman, Capt. C. S.....	61
Glaude, Choucounne Pierre.....	924
Gruening, Ernest H.....	1199, 1207
Henriquez, Dr. Enriquez.....	1081
Hoepleman, Antonio.....	935
Jeminez, Jose Manuel.....	1093
Johnson, James Weldon.....	779
Jolibois, J.....	868
Joseph, Dorcelius.....	896
Joseph, Madam Philosear.....	903
Jules, Marmontel.....	931
Kelsey, Prof. Carl.....	1238, 1259
Knowles, Horace G.....	48
Lagrono, Arturo.....	968, 1072
Lanoue, Joseph.....	885
Le Sidaner, Abbe Louis Marie.....	849
McLellan, Maj. E. N.....	61
McIlhenny, Hon. John A.....	1123, 1343, 1399
Maxine, Madame Michel.....	900
Mella, Garcia.....	1054
Nord, Joackin.....	913
Onexile, Madame Exile.....	891
Pau, Rafael Isaac.....	1098, 1193
Paultre, Volney.....	875
Perez, Pedro A.....	960
Peynado, Dr. Francisco J.....	946
Pilkington, H. M.....	789
Raphael, Miss Mercilia.....	928
Regolado, Doroteo R.....	1171
Rivera, Pedro Hernandez.....	1119
Rozier, Madame Celicourt.....	909

	Page.
St. Pierre, Polidor.....	857
Sendral, Andrew.....	819
Solond, Previor.....	893
Spear, Frederick L.....	577
Suarez, Emilio.....	1141, 1144
Sylvain, Georges.....	829, 831
Telisma, Odalis.....	895
Thoby, Perceval.....	866
Tifour, Menosthene.....	904
Turner, Maj. T. C.....	457
Valet, Medelus.....	883
Vasquez, Jesus M.....	1136
Victor, Dilon.....	886
Vincent, Stenio.....	3
Waller, Maj. Gen. Littleton W. T.....	607
Williams, Lieut. Col. Alexander S.....	543, 595
Zuckerman, Max.....	759

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 5, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

The committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in the committee room, Capitol, Senator Medill McCormick presiding.

Present: Senators McCormick (chairman), Oddie, and King.

Also present: Mr. Ernest Angell, representing the Haiti-Santo Domingo Independence Society, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Union Patriotique d'Haiti; Mr. Stenio Vincent, representing Union Patriotique d'Haiti; Mr. O. G. Villard, representing Haiti-Santo Domingo Independence Society; Mr. Horace G. Knowles, representing the Patriotic League of the Dominican Republic, and the deposed Dominican Government; Maj. Edwin N. McClellan, United States Marine Corps, as custodian of certain reports and correspondence taken from Navy and Marine Corps files, bearing on Republic of Haiti; Capt. C. S. Freeman, United States Navy, as custodian of certain correspondence and documents bearing on the situation in the Dominican Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. If it meets the judgment of the members of the committee, we might begin by receiving the memorial which was brought to our notice at the last meeting, and any other matter which Capt. Angell has to present.

STATEMENT OF MR. ERNEST ANGELL, 50 PINE STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y., REPRESENTING THE HAITI-SANTO DOMINGO INDEPENDENCE SOCIETY, THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE, AND THE UNION PATRIOTIQUE D'HAITI.

The CHAIRMAN. Capt. Angell, will you tell the committee what memorials and other matter you have to submit?

Mr. ANGELL. We have here copies of the so-called Haitian Memoir, and I am going to ask the indulgence of the committee to permit Mr. Vincent to present that memorial, since he was instrumental in its preparation and holds a high position in the unofficial representation of his country. Mr. Stenio Vincent is the former minister of justice and interior, and minister to The Hague. He was president of the Haitian Senate at the time of its dissolution by the United States armed forces.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Mr. Vincent.

STATEMENT OF MR. STENIO VINCENT, NEW YORK, N. Y., REPRESENTING THE UNION PATRIOTIQUE D'HAITI, FORMERLY MINISTER OF JUSTICE AND INTERIOR, MINISTER TO THE HAGUE, AND PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE, REPUBLIC OF HAITI.

Mr. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman and Senators, in the name of the Union Patriotique d'Haiti, which, with its branches in all the cities and villages of Haiti, has at least 20,000 members, I have the honor of presenting to the Senate commission of inquiry into the occupation and administration of Haiti and Santo Domingo by American forces a copy of the memoir which has already been presented to the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

This memoir relates the conditions and circumstances in which the treaty of September 16, 1915, was imposed upon the Haitian people, the violent means used to achieve this result, and the consequent position of the Haitian Government, which has, in fact, lost the characteristics of a real Government.

Despite the violence with which it was imposed, this treaty has not been carried out. As regards the relations of the Haitian Government to the treaty officials, there is nothing to be added to the forceful declarations made by President Dartiguenave, which have already been made public and when the memoir reproduces.

From the point of view of international law it is plain that the Wilson Government had no right to order an invasion of Haitian territory and to take possession of that small and friendly country. President Wilson himself, at almost the same time, proclaimed that "all the Governments of the Americas are, as far as we are concerned, upon a footing of perfect equality and unquestioned independence," and that "no nation should seek to extend its policy over any other nation or people, but that every people should be left free to determine its own policy, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful."

The only avowed pretext for intervention I find in the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1920. The Secretary wrote as follows:

"The crisis in Haitian affairs demanded immediate and energetic action on the part of the Navy to protect American and foreign lives and property and to restore order throughout that distressed country."

But the fact is that while tragic events occurred in Port-au-Prince on July 27, 1915, resulting in the overthrow and death of President Vilbrun Guillaume Sam, throughout this affair the life of not a single American citizen or foreigner was taken or jeopardized. No property was destroyed. And although there was for the moment no Government, there was no burning or killing or robbing. Quiet was promptly restored and a committee of public safety assumed responsibility for order until a new Government should be elected. It must be borne in mind that there is not a single instance of an American or, indeed, of any foreigner having been killed or molested in Haiti prior to the American occupation.

The truth is that the Wilson administration took advantage of the political adventures of a weak and defenseless nation and forced upon it an intervention which, through the agency of the American minister in Haiti in December, 1914, of the Fort Smith mission in March, 1915, and of the Paul Fuller, Jr., mission in May, 1915, had been long in preparation.

It is sometimes alleged—most curious of all—that the Haitian people invited the United States to straighten out its affairs. The facts are these: Toward the end of 1914 the new Haitian Government was notified that the American Government was disposed to recognize the newly elected Haitian President, M. Davilmar Theodore, as soon as a Haitian commission should sign at Washington a "satisfactory protocol" on the model of the American-Dominican convention of 1907. On December 15, 1914, the Haitian Government, through its secretary of foreign affairs, replied:

"The Government of the Republic of Haiti would consider itself lacking in its duty to the United States and to itself if it allowed the least doubt to exist of its irrevocable intention not to accept any control of the administration of Haitian affairs by a foreign power.

The Haitian people never asked American intervention. The conditions of the American occupation, as described in the Haitian memoir, have not been such as to cause the Haitian people to change their minds. They ask, as that memoir states:

First. Immediate abolition of martial law and of the courts-martial.

Second. Immediate reorganization of the Haitian police and military forces and withdrawal within a short period of the United States military occupation.

Third. Abrogation of the convention of 1915.

Fourth. Convocation within a short period of a constituent assembly, with all the guarantees of electoral liberty.

In concluding this statement I beg leave to draw the most earnest attention of the committee to the existence of martial law in Haiti, a fact which, unless measures are taken to obviate the consequences, may seriously obstruct the investigation. The entire Haitian people rejoiced to hear of the formation of this committee; it firmly believes that the task of justice and of truth is at last to be accomplished. But if it is to participate freely, it is important that very guaranty be given Haitian citizens. I hope that this committee will arrange with the Government to do away with the serious inconvenience which would result were martial law to continue during the period of an inquiry into the abuses committed under the shelter of that law.

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, I presume that at a later date these gentlemen, as well as others who may submit documents, will be available for cross-examination, if the committee desires?

The CHAIRMAN. I understand, Capt. Angell, that it is your purpose to-day to file such memorials as you have prepared, and after the committee has had an opportunity to examine them to be prepared to submit to us a list of witnesses whom you would like to have called?

Mr. ANGELL. That is our intention, Senator.

We have here copies of the so-called Haitian memoir to which Mr. Vincent has referred in his statement. We intend to file with the committee now several copies, which will be at the disposition of the committee.

(The memoir referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

[The Nation, New York, Wednesday, May 25, 1921.]

MEMOIR ON THE POLITICAL, ECONOMIC, AND FINANCIAL CONDITIONS EXISTING IN THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI UNDER THE AMERICAN OCCUPATION BY THE DELEGATES TO THE UNITED STATES OF THE UNION PATRIOTIQUE D'HAÏTI.<sup>1</sup>

I.

BEFORE MILITARY INTERVENTION.

The fact that Mr. Wilson's Government, in its military intervention in Haiti, acted under the influence of certain big financial interests will be shown in the following account:

The National Bank of Haiti, founded in 1881 with French capital and intrusted from the start with the administration of the Haitian treasury, disappeared in 1910 and was replaced by a financial institution known as the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti.

Like the old one the new bank was intrusted, under certain conditions and for the duration of its contract, with the administration of the treasury of the Haitian Government. But a part of the capital stock had been subscribed by the National City Bank of New York, which became for the first time interested in the financial affairs of Haiti.

It was from this time on that financial control of Haiti began to be talked of, and the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti immediately adopted a new attitude with regard to the Haitian Government, never ceasing to create difficulties for it.

On June 21, 1914, President Oreste Zamor left Port au Prince to check a revolutionary movement which had broken out in the North Province. During his absence the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti, giving as a pretext the moratorium decreed in France, the diminution of receipt as a result of the European war, and the insurrection in the North, stopped the execution of a budget convention between it and the Haitian Government, which was drawn up with the object of assuring, until September 30, 1914, the monthly and regular payment of public expenses. In order to live up to its obligations, the Government had to submit to the demands of the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti. It authorized the latter to dispose of an amount of $200,000 drawn from the funds applied to the redemption of paper money, and under this condition the bank resumed the regular administration.

Because of increasing difficulties with the bank, and lack of effective means for checking the revolutionary movement, President Oreste Zamor had to abandon the struggle. He refused the offer that was made to him of help from the United States to keep himself in power, not wishing to compromise the independence of the country, and resigned on October 29, 1914.

Meanwhile an active propaganda was being carried on, spreading the rumor that the President had agreed to sign a treaty with the United States. This rumor persisting, on October 26 Senator Lhérisson demanded an explanation on this subject from the state secretary of foreign affairs, at the senate tribune. The latter denied the existence of any negotiations with the United States, and the senate unanimously passed the following resolution, which fully expressed the sentiment of the country:

<sup>1</sup> This memoir was presented to the Department of State and to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on May 9.

"The senate, after hearing the denial of the state secretary of foreign affairs of the existence of negotiations between the national administration and the Government of the United States, declares its satisfaction with his explanations, condemns any kind of a treaty, and passes the order of the day."

On November 7, 1914, Senator Davilmar Theodore was elected President of the Republic in place of Oreste Zamor. From the very start he was confronted by the same difficulties with the bank. Moreover, the United States Government made as a condition for the recognition of the new administration of Haiti the sending of a commission to Washington for the purpose of signing "satisfactory protocols" relating to various questions, notably a convention for the control of the Haitian customhouses with the United States, modeled after the Dominican-American convention.

On November 27 Senator Lhérisson asked to interpellate the state secretary of foreign affairs with regard to negotiations said to have been agreed upon between the Governments of Haiti and the United States. On December 3, through explanations presented to the senate tribune by Monsieur J. Justin, state secretary of foreign affairs, it was learned that Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States at Port au Prince, had made proposals to the Haitian Government relative to a convention for the control of the Haitian customhouses. M. Justin was hooted by the audience, and even threatened, so strong was the national sentiment against anything which might interfere with the independence and sovereignty of the country.

On December 10, 1914, Hon. A. Bailly-Blanchard, American minister, had presented to the Haitian Government a project for a convention in 10 articles. (See Appendix No. 1.) The United States asked in this project for the control of the administration of the Haitian customhouses, and asked the Haitian Government to agree not to modify the custom duties in such a way as to reduce the revenues, etc., without the consent of the President of the United States.

The Haitian Government, considering that the signature of such a convention would have the effect of placing the country under a protectorate, and dreading the discontent of a people particularly jealous of its independence, notified Mr. Bailly-Blanchard on December 15 of its regret that it could not accept the agreement, in spite of its friendly sentiments for the United States. On the 19th the American minister replied that his Government would not insist upon the question of the treaty.

Two days previous to this communication from Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, in order to force the Haitian Government to accept the control of the customhouses by systematically depriving it of financial resources, American marines carried off the strong boxes of the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti in broad daylight and took on board the gunboat Machias a sum of $500,000 belonging to the Republic of Haiti and destined to be used for the redemption of paper money. In his notes of December 19 and 26, the state secretary of foreign affairs asked him in vain for explanations from the United States Legation regarding this military kidnapping of the funds of the Haitian treasury. This amount is still in the United States, where it was transported and deposited in a New York bank.

In March, 1915, similar measures for procuring control of the Haitian customs began again. This time an American commission landed at Port au Prince, composed of Messrs. Ford and Smith. Mr. Vilbrun Guillaume Sam had just been elected President of the Republic by the National Assembly. On March 15 the commission got in touch with M. Duviolier, state secretary of foreign affairs. After the usual compliments, Mr. Ford, president of the commission, began to communicate to M. Duviolier the object of his mission. It soon appeared to the Haitian minister that the commission had no full powers to negotiate. Mr. Ford readily admitted this; he declared, however, that he was the personal friend of President Wilson and seemed to indicate that he was authorized to speak in the name of the President of the United States. M. Duviolier having shown him the objection to receiving communications from agents without due authorization the negotiations were broken off and the commission returned to the United States.

Scarcely two months later, during the first two weeks of May, 1915, Mr. Paul Fuller, Jr., arrived at Port au Prince with the official title of special agent of the United States and envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Government of Haiti. He was received on the 21st by the President of the Republic, to whom he explained the object of his mission. Mr. Fuller was heard with all the attention to which his official standing and the Government that he represented entitled him. He was asked to submit his proposals to the Haitian Government in writing. On the following day, the 22d, he addressed to the state secretary of foreign affairs a project of a treaty in four articles. (See Appendix No. 2.) The preamble of the project contained the following statements:

"Whereas it is the mutual desire of the high contracting parties that there shall exist between an American minister plenipotentiary—hereafter to be appointed—and the President of Haiti such an intimate and confidential relationship as will enable the American minister plenipotentiary to advise as to such matters as affect the honest and efficient administration of the Government, the President of Haiti agreeing that he will follow the advice so given to the extent of requiring honesty and efficiency in officials and of removing those found to be dishonest and inefficient; the President of the United States and the President of the Republic of Haiti have resolved to enter into a convention for that purpose."

By the terms of the project presented by Mr. Paul Fuller, jr., the United States agrees to protect the Republic of Haiti against any attack by any foreign power, using for this purpose its military and naval forces. The United States also agrees to aid the Haitian Government to put down any internal troubles, and to give it effective support by the use of American military and naval forces within the necessary limits. Moreover, the President of Haiti must agree not to grant any rights, privileges, or facilities of any kind with regard to St. Nicholas Mole—not to concede, sell, rent, or otherwise give up, directly or indirectly through the Government of Haiti, the occupation or use of St. Nicholas Mole to any foreign Government or to any national or nationals of a foreign Government.

This project was examined in the most friendly way, and on June 2 the state secretary of foreign affairs, M. Duviols, presented a counterproject to the American envoy as a basis of negotiations. Regarding the question of St. Nicholas Mole the Haitian Government accepted unreservedly the draft proposed by Mr. Paul Fuller. On the other hand, he asked that the first article of the project should read as follows:

"The Government of the United States agrees to lend its aid to the Republic of Haiti for the conservation of its independence. With this object it promises to intervene in order to prevent any intrusion by any foreign power in the affairs of Haiti and to repulse any act of aggression against the country. It will use for this purpose such forces of its Army and of its Navy as are necessary."

The Haitian counterproject also admitted the principle of a cooperation of American forces to check internal troubles, but stipulated that these forces, after cooperating with the Haitian troops in the reestablishment of order, should be promptly withdrawn from the territory of the Republic on demand of the constitutional authorities.

The Haitian Government asked, moreover, that the United States Government should promise to favor the entrance of American capital into the country and to aid in the improvement of Haitian finances in such a way as to bring about the unification of the public debt and an effective monetary reform. (See Appendix No. 3.)

On June 3, in acknowledging the receipt of the counterproject of the 2d to the state secretary of foreign affairs, Mr. Paul Fuller proposed, in turn, certain modifications of the Haitian text. In a note dated the 4th the state secretary of foreign affairs notified the American envoy of the acceptance of some of the modifications proposed and the rejection of others. On the 5th Mr. Paul Fuller acknowledged the receipt of this note without expressing any opinion on its contents.

The discussion had reached this point when it was learned that the American envoy had suddenly left for the United States. The negotiations were not resumed.

II.

LANDING OF AMERICAN TROOPS IN HAITI.

Treaty of September 16, 1915.—On July 27, 1915, an attack was directed during the night against the President's palace by a revolutionary group—a group which militantly represented amid other antagonisms the overwhelming sentiment against any policies which tended or seemed to tend to the compromising of Haitian independence. On the next day President Vilbrun Guillaume Sam, wounded in the struggle, abandoned the palace and took refuge in the legation of the French Republic.

On the morning of the same day the rumor spread through the town that some political prisoners had been summarily executed in the prisons of Port au Prince during the attack on the national palace. This terrible and deplorable news was only too true. A great cry of grief arose from all classes of the people and soon changed into indignation and anger. Agitation was increasing. On July 28 the relatives of the victims, mostly young people, carried away by grief, invaded the French Legation, seized the ex-President, who was thrown into the street and killed. At the time when these confused scenes occurred there was for the moment no government nor any kind of an organization capable of preventing them. Yet there was no burning or robbing, and no one except the ex-President and the ex-governor of Port au Prince, who were held responsible for the execution of the political prisoners, met death through this tragic incident.

After this act of reprisal, quiet was promptly restored, and a committee of public safety assumed responsibility for order.

Meanwhile, on July 28, the American cruiser George Washington, bearing the flag of Rear Admiral W. B. Caperton, anchored in the harbor of Port au Prince. No notice was taken of it, because it was generally believed that the presence of this vessel had no other object than that of protecting foreign interests if necessary, since Europe was at that time plunged in war.

On July 29, the population awoke to learn that the territory of Haiti was invaded by American forces that had landed at the extreme south of the city the night before. Hundreds and soon thousands of American marines occupied the town and disarmed the surprised Haitians, who were completely bowled over by the terrible events of the last two days—and so the American forces did not meet with any resistance from the population. Two weeks passed, during which the landed forces succeeded in getting control of Port au Prince and its immediate vicinity. Meanwhile other American troops had occupied the city of Cape Haitien, in the northern part of the country. On August 12, 1915, after numerous conferences between leading members of the Haitian Chamber and Senate with the American naval authorities, at the United States Legation and elsewhere, a presidential election was held by permission of the occupation, and M. Dartiguenave, president of the senate, was elected, the majority of the members of the two houses agreeing to support him. It was made clear that the choice of M. Dartiguenave was essentially agreeable to the American occupation. He was therefore elected for a term of seven years in accordance with the Haitian constitution then in force.

Two days after the establishment of the new government, Mr. Robert Beale Davis, jr., American chargé d'affaires, in the name of his Government, presented to President Dartiguenave a project for a treaty. (See Appendix No. 4.) This project was accompanied by a memorandum, in which the President was informed "that the State Department at Washington expected that the Haitian National Assembly, warranting the sincerity and the interest of the Haitians, would immediately pass a resolution authorizing the President of Haiti to accept the proposed treaty without modification." Since this request indicated a certain ignorance of Haitian constitutional practice, as regards the negotiation of treaties, the Government hastened to call Mr. Davis's attention to the article of the constitution relating to this subject and showed him that the President of Haiti did not need special authority of the chambers to negotiate and sign treaties with a foreign power.

The American chargé d'affaires, after examining the constitutional text, readily acknowledged it and withdrew. Imagine the surprise of the Government on receiving the next day a threatening note signed by the chargé d'affaires, insisting that the resolution indicated in the memorandum should be passed by the Haitian Chambers, and setting in the form of an ultimatum a time limit within which that resolution must be passed.

To this demand the Haitian Government replied, through the state secretary of foreign affairs, M. Pauléus Sannon, that it was guided by the most friendly disposition and was ready to negotiate a treaty with the United States, but that rather than accept without modification the project presented it would prefer to resign as a body.

By the occupation of its territory the Government, which had been deprived of even its police power and which had none of the essential attributes of authority, was in reality without independence, without liberty of action. Its existence and its working depended upon the invading American forces, equipped with all modern armaments and now occupying the country.

While the negotiations were being continued laboriously as a result of the determination of the American representative not to accept any modifications in the project of the treaty, Rear Admiral W. B. Caperton, commander in chief of the expeditionary force of the United States, seized the customhouses of Port de Paix, Cap, and St. Marc on August 24, driving out the Haitian officials. And in spite of the repeated official protestations of the Government to the American legation all the customhouses of the Republic were successively occupied and thus came under the control of the officers of the United States Navy. On September 1, 1915, President Dartiguenave solemnly protested in a proclamation against this long series of violations of law, which had just resulted in the occupation of the customhouse of Port au Prince. On the 3d Rear Admiral W. B. Caperton issued a proclamation in which he declared that he had assumed control of the Government and that the town of Port au Prince (the seat of the Government) and its vicinity were under martial law. (See Appendix No. 5.)

In face of the impossibility of getting certain modifications of the project accepted two members of President Dartiguenave's cabinet, the state secretary of foreign affairs, and the state secretary of public works handed in their resignations on September 8, 1915.

The treaty was signed on the 16th of the same month by M. Louis Borno, the new state secretary of foreign affairs, and Mr. Robert Beale Davis, jr., American chargé d'affaires at Port au Prince.

In reality the Government had been from the beginning to end oppressed by a series of violent acts. Apart from the occupation of its territory, the customhouses, which were the chief object of the treaty, had been seized manu militari, and the funds belonging to the Haitian treasury and deposited in the National Bank of the Haitian Republic had been transferred to the account of Rear Admiral W. B. Caperton by his orders.

The convention, after being ratified by the President of the Republic, was sanctioned by the Chamber of Deputies on October 6, 1915, and by the Senate on November 11, 1915.

EXECUTION OF THE TREATY.

1. Modus vivendi of November 29, 1915.—The convention of September 16, 1915, having been negotiated and ratified by the Haitian Government and sanctioned by the Haitian Chambers under the conditions and circumstances set forth above, there was some hope that its execution would soon bring about the return to a situation which would naturally be cleared up by the rules of cooperation and collaboration established between the two Governments by this diplomatic instrument and by the fulfillment of the obligations entered into by the American Government toward the Haitian people.

The Haitian Government, after the landing of the American troops, was actually nothing more than a purely nominal government. It had neither the power to enforce its authority nor finances. The American military authorities had taken possession of the customhouses, had invaded the territory of the nation, and, by the establishment of martial courts, had practically suppressed the Haitian administration of justice. The protests of the Government against these acts of interference in internal politics had remained a dead letter. And it was precisely "to put an end to these difficulties and to obtain the liberation of the territory that was formally promised" that it had to "yield."<sup>1</sup> Consequently pending the sanction of the treaty by the American Senate and the exchange of ratifications the Haitian Government had to accept the arrangement proposed by the American Government itself for the provisional execution of the convention of September 16, 1915.<sup>2</sup> A modus vivendi was signed at Port au Prince on November 29, 1915. It stipulated that "the convention signed on September 16, 1915, between the Haitian Republic and the United States and ratified by the Chamber of Deputies of Haiti on October 6, 1915, and by the Senate of Haiti November 11, 1915, would provisionally go into full effect and would remain in force until the vote of the American Senate was taken regarding the convention, leaving the methods of application of the treaty to be decided at Washington between the Department of State and the Haitian commission named for the purpose." (See Appendix No. 6.)

<sup>1</sup> See Exposé Général de la Situation de la République d'Haïti, année 1917, pp. 5-6.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid.

At the same time that this modus vivendi was signed it was understood between the two high contracting parties that—

1. The municipal administrations actually in the hands of the American occupation should be returned to the Haitian Government after a special agreement for each case.

2. The customs administration should be settled by an understanding between the state secretary of finance and the receiver general relative to the elements of control of customs operations to be furnished to the Haitian Government and its participation in the appointment of employees according to the terms of the convention.<sup>1</sup>

1-A. Municipal administrations.—The modus vivendi dealing with this subject was not carried out in any particular. The municipal administrations were not restored to the Haitian authority, in spite of the formal promise which had been made to this effect. As it had been understood that a special agreement would be made for each case, the Haitian Government, in a memorandum dated December 20, 1915, asked the legation of the United States to begin as soon as possible the restoration of those of Port au Prince. (See Appendix No. 7.) This memorandum, in indicating the procedure which it would be convenient to adopt under the circumstances, added:

"This restoration necessarily involves expenses, and the means of meeting them are a necessary part of this restoration. But as these expenses have actually been paid to the American occupation by Admiral Caperton out of the funds of the Public Treasury their future payment to the Haitian authority would not be a new expense.

"Consequently the Haitian Government considers that in cases where the details of the agreement will bring expense to the Haitian administration the means for meeting them will be furnished from the funds of the Public Treasury."<sup>2</sup>

On January 3, 1916, Mr. A. Bailly-Blanchard, the American minister, in referring to his note of November 29, 1915, and to the Haitian memorandum of December 20, 1915, relative to the restoration of the municipal administrations to the Haitian Government, informed M. Louis Borno, state secretary of foreign affairs, that Rear Admiral Caperton, United States Navy, commanding the forces of the United States in Haiti and in Haitian waters, had received instructions to suspend action in the affair for the time being until the employees provided for in the treaty and the modus vivendi should be named and ready to take office.<sup>3</sup>

Thus, in spite of the modus vivendi of November 29, 1915, proposed by the Government of the United States (which provided for the complete execution of the convention of September 16, 1915, pending the vote of the American Senate), the Haitian Government was always confronted by the state of affairs previous to the convention. And the Haitian Government, through the state secretary of foreign affairs, stated to the American minister at Port au Prince that "such a situation could not last any longer without creating between the two Governments a very serious equivocation which would not be pleasant for either party."<sup>4</sup>

2-A. Customs officials and employees.—Since the constitution of the Haitian Republic states clearly that the President of Haiti alone appoints and recalls public officials, article 2 of the treaty of 1915 could only mean a modification of that constitution when it states that the agents of control designated by it, namely, the receiver general, the financial adviser, and the assistants and employees of their offices—offices of collection and offices of payment—may be Americans and subject to nomination by the President of the United States. It was clear, therefore, that the other officials and employees of the public administration of Haiti, and particularly of the customs administration, must be Haitians and appointed exclusively by the President of Haiti. This interpretation was self-evident. In addition to the correspondence exchanged at the time of the signing of the modus vivendi of November 29, 1915—correspondence in which the American Legation determined the following point:

<sup>1</sup> Correspondence between M. Bailly-Blanchard, American minister to Port au Prince, and M. Louis Borno, state secretary of foreign affairs. See Exposé Général de la Situation de la République d'Haiti, année 1917, p. 14.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> See communication of the American Legation, Report of M. Louis Borno, state secretary of foreign affairs, to the President of Haiti, vol. 1, pp. 219, 220, 221.

<sup>4</sup> See Report of M. Louis Borno, state secretary of foreign affairs, to the President of Haiti, vol. 1, p. 221.

"(2) The customs administration will be settled by an understanding between the state secretary of finance and the receiver general relative to the elements of control of customs operations to be furnished to the Haitian Government, and its participation in the appointment of employees according to the terms of the treaty"—the interpretations referred to in the law of sanction for the said treaty, dated November 11, 1915, which had been officially transmitted to the Government at Washington before the sanction of this same treaty by the American Senate and the exchange of ratifications, contain the following explanation with regard to article 2:

"B. The customs personnel is Haitian, appointed exclusively and directly by the President of Haiti. The 'assistants and employees' designated in article 2 are assistants of the receiver; they do not make up the customs personnel. They are assigned to the customs by the receiver's office and control the customs operations."

Moreover, in a communication of September 16, 1915, addressed to Mr. R. B. Davis, chargé d'affaires ad interim of the United States of America at Port au Prince, the state secretary of foreign affairs, M. Louis Borno, recalled in the following terms the specifications relating to this subject, which he had fixed at a conference held the day before at the department of foreign affairs:

"With the sincere desire of avoiding from now on any misunderstanding upon certain important points, I have drawn your attention to the following:

"• • • (3) By the words 'collect,' 'receive,' and 'apply,' in article 2, first paragraph, etc., the Government understands that what has been fixed by those words is a service of collectorship (collect, receive) and of payment (apply).' (See art. 5.) The receiver general and the assistants and employees to be appointed by the President of Haiti upon the nomination of the President of the United States form a service of collection of all customs duties, a separate department from the customs administration as such, which latter consists in the storing, verification, and taxation of merchandise according to the tariff. Consequently, the Haitian employees of this customs service will depend upon the exclusive appointment of the President of Haiti."

Nevertheless, on this point also the modus vivendi remained a dead letter.

AFTER THE EXCHANGE OF RATIFICATIONS.

The formality of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of September 16, 1915, was carried out at Washington, D. C., on May 3, 1916. The régime of military administration established by the American occupation nearly a year before had now become definitely incompatible with the terms of the convention which established the rights and duties of the high contracting parties. The question was, then, to keep the two Governments henceforth within the limits of the rules contained in the convention. In the departments of public administration which were not touched upon by the convention of 1915 it goes without saying that exclusively American action could not rightly be imposed upon the Haitian Government, however disposed it might be to accept a certain cooperation. But the legitimate and judicial claims of the Haitian Government met with no success. When the treaty became a fact, it had no more effect in relieving the situation than the modus vivendi. The municipal administrations still remained in the hands of the American military authorities.

In reference to the public works which the occupation had taken over in the month of June, 1916, without any agreement with the Haitian Government, or even the slightest warning to the minister concerned, the Haitian Government protested to the American legation and declared that it declined all responsibility for any expenses against the Haitian State which might be incurred by the occupation, whether for the public works or for any other cause not justified by the convention; whereupon a letter on this subject from Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, addressed to the American minister, was sent to the Haitian Government, from which we quote the following paragraph:

"3. If, as stated by the minister of foreign affairs, the treaty has been in operation since May 3, 1916, I know nothing of it; I must receive my information through proper military channels before I can relax the established rules under which we have been operating."

<sup>1</sup> See letter of June 28, 1916, Louis Borno, Report to the President of Haiti, etc., vol. 1, p. 227.

<sup>2</sup> Letter of June 30, 1916, from the commander of the expeditionary force. See Borno, Report to the President of Haiti, etc., vol. 1, p. 231.

Thus it is clear that the occupation, up to the end of 1917, carried on all public works, without any control by the Haitian Government over the nature of the works, the manner of carrying them out, their expediency, or even the amount spent on these works.* Twice, meanwhile, on January 3, 1916, and July 14, 1916, Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, the American minister, officially declared that the occupation would continue to operate the public works only until the officials designated in the treaty should be appointed and ready to exercise their duties. Now, since in the month of September, 1916, Mr. E. G. Oberlin, United States Navy, had been named engineer for the department of public works, he had immediately informed the said department that he was ready to enter completely into the execution of his duties as specified in article 13 of the treaty of September 16, 1915, and into the regulations of the bureau of engineering.

Mr. Oberlin, after passing several months at the department of public works without being able to accomplish anything, was recalled early in 1917 and replaced immediately by Mr. E. R. Gayler, United States Navy. Nothing had changed, that is to say, the agents of the occupation had continued to operate the public works without any participation by the department of public works."

And the Haitian Government was justified in drawing the following conclusions in said Exposé Général de la Situation, etc., 1917, in the chapter on foreign relations, and in the section dealing with the difficulties just described:

"It can be said, then, that the treaty of September 16 has not been carried out, and that this violation of the engagements entered into is due to the agents of the American Government." "

When the first officials of the treaty arrived at Port au Prince in July, 1916, and entered upon their duties, the question of appointments to the customs of the Republic which had come up at the signing of the modus vivendi and which had not yet been solved promptly arose again.

Mr. Addison T. Ruan, financial adviser, and Mr. Maumus, receiver general, claimed that these appointments were subject to the nomination of the President of the United States. The Haitian Government maintained that they depended upon the exclusive designation of the President of the Republic of Haiti. In spite of everything, the opinion of Mr. Ruan and Mr. Maumus was indorsed by the Department of State; whence it would have resulted, by adhering to the text which was the object of the controversy, that the most insignificant employee in any customhouse in Haiti whatsoever must be nominated by the President of the United States and appointed by the President of Haiti. "In fact," said the state secretary of foreign affairs of Haiti in a communication of March 26, 1916, to Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, American minister at Port au Prince, "neither has the President of the United States ever presented such proposals, nor has the President of Haiti until now been responsible for the appointment of any of the Haitians actually employed in the customs administration or in the office of the receiver general. These citizens have been appointed in these two administrations by the military occupation, without any participation by the President of Haiti." And on this occasion the state secretary of foreign affairs of Haiti drew the attention of the United States legation to a most serious and unjust act, namely, the introduction into Haitian public administrations by the American occupation of various persons of foreign nationality other than American, much to the prejudice of our compatriots.

The point of view of the State Department on this question of appointment of Haitian officials in the customhouses of the Republic was accepted only under the express reserve of recourse to arbitration by virtue of the arbitration treaty between Haiti and the United States of January 7, 1909."

Far from stopping at these encroachments, which already constituted so many violations of the treaty, far from consenting to the restoration of the municipal administrations just mentioned, the constant and willful tendency of the American military authorities in Haiti has been, on the contrary, to extend more and more the powers, either of the gendarmerie or the occupation itself, which was by the terms of the treaty purely temporary and provisional, adding to them by assigning still other public functions. The serious difficulties created at Port au Prince with regard to the postal and telegraph administrations show clearly the nature of the procedure adopted to set the treaty aside and to absorb in the most unjustifiable manner what was left of the national administration.

* See Exposé Général de la Situation de la République d'Haiti, année 1917, p. 90.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid., pp. 90, 91, and 92.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid., p. 16.

<sup>12</sup> See communication of Mar. 26, 1917. Borno, Report to the President of Haiti, etc., pp. 216, 217.

On February 8, 1916, the State Department and the Haitian commission sent to Washington in December, 1915, at the proposal of the United States Government, had settled the terms of an agreement relative to the gendarmerie of Haiti. The signing of this agreement had been postponed at the request of the American State Department until the sanction of the treaty by the American Senate and the congressional vote of a special act to permit United States officers to serve in the Haitian administration. When this sanction had been given and the special act had been voted, the State Department, instead of signing the agreement that had been drawn up and decided upon, proposed a new one to the Haitian Legation at Washington, which had just been invested with the full powers of the Haitian commission recalled toward the beginning of June, 1916. The new project, transmitted to the Haitian Government by M. Solon Ménos, Haitian minister at Washington, contained an article 2, drawn up as follows:

"* * * The medical officers necessary for the sanitary measures provided in article 13 of the treaty, the operation, management, and maintenance of the telegraphs, telephones, the lighthouse service, and the postal service shall be directed and controlled by the commandant of the gendarmerie."

This meant the turning over of the whole civil administration on to an organization whose exclusively military and policing character had been determined in the treaty of September 16, 1915. The Haitian Government decided not to accept this article. In the course of a conference held on August 3, 1916, at the United States legation between Mr. G. Scholle, American chargé d'affaires, Col. Waller, commandant of the expeditionary corps, and Maj. Smedley D. Butler, commandant of the gendarmerie of Haiti, on one hand, and M. Edmond Hénaux, secretary of state for finance, and M. Louis Borno, secretary of state for foreign affairs, on the other, the American chargé d'affaires produced a text which he declared was that of the State Department and which differed considerably from the official text transmitted to the Haitian Government by M. Solon Ménos, Haitian minister at Washington. This new text read as follows:

"Article 2. The department of public health and public works, as prescribed by article 13 of the treaty, the operation, the management, and maintenance of telegraphs, telephone, the light house service, and the postal service shall be directed and controlled by the commandant of the gendarmerie."

Mr. Gustave Scholle declared that if within 24 hours the Haitian Government did not take official steps for placing under the control of the Haitian gendarmerie the services indicated by this article 2, the United States legation would telegraph to the State Department not to sign the agreement on hand. And Col. Waller added that if in 24 hours this step was not taken, he would telegraph to Washington that the Haitian Government was insincere and unstable. M. Louis Borno asked Mr. Scholle to communicate to him in writing the statement which he had just made. Mr. Scholle would not consent.

The situation was not improved and the pressure became more and more violent. In informing the Haitian minister at Washington of the verbal ultimatum which the Haitian Government had received, M. Louis Borno, secretary of state for foreign affairs, said, in a cablegram of August 5, 1916:

"* * * Inform immediately the Secretary of State of this state of coercion. Say that the Haitian Government has decided to refuse all military demands contrary to the convention. Do not fail to make clear and defend our government's position. Meanwhile we are replying to the legation that since negotiations are being carried on at Washington, you are deciding the question with the State Department. Keep me constantly informed of your activities and of results. Situation serious, demands speed and energy. Our government stands firm and does not intend to yield to the new demands of the occupation, which are supported by the American legation."

Finally an agreement was reached, signed August 24, 1916, at Washington, by the terms of which "the operation, management, and maintenance of the telegraphs and telephones in the Republic of Haiti shall be under the control and direction of the engineer or engineers to be nominated by the President of the United States and authorized for that purpose by the Government of Haiti in accordance with article 13 of the treaty of September 16, 1915."

This agreement added to the convention by increasing the powers and authority of the engineer or engineers designated by article 13.

Instead of simply keeping to the régime fixed by the treaty, the Haitian Government was constantly obliged by the American officials to take unjustified initiatives. It was forced to accept the placing of American superintendents in charge of the postal service and of the ministry of public education, with salaries equal to and in some cases even higher than those of the state secretaries.

At the municipal councils it was obliged to appoint so-called council officers who had, actually, the exclusive administration of the communes and absolute control of municipal affairs, including revenues and expenses. This state of affairs, not provided for in the treaty, gave rise to regrettable conflicts. When a council officer (American) was confronted by an administrator of finances and provisional prefect (Haitian official) wishing to investigate the accounts of the commune, as the law obliges him to do, it always ended either with the forced silence of the Haitian official or with all kinds of difficulties which he had to face simply because he was trying to do his duty. In this connection we particularly desire to call attention to the case of M. Auguste Magloire, administrator of finances and provisional prefect of the district of Port au Prince, and therefore appointed by law to verify the accounts of the communes in his section. This high official, with no reason that could ever be found, was one day brutally arrested and imprisoned by the American military occupation. After 21 days of detention he was released without ever having undergone any examination. He was again arrested, shortly after, and made to understand that his difficulties would be over as soon as he should resign as administrator of finances and provisional prefect of the district of Port au Prince. In fact, he sent in his resignation to the President of Haiti and immediately was released. Since then he has not been disturbed. It seems to have been too attentive an examination of the accounts of the council officers for certain communes of the district of Port au Prince that caused all his troubles. We think that it would be interesting, in an investigation, to determine this point and others with similar implications.

The treaty of September, 1915, in addition to the military officials of the gendarmerie, provides for (1) a financial adviser; (2) a receiver general of customs, his assistants and employees; (3) one or more engineers of public works; (4) one or more engineers for public hygiene.

The rights and duties of these officials are clearly determined by the treaty or by special agreements or regulations which determine the departments of public administration in which they must cooperate with the Haitian Government. Consequently, all other departments of the public administration should have remained under the exclusive control of the Haitian Government. But actually there is not a branch of public service in Haiti which has not had to submit, at one time or another, to illegal interference, often brutal, either by the gendarmerie laying down the law to the Government or by the military occupation, the absolute master of the situation.

Even the Haitian department of justice has not escaped serious traces of their domination. In fact, in the "Exposé Général de la Situation de la République d'Haiti, 1917," p. 15, a chapter is found which presents the case as follows:

"The encroachments of American agents have been felt also in the department of justice. In spite of all the protests of the department of foreign affairs to the American Legation, these encroachments have not ceased. Great harm has been caused both to the persons under jurisdiction and to the dignity of the magistracy itself, whose decisions usually encounter obstacles on the part of the agents from Washington. It is most necessary that such a state of things cease at once."

By the terms of article 10 of the treaty of September 16, 1915, the gendarmerie was created for the sake of preserving internal peace, security of individual rights, and complete observance of the said treaty.

The maintenance of peace, which had been disturbed too often in recent times, was one of the essential objects of American intervention, and it was to obtain this that provision was made for an effective rural and urban gendarmerie composed of Haitians, but organized and directed by American officers. How has the Haitian gendarmerie, commanded by American officers, who themselves never acted except under orders of the American occupation, how has this public force understood and carried out the object of article 10 of the treaty? The answer to this is the whole history of American intervention in Haiti.

Internal peace could not be preserved because the permanent and brutal violation of individual rights of Haitian citizens was a perpetual provocation to revolt, because the terrible military despotism which has ruled in Haiti for the last six years has not created and could not create for the Haitian people that security which it was hoped the application of the treaty would bring about. Among other things, it is sufficient to call attention here to the system of corvée, that is to say, forced unpaid labor on public roads, imposed for military purposes upon the Haitian peasant. This will give some idea of why the gendarmerie, aided and encouraged by the American occupation, instead of assuring respect for individual rights, caused the revolt known as the revolt of the Cacos, for the repression of which so many useless atrocities were committed by the marines in our unhappy country. This gendarmerie, in spite of the aid of the marines of the occupation and the use of the most modern armament (machine guns, military planes, armored cars, etc.), was never able, by purely military methods, to contend with these undisciplined and unarmed bands known as Cacos. Therefore it is ineffective. And if it is ineffective it is because, in spite of the repeated warnings of the Government, the personnel which composes it was not chosen as it should have been. In fact, it contains men "wanted" by the Haitian courts for criminal acts (robberies, murders, etc.). Examination of the archives of the ministries of the interior and of justice of Haiti will throw light on this subject.

The same article 10 of the treaty of September 18, 1915, provides that "the American officers of the gendarmerie will be replaced by Haitians when the latter, after an examination by a committee chosen by the superior officer in charge of the Haitian gendarmerie, are judged capable of carrying out their duties effectively." This provision naturally implied the establishment of an officers' training school. But this officers' training school has never been established. It could not be, for two reasons:

1. As a general rule, the American officers of the gendarmerie are privates (in the American Marine Corps) who have been made officers in Haiti, and who have had nothing but a most elementary education, which naturally renders them incapable of any military training.

2. For this officers' school a special recruitment would have to be made, since the rank and file of the gendarmerie, as it is, is composed chiefly of illiterates. After the voting of the treaty, a certain number of young Haitians, expecting the early establishment of an officers' training school, enrolled themselves as students. But the American military authorities, knowing well that the former American privates who had become officers in Haiti could not be converted into military instructors, put off, under one pretext or another, the cooperation that was offered them.

And this provision of the treaty, too, remained a dead letter. If the urban gendarmerie is ineffective, the rural gendarmerie does not exist at all, despite article 10 of the treaty. After the arrival of the American occupation an old constabulary which had been serviceable and could easily have been improved and adapted to new conditions was abolished. It was not replaced by any kind of an organization, and so far the rural gendarmerie has not been established. The insecurity in the country is such as to discourage the peasants, causing them to leave the country where they were born and spent their entire lives and to emigrate in large numbers to Cuba.

Here is the way with the customary reserve characteristic of official documents and their euphemisms dictated by policy, in which the Haitian department of the interior expresses its judgment of the gendarmerie:

"It renders to the country, if not all the services that might be expected of it, at least those which its organization, still incomplete, permits it. * * *<sup>15</sup> One of the greatest concerns of the department is to assure complete and absolute security in the country. It is working there tenaciously, and hopes shortly, with the active aid of the gendarmerie, to be rewarded for its efforts and to accomplish its aim."<sup>16</sup>

The President of the Republic of Haiti, in an interview with correspondents of American newspapers (New York Tribune, Chicago Tribune, etc.) at Port-au-Prince in November, 1920, expressed a more precise and more categorical criticism than that of the department of the interior: "The rural police," he said, "which was abolished after the occupation, has not been reorganized as provided by article 10 of the convention and article 118 of the constitution. The robberies and insecurity in the country discourage the peasants in their work; they emigrate in crowds to Cuba."<sup>17</sup>

Official documents of Haiti clearly confirm that the treaty of September 18, 1915, has never been carried out by the American Government.

<sup>15</sup> Exposé Général de la Situation de la République d'Haiti, année, 1917, p. 76.

<sup>16</sup> Exposé Général de la Situation de la République d'Haiti, 1917, p. 62.

<sup>17</sup> See L'Essor, Port au Prince, Nov. 24, 1920.

On January 13, 1916, more than a month after the modus vivendi of November 29, 1915, signed between the two Governments for the provisional execution of the treaty, M. Louis Borno, state secretary for foreign affairs, wrote to Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, American minister at Port-au-Prince:

"We are continually confronted with proceedings antedating the convention. * * * The rule which the two high parties sanctioned by their signatures is the only one which ought to be applied. The Haitian Government must, then, require the fullest application actually possible."<sup>17</sup>

By the exchange of ratifications which took place at Washington on May 3, 1916, the treaty had gone fully into force. On June 5, 1916, the State secretary for foreign affairs, in a communication to M. Solon Ménos, Haitian minister at Washington, protested against the continuation of conditions which the treaty should have ended. Asking that a copy of his communication be submitted to Mr. Lansing, the Haitian secretary of foreign affairs stated, among other things:

"Is it possible to permit the administration of the Haitian customs and of the Haitian national treasury to be carried on any longer without any control by the Haitian Government? What is the amount of the customs revenues? Just what are all the expenses that are being incurred? What are the funds at the disposal of the treasury? The Government, in spite of its repeated demands, is unable to say. Up to the present the occupation has not, for nearly a year, supplied any report or any accounts. The Government has not the slightest doubt regarding the absolute honesty of the American officers; this honesty is above all question. What it wants to have established is the abnormal and disagreeable position of a Government which is refused information concerning its own affairs, and even refused any knowledge of circumstances or control of the situation. * * *"

On June 29, 1916, in another communication to M. Solon Ménos, minister to Washington, the state secretary for foreign affairs expressed himself as follows:

"* * * You can not do too much to keep the State Department on guard against the usurping tendencies of the occupation. Do not spare any effort to make the American Government understand that the Dartiguenave Government, which signed the convention, must necessarily be firmly bound to the success of its work; that it is, therefore, strictly interested in supplying the greatest and frankest cooperation to the intervention, but within the limits of the convention as faithfully interpreted. If it acted otherwise, if, now that this convention has been proclaimed by President Wilson and is in full force, the Haitian Government permitted its clauses not to be observed in the spirit which dictated them; that is to say, a spirit respectful of our rights as a free State, if the military occupation can be permitted to invade all Haitian public services, public works, and others—in violation of the clauses of the convention which provide for the appointment of special agents, engineers, and others—what would happen? The Haitian people, humiliated by this contempt for solemn promises, would have nothing but hatred and repulsion for American intervention. The Haitian Government which would accept such a situation would find itself generally discredited, to say nothing of the fact that it would assume terrible responsibilities in the eyes of its country.

"Keep in mind these ideas, Mr. Minister. They suffice for you to know what solutions the Government will accept in the negotiations which are confided to you.

"Most especially I draw your attention to the necessity for putting an end to martial law. As long as there were any threats of revolutionary trouble, unimportant as they might be, the Government said nothing about its existence. But it is undeniably certain that nothing really serious and of a general character could be attempted now against the public peace. Therefore this martial law which weighs upon the country has become utterly useless. Demand its abolition with insistence. * * *"

In a communication of June 28, 1916, the Haitian secretary of state for foreign affairs, stated to Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, American minister, at Port au Prince:

"* * * However strong may be our desire always to maintain perfect harmony with the American authorities, a natural duty, higher than anything else, binds up—the duty of scrupulously watching out for the observance of the clauses of the solemn convention which binds our two countries and which has been in effect since the 3d of last March.

<sup>17</sup> Communication of Jan. 13, 1916, Report to the President of Haiti, by Louis Borno, secretary for foreign affairs, vol. 1, p. 222.

<sup>18</sup> Communication of June 5, 1916. Ibid., vol. 1, p. 225.

<sup>19</sup> Communication of June 24, 1916, Louis Borno, Report to the President of Haiti, vol. 1, pp. 200-201.

"The Haitian Government would betray its duty if, by its silence, it sanctioned the formal violations of this convention which have just been described, etc."*

As for the civil administrations which, against the will of the Haitian Government and contrary to the modus vivendi of November 29, 1915, still remained in the hands of the occupation, the state secretary of foreign affairs, in a communication of July 17, 1916, made the following remark to Mr. Gustave Scholle, chargé d'affaires ad interim of the United States of America:

"* * * Such an abnormal situation can not be indefinitely permitted. Since the exchange of ratifications definitely did put the treaty into force, the Haitian Government, as well as the Government of the United States, was bound to adjust everything as soon as possible to the rules of the new régime, solemnly sanctioned and proclaimed by the public authorities of the two countries. The occupation should have from that time on restrained its activities and confined itself within the limitations of its military functions. * * *

But contrary to that, etc."*
According to the Haitian constitution (art. 80) the executive power must submit annually to the two legislative chambers within a week of the opening of the regular session a sort of general report covering everything of a political or administrative nature that has been done during the past year. This official document is known as "Exposé Général de la Situation de la République d'Haïti." Following are the comments found therein with regard to the non-execution of the convention of September 16, 1915:

"* * * It can be said that the convention of September 16, 1915, has not been carried out to date, and that this breach of promises is due to the agents of the American Government. * * *

"I deeply regret to state that the various matters which formed the subject of the last exposé regarding the convention of 1915 are still unchanged. The same differences still exist, and I should only repeat myself by relating them to your excellency.

"I confine myself to giving you assurance that the department will continue its activities, convinced of our right and confident of the triumph of all that is just and fair."

"* * * My department is obliged to repeat what the Exposés of 1917 and 1918 stated with regard to the application of the convention of 1915. Not only has it been impossible to solve the matters brought up after the ratification of the convention, but, moreover, the vote of the budget of 1918-19 gave rise to such difficulties between the Government and the financial adviser, who was supported by the chief of the military occupation at this time, Col. J. H. Russell, that the department of foreign affairs was obliged to address a note to the State Department at Washington" to protest against the procedure which certain American officials considered themselves entitled to adopt toward us.

"To this note the Secretary of State at Washington, Mr. Robert Lansing, replied a few days later, saying to the Haitian Government that, 'in view of the very serious implication of the general accusation against American officials in Haiti contained in the above-mentioned note, the Government of the United States desires the Government of Haiti to make a more precise and more detailed declaration regarding the questions raised in the note of November 20, 1918.'"

"To satisfy this entirely just demand of the Secretary of State the department of foreign affairs collected in a memorandum all the facts pertaining to the matters of which the Haitian Government had complained in its note of November 20 and sent it to our legation at Washington, with instruction for its submission to the Department of State. It was submitted on February 14 last by our chargé d'affaires ad interim in Washington."*

* Communication of June 28, 1916. Ibid., pp. 227-228.

* Communication of July 17, 1916. Louis Borno, Report to the President of Haiti, vol. 1, pp. 233-234.

* Ibid., p. 15.

* Ibid., p. 7.

* See Appendix No. 8.

* See Appendix No. 9.

* See Exposé Général de la Situation de la République d'Haïti, 1919, pp. 14, 15.

In November, 1920, it was the President of the Haitian Republic himself who, in a striking declaration made to the correspondents of American newspapers who had followed in Haiti the naval court of inquiry presided over by Admiral Mayo, formulated the grievances of the Haitian Government with regard to the nonexecution of the convention of September 16, 1915.

After recalling the aims of American intervention in Haiti, such as they were indicated in the preamble of the treaty of September 16, 1915; that is to say, (a) maintenance of public peace, and (b) establishment of the finances on a sound basis and the economic development of Haiti, M. Dartiguenave made points indicated subsequently. (1) As to the matter of general peace, he had hoped that the commission of inquiry presided over by Admiral Mayo would try to find out how the Americans charged with maintaining this peace understood and accomplished their mission. M. Dartiguenave had granted his interview to the American journalist while the naval court of inquiry was being held at Port au Prince, and he had doubtless been unwilling, in communicating his opinions as chief of the Haitian Government, to appear to exercise any influence on the work of this court. He received no report either from the gendarmerie, of which he was legally commander in chief, or from the occupation. This is what he said on this subject:

" * * * Article 103 of the Constitution, in the third paragraph, provides that a law shall establish in the communes and provinces [Haitian] civil officials who are to represent directly the executive power. It is impossible for the Haitian Government to have these civil officials, because the American minister and the financial adviser have refused the appropriations, however small, for salaries for these positions, in consequence of which the executive power has no special agent to report to him—the gendarmerie making no reports on general conditions in the country, except to the chief of the occupation.

"If a paid official reports to the executive power, his salary is cut off if indeed he is not arrested and tried by court-martial, whether he be judge, a Government commissioner, or a mayor [magistrat communal], and this happens in contravention of the law and articles 101 and 102 of the constitution."

Regarding the aid which the Government of the United States had solemnly promised to the Haitian people for the improvement of their finances, their economic development, and the prosperity of the Republic, the declarations of the President of Haiti are as follows:

" * * * No effective aid has been brought to Haiti for the development of its agricultural and industrial resources, and no constructive measure has been proposed, for the purpose of placing its finances on a really solid basis.

"By the terms of article 2, paragraph 2, of the convention, the President of Haiti appoints, upon the nomination of the President of the United States, a financial adviser who will be an official attached to the ministry of finances. The adviser is, then, a Haitian official paid $10,000 (American gold) annually by the Haitian public treasury. But in reality the financial adviser is not responsible to the Haitian Government. On the contrary his actions indicate his purpose to subject it to his will.

"Numerous facts show the omnipotence which the financial adviser arrogates to himself. Nothing more strikingly illustrates this than the confiscation by the financial adviser, with the support of the American minister, of the salaries of the President of the Republic, the State secretaries, and the members of the legislative council, because the Government had refused to insert in the contract of the National Bank of Haiti (which is controlled by the National City Bank of New York), a clause prohibiting the importation into Haiti of foreign gold coins, which the financial adviser wanted to force upon them. He also prevented the voting of the budget, contrary to the provision of the Haitian constitution.

"Article 2 of the convention says: 'The financial adviser shall draw up an adequate system of public accounting.' We are still waiting for this new system which was to simplify the accounts of the State. Instead of introducing such a system, the financial adviser demanded the abolition of an old Haitian institution, the audit office (chambre des comptes). In spite of all the efforts of the Government to reestablish this indispensable organization, the financial adviser persistently refused to have it done. Consequently there is no way for the Haitian people to control its finances, which are entirely in the hands of the American officials of the treaty.

"Article 2 of the convention says also: 'The financial adviser shall help to increase the revenues.' The financial adviser has so far proposed nothing to the Government to bring this about. The only attempt he has made in this direction was the project for the creation of internal taxes, which he presented in 1918 and which he wanted the Government to pass within 24 hours. The project was so crude and so badly drawn up that the Government had to refuse this demand and prepare a counterproject better adapted to the customs and financial resources of the Hawaiian nation.

"It is about 20 months since this counterproject was returned to the financial adviser for further consideration; we have heard nothing more of it.

"Article 2 of the convention says further: 'The financial adviser shall inquire into the validity of the debts of the Republic, shall keep the two Governments informed regarding all future debts, shall recommend improved methods of collecting and applying the revenues, and shall make such recommendations to the state secretary for finances as are judged necessary for the well-being and prosperity of the Republic. * * *'

"No inquiry into the validity of our debts has been made.

"No improved method of collecting the revenues has been recommended.

"No recommendation for the well-being and prosperity of the Republic has yet been made to the Haitian Government.

"The duties of the financial adviser, as defined in article 2 of the convention, doubtless require a man of great financial experience. This essential consideration does not seem to have had any weight in the choice of the financial adviser. This is proved by the unfortunate transaction which he put through for the Republic last year, in the face of directly contrary instructions of the Haitian Government. Three million American dollars were to be converted into francs for Haiti's best interests." He converted them in October, 1919, at a time when the value of the franc was lowering rapidly, the exchange being 9 and a fraction francs for a dollar. Shortly afterwards the dollar was worth 17 francs. This transaction involved the Haitian people in a loss of several millions of francs.

"Faced with this inertia on the part of the financial adviser, the Haitian Government is augmenting its efforts. It is studying various measures and preparing projects which it considers more likely to meet the numerous needs of progress of the Haitian people. All its measures, all its projects encounter the opposition either of the financial adviser or of the American minister, who very often rejects them without examination and without condescending to say why.

"Now we come to the strangest phase of the situation from the point of view of the Haitian Government. Not only have American officials done nothing that could have been done for the intellectual development and economic prosperity of the country, but they oppose the Government's work in this direction. Numerous projects for laws dealing with the finances, agriculture, public education, administrative and rural organization meet with either the direct opposition of the American officials or lie unanswered in the archives of the American Legation.

"Particular resistance is made to projects dealing with the education of the people, such as for the preparation of teachers for primary education, industrial and agricultural schools, secondary or higher education, and for the construction of school buildings.

"The Government does not pretend to believe that the projects which it prepares are perfect, but since they approximate the vital needs of the country the American officials ought to take the trouble to examine them, and if they find that they are imperfect or bad, should propose modifications or substitute other projects which could be discussed with the common desire to arrive at a satisfactory solution. In this way alone can a 'cordial cooperation' be obtained, and only in this way ought it to be understood.

"Is it understood in this way? Never.

"When the financial adviser proposes a measure he understands that this measure is to be adopted without any examination by the Government.

"When the Government does the proposing, the proposal is rejected without examination or modifications are made which it must accept without discussion.

"And it is always in the name of the Government of the United States that the American minister imposes upon the Haitian people the least worthy demands of the American officials, who are paid with Haitian money. And if the Government refuses to yield the worst humiliations are inflicted upon it.

<sup>2</sup> For a payment of interest on the debt of France, then due.

20 INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

"The excuse usually made in support of the rejection of Government projects is the following: 'There is no money.'

"Of course there is always enough money for American uses.

"Here are two striking examples:

"Two cases of plague in New Orleans are reported. The financial adviser, who was in Washington at this time, authorizes the appointment of two 'rat catchers'—not for New Orleans, where the plague was discovered but for Port-au-Prince, which was never troubled with this disease. He fixes their monthly salary at $250 each, quite without any word to the Government, regardless of any law or budget appropriation.

"But at the same time the financial adviser refused appropriations for three associate professors from the University of France, who were offered to the Haitian Government by the French Government for the Lycée of Port-au-Prince.

"Article 7 of the convention is drawn up as follows:

"All amounts collected by and in keeping of the receiver general shall be used (1) for the payment of the salaries and allowances of the receiver general, his assistants, and employees for the expenses of the collector's office, which shall include the salary of the financial adviser, salaries to be determined by a previous agreement; (2) for the interest and amortization of the public debt of Haiti; (3) for the maintenance of the police referred to in article 10, and the balance for the current expenses of the Haitian Government.

"This article establishes the order in which the expenses of the Republic of Haiti should be met by means of the custom duties collected from the custom-houses by the receiver general.

"The expenses of the Government come last of all, and include (1) salaries of public officials other than those indicated in the first part of the article; (2) expenses of the public works and hygiene administrations; (3) expenses for material, office furniture, etc.

"It will be noticed that the expenses that come second are those relating to the Haitian public debt, interest, and amortization. If these disbursements were known, the amount due the Government for its current expenses would also be established, and the Government would be free to dispose of it. But this has never been done, and for the following reason:

"To hold the Government in curb, to be able whenever it resists an unjustified demand to exert a pressure which will oblige it to yield, it must be kept completely dependent upon the financial adviser and the receiver general, so far as finances are concerned.

"If it is a question of a new expense considered necessary by the Government, which the American authorities do not wish to grant, the answer is: 'There is no money—the reserve funds must go toward the payment of the public debt.'

"Very often this same reply is made for regular expenses provided for in the budget.

"In addition to the custom duties, there are other budget resources which the convention has left to the free disposal of the Government for its legal expenses. The financial adviser, supported by the American minister and the military authorities who on this occasion resorted to martial law, demanded that these funds be turned over to him.

"In this way the Government is entirely at the mercy of the caprices and of the arbitrary will of the financial adviser.

"The State Department, absorbed, doubtless, in more important questions of foreign policy or ill informed by its official agents, is deaf to our protests, or simply upholds the position of the American authorities.

"We have been reproached by certain American newspapers on the ground that Haiti did not pay its debts before the occupation. This is entirely false. In spite of all its financial difficulties, Haiti has always lived up to her agreements. The administration of the public debt was not suspended until after the occupation; it was resumed at the beginning of this year, and just at this time the Government is insisting with the greatest energy on the payment of the internal debt.

"Each year the American minister and the financial adviser reject the project of the Haitian Government for the application of the second paragraph of article 116 of the constitution, which reads: 'The examination and liquidation of the accounts of the general administration and of everything accountable to the public treasury shall be carried on according to the method established by law.'

"The examination and liquidation of accounts, according to Haitian law, was carried on by an institution of long standing, called the Chambre des Comptes.

"In conformity with article 2 of the convention, the Haitian Government is vainly demanding the adequate system of public accounting that the financial adviser is supposed to draw up in order to replace the audit office.

"All of article 2 of the convention is a dead letter. The financial adviser ignores it. He pays no attention to the urgent and necessary credits of the Haitian Government established by law; he spends at will, regardless of any law, obliging the Government to ratify his acts.

"To sum up, the Haitian Government is under humiliating subjection through lack of cooperation. Its efforts to collaborate in good faith are fruitless—they are scorned and rejected. There does not seem to exist between the two Governments a reciprocal contract that the two parties must respect."

This conclusion of the important declaration of the President of Haiti regarding the total failure of the American Government to execute the convention of September 16, 1915, is the point of view of the entire Haitian people.

HAITIAN FINANCES—THE FINANCIAL AID PROMISED BY THE UNITED STATES.

Haiti has always lived up loyally to her financial agreements. One of the reasons given for American intervention is the breaking of these agreements. As those of many other countries, Haitian finances have passed through critical periods, but the leaders of the country have always been able to find the necessary solution to the problems that confronted them.

For a long time Haiti has borne the weight of a heavy debt which has hindered her economic development.

By a royal decree King Charles X of France in return for 150,000,000 francs as indemnity for the losses incurred by the former colonists and payable in five equal installments granted to Haiti on April 17, 1825, an independence which the Haitians had conquered at the price of hard and bloody sacrifices. In the continual expectation of the offensive return of the French and weary of maintaining the country for more than 20 years in a state of war, the Government of President Boyer accepted the arrangement of the King of France which stipulated these painful conditions.

By means of a loan of 24,000,000 francs, issued at Paris at the rate of 80 per cent and bearing 6 per cent interest, to which was added 6,000,000 francs paid in specie by the Haitian treasury, the first installment of the indemnity was paid.

But owing to the energetic protests of the Haitian people and the refusal of the French Government to reduce this heavy indemnity, the Haitian Government suspended the payment of the four other installments of the indemnity with the clear intention, however, of paying the annuities (interest and principal) of the loan. After long and delicate negotiations the Government of Louis Philippe consented on February 12, 1838, to recognize the independence of Haiti by treaty. At the same time a financial convention was signed reducing the balance of the indemnity from 120,000,000 francs to 60,000,000.

The loan of 24,000,000 francs and the indemnity were known as "the double French debt." It was entirely paid off in 1893, after 58 years.

Soon after the first payments of the 30,000,000 francs the Haitian Government found itself handicapped in meeting its most urgent budget expenses. In 1826 it had to resort to paper money. The burdens imposed upon the country were too heavy; this was the beginning of all its troubles. The nation was barely able to recover from the losses incurred by the wars of Santo Domingo,* the war with the English, the struggle of the French against Toussaint-Louverture, and the war of independence, which started in 1802 and ended with the surrender of Rochambeau at Cap Haitien in November, 1803. The plantations had disappeared, the towns and villages had been nearly all destroyed—nearly a hundred thousand Haitians had lost their lives in the pitiless struggle for liberty. Sugar and indigo, the chief exports of the island, had no more markets in France, and there was not enough capital to revive the sugar mills. Courageously the Haitian people undertook and intensified other forms of cultivation, and in this way coffee, cotton, and cocoa became the principal products of the land. In spite of so many misfortunes the country continually made sacrifices to live loyally up to its agreements. Thus next year the balance of the loan of 1875 will be paid off if the expected conditions are fulfilled.

* See L'Essoir, Port au Prince Nov. 24, 1920.

* Former name of Haiti under the French rule.

22 INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

This loan, originally of 21,000,000 francs, consisting of bonds of 300 franc denomination bearing interest at 5 per cent was to carry out the agreements with France (French double debt) and to pay certain internal debts.

In 1922 the balance due will be:

	Francs.
Capital-----	2,513,760
Interest-----	179,778
Total-----	2,693,538

In the month of April, 1896, on the account of the Republic of Haiti, a loan was floated at Paris amounting to 50,000,000 francs, nominal value, represented by 100,000 shares of 500 francs, at 6 per cent a year, payable in 37 years. The balance of this loan now outstanding, represented by 59,349 shares, is 29,674,500 francs. Its complete amortization will take place in 1932.

The loan of 1910 was authorized by a law of October 21, 1910. It was to redeem the old internal debt and to provide for the final redemption of the paper money. It was actually issued on February 17, 1911, but it bears the date of the year when the act was voted. Of its face of 65,000,000 francs—130,000 shares of 500 francs—only 47,000,000 francs were turned over to the Government by the banking syndicate and deposited in the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti. This loan bears interest at 5 per cent a year, and is payable in 50 years. The amortization must take place either by means of purchases at the Bourse de Paris while the shares are below par, or by means of draft by lot, at their nominal value, when they have reached par. Interest is payable semiannually by coupons of 12 francs 50, due May 15 and November 15 of each year.

The present status of this loan is as follows:

In circulation, 123,153 shares of 500 francs; that is, 61,576,500 francs.

The status of the triple foreign debt of Haiti was therefore on July 28, 1915,<sup>21</sup> as follows:

Loan of 1875.—The coupons due on July 1, 1915, had been paid and the work of amortization had been carried out.

Loan of 1896.—The interest on the coupons due June 30, 1915, had been paid. The amortization drafts for December, 1914, had been suspended, because of the world-wide situation created by the European war. It was no more than a delay. The necessary provisions had already been made for amortization.

Loan of 1910.—On this loan, the interest had been paid and the amortization carried out on May 15, 1915.

From the time of the landing of American troops on July 28, 1915, the military occupation suspended payment of the foreign debt of the Republic which the Haitian Government had been able to carry on until then to the satisfaction of its creditors. But not even the signing and execution of the treaty of September 16, 1915, was to put an end to this state of affairs, which was so injurious to the credit of the country. This decision was even more incomprehensible when the special funds for the payment of the interest and amortization of this debt had accumulated and were remaining unproductive in the vaults of the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti. It was not until last year (1920) that the interest due was finally paid, upon the repeated demands of the bondholders, almost all foreigners, and upheld by their respective Governments. As for the internal debt, except for a partial payment made in April, 1916, no payment of interest has been made up to now, in spite of the demands of the bondholders. Their voices were not heard for the simple reason that they were nearly all Haitians.

In a report of March 20, 1917, the consul general of the United States at Port au Prince said on this subject: "It is unfortunate for commerce that the internal debt has not been adjusted, nor the interest paid, this default having resulted in reducing sales very materially for 1917. Most of the bonds are held by the people, who have been expecting the interest to be paid as formerly, thereby to meet their living expenses. The failure to do this has embarrassed them financially and will tend to diminish the sale of imported goods."<sup>22</sup>

Thus the principal object of the treaty, which was to place Haitian finances on a solid basis, has not been fulfilled, nor has the financial aid which was promised the United States been effectively given. In fact, up to the present time, the monetary circulation of Haiti is still paper money, and instead of substituting metal money for it the financial adviser has fixed the Haitian gourde at one-fifth of the American dollar, to the detriment of all those who receive it in payment for their work." A further resulting injustice is involved in the fact that, in conformity with the budget of the Haitian Republic, certain officials are paid in American gold and others are paid in Haitian money, no calculation being made in favor of these latter, in consideration of the depreciation of this money in relation to the American dollar. Naturally, all the officials from the United States are in the first category.

<sup>21</sup> Date of landing of the United States troops on the Haitian soil.

<sup>22</sup> See page 276, Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy, 1920.

As another proof that no financial aid has been given to Haiti since the signing of the treaty, it is sufficient to bear in mind that since the year 1917, acting upon the suggestions of the financial adviser, the Government has been trying to float a loan of several million dollars in the United States, and that its efforts have been unsuccessful, in spite of the fact that the American Government realizes the urgent necessity of this loan for the improvement of Haitian finances.

In a report of October 14, 1920, addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, Rear Admiral Knapp stated as to this projected loan:

"To place the finances on a firm bases in accordance with modern ideas a loan is necessary * * * and such a loan was the early confident anticipation, not only of the Haitian Government but of the American Government when the treaty was concluded. Constant efforts have since been made to obtain it, and great disappointment is felt that its flotation has so far proved impossible."

The internal debt is at present $2,278,886.20. Up to January 31, 1921, interest due amounted to $705,366.25. There is needed for the monthly payment of interest on this debt only $12,514.93.

Floating debt.—There is a floating debt which reaches an approximate figure of $4,420,920. It should be submitted to careful examination, so that it may be reduced and be restored to its real amount. Those who are interested are waiting in vain for this to be carried out.

SUPPRESSION OF THE HAITIAN LEGISLATURE.

Immediately after the ratification by the Haitian chambers of the convention of September 18, 1915, the provisions of which were not consistent with the constitution in force, the question arose in governmental circles of a constitutional revision. Legally this revision could be carried out only by the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate, meeting as the National Assembly. Instead of following this procedure, which was established by the constitution, the Government preferred to resort to a coup d'état.

Under pressure of the American occupation President Dartiguenave, on April 5, 1916, issued an unconstitutional decree dissolving the Senate. The same decree transformed the Chamber of Deputies in a constituent assembly for revising the constitution. Another decree created a Council of State to be appointed by the President of the Republic.

All these measures were illegal and undemocratic. They substituted dictatorship for constitutional government.

On April 7 the deputies and senators protested against them, since the constitution in force did not grant the President of the Republic the right of dissolution. But the legislative building was closed, and gendarmes were placed there to keep out the representatives of the people. The latter turned to the courts, and on April 15 the civil court of Port au Prince issued two judicial decrees authorizing the deputies and senators to open the gates of the legislative building.

The two eminent jurists, MM. Luxembourg Cauvin and Edmond Lespinasse, who had obtained the decrees, went to Col. Littleton W. Waller, commanding the United States expeditionary forces in Haiti, to make sure there would be no obstacle to the execution of the decisions of the Haitian judicial authorities. Without hesitation the colonel replied that such a step would be considered as a provocation to the American occupation. It was the occupation, then, that forbade the entrance of the legal representatives of the Haitian people into their legislative building.

* The legal value of the Haitian gourde is $1.

* See Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy, 1920, pp. 230-231.

But, still wishing to carry out their constitutional mandate, the deputies and senators assembled in houses rented at their own expense. On April 17 and 18, 1916, they elected their committees, and on the 27th they opened the third session of the twenty-eighth legislature in the regular way. The president of the Senate, M. Paul Laraque, received the following letter from Col. Littleton W. Waller:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES EXPEDITIONARY FORCE,
Port au Prince, Haiti, April 27, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. LARAQUE: Replying to your verbal request for a meeting to-day, I have the honor to inform you that this can not be granted except under conditions of the proposals of yesterday, accepted in writing, with the clear understanding that the general revision of the constitution is understood and agreed upon between us.

1. The National Assembly constituent has constituent powers only, and upon completion of their labors in revision of the constitution can not resume legislative powers.

2. If the Senate declines to act in conjunction with the deputies, it remains dissolved.

3. The acceptance of this agreement to be given in writing.

Hoping for an amicable settlement of this and other vexed questions.

With expressions of esteem and regard,

Sincerely, yours,

LITTLETON W. WALLER.

Port au Prince, April 27, 1916. Agreed and subscribed to this date. President of the Senate.

Answer:

PORT AU PRINCE, April 28, 1916.

Col. LITTLETON W. WALLER,

Chief of the United States Expeditionary Forces in Haiti.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 27th instant, containing proposals regarding an amicable arrangement of the present crisis, I have the honor to inform you that these proposals surprised and pained me, and are, I am convinced, only the result of a misunderstanding.

The chambers are, in fact, most desirous of amicably solving the present situation, for which they are not responsible. Although they have the law and all public opinion on their side, their spirit is most conciliatory.

But they could not, under any condition, sanction any unconstitutional measure, or even less, act illegally themselves.

On the other hand, the members of the present cabinet trample upon the most elementary principles of our parliamentary rule, a rule which, while placing the person of the President above all controversy, makes the cabinet responsible to the chambers, and by these acts of aggression give rise to reports which are injurious to the national representative body. Such procedure can not aid in bringing about an amicable solution of the crisis.

The Government of the United States had let it be understood that it would uphold in Haiti the constitutional government of the country and would have its laws observed.

The attempt to abolish the senate is a flagrant violation of the constitution, and constitutes consequently a revolutionary act, just as much as the decree of the revolutionary committee of August, 1915.

It is a question of finding out if the Government and the people of the United States are now upholding this revolutionary act.

Like you, I am always hoping that it will be possible to arrive at a satisfactory solution, since the senate is prepared to accept any proposal compatible with its dignity and with respect for the laws.

Accept, Colonel, expressions of my highest esteem.

PAUL LARAQUE,
President of the Senate.

On May 2, 1916, Rear Admiral Caperton had the following notice published in the columns of the Matin and the Nouvelliste:

[Decree of Apr. 5.]

"Rear Admiral Caperton stated that after having tried for the last three weeks in the most friendly way, with the aid of certain neutral Haitian patriots, to reach an understanding in the conflict of the Haitian Government.

It is impossible to find a basis of understanding that could be accepted by the two parties to the controversy.

"Consequently, in view of the impossibility of reconciling the Government and the opposition, in spite of the conciliatory offers made by the Government to the opposition, he has advised the officers of the chamber and the senate which had been dissolved by the decree of April 5, 1916, that his full duty of maintaining peace and order in Haiti rendered it necessary for him to uphold the decree of the constituted and recognized Government of Haiti."

The Haitian chambers protested against this intervention. On May 5, the senators were assembling in their provisional quarters when an American officer brutally ordered them to leave the place, threatening violent measures to force them to go. At the suggestion of M. Paul Laraque, president of the senate, they met at his house, where they drew up a formal account of the incident. (See Appendix No. 10.)

On the next day, May 6, the president of the senate and the president of the chamber were summoned by Col. Waller. He told them that if they persisted in assembling they would expose themselves to violent expulsion.

A few days before, on April 20, Le Constitutionnel, a paper edited by Deputy Léon Louhis, had been suppressed by Capt. Alexander Williams, provost marshal. The Government, supported by the American occupation, had the last word.

By a decree dated June 23, 1916, President Dartiguenave convoked the Chamber of Deputies as constituent assembly for August 14; but the deputies abstained and refused to accept an unconstitutional mandate.

Discontent was spreading among all classes in the nation, deprived as they were of their legal representatives.

On August 29, Col. Waller published the following declaration:

"Since the mission of occupation in Haiti is essentially a mission of pacification, work, and progress, it is recalled that no political agitation will be tolerated which tends to provoke manifestations against the express declaration of Admiral Caperton regarding the decree of April 5, 1916, and to compromise, contrary to the terms and spirit of the convention, the stability of the Government of President Dartiguenave, which is the free expression of the vote of the National Assembly."

As the authority of the Chamber of Deputies expired on January 10, 1917, there had to be new elections.

On September 22, 1916, the President of the Republic published a decree modifying the electoral law and certain articles of the constitution relative to the legislative power. He reduced the number of deputies to 36 and of senators to 15; he fixed the date of the elections for January 15 and 16, 1917; and this time he accepted the reunion of the two branches of the legislative body in the National Assembly for the revision of the constitution.

The elections took place on January 15, 1917. The new chambers assembled in April. On April 7, M. Louis Borno, secretary of state for foreign affairs, received a communication from Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, American minister. The latter informed him that after a careful examination of the project for the constitution the State Department had several suggestions which it considered obligatory and which could be submitted to the study and examination of M. Dartiguenave's Government before any definite action was taken in this respect by the legislative body. He stated at the same time that the suggestions mentioned would be sent by cable. On April 11, the American minister sent them to the secretary of state for foreign affairs. (See Appendix No. 11.)

On the 24th the secretary of state for the interior, in his turn, sent them to the committee for constitutional reform appointed by the new National Assembly to draw up a project for the constitution. The committee had just started its work and had not made any report. It was justly astonished at such suggestions, and on April 30 the secretary of state for the interior declared that the project for the constitution in question was a work of the council of state.

And the council of state, an unconstitutional body, had no authority to present a project for the constitution.

On June 8 the committee laid before the National Assembly the constitutional project which it had just drawn up and the discussion began. Since the first days of the meeting of the chambers rumors of dissolution had been circulating. No one wanted to believe them, especially since the elections had been supervised and controlled by American officers. Ten days after the elections, on January 25, an American squadron, commanded by Admiral Mayo, anchored in the Bay of Port au Prince. The next day, January 26, Admiral Mayo, in return for the dinner that was given in his honor, gave a luncheon to M. Sudre Dartiguenave on board the Pennsylvania, in the course of which the latter received from Admiral Caperton, commander of the Pacific division, a radio-gram as follows:

"I congratulate you, you and the Republic of Haiti, upon the successful outcome of the recent elections, and wish the country continuous prosperity. With my best personal wishes for you and all my friends."

The same day, during a visit to the President of the Republic, Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who was also on a cruise, made a speech in which he spoke of the interest of the United States for the sovereign people of Haiti.

Thus there was no reason to expect a new attempt against the legislative chambers. The Haitian Parliament wishes, it is true, to give the country a liberal constitution, and not an undemocratic work which would sanction the despotism of the Government and martial law.

Early on June 19 the legislative building was invaded by police under command of American officers. Without showing any agitation the deputies and senators took their seats and resumed the discussion of the project of the constitution. The vote was still being taken when M. André Chevallier, general secretary of the gendarmerie, came to tell the President of the National Assembly, M. Sténio Vincent, that the chief of the gendarmerie demanded to see him. Senator Vincent replied that since he was in session he regretted that he could not leave for the moment. M. Chevallier repeated the communication a second and a third time, and received the same reply. In the meantime, the gendarmerie closed the entrance of the legislative building, preventing both the public and the members of the National Assembly from going out. Seeing the impatience that was shown around him, M. Vincent made inquiries to determine the cause of this strange action. Just then Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler burst into the hall, followed by American officers armed with their revolvers, and handed M. Vincent a paper, declaring that it was the decree of the President of Haiti who proclaimed the dissolution of the legislative body. Senator Vincent refused to read it. He returned to his chair, and addressed the National Assembly, declaring that he would not read this act, which was brought, not by a regular agent of the executive power, but by the chief of the gendarmerie entirely outside of his powers. In the face of the resolute attitude of the deputies and senators, who refused to act upon such a document, the gendarmerie decided to open the gates of the legislative building. The same day the editors of all the newspapers were summoned to the gendarmerie where they received a written order to publish nothing whatever concerning the dissolution of the chambers.

The next day, Gen. Butler had the archives of the two chambers searched, and removed the reports on the constitution just voted.

On June 19, 1918, one year after the second dissolution of the Haitian Parliament, President Dartiguenave promulgated another constitution, voted by a so-called plebiscite. Those who presided over this plebiscite were American officers. They employed force and threats to make the citizens vote.

Read this announcement, published by the Courlier Haïtien of November 8, 1920:

REPUBLIC OF HAITI,
Port de Paix, June 11, 1918.

In accordance with the decree of his excellency, the President of the Republic, published in the Monitor of May 8, last, all the citizens of the commune of Port de Paix are asked to be present to-morrow at the Hotel Communal to vote on the new constitution published in the Monitor of the same date.

Any abstention from such a solemn occasion will be considered an unpatriotic act.

Maintenance of order will be assured by the gendarmerie, and the ballots will be distributed by a member of the administration of finances opposite the voting offices.

The polls will be open from 7 o'clock in the morning till 5 o'clock in the evening.

HERMAN H. HANNEKEN,
Lt. G. d'Haiti.

E. LESCOT,
Government Commissioner, Northwest District.

There was only one kind of ballot, bearing the word "Yes." For purposes of deception some ballots were distributed with the word "No," but they went to certain paid confederates, in order to give the impression that the number of opponents was insignificant. Spies kept watch over the ballot boxes. Certain officials who, being obliged to vote, had turned in a negative vote, were dismissed from office. (See Appendix No. 12.)

The plebiscite is not one of the Haitian constitutional traditions. The constitution of 1889 indicated the procedure to be followed in case of revision of the constitution. But the prescribed procedure was not carried out. What actually happened was that one so-called constitution was substituted for another, and, to give it some appearance of verity, the plebiscite vote was invented.

THE NAVAL COURT OF INQUIRY IN HAITI.

When Mr. Daniels, United States Secretary of the Navy, in order to calm the emotion aroused in America by the terrible revelations of the press regarding the acts of the American occupation in Haiti, announced that he had instituted a naval court of inquiry to throw light on this subject, the public might have believed that it was to be genuine, although, according to certain newspapers, it was to be merely a case of "whitewash." In fact, the high officials of the Navy Department who composed this court might well inspire confidence. They were Admiral Henry T. Mayo, Rear Admiral James H. Oliver, Maj. Gen. Wendell C. Neville, of the Marine Corps, and Maj. Jesse F. Dyer, as judge advocate. The Haitians were the first to believe that a work of truth and justice was at last going to be carried out.

This naval court of inquiry arrived at Port au Prince on November 8, 1920.

On the 9th it got in touch with the Haitian Government, and on the same day informed the Haitian public of the names of its members and of the nature of its mission.

"It had come," it said, "to investigate the way in which the forces of the occupation had carried out their duty, in order to furnish the Secretary of the Navy with complete information on this subject." The terms of this declaration seemed to imply a very broad mission, and the Haitians who were prepared to testify before the naval court of inquiry were anxious to know how it was going to proceed. But not a single rule was ever established for the inquiry and no form of procedure was indicated. The court never made known where it would hold its sessions, on what days they would take place, whether they would be public, whether the court itself would call in witnesses, whether the people who were acquainted with the whole thing or who were victims of acts at the hands of the forces of occupation could go and testify freely before the court, or what guaranties of safety it offered to Haitian citizens who wished to prove charges of criminal acts against officers who still had military authority, knowing well the cruelty of martial law in the country for the past five years. (See Appendix No. 13.)

November 11, the second anniversary of the World War armistice, was a holiday, and when no newspapers appeared it was generally thought that an announcement from the court of inquiry would inform the public the next day how it was going to proceed.

On November 12, instead of the expected note, people were astonished to read in a Port au Prince paper, the Nouvelliste, of the testimony of President Dartiguenave before the court:

"From a visit by Mr. Wilbur Forrest, correspondent of the New York Tribune [says the Nouvelliste], we learn the news that the court of inquiry was to hold its first session on November 11, at 10 o'clock in the morning, at the Dessalines Barracks and that his excellency M. Sudre Dartiguenave was to testify."

No one knew anything about it. Now, it happened, according to the Nouvelliste, that after this testimony Maj. Dyer, judge advocate, announced "that there were no other witnesses for the present," and the session was adjourned. Did this mean witnesses summoned by the court, or else persons who had decided on their own initiative to go and testify? No one knew. In any case, how could anyone else have gone to witness on that day when it had not been announced anywhere that the court of inquiry would hold its first meeting at the Dessalines Barracks on November 11 at 10 o'clock in the morning, or that such persons could go to testify? But when the Nouvelliste asked the judge advocate for his opinion on this subject Maj. Jesse F. Dyer replied:

"So far I have no precise facts: everyone speaks of rumors, and I am looking for evidence. I am leaving for the northern towns, and hope to find this evidence; and if no one comes with statements here in Port au Prince in all probability the other sessions of the court will not be held here, but at the Cape, where we shall go to hear the witnesses we can find in the interior towns."

So, after hearing but a single witness, Maj. Dyer already had concluded that there were no precise facts and merely rumors, and announced that he was leaving for the north of the island, where he hoped to find evidence.

Nevertheless, as soon as the Haitians learned that the court of inquiry was in session, and where it was being held, from all parts of the country the demand came to be heard.

From the following account of the work (?) of the court it will be seen that all Haitians who had anything to say regarding the numerous cases of murder, brutality, robbery, rape, arson, etc.—that is, Haitians who wished to convince the court of inquiry of “the way in which the forces of the occupation had carried out their duty in Haiti”—were systematically excluded. Many of them have published in the press of Haiti the letters which they sent to the court demanding to be heard.

On November 17 the court heard Col. Hooker, of the Haitian gendarmerie, Mr. Harry Lifchitz, Mr. Daggett, Col. Little, Lieut. Lang, and a Haitian gendarme named Adolphe Burgot.

Col. Hooker spoke chiefly of the attack of Port au Prince by the “Cacos” on January 15, 1920, declaring that all the victims of this unlucky day—that is 66 Haitians—were assassants (?).

Mr. Harry Lifchitz accused Lieut. Haski Koff of having killed a gendarme at Cayes with a revolver, Lieut. Barrett of having killed a Haitian civilian at Aquin, and ended his testimony by exposing the case of a woman who was beaten to death at Saint-Louis-du-Sud.

Col. Little accused a naval pharmacist, Mr. Thompson, of having murdered a judge at Las Cahobas.

The other witnesses testified on the case of Lieut. Lang, accused of having killed three prisoners with his own hand at Hinche, making them go out of the prison one at a time, firing a revolver shot in the back of each one.

On November 18 there was another investigation of Lieut. Lang's case. The court heard Mr. Grant, gendarmes Adolphe Burgot and Meratus. The two latter confirmed the charges brought against Lieut. Lang.

On November 19 gendarmes Carmelus Monfiston, Petit Daubrave, Eugene Jean, and Carius Absolu testified against Lieut. Lang regarding the affair of the murder of the prisoners at Hinche. Gendarme Petit Daubrave accused Lang of having killed, to his knowledge, five prisoners, detailing all the circumstances of these crimes. Mr. Daggett, who was hesitant during the first investigation, reappeared on the scene and stated that Lang had killed some prisoners. Théomène Rouchon, former gendarme at Milot, declared that Lang had killed the prisoner Teka with a machine gun under a mango tree.

On November 20 the court held a short session and heard the testimony of Gendarme Siméon Gabeau regarding the terrible circumstances of the assassination of the notary Jean Garnier, a peaceful citizen of Maissade, by Lieut. Williams.

Lang asked to present a memorandum on his case, which he obtained, and the court went into secret sessions.

On November 22 the court continued Lieut. Lang's case. Then it heard Col. Hooker, of the Haitian gendarmerie, who spoke in favor of Haski Koff, lieutenant at Cayes, and Dr. Louis Gille, who testified in his turn in favor of Barrett, lieutenant at Aquin.

In the sessions of November 29 and 31 the court devoted its time to new testimony regarding the murder of the notary Jean Garnier, of Maissade.

And this was all. This naval court, which had been talked of in the United States, probably at the suggestion of Mr. Daniels, as the greatest naval commission formed since the one charged with inquiring into the conditions of the naval battle of Santiago de Cuba, this naval court of inquiry in reality inquired only into the charges brought against Lieuts. Lang and Williams. Up till the last minute people thought it was going to Cap-Haitien and various other towns in the north of the island to continue the investigation, especially since Maj. Jesse F. Dyer had publicly declared so. Moreover, during the first two weeks of November Admiral Knapp had gone to Cap-Haitien and called the people to the Union Club, asking them to expose their grievances against the occupation without fear of reprisals. At this meeting the principal personages of the town of Cap-Haitien spoke: M. W. Leconte, former state secretary of the interior, spoke of the murderous régime in the prisons. M. Adhémar Auguste, former mayor of the town, pointed out that the horrible system of the corvée was the only cause of the uprising of the “Cacos.” M. L. Duvivier told of the slaughter of Haitians in the streets of Cap-Haitien during the night of Christmas, 1919. M. Charles Zamor exposed great wrongs done by certain officers of the gendarmerie, and M. Dacosta, a merchant, denounced the abuses at the Cap-Haitien customhouse. Other people tried to make their complaints heard. But Admiral Knapp announced that he himself had no authority to carry on the investigation; that he had merely come to prepare the way for the court of inquiry; and that all those who had complaints to make would soon have the opportunity of being heard before this court.

Judge Advocate Maj. Jesse F. Dyer and Admiral Knapp had, then, both announced, some days apart, the intention of the court of inquiry to go to Cap-Haitien to continue the investigation. And yet the court did not go. Why? Mr. Daniels and the members of the naval court of inquiry alone can explain this mystery.

Meanwhile, by November 26, the Haitian public found out, in an indirect way, that this investigation, announced with such flourish in the United States, was nothing more than a joke, unworthy of the American administration which had sent it, and unacceptable to the great American people who demanded truth and justice, and who, we are convinced, will want the truth to be known and justice to triumph at any price. In fact, in the course of interviews which took place between the editors of the Courier Haitien and the American correspondents at Port au Prince it was alleged by one of them that the powers of the naval court of inquiry were so limited that they did not, in reality, permit it to make any investigation. The Haitian people had no authoritative information on the subject.

Nevertheless, when, on November 30, in the evening, the Niagara left the waters of Port au Prince, bearing with it the naval court of inquiry, the news of its departure caused general surprise and profound indignation. To calm the Haitians they were given to understand, by notices adroitly slipped into the newspapers, that the Niagara was going to coal at Guantanamo and that from there the naval court of inquiry was going to Cap-Haitien.

On December 2 a group of Port au Prince citizens, feeling that the comedy had gone too far and that it was unworthy to play with a whole people in this way, sent a cablegram to the Secretary of the Navy informing him that the naval court of inquiry had left without having fulfilled its duty, that a number of complainants had not been heard, etc. Mr. Daniels hastened to reply, by the following communication, published in the Courier Haitien:

Citizens of Port au Prince:<sup>25</sup>

Referring to your communication relative to the naval court, I have directed Vice Admiral Knapp to carry on any investigation considered necessary concerning the United States marines; and all the cases that you may wish to have submitted to him.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

WASHINGTON, December 2, 1920.

Vain hopes! Admiral Knapp did even much less than the naval court of inquiry, in that he did nothing, absolutely nothing at all; he never informed the Haitian people of the new mission which had been confided to him, he never heard a single witness, and he continued to enjoy his winter quarters in peace in the harbor of Port au Prince.

The behavior of the naval court of inquiry in Haiti which we have just set forth was even more surprising because the mandate of this court had been established by Mr. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

[Precept of the court of inquiry.]

"DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,

"Washington, October 16, 1920.

"To: Rear Admiral Henry T. Mayo, United States Navy.

"Subject: Court of inquiry to inquire into the alleged indiscriminate killing of Haitians and unjustifiable acts by members of the United States naval service, including those detailed to duty with the gendarmerie d'Haiti against the persons and property of Haitians since the American occupation, July 28, 1915.

"1. A court of inquiry, consisting of yourself as president, and of Rear Admiral James H. Oliver, United States Navy, and Maj. Gen. W. C. Neville, <sup>25</sup> Message retranslated from the French.

United States Marine Corps, as additional members, and of Maj. Jesse F. Dyer, United States Marine Corps, as judge advocate, is hereby ordered to convene at the Navy Department, Washington, D. C., Friday, October 22, 1920, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and thereafter at such places as may be deemed necessary to inquire into the question of the conduct of the personnel of the United States Naval Service in Haiti since the marines were landed in that country on July 28, 1915, with the view to determining whether any unjustifiable homicide has been committed by any of such personnel, whether any other unjustifiable acts of oppression or violence have been perpetrated against any of the citizens of Haiti or any unjustifiable damage or destruction of their property has occurred."<sup>36</sup>

According to the mandate of the naval court of inquiry, it was to make a report on its findings and the degree of responsibility attached to each act, and on all persons immediately or indirectly responsible for such unjustifiable acts.

And no report of this court has been published. The "Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1920" contains all the reports on Haitian affairs except the report of the naval court of inquiry. Would it not be a good idea to publish this report in the interest of truth and justice?

The naval court of inquiry did not reply to the letters, often confirmed by follow-up letters, which were addressed to it by those who wanted to be heard. Certain complainants were obliged to resort to the press to make known the wrongs of which they or their relatives were victims.

The Haitian people feel that if the naval court of inquiry has not fulfilled in Haiti the broad mandate conferred upon it by Mr. Josephus Daniels, it is because it was faced with charges of such a horrible nature that it thought best to pass them over in silence. And this is why the tactics of the Navy Department have been and still are to consider the "incident" as closed. This can not be. The voice of truth and justice can not be stifled. The Haitian people await with confidence an honest, impartial, and thorough investigation.

In Haiti numberless abominable crimes have been committed. To give some idea of their horror we cite only a few cases made public through the press which the naval court did not feel the need to investigate.

1. Hanging of M. Cléron Lacroix, execution of Léon Moricet, Têca, and other persons in October and November, 1918, by Lieut. Lang, acts denounced to the naval court of inquiry by M. Philocles Lacroix in his letter of October 20, 1920.

2. Execution of the Péralte brothers by Lieut. Wallace at Mirebalais in December, 1918. Here are the names of those shot: Philoxène Péralte, Emmanuel Péralte, Péralte, Jr., and Léosthène Péralte.

3. Execution by the marines of Joseph Marseille and his two sons, Michel and Estima Marseille, of Príncipe Mesadieux, Baye section, district of Mirebalais; assassination by the marines of Guerrier Josaphat and one of his children, aged 14, in his own house, acts denounced by M. Louis Charles, sr., December 8, 1920.

4. Arrest by an American officer, and mysterious disappearance of M. Charite Fleuristone, former school inspector at Chappelle, district of St. Marc. He was arrested in the first part of 1919, at the same time as MM. Jean Baptiste and Clément Clerjeune.

5. At Marin, district of Mirebalais, in December, 1919, assassination and mutilation of Joseph Duclerc, a respectable old man of 60, by marines and gendarmes. After the crime they burned his cottage.

6. At the same time and in the same section the same group fired on a school-teacher and wounded her in the mouth. She managed to escape. The marines and gendarmes burned her house as well as everything that went with it. They were accompanied by an American officer, a lieutenant, whose name can be established by an investigation.

7. Near Marin, at Collier, district of Mirebalais, the same band cut the head off a blind man named Néis, 25 years old, and did the same thing to a child who was with him, named Jules Louisville.

8. At Marin, at the same time, another group of gendarmes and marines assaulted Mathieu Cadet, aged 55, in his house, shooting him. Although wounded in the shoulder, he was able to escape his assailants through a concealed door. His house was robbed and burned. The gendarme Joanis took off a mule belonging to Mathieu.

<sup>36</sup> See Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy, 1920, p. 315.

9. In January, 1919, at Noailles some marines and gendarmes coming from Beaufreps killed Jean Luc, an invalid. Torn from his house, firearms were emptied into his body. His house was robbed and burned.

10. On the same day the same band of marines and gendarmes surprised Esca Estinfi in his house at Caye-Beau with his young sons. They shot all three, father and children. Then they robbed his house and burned it. Esca was a great planter, and had a large quantity of coffee stored, and a good sum of money ready for commercial transactions.

11. On January 25, 1919, at "Savane Longue," near Marin, a group of marines and gendarmes coming from Terre-Rouge, district of Mirebalais, killed Hon. Auré Bayard, who was ill in bed. They pulled him from his bed, and shot him through and through. The house was robbed and burned. Then they forced Mme. Auré Bayard, by striking her with the butt ends of their rifles, to take the things that they had just stolen and carry them along with them. It was not until the next day that the poor woman could render her last services to her husband.

12. On January 30 some marines and gendarmes, led by spies named Néis (des Orangers) and Auré Fleury (du Carrefour grand-mât), killed a pregnant woman in a place called Thomaus. The cottage was robbed.

13. In December, 1919, some marines and gendarmes coming from Saut d'Eau or Mirebalais arrived at the second section of the Crochus, district of Mirebalais, and shot, at Beauvoir, Saint-Félix Goffard, who lived with his two little daughters aged 8 and 12 years. The terrified children managed to escape the shots of the assassins.

14. On the same day, at Beauvoir, the same band robbed the cottage of Tin-homme Saint-Félix, then shot him and burned his corpse.

15. On the same day, at Beauvoir, the same band killed a respectable old man named Saintime Vernet. His cottage was robbed. Then the band burned the little village of Beauvoir.

16. No attention was paid to a denunciation by M. Paul Bayard, sent to the naval court of inquiry in a letter dated November 26, relative to the crimes enumerated below, committed by the Haitian sergeant of the gendarmerie, Maurice Lafontant, by the American captains, O'Neil and Verdier, and by the American lieutenant, Rogers, at Montagne, Goanau and Serin neighborhood, district of Jacmel (a section where there have never been any of the so-called "Cacos"): (1) Thirty-eight houses burned; (2) assassination of Michael Jean François, age 74 years—his house was burned; (3) Paul Bayrd, wounded by two bullets, one in his thigh and the other in his abdomen—his house was burned; (4) assassination of Enéllen Ladouceur; (5) Françoise Gabriel, wounded by one bullet in the thigh.

17. Bodily tortures were inflicted by the American captain of gendarmerie, Fitzgerald Brown, upon M. Polydor St. Pierre, clerk of the St. Marc police court, in the prison of that town. He was arrested on January 3, 1919, on a false charge of theft, and was imprisoned for six months. Brown administered the "water cure" to him and burned his body with a red-hot iron; to say nothing of the beatings and other tortures which he inflicted upon him. St. Pierre vainly begged a hearing from the naval court of inquiry.

18. Executions by night at St. Marc during the first months of 1919 in the localities known as "Grosses Roches" and "Gros-Morne" by Capt. Fitzgerald Brown.

19. Hanging of Fabre Yoyo from a mango tree on March 13, 1919, at Pivert, on property belonging to the Orius Paultre family of St. Marc; execution on this same property this same day of two young boys of 14 and 15 years, Nicolas Yoyo and Sainve Charlot, by Capt. Fitzgerald Brown.

20. Among the crimes perpetrated in the region of Hinche, Maissade, from 1916 to 1919, by Lieuts. Lang and Williams, acts little known, and denounced by M. Méresse Wooley, former mayor of Hinche, on December 10, 1920, in the Courier Haitien, are the following: (1) M. Onexil hanged and burned alive in his house at Lauhaudigne; (2) execution of Madame Eucharice Cadichon at Mamon; (3) execution of Madame Romain Brigade at l'Hermitte, near Maissade; (4) execution of Madame Prevot with a baby of a few months at "Savane-à-Lingue" on her own property.

21. Madame Garner, widow of the notary who was killed by Lieut. Williams at Maissade, told Judge Advocate Dyer privately, on November 27, 1920, of the shooting of Madame Lumenesse, mother of eight children, by Lieut. Williams of the Haitian gendarmerie. Madame Garnier's declaration was published in the Courier Haitien of December 18, 1920.

22. Execution of Gen. Saut Peralte, near the Canary, by Gendarme Larmarine Toussaint, assisted by the American Lieut. Vernon, and ordered by the American Capt. Verdier, published in the Courier Haitien.

23. Arrest of Cadéus Bellegarde and cruelty inflicted upon him by the American Lieut. Dukela on December 2, 1919, at Saut-d'Eau, district of Mirebalais. According to a complaint made before a Haitian court, on December 8, 1920, and published in the Courier Haitien of February 9, 1921, Cadéus Bellegarde accused Lieut. Dukela of having burned 10 of his houses and stolen all of his property, including 12 horses, 3 mules, 70 oxen, etc.

24. In a letter published February 22, 1921, in the Courier Haitien, dated at Belladere, January 31, 1921, M. Casimir, jr., gives the following list of Haitians executed at Belladere by certain officers and soldiers of the Marine Corps: Gabriel Morette, Saint-For Jean-Baptiste, Frésirus Dufresin, Elie Ladomate, Bristoul Michel, Achille Vincent, Lorme Lorendou, Petika Casian, Normelus Saint-Charles, Adou Domingue, Arlatus Domingue, Erisma Barau, Ehelusma Barau, Ocean Noisette, Surprilus Vilette, Saint-Pierre Infine, Monexa Chitry, Salomon Suprien, Fleury Pierre, a small daughter of M. Raymond Dominique, Lami Pinal, Lhérisson Pinal, Marcelus Joseph and his son, Georges Ledou, Francisque Contrairie, Princy Lachapelle, Céus Grandin, Jocelin, jr., Saint-Uma Pierre, Elie Morette, Stiven Calixte, Barjon Charles, Dumorne Vincent, jr., Juste Glodin, Donil Cyriaque. M. Casimir, jr., gave also the names of 48 proprietors whose houses and fields had been burned by certain officers and soldiers of the Marine Corps in the commune of Belladere.

25. In a petition addressed on December 16, 1920, to M. Barnave Dartignenave, state secretary of the interior for Haiti, by the members of the League for the Public Good, at Cap-Haitien, whose president is Pastor Auguste Albert of the Baptist Church, which petition was published in the Courier Haitien on February 26, 1921, we notice the following facts:

(a) In the prisons of Cap-Haitien, during the years 1918, 1919, and 1920, more than 4,000 prisoners died.

(b) At Chabert, an American camp, 5,475 prisoners died during these three years, the average being five deaths a day.

(c) At Cap-Haitien, in 1918, eight corpses of prisoners a day were thrown into the pits.

(d) The mortality rate is just as high in the prisons of Port-au-Prince and Gonaves.

(e) At Cap-Haitien, out of 500 prisoners, the average mortality is four a day, i. e., 24 per cent per month, or only 1 per cent less a quarter of this whole number.

(f) Before American occupation and the seizure of the prisons by the American officers the number of prisoners in the Cap-Haitien prison did not exceed, on an average, 40 a year.

(g) At this time the mortality rarely reached the number of four prisoners a year.

The ghastly mortality in the prisons together with confirmation by survivors reveals a record of atrocities, of brutality, and cruelty which defies description. It is a record for which it would be difficult to find a parallel.

CONCLUSION.

The Haitian Republic was the second nation of the New World—second only to the United States—to conquer its national independence. We have our own history, our own traditions, customs, and national spirit, our own institutions, laws, and social and political organization, our own culture, our own literature (French language), and our own religion. For 111 years the little Haitian nation has managed its own affairs; for 111 years it has made the necessary effort for its material, intellectual, and moral development as well as any other nation—better than any other nation, because it has been from the start absolutely alone in its difficult task, without any aid from the outside bearing with it along the harsh road of civilization the glorious misery of its beginning. And then, one fine day, under the merest pretext, without any possible explanation or justification on the grounds of violation of any American right or interest, American forces landed on our national territory and actually abolished the sovereignty and independence of the Haitian Republic.

We have just given an account of the chief aspects of the American military occupation in our country since July 28, 1915.

It is the most terrible régime of military autocracy which has ever been carried on in the name of the great American democracy.

The Haitian people, during these past five years, has passed through such sacrifices, tortures, destructions, humiliations, and misery as have never before been known in the course of its unhappy history.

The American Government, in spite of the attitude of wisdom, moderation, and even submission which it has always found in dealing with the Haitian Government, has never lived up to any of the agreements which it had solemnly entered into with regard to the Haitian people.

The Haitian people is entitled to reparations for the wrongs and injuries committed against it.

The great American people can only honor themselves and rise in universal esteem by hastening the restoration of justice—of all the justice due a weak and friendly nation which the agents of its Government have systematically abused.

Reparations are due for the human lives that have been taken and for the property that has been destroyed or abstracted. An impartial investigation will provide the necessary statements and supply the basis for the estimates to be determined.

The present political aspirations of the Haitian nation have been formulated by the Union Patriotique, a comprehensive national association which, through its numerous branches throughout the country and in all levels of society, includes virtually all the Haitian people. The undersigned have been sent to the United States by this association to make the will of the country clearly known.

The Haitian people are filled with peaceful sentiments, but there is no doubt that they intend to recover definitely the administration of their own affairs and to resume under their own responsibility the entire life of the country, with full sovereignty and independence. They will never rest until they have obtained them.

The salient aspirations of the Haitian people are summarized as follows:

1. Immediate abolition of martial law and courts-martial.
2. Immediate reorganization of the Haitian police and military forces, and withdrawal within a short period of the United States military occupation.
3. Abrogation of the convention of 1915.
4. Convocation within a short period of a constituent assembly, with all the guaranties of electoral liberty.

But the Haitian people desire too strongly the friendship of the great American people, and are too anxious for their own material, intellectual, and moral development not to wish and bespeak for themselves the impartial and altruistic aid of the United States Government. They have urgent needs, vital to the development of the natural resources of the country and essential to the full expansion of its agricultural, industrial, and commercial activity. The satisfying of these needs is absolutely necessary for the continued progress of the Haitian community.

Nothing would serve better to bring about the speedy reestablishment of normal relations between the two countries than the friendly aid of the United States Government in the economic prosperity and social progress of the Haitian Republic.

H. PAULÉUS SANNON.
STÉPHÉ VINCENT.
PERCEVAL THOBY.

[Outline of a draft of a convention between the United States and the Republic of Haiti.]

APPENDIX No. 1.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Port au Prince, Haiti, December 10, 1914.

PREAMBLE.

The United States and the Republic of Haiti, desiring to confirm and strengthen the amity existing between them by the most cordial cooperation in measures for their common advantage, and the Republic of Haiti desiring to remedy the present unsatisfactory condition of its revenues and finances, to check the loss of much of its revenues due in part to internal disturbances, to provide against injudicious increase of its public debt, to inaugurate a comprehensive system of public accounts and audits, to make adequate provision to meet its exterior debts, to maintain the tranquillity of the Republic, to carry out plans for the economic development and prosperity of the Republic and its people, to strengthen its credit, and generally to fix and maintain its finances upon a firm and stable basis, and the United States being in full sympathy with all of these aims and objects and desiring to contribute in all proper ways to their accomplishment:

The United States and the Republic of Haiti, having resolved to conclude a convention with these objects in view, have appointed for that purpose plenipotentiaries, on the part of the United States and on the part of the Republic of Haiti, who having exhibited to each other their respective powers which are seen to be full in good and true form, have agreed as follows:

1. The President of the United States shall appoint a general receiver, who with such assistants and employees as the President of the United States may appoint or authorize, shall collect, receive, and apply all customs duties on imports and exports accruing at the several customhouses and ports of entry of the Republic of Haiti; and if he shall deem it necessary and expedient, or if the Haitian Government shall request, the President of the United States shall designate a financial adviser to the Republic of Haiti, who shall devise an adequate system of public accounting, aid in increasing the revenues and adjusting them to the expenses, inquire into the validity of the debts of the Republic, enlighten both Governments with reference to all eventual debts, recommend improved methods of collecting and applying the revenues, and generally exercise the functions of a comptroller of accounts.

2. The Government of the Republic of Haiti will provide by law or appropriate decrees for the payment of all customs duties to the general receiver, and will extend to the receivership all needful aid and full protection in its execution of the powers conferred and duties imposed herein; and the United States on its part will extend like aid and protection.

3. Upon the appointment of the general receiver, the Government of the Republic of Haiti in cooperation with the general receiver shall collect, classify, arrange, and make full statement of all the debts of the Republic, the amounts, character, maturity, and condition thereof, the interest accruing, and the sinking fund requisite to their final discharge.

4. All sums collected and received by the general receiver shall be applied by him first, to the payment of the salaries and allowances of the general receiver, his assistants and employees, and expenses of the receivership, including the salary and expenses of the financial adviser, if one shall be appointed; second, to the interest and sinking fund of the public debt of the Republic of Haiti; and, third, the remainder to the Haitian Government for purposes of current expenses.

In making these applications the general receiver will proceed to pay salaries and allowances monthly and expenses as they arise, and on the first of each calendar month will set aside in a separate fund the quantum of the collections and receipts of the previous month found to be a fair contribution to the ultimate sum required to meet interest and provide the sinking funds.

5. The expenses of the receivership, including salaries and allowances of the general receiver, his assistants and employees, shall not exceed five per cent of the collections and receipts from custom duties, unless by agreement of the two Governments.

6. The general receiver shall make monthly reports of all collections, receipts, and disbursements to the appropriate officer of the Republic of Haiti and to the Department of State of the United States, which reports shall be open to inspection and verification at all times by the appropriate authorities of each of the said Governments.

7. The Republic of Haiti shall not increase its public debt except by previous agreement with the President of the United States and shall not contract any debt or assume any financial obligation unless the ordinary revenues of the Republic available for that purpose after defraying the expenses of the Government shall be adequate to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for the final discharge of such debt.

8. The Republic of Haiti will not, without the assent of the President of the United States, modify the customs duties in a manner to reduce the revenues therefrom; and in order that the revenues of the Republic may be adequate to meet the public debt and the expenses of the Government, to preserve tranquillity, and to promote material prosperity, the Republic of Haiti will cooperate with the financial adviser, if one is appointed, in his recommendations for improvement in the methods of collecting and disbursing the revenues and for new sources of needed income.

9. The United States shall have authority to prevent any and all interferences with the receipt, collection, or free course of the customs, or, with the free exercise of any of the powers conferred or duties imposed herein upon the receivership or with the attainment of any of the objects comprehended in this convention.

10. This agreement shall continue in force for a period of — years from and after its ratification by the contracting parties in accordance with their respective laws.

APPENDIX No. 2.

Whereas the President of the United States of America and the President of the Republic of Haiti are animated by the desire to strengthen the bonds of friendship between the two countries; and

Whereas the high contracting parties realize the mutual advantages which would lie in more intimate commercial and financial relations; and

Whereas the President of the Republic of Haiti has expressed his sincere desire and firm intention to guarantee the honest and efficient administration of a government in Haiti according to the constitution and laws of that Republic, government which will give expression to the will of the people of Haiti, protect their rights and interests, and respect international obligations; and

Whereas it is the mutual desire of the high contracting parties that there shall exist between the American minister plenipotentiary—hereafter to be appointed—and the President of Haiti such an intimate and confidential relationship as will enable the American minister plenipotentiary to advise as to such matters as affect the honest and efficient administration of the Government, the President of Haiti agreeing that he will follow the advice so given to the extent of requiring honesty and efficiency in officials and of removing those found to be dishonest and inefficient;

The President of the United States of America and the President of the Republic of Haiti have resolved to enter into a convention for that purpose and have appointed their respective plenipotentiaries, to wit:

The President of the United States of America, the Hon. Paul Fuller, jr., United States commissioner with the rank of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary;

The President of the Republic of Haiti, the Hon. Ulrich Duvivier, secretary of state for foreign relations;

Who, after exchange of their full powers, found to be in good and due form, have, in consideration of and in compensation for the respective concession and engagements made by each to the other as herein recited, agreed, and do hereby agree, as follows, to wit:

1. The Government of the United States of America will protect the Republic of Haiti from outside attack and from the aggression of any foreign power, and to that end will employ such forces of the Army and Navy of the United States as may be necessary.

2. The Government of the United States of America will aid the Government of Haiti to suppress insurrection from within and will give effective support by the employment of the armed forces of the United States Army and Navy to the extent needed.

3. The President of the Republic of Haiti covenants that no rights, privileges, or facilities of any description whatsoever will be granted, sold, leased, or otherwise accorded directly or indirectly by the Government of Haiti concerning the occupation or use of the Mole Saint-Nicholas to any foreign Government or to a national or the nationals of any other foreign Government.

4. The President of the Republic of Haiti covenants that within six months from the signing of this convention the Government will enter into an arbitration agreement for the settlement of such claims as American citizens or other foreigners may have against the Government of Haiti, such arbitration agreement to provide for the equal treatment of all foreigners to the end that the people of Haiti may have the benefit of competition between the nationals of all countries.

The present convention shall be ratified by the appropriate authorities of the respective countries, and the ratification shall be exchanged at Port au Prince, Haiti, as soon as may be after the — day of —, 1915.

In witness whereof we, the respective plenipotentiaries, have signed the same in duplicate in English and in French and have affixed our respective seals at Port au Prince, Haiti, this — day of May, in the year 1915.

---

[To the convention project presented by Mr. Fuller.]

APPENDIX No. 3.

COUNTERPROJECT.

The President of the United States of America and the President of the Republic of Haiti desiring to strengthen the bonds of friendship which exist between the two countries;

The high contracting parties being convinced of the advantages they would obtain through closer commercial and financial relations, considering that the introduction of capital into Haiti would be sufficiently profitable, and that it would be assured of all the necessary guaranties, and is recognized as indispensable to the economic development of Haiti;

The President of the Republic of Haiti, constitutionally elected, who has shown by the acts already accomplished by his Government his sincere desire to assure the country through complete and faithful execution of the laws of a wise, regular, and honorable administration, capable of assuring as much protection as possible to legitimate interests, both national and foreign;

The President of the United States of America, with views in harmony with those of the Government of the Haitian Republic, and disposed to lend it all the assistance and aid necessary to the conservation of its independence, and to permit its free development;

The President of the United States of America and the President of the Republic of Haiti have resolved to conclude with these aims a convention, and have named for their respective plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, the Hon. Paul Fuller, special envoy of the United States, ranking as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary;

The President of the Republic of Haiti, Hon. Ulrick Duvalier, state secretary of foreign affairs;

Who, after exchange of their full respective powers, found in good and due form, have accepted and hereby accept what follows:

1. The Government of the United States of America agrees to lend its aid to the Republic of Haiti for the conservation of its independence,

With this object it binds itself to intervene to prevent any intrusion of any foreign power in the affairs of Haiti and to repulse any act of aggression attempted against this country.

It shall employ for this purpose such forces of the Army and Navy of the United States as are necessary.

2. The Government of the United States shall facilitate the entrance into Haiti of sufficient capital to assure the full economic development of this country, to improve within a very short period its financial situation, especially to bring about the unification of its debt in such a way as to reduce the customs guaranties which are affected by it at present, and to carry out an effective monetary reform.

In order to grant to capital all desirable guaranties, the Government of Haiti agrees to employ in the customhouses, as well as in collectors' offices and others, only Haitian officials whose morality and capability are well known.

The lenders may be consulted regarding the choice of the higher customs officials.

The Haitian Government shall also assure protection to capital and to all foreign interests in general by the organization of a rural horse guard, instructed according to the most modern methods.

Meanwhile it may, if necessary, resort to the aid of the American Government in order to check disorders and serious troubles which might compromise foreign interests.

The American forces which would, if the case should come up, cooperate with Haitian troops for the reestablishment of order, must be withdrawn from Haitian territory at the first demand of the constitutional authorities.

3. The President of the Republic of Haiti agrees not to grant any rights, privileges, or facilities whatsoever on the St. Nicholas mole, nor to concede, sell, rent, or otherwise permit, directly or indirectly, the occupation or use of the St. Nicholas mole to any Government, to any national or nationals of any Government.

4. The President of the Republic of Haiti agrees, within six months of the ratification of the present convention, to sign a convention of arbitration with the powers concerned for the settlement of pending diplomatic claims, which convention of arbitration shall recognize equal treatment to all claimants; that is to say, that no privilege for the profit of any of them shall be recognized.

The present convention shall be ratified by the competent authorities in the two countries, and the exchange of ratifications shall be made at Port-au-Prince as soon as possible after the ———. Presented on June 2, 1915.

[Texte Proposé par la Légation des Etats-Unis d'Amérique Aout 1915.]

APPENDIX No. 4.<sup>2</sup>

MEMORANDUM.

En vue de l'attitude amicale montrée par le Gouvernement haïtien, le Chargé d'Affaires par interim des Etats-Unis a reçu instruction de rédiger et de soumettre officiellement au Président de la République d'Haïti, sans délai, le projet de traité ci-joint de l'informer que le Département d'Etat à Washington croit que l'Assemblée Nationale haïtienne, garante de la sincérité et de l'intérêt des haïtiens, voudra voter immédiatement une résolution autorisant le Président d'Haïti à accepter sans modification, le traité suivant :

[Projet de Convention entre les Etats-Unis et la République d'Haïti.]

PREAMBLE.

Les Etats-Unis et la République d'Haïti, désireux d'affermir et de fortifier l'amitié existant entre eux par une plus cordiale coopération à des mesures pour leur avantage commun, et la République d'Haïti désirant remédier à la situation de ses finances qui n'est pas satisfaisante, empêcher la perte de beaucoup de ses revenus, due en partie aux troubles intérieurs, prendre des dispositions contre l'augmentation peu judicieuse de sa dette publique, inaugurer un système compréhensible pour l'examen et la tenue de la comptabilité publique, faire provision suffisante pour la service de ses dettes extérieures, maintenir la tranquillité de la République, exécuter des projets pour le développement économique et la prospérité de la République et du peuple haïtiens, consolider son crédit et en général asseoir et maintenir ses finances sur une base solide et stable, les Etats-Unis sympathisant entièrement avec toutes ces vues et ces objets, et désireux de contribuer à leur réalisation par tous les moyens convenables :

Les Etats-Unis et la République d'Haïti, ayant résolu de conclure une convention ayant ces objets en vue, ont nommé à cet effet comme Plénipotentiaires, les Etats-Unis, Mr. ———, et Haïti ———, Mr. ———, lesquels s'étant mutuellement communiqué leurs pleins pouvoirs respectifs trouvés en bonne et due forme, ont convenu ce qui suit :

1. Le Président des Etats-Unis nommera un receveur général, qui, avec tels aides et employés que le Président des Etats-Unis pourra nommer ou autoriser, recouvrera, recevra et appliquera tous les droits de douane tant à l'importation qu'à l'exportation provenant des diverses douanes et ports d'entrée de la République d'Haïti. Le Président des Etats-Unis désignera à la République d'Haïti un conseiller financier qui élaborera un système adéquat de comptabilité publique, aidera à l'augmentation des revenus et à leur ajustement aux dépenses, enquêtera sur la validité des dettes de la République, éclairera les deux Gouvernements relativement à toutes dettes éventuelles, recommandera des méthodes perfectionnées d'encaisser et d'appliquer les revenus, et en général exercera les fonctions d'un contrôleur.

<sup>2</sup> This is a translation into French, published at Port au Prince of the original English text, which is not now available.

2. Le Gouvernement de la République d'Haïti pourvoiera par une loi ou par un décret approprié, à ce que le paiement de tous les droits de douane soit fait au receveur général, et il accordera au bureau de la recette et au conseiller financier toute l'aide et la protection nécessaires à l'exécution des pouvoirs qui lui sont conférés et à l'accomplissement des devoirs qui lui sont imposés par les présents; les Etats-Unis, de leur côté accorderont la même aide et la même protection.

3. A la nomination du conseiller financier, le Gouvernement de la République d'Haïti, avec la coopération du conseiller financier, collationnera, classera, arrangera et fera un relevé complet de toutes les dettes de la République, de leur montant, caractère, échéance et condition, intérêts y afférents, et amortissement nécessaire à leur complet paiement.

4. Toutes les valeurs recouvrées et encaissées par le receveur général seront appliquées: premièrement au paiement des appointements et allocations du receveur général, de ses auxiliaires et employés, et les dépenses du bureau de la recette comprendront les appointements et les dépenses du conseiller financier; deuxièmement, à l'intérêt et à l'amortissement de la dette publique de la République d'Haïti; troisièmement à l'entretien de la police visée à l'article huit et alors le reste, au Gouvernement haïtien pour les dépenses courantes.

En faisant ces applications, le receveur général procédera au paiement des appointements et allocations mensuelles et des dépenses telles qu'elles se présentent, et au premier de chaque mois, il mettra à un compte spécial le montant des recouvrements et recettes du mois précédent.

5. Les dépenses du bureau de la recette, y compris les appointements et allocations du receveur général, de ses auxiliaires et employés, ne devront pas dépasser cinq pour cent des recouvrements et recettes provenant des droits de douane, à moins d'une convention entre les deux Gouvernements.

6. Le receveur général fera un rapport mensuel au fonctionnaire haïtien obligé financièrement à moins que, les dépenses du Gouvernement défrayées, les recettes et les dépenses; ces rapports seront soumis à l'inspection et à la vérification des autorités compétentes de chacun des dits Gouvernements.

La République d'Haïti ne devra pas augmenter sa dette ni assumer aucune obligation financière à moins que, les dépenses du Gouvernement défrayées, les revenus de la République disponibles à cette fin, soient suffisants pour payer les intérêts et pourvoir à un amortissement pour l'extinction complète d'une telle dette.

7. La République d'Haïti, sans l'assentiment du Président des Etats-Unis, ne modifiera pas les droits de douane d'une façon qui en réduise les revenus, et afin que les revenus de la République soient suffisants pour faire face à la dette publique et aux dépenses du Gouvernement, pour préserver la tranquillité et promouvoir la prospérité matérielle, la République d'Haïti coopérera avec le conseiller financier suivant ses recommandations relatives à l'amélioration des méthodes de recouvrer, de dépenser les revenus, et à la création des sources nouvelles de revenus qui feront besoin.

8. Le Gouvernement haïtien, en vue de la préservation de la paix intérieure, de la sécurité des droits individuels et de la complète observance des dispositions de ce traité, s'engage à créer sans délai une police efficace, composée d'haïtiens. Cette police sera organisée par des américains qui en seront les officiers, désignés par le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis et que le Gouvernement haïtien nommera et revêtira de l'autorité voulue et nécessaire, et soutiendra dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions. La police ici prévue aura, sous la direction du Gouvernement haïtien, la surveillance et le contrôle des armes et munitions, des articles militaires et du commerce qui s'en fait dans tout le pays. Les stipulations de cet article sont nécessaires pour prévenir les luttes des factions et les désordres.

9. Le Gouvernement d'Haïti convient de ne céder aucune partie du territoire de la République d'Haïti par vente, bail ou autrement, ni conférer juridiction sur tel territoire à aucune Puissance ou Gouvernement étrangers, excepté aux Etats-Unis, ni signer avec aucune autre puissance, ni autres puissances, aucun traité ni contrat qui diminuera ou tendra à diminuer l'indépendance d'Haïti.

10. Le Gouvernement haïtien convient de signer avec les Etats-Unis un protocole pour le règlement, par arbitrage ou autrement, de toutes les réclamations pécuniaires pendantes entre les corporations, compagnies, citoyens ou sujets étrangers et Haïti.

11. La République d'Haïti désirant activer le développement de ses ressources naturelles, convient d'entreprendre et d'exécuter telles mesures qui, dans l'opinion du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, peuvent être nécessaires au point de vue de l'hygiène et de l'avancement de la République d'Haïti, sous la surveillance et la direction d'un ou plusieurs ingénieurs qui seront désignés par le Président des Etats-Unis, nommés et autorisés à cette fin par le Gouvernement d'Haïti.

12. Les Etats-Unis auront autorité pour empêcher toute ingérence dans l'accomplissement d'un point (object) quelconque compris dans cette convention; ils auront aussi bien le droit d'intervenir pour la préservation de l'indépendance haïtienne et pour le maintien d'un Gouvernement capable de protéger la vie, la propriété et la liberté individuelle.

13. Le présent traité sera approuvé et ratifié par les hautes parties contractantes conformément à leurs lois respectives, et la ratification sera échangée dans la ville de Washington aussitôt que possible.

14. Le présent traité restera en force et vigueur pendant une durée de dix années à partir du jour de l'échange des ratifications, et en outre pour une autre période de dix années à la demande d'une des parties.

En foi dequoi les Plénipotentiaires ont signé la présente convention en double et y ont apposé leurs sceaux.

APPENDIX No. 5.

PROCLAMATION.

To the people of Port au Prince, Haïti:

Information having been received from the most reliable sources that the present Government of Haïti is confronted with the conditions which they are unable to control, although loyally attempting to discharge the duties of their respective offices; and these facts having created a condition which requires the adoption of different measures than those heretofore applied; and in order to afford the inhabitants of Port au Prince and other territory hereinafter described, the privileges of the Government, exercising all the functions necessary for the establishment and maintenance of the fundamental rights of man: I hereby, under my authority as commanding officer of the forces of the United States of America in Haïti and Haïtien waters, proclaim that marshal law exists in the city of Port au Prince and the immediate territory now occupied by the forces under my command.

I further proclaim in accordance with the law of nations and the usages, customs, and functions of my own and other Governments, that I am invested with the power and responsibility of government in all its functions and branches throughout the territory above described and the proper administration of such Government my martial law will be provided for in regulations to be issued from time to time, as required, by the commanding officer of the forces of the United States of America in Haïti and Haïtien waters.

The martial law herein proclaimed, and the things in that respect so ordered, will not be deemed or taken to interfere with the proceedings of the constitutional Government and Congress of Haïti, or with the administration of justice in the courts of law existing therein; which do not affect the military operations or the authorities of the Government of the United States of America.

All the municipal and other civil employees are, therefore, requested to continue in their present vocations without change; and the military authorities will not interfere in the functions of the civil administration and the courts, except in so far as relates to persons violating military orders or regulations, or otherwise interfering with the exercise of military authority. All peaceful citizens can confidently pursue their usual occupations, feeling that they will be protected in their personal rights and property, as well as in their proper social relations.

The commanding officer of the United States Expeditionary Force, Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, is empowered to issue the necessary regulations and appoint the necessary officers to make this material law effective.

Done at the city of Port au Prince, Haïti, this 3d day of September, A. D. 1915.

W. B. CAPERTON,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
Commanding the Forces of the United States of America in Haïti and Haïtian Waters.

40 INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

APPENDIX No. 6.

MODUS VIVENDI.

Considering that, pending the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of September 16, 1915, it is essential that a provisional arrangement be entered into between the two Governments with a view to guarantee the working of the administrative services, the repression of disorder, and the maintenance of public peace:

The following Modus Vivendi has been agreed upon between the Haitian Government and the Government of the United States of America, represented respectively by Louis Borno, secretary of state for foreign affairs, and Arthur Bailly-Blanchard, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

The treaty signed September 16, 1915, between the Republic of Haiti and the United States and ratified by the Haitian Chamber of Deputies on October 6, 1915, and by the Haitian Senate on November 11, 1915, shall go provisionally into full force and effect from this date and shall be operated thereunder until the Senate of the United States has acted upon the treaty, under reserve of the details of the operation of the treaty to be arranged at Washington between the Department of State and the Haitian commission appointed for that purpose.

Signed and sealed in duplicate, in the English and French languages, at Port au Prince, Haiti, the 29th day of November, 1915, by the aforesaid representatives on behalf of their respective Governments.

LOUIS BORNO.

A. BAILLY-BLANCHARD.

APPENDIX No. 7.

MEMORANDUM.

REPUBLIC OF HAITI,
STATE SECRETARY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Port au Prince, December 20, 1915.

The Haitian Government is ready to receive from the Occupation the municipal administrations which it has taken over.

As it was understood that a special agreement would be made for each case the Government asks to resume as soon as possible the administration of the public services of Port au Prince, the water works, and the municipal services. With this object the United States Legation is informed that the water works will be taken by Mr. Thomas Price, engineer, and the municipal administrations by a commission whose members will be named later. The United States Legation will kindly inform the department of foreign affairs of the American officer who will be in charge of returning the administrations to the agents of the Haitian Government, that he is to make out with them all inventories, accounts of works needed, reparations, etc., in short, to carry out the details of the agreement.

When the municipal services of Port au Prince are returned to Haitian control the same procedure shall be applied to the other communes; that is, the department of foreign affairs and the United States Legation, respectively, shall indicate one or more agents to make out the inventories or accounts of works, reparations, etc., to be carried on under Haitian control, and the agreement for each case shall be sent to the legation and to the department of foreign affairs.

As for the funds needed to carry on the administrations, for reparations, works, etc., the Haitian Government expects Admiral Caperton to supply them to the Haitian agents designated for these works.

In fact, the revenues of the Government are collected by the occupation; it has at its disposal only the amounts paid it by Admiral Caperton and which are devoted to the necessities of governmental existence. They are not sufficient to cover, among other things, the expenses of the various waterworks and municipalities, expenses which are now paid directly by the American authorities.

The return of these services was the object of a formal agreement established by the Appendix of the Modus Vivendi. This return necessarily involves expenses, and the means of meeting them are a necessary part of this return. Moreover, these expenses are now paid to the American occupation by Admiral Caperton out of the funds of the public Treasury; in paying them to the Haitian authorities henceforth, it shall not be considered a new expense.

Consequently, the Haitian Government considers that when the details of the agreement charge expenses against the Haitian administration, the means of meeting them shall be furnished to the latter out of the funds of the public treasury.

Immediate action on the part of the American authorities, in accordance with the present memorandum, would be highly appreciated by the Haitian Government.

---

APPENDIX No. 8.

HAITIAN LEGATION,
Washington, November 15, 1918.

In the name of the Government, go without delay, personally, and transmit, in writing, the following note to the Secretary of State, personally: "Just at the time when Your Excellency is addressing the Haitian Government as the Government of a free and independent nation, just at the time when, thanks to the power of the United States, the sacred principles of law, justice, and respect for small nations are triumphant in the world, the Haitian nation is prey to the distressing and unjust tyranny of American officials who, contrary to the treaty, are trying to impose upon the Republic of Haiti budget laws and taxes, without examining anything with us, without recognizing the right of the Haitian Government even to rectify evident errors, material and others, made in their projects. The Haitian people are very sincerely determined to bring about, with the aid of the American Government, all the reforms which progress demands, but by means of the very cordial cooperation stipulated in the treaty, of cooperation arising from examinations in common and not at all by means of imperative injunctions, announced without respect for national dignity, and sometimes inspired by sentiments of a personal nature, in which the superior interests of the two countries are not considered. Also, the Haitian Government is convinced that the State Department, which is incompletely informed regarding the actual situation in Haiti, will take careful measures for the legitimate satisfaction of the Haitian nation, which has full confidence in the noble impartiality of the honorable chief of the State Department and the illustrious chief of the Government of the United States."

---

APPENDIX No. 9.

Le Secrétaire d'Etat présente ses compliments au Chargé d'Affaires ad interim de la République d'Haiti et a l'honneur d'accuser réception de sa Note datée du 20 Novembre, 1918, par laquelle, selon les instructions expresses de son Gouvernement, le Chargé d'Affaires a fait connaître certaines plaintes contre les actes des fonctionnaires américains, en contravention avec le traité de 1915, entre le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis et le Gouvernement d'Haiti, et dans la quelle le Gouvernement haïtien a exprimé sa conviction que le Département d'Etat jugera à propos de prendre des mesures pour donner satisfaction aux désirs légitimes de la nation haïtienne.

En addition aux accusations générales du Gouvernement haïtien touchant "les vexations et la tyrannie injuste des fonctionnaires américains" en Haiti, le Département d'Etat note que le Gouvernement haïtien est de l'opinion que le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis n'est pas complètement renseigné au sujet de la vraie situation en Haiti. Comme suite à ces affirmations et en vue de la très sérieuse portée de l'accusation générale contre les fonctionnaires américains en Haiti que la note plus haut mentionnée contient, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis désire que le Gouvernement d'Haiti fasse une déclaration plus précise et plus détaillée en ce qui regarde les questions exposées dans la note du 20 Novembre, 1918.

ROBERT LANSING.

Département d'Etat.
Washington, 30 Novembre, 1918.

---

APPENDIX No. 10.

PROTEST.

We, undersigned Senators, assembled in a hall on the corner of People and Dantes Destouches Streets, formerly Pavée Street, temporarily taken over for our legislative work, because of the closing of the National Building for the past month by order of executive power, to prevent us from working there.

After drawing up a report at quarter past 4 to-day, stating the impossibility of working in ordinary session, lacking a majority, we were obliged to retire immediately, upon the injunction of an American officer accompanied by Haitian gendarmes, who informed us of the order to leave the hall.

Before this brutal force and after protesting against this unusual act we decided to go to the house of M. Paul Laraque, president of the senate, at Champ-de-Mars, where we drew up this report, to be of whatever service and value it may.

Signed on this day, May 5, 1916.

Suirad Villard, M. Morpeau, Dr. D. Désir, N. S. Lafontant, O. Brice, Baussan, F. N. Apollon, Dr. I. E. Jeanty, T. Laleau, Ls. Ed. Pouget, Dr. Holland, C. Cabèche, N. Nelson, T. Sainave, C. Latorue, L. C. Lhérisson, P. Laraque.

APPENDIX No. 11.<sup>2</sup>

PORT AU PRINCE, 7 Avril, 1917.

SON EXCELLENCE MONSIEUR LOUIS BORNO,

Ministre des Affaires Etrangères, Port au Prince.

MONSIEUR LE MINISTRE: En conséquence des instructions du Département d'Etat, j'ai l'honneur d'informer votre Excellence que, après avoir soigneusement examiné le Project de la Nouvelle Constitution haïtienne, le Département d'Etat a plusieurs suggestions qu'il considère obligatoires, et susceptibles d'être mises à l'étude et à l'examen par le Gouvernement de votre Excellence préalable-ment à toute action définitive à cet égard du Corps Législatif.

Le Département avise en outre cette Légation que dans les quelques prochains jours, les suggestions en question seront expédiées par cable.

Veuillez agréer, Monsieur Le Ministre, les assurances de ma haute considération.

A. BAILLY-BLANCHARD,
Ministre Américain.

LÉGATION DES ETATS-UNIS D'AMÉRIQUE,
Port au Prince, Haïti, 11 Avril, 1917.

S. E. MONSIEUR LOUIS BORNO,

Secrétaire d'Etat des Relations Extérieures.

MONSIEUR LE MINISTRE: Me référant à ma note du 7 Avril relative à certaines suggestions touchant le projet de la Nouvelle Constitution haïtienne et à mon avis que la Legation serait en possession des suggestions en question dans quelques jours, j'ai l'honneur de dire que mon Gouvernement m'a chargé de porter à l'attention du Gouvernement de Votre Excellence son désir de voir les changements suivants dans le dit projet:

Art. 4. Les étrangers jouiront de toutes les protections accordées aux haïtiens sans exception.

Art. 5. La condition de cinq années de résidence serait écartée. L'intention de faire le commerce et de résider serait ajoutée à la liste des entreprises pour lesquelles la propriété immobilière peut être acquise. L'exception concernant l'intervention diplomatique serait écartée.

Art. 96. Les Secrétaires d'Etat ne recevraient aucun frais de représentation en plus de leurs indemnités.

Art. 97 à 104 inclus: Le Conseil d'Etat n'est pas nécessaire, étant donnée l'existence du Corps Législatif, et les dépenses y afférentes ne sont pas justifiées; à omettre tout ce qui s'y réfère des articles 81, 94 et autres.

Art 121. Des dispositions seraient prévues pour la poursuite des juges en Cassation et des juges d'appel de la même façon que pour celle des Secrétaires d'Etat.

Art. 131. Serait lu: L'examen et la liquidation des comptes de l'Administration générale et de tous autres offices comptables envers le Trésor Public seront déterminés par la loi.

Les articles 132, 133 et 134 seraient écartés.

Art. 140. Les étrangers jouiraient de toute protection accordée aux haïtiens, sans exception, et en outre, il ne serait pas refusé le droit de réclamer des indemnités pour les torts ou pertes éprouvés.

<sup>2</sup> This is a translation into French of the original English text, which is not now available.

Article . . . La substance de l'article 4 de Pappendice à la constitution cubaine ratifiant les actes des États-Unis en Haïti durant l'Occupation militaire. Veuillez agréer, Monsieur le Ministre, les assurances de ma haute considération.

H. BAILLY-BLANCHARD,
Minister Américain.

APPENDIX No. 12.

The so-called voting by the people of Haiti on the constitution prepared in advance for them and rammed down their throats by the Wilson administration is ridiculed by Dr. Evans. He thus describes it to Secretary Daniels:

"The prosession of voters (!) resembled funerals in their silence, solemnity, and mournful character as these people passed along like sheep into courts of justice (?) which were turned that day all through the country into Haitian slaughter houses. Each was especially guarded by the gendarmerie. For the sake of giving a little color to the affair and thus perfecting the farce, a native commissaire, or dummy officer, sat in the chair by the side of the white officer.

"When entering the court a small, white paper, stamped with the words 'Police administration' and bearing date June 11, 1918, and also the French word 'Oul' (Yes), was placed in the trembling hand of the native, who then was motioned—no word being spoken or question being asked—to the box in front of the white American officer in supreme charge, with a native dummy assistant at his side. A bundle of pink papers bearing the French word 'non' (no) curiously and significantly remained tied together on the table. Thus terrorized and helpless to resist, these people sorrowfully and slavishly submitted, as most of them were brought in from small villages guarded and closely watched."<sup>39</sup>

APPENDIX No. 13.

In a memorandum dated January 25, 1919, addressed by the Haitian secretary of foreign affairs to the State Department at Washington, in reply to Mr. Robert Lansing's note of November 30, 1918, we quote the following passage:

"When the Haitian newspaper Le Nouvelliste announced on November 22, 1918, in most cautious terms and in a tentative way, the recall of the financial adviser, even ending its notice with praise for President Wilson, the owner of the paper, M. Chauvet, was arrested by the agents of the occupation, imprisoned, sentenced by court-martial to a fine of $300, and forced to suspend his paper for three months."

For the enlightenment of all, we reproduce the article from Le Nouvelliste:

MR. RUAN RECALLED.

"It appears that Mr. A. T. Ruan has been relieved of his duties as financial adviser as a result of difficulties with our Government. The recall of Mr. Ruan affirms the sentiments of right and justice proclaimed by President Wilson and which, as the eminent statesman has often repeated, must be the compass which guides the relations between all nations, great and small."<sup>40</sup>

"This time also the mere announcement of this change, although it is made without comment, is sufficient to indicate the nature of the unjust and distressing tyranny practiced by American officials in Haiti toward the Haitian people."<sup>41</sup>

In a communication dated April 5, 1919, Mr. Charles Moravia, Haitian minister to Washington, recalled this serious incident to the State Department, directing attention to " * * * the excessive severity of these provost courts ordering punishments out of all proportion to the crime committed." As an example he cited the Chauvet case mentioned in the memorandum of the Haitian Government, dated February 25, 1919, and presented to the State Department on February 14 of the same year. And he added, "there are many others."<sup>42</sup>

<sup>39</sup> Pastor Evans of the Protestant Church of St. Mark (Haiti), in the New York Herald, Oct. 25, 1920.

<sup>40</sup> Italics ours.

<sup>41</sup> See Haitian Blue Book, 1921, p. 48.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid., p. 172.

In reply to the communication of the Haitian minister, Mr. Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, said, in reference to the Chauvet case, in his communication of October 10, 1919:

"You refer to the 'excessive severity' of the gendarmerie or provost courts and cite as an instance thereof the case of Chauvet. In regard to this case, it may be stated that the sentence is considered as in all ways a proper punishment of the offense committed."<sup>43</sup>

UNION PATRIOTIQUE D'HAÏTI.

The Union Patriotique d'Haïti is a nonpartisan organization founded at Port au Prince, November 17, 1920, to crystallize the national aspirations of the Haitians for the return of their independence, maintained, until the American invasion, for 111 years. Every one of the 27 districts which constitute the Republic of Haiti is represented, and the Union has virtually the unanimous support of the entire Haitian people.

LIST OF MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Chairman.—M. Georges Sylvain, lawyer, former envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Haiti in France and at the Holy See, and officer of the Legion of Honor.

General Secretary.—M. Perceval Thoby, former chargé d'affaires of the Haitian Legation at Washington, and former chief of division of the department of foreign affairs, former inspector general of the consular service.

Treasurer.—M. Moravia Morpeau, lawyer, manufacturer, and former senator.

Archivist.—M. Ch. Rosemond, notary.

Members of the board.—MM. H. Baussan, lawyer, planter, former president of the senate; D. Bourand, merchant, former secretary of the interior; F. L. Cauvin, lawyer, former secretary of the interior and of justice; D. Jeannot, lawyer, former secretary of the interior and of justice; Lespinasse, lawyer, former envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Haiti in France, former secretary of foreign affairs, of finance, and of justice; L. Liautaud, lawyer; Price Mars, professor, former envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Haiti in France; Léon Nau, lawyer, former dean of the civil court of Port-au-Prince; Pauléus Sannon, publicist, former envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Haiti to the United States, former secretary of foreign affairs; Ls. Ed. Pouget, manufacturer, former senator, former chargé d'affaires of Haiti at Berlin, decorated with the black eagle; Sténio Vincent, former secretary of the interior and of justice, former president of the senate, former resident minister of Haiti in Holland.

Advisory Council.—MM. G. Boco, planter, former secretary of agriculture and public works; Victor Cauvin, lawyer; F. Colcou, physician, president of the medical board; V. Delbeau, teacher, former secretary of the Haitian Legation at Washington; Arthur Holly, physician; ~~Abel N. Léger~~, lawyer, former secretary of the Haitian legation at Paris; Clément Lespinasse, planter and manufacturer; Alexander Lillavois, former head of accounts in the department of finance and publicist; A. Rigul, lawyer, former district governor; P. Salomon, head doctor of the St. François de Sales Hospital, former dean of the Medical School, former secretary of public education; F. Viard, merchant, former secretary of the Haitian legation at London; Constant Vieux, planter, coeditor of the Courlier Haïtien, former secretary of the interior; Is. Vieux, lawyer, former government commissioner at the civil court of Port-au-Prince; S. Pradel, lawyer, former secretary of the interior and of justice; H. Dorsainville, lawyer, editor of L'Essor; Hyson, physician, managing editor Le Matin; F. Diambols, lawyer, editor of La Renaissance; Fréd. Duvignaud, lawyer, coeditor of the Nouvelliste; Jérémie, planter, former secretary of public education, of justice, and of the interior; J. C. Dorsainvil, physician, chief of division of the department of public education; A. Pierre Paul, merchant, former deputy; Pierr Eugène de Lespinasse, lawyer; Fleury Lavelanet, manufacturer, former communal councillor; Florvil Nau, planter; Jules Canal, manufacturer, former deputy; St. Martin B. Canal, planter, former deputy; R. Brouard, merchant; Evremond Carrié, lawyer; H. Laventure, teacher; Edmond Roumain, pharmacist and chemist, former senator; Paul Laroque, lawyer, former judge of the court of cassation, former president of the senate; T. Laleau, president of bar of Port-au-Prince, former secretary of justice; H. Brisson, president of the chamber of commerce, former president of the commerce court at Port-au-Prince; V. Gervais, lawyer, former chargé d'affaires of Haiti in Cuba; Florian Alfred, former chief of the communal administration; F. B. César, manufacturer; Vil Lubin, planter; René E. Auguste, planter, former deputy.

<sup>43</sup> See Haitian Blue Book, 1921, p. 175.

Mr. ANGELL. I have here a brief statement in the nature of an outline not of specific charges but an outline of charges which have been made and have been laid, and a suggested scope of the inquiry for the committee, offered with the idea that we will supplement that within a very short time by a list of specific witnesses whom we think it will be absolutely necessary for the committee to call, in order that it may arrive at the facts underlying the occupation.

That is all, gentlemen, that we have.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee had better receive your outline and incorporate it in the record. It will not be necessary for you to read it, I think. It will be available to the members of the committee and the press when filed with the committee.

(The statement referred to is here printed in full as follows:)

On behalf of the Haiti-Santo Domingo Independence Society and the Union Patriotique d'Haiti and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People:

We respectfully protest to the Senate Committee of Inquiry into Conditions in Haiti and Santo Domingo against the present occupation of the Republics of Haiti and San Domingo by the armed forces of the United States and demand their withdrawal and the restoration of the two Republics to their complete and absolute independence in accordance with their previously existing constitution as soon as effective native civilian governments can be erected.

We make this demand in the name of justice, liberty, and the sacred right, upheld by the outcome of the World War to a separate existence and complete freedom of every small nation and in accordance with our historic American traditions.

We declare that the pulling down by violence of these Republics was without adequate reason, was unwarranted in American or international law, uncalled for by the then existing political conditions, and in direct violation of the fourteenth peace point of the United States as enunciated by President Woodrow Wilson, the guaranteeing "of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike."

We declare that the American occupation of these lands has to date been destructive and without fundamental constructive value; that no foundation has been laid for the permanent rebuilding of these governments; that the physical improvements made, such as the building of roads and the sanitation of cities have been achieved at an indefensible cost—in Haiti at the price of a forced enslavement under the Corvée, which the American conscience would never have permitted to exist had it not been veiled by an impenetrable naval censorship.

We declare that American domination of Haiti and Santo Domingo has been accompanied by individual wrongs and military excesses accentuated by the difference in language, race, and traditions, and that it has afforded completest proof of the truth of Alabama Lincoln's immortal saying that "No man is good enough to govern any other man without that other man's consent."

We declare that the constitution and treaty forced upon the Haitian people and the military régime imposed upon the Dominican people without even the sanction of a constitution or treaty are unworthy of the genius and the generosity of the American people and tend to the establishment of perpetual protectorates involving the domination of the development of those republics by an alien government at Washington.

We declare that the efforts of the State Department to compel the Dominicans to sign a treaty ratifying and approving every official act of this Government to be utterly unworthy of any righteously minded country; we affirm the right of these people to complete redress for any injuries committed by the military government.

We declare that the acts of this Government in Haiti and Santo Domingo since July 20, 1915, have injured our relations with the Central American and and marine officers who have occupied important positions in the administration of the American occupation there. Obviously those gentlemen are not going to come at our mere request. I say, obviously. I take it for granted they would not. They would require at least a suggestion from the committee to appear. Other officers of the Government may turn up; former officers who might have to be requested to appear here in order that we may find out, for example, why the United States went down there and occupied those two countries.

Senator KING. When will you be ready to submit to the chairman a list of the names of the witnesses in the United States whose examination will be necessary to elucidate the facts in the case?

Mr. ANGELL. Certainly within a week, possibly within a very much shorter time, if the committee absolutely needs it.

The CHAIRMAN. I think a week will be time enough.

Senator KING. Well, Mr. Chairman, I, of course, feel like we ought to subpoena any witnesses who refuse to come upon notification, after we shall have been satisfied that their testimony is necessary. I think the captain should submit a list, and then he and his associates tell us the materiality and pertinency of their testimony, and if the committee believes their testimony pertinent, we ought to subpoena them if they refuse to come.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further, Captain?

Mr. ANGELL. I think not, Senator. We hoped the committee would to-day give us some indication of when you propose to begin the actual hearings, both here and in Haiti and Santo Domingo, if the committee proposes to go down there, so that we can, of course, prepare accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. Until we have examined the memorials and statements filed to-day, I do not believe we could fix the course of the hearings, or, indeed, until the list of names of those whom you intend to have called as witnesses has been filed. These hearings do not follow a set program. We go forward as fast as we can. Unhappily, we have other duties to occupy us.

Mr. ANGELL. Coming back to what we were discussing a moment ago, that is the question of the witnesses, you asked me to submit a list of the witnesses, indicating the probable materiality of their evidence, and, if I understood Senator King correctly, whether or not they would come voluntarily at our request. For example, as one name that occurs to me right away, we shall want to request the presence here of Gen. Barnett for examination. I understand he is on the Pacific coast. If we write to him and say, "Will you come?" obviously he could not leave his assigned duties and would not come on.

The CHAIRMAN. If you have nothing further to offer, Capt. Angell, we will now hear Mr. Knowles.

STATEMENT OF MR. HORACE G. KNOWLES, REPRESENTING THE PATRIOTIC LEAGUE OF THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC AND THE DEPOSED DOMINICAN GOVERNMENT.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen: I represent the Patriotic League of the Dominican Republic, and the deposed Dominican Government.

Senator KING. The latter consists of whom?

Mr. KNOWLES. The President and chief remnants or remains of that Government which exists to-day.

Senator KING. You do not represent Haiti?

Mr. KNOWLES. No. Owing to the absence of Dr. Henriquez from the city, who arrived only this morning, an hour or so ago, we have not been able to prepare on the part of the Dominican Republic any form of memorandum or statement. That will be done, however, in the shortest possible time.

I would like to inquire, in order that these two cases may not overlap or may not be treated as exactly similar, because the conditions and the actions of our Government in each of those countries were entirely separate and distinct from what they were in the other, whether, as a matter of procedure and policy, the committee would not prefer to take up the one and go forward with it, and then take up the other.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps after you have filed the memorial on behalf of your clients the committee can decide whether to proceed with the investigation into the Haitian occupation first or the Dominican occupation. We have nothing before us at this time. When can we expect a copy of your memorial?

Mr. KNOWLES. When will the committee have another session?

The CHAIRMAN. I was going to ask the consent of the committee that the Chair might receive that memorial and distribute it in advance of the next meeting of the committee.

Senator KING. Surely.

The CHAIRMAN. May we have that some time within the week?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes, indeed.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I can receive it, and it can be incorporated in this record, with the unanimous consent of the committee, and distributed to the members for their information.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think we can present that to you, Mr. Chairman, either Tuesday or Wednesday, at the latest.

Senator KING. I think it is very wise that we, so far as possible, keep the two cases apart, and yet I can conceive that there may be witnesses who are here from a distance who may be required to testify on both cases. In that event I would, of course, feel that we ought to hear the testimony distinct on one case, on Santo Domingo, and then move over and take their testimony on the Haitian case, so as not to be compelled to overlap.

Mr. KNOWLES. That is practical, Senator.

(Mr. Knowles subsequently submitted to the chairman the following statement on behalf of the Republic of Santo Domingo:)

To the chairman and members of the Special Committee of the United States Senate to investigate the occupation by and administration of the United States in the Dominican Republic.

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, Horace G. Knowles, adviser and assistant of the Dominican National Commission in the United States, respectfully represents to your honorable committee, that since 1844 the Dominican Republic has been a sovereign nation, and its people free and independent, and in no less degree than the United States, Great Britain, France, the Argentine, Chile, or Peru, and it has been so recognized by all the nations of the earth. Since its independence and until the invasion and armed occupation by the United States, which began May 15, 1916, and has continued uninterruptedly since that date, it has been accorded an unconditional place in the family of nations, and with many of them, including the United States, it maintained diplomatic relations of the pleasantest character, and with them it negotiated treaties of friendship and commerce. It is a member of The Hague International Court of Arbitration, and it would have taken an active part in the late World War, alongside the United States, of course, and probably would have joined the League of Nations, had it not been deprived of its sovereignty, liberty, and right of free and independent action.

In 1916 when the Dominican Republic was at peace with the world, while it was a party to two existing treaties with the United States, and in direct violation to one of them, and without the Dominican Republic having violated in any way the other; against the sovereign rights of the Dominican Nation; contrary to the everywhere recognized principles of international law; breaking the pledges contained in the United States' own interpretation of the Monroe doctrine; disregarding both the letter and spirit of a resolution proposed by the United States at the second peace conference of The Hague, and then and there adopted and being in full force since then and until now; contrary to the unquestionable meaning of No. 14 of the famous Wilson's "Fourteen Points"; and in violation of the Constitution of the United States; President Wilson, without the slightest attempt to appeal to or use diplomatic means, ordered a part of the United States Navy to go secretly, and without giving any notice whatever to the Dominican Government, to Santo Domingo and to land there its troops, to seize the Government, and proceed to subjugate the people. Obedient to such instructions, partly in the handwriting of President Wilson, and signed by him, without in any way either consulting or informing Congress, without a declaration of war, an illegal, unprovoked, unjustified, and totally unwarranted act of war was committed against the Dominican Republic and its people, and for more than five years the United States Government has maintained a state of war in that country.

Stealthily American battleships entered the roadstead of Santo Domingo City, and under cover of a score or more of long-range, big-caliber guns the American admiral, with a large force of marines, landed on Dominican territory. That was a paramount act of war. A little later the said admiral presented to the Dominican President, Francisco Henriquez y Carvajal, who had been duly elected and formally inaugurated, a ready-made treaty, an exact duplicate of the one that had just been, by guns and bayonets, forced upon the helpless Haitian Government and people, and which treaty destroyed completely their sovereignty, took from them their liberty and independence, and put the country under the absolute control of the United States Government. The Dominican President, mindful of the sovereign rights of his nation and of his oath of office, his promise to uphold the constitution and laws of his country and to defend it in every necessary and possible way, informed the admiral of the reasons why he could and would not accept such a treaty. It might be argued that the Dominican Republic would be better off under the control of the United States; and so might Brazil, the Argentine, Chile, and Peru, and even England and France. That was the object and argument, which is the corner stone of imperialism, that the Germans had in mind in 1914. The Dominicans were a sovereign people, no less so than the Brazilians, Argentinians, Chileans, Peruvians, the English, and French, and people of the United States, and they, as would the others under the same circumstances, wanted to remain free and independent, and it was their right to do so. That country was theirs as much as this country is ours, and so long as they respected their treaty obligations and in no way molested foreigners or their interests they had and have the right to do what they please in and with it. That has ever been the American policy, and never was it better expressed than by President Wilson.

President Henriquez refused to accept the demands of the American admiral, whereupon the admiral, acting, of course, under orders from Washington, proceeded to use pressure and force. One of his first acts was to issue a proclamation of occupation, and in which he announced himself as the military governor of the Dominican Republic. The proclamation gave two alleged reasons for the armed intervention and occupation, the first of which was a violation of the treaty of 1907, which allegation was, has been, and is stoutly denied by the Dominicans; and the second was to quell disorders and disturbances in the country. At the time the proclamation was issued and for several months prior thereto there were no disorders and absolute peace reigned throughout the country. Disorders, when occasionally they did occur, were of a purely political character, confined to the natives, and never even in a single instance did they involve foreigners or in any way affect the liberty, property, or person of Americans or other foreigners. Never has an American or other foreigner been attacked or killed or his property injured or imperiled in that country. Never in the history of the country has there been a disturbance comparable to the one that occurred recently at Tulsa, a short time ago at Springfield and Boston, and that occur with increasing frequency in Chicago, New York, and all the larger American cities. In that country lynchings, burnings at the stake, and tar and feathering, now pastimes in some parts of the United States, are unknown and never practiced. Life and property are more secure in any part of that country than they are to-day or to-night in Central Park or on Broadway, New York, and the total lawlessness for a year throughout the Republic is less than that which is recorded in any one of the five largest cities of the United States in 24 hours.

In accordance with the plan of the said proclamation the President and his ministers of state were forced out of office; the Government treasury was seized; the national congress was dismissed; elections were prohibited; thousands of marines were spread over the country and with unlimited authority over the natives; public meetings were not permitted; a censorship of tongue, pen, press, mail, and telegraph of the severest kind was established; a reign of intense terror was inaugurated; destructive bombs were dropped from airplanes upon towns and hamlets; every home was searched for arms, weapons and implements; homes were burned; natives were killed; tortures and cruelties committed; and "Butcher" Weyler's horrible concentration camps were established, and his brutal methods that did so much to bring about our war with Spain were imitated. Repressions and oppressions followed in succession. When protests were made the protestants were fined heavily and also imprisoned, and when resistance or defense attempted bullets and bayonets were used. Criticism of the acts of the military government were not permitted, nor the use of any patriotic expressions allowed, and those who violated the order were severely punished by fines and imprisonment. Hundreds of capable native Government employees were dismissed and their families distressed in order to make jobs for incompetent men sent from the States, and to whom much larger salaries were paid than to the natives, and the Dominicans compelled to pay al their traveling and incidental expenses. The Dominican people have been "taxed without representation" and the money so raised expended recklessly and without in any way consulting them. Their foreign indebtedness has been greatly increased against their protests and in violation of the treaty of 1907.

For five years this policy of suppression, repression, oppression, and maladministration has continued. In the country protests were neither listened to nor permitted. The practically deposed President came to Washington with his protest and the appeal of the Dominican people. He asked President Wilson and Secretary of State Lansing for the courtesy of an audience, and not even the courtesy of a reply to his formal but polite requests was shown.

That evidence may be produced before your honorable committee to substantiate the foregoing statements the Dominican people charge against the United States Government as follows:

1. That there was no legal ground for the invasion and armed occupation by the United States Government of the Dominican Republic.
2. That such invasion was in direct violation of (1) the Constitution of the United States; (2) existing treaties with the United States; (3) a resolution proposed by the United States and adopted by the third conference of The Hague Tribunal; (4) international law; (5) the object and purpose of the Monroe doctrine as defined by the United States Government; and (6) of the fourteenth of the "fourteen points" of President Wilson.
3. That excesses, abuses, cruelties, and murders were committed by the marines, the people terrorized and their homes burned.
4. That the orders issued and enforced by the military Government were unreasonable, cruel, and totally un-American.
5. That private rights were invaded, and personal and corporate property injured, damaged, or destroyed by the military Government or its agents, and great losses incurred because of them and their orders.
6. That the administration of the military Government has been incompetent, wasteful, and extravagant.

The Dominican people are profoundly impressed and deeply gratified by the action of the United States Senate in coming to their rescue, and that it has ordered a full, fair, and honest investigation of all of the conditions antecedent to the occupation of the Dominican Republic and the acts of administration of that country during the occupation by the United States Government.

With an abiding faith in the American people and in those fundamental principles of personal liberty, "consent of the governed," respect for the rights of foreign nations, large or small, and inherent justice to all, that have made them into such a large and magnificent nation, the Dominicans will appear before your committee with all the proofs and evidence they can produce to enable you to ascertain the truth, the rights and wrongs of the subject matter so solemnly confided to you to investigate and report to the Senate your conscientious findings and recommendations.

HORACE G. KNOWLES.

WASHINGTON, August 12, 1921.

[Memorandum presented to the committee of the Senate of the United States, named to investigate the Military Occupation in Santo Domingo, by Dr. Henriquez y Carvajal, Washington, D. C., Aug. 12, 1921.]

On November 29, 1916, acting under instructions issued by the President of the United States, a captain in the United States Navy proclaimed himself military governor of the Dominican Republic, and declared that country in a state of military occupation by the forces under his command. Shortly afterward, through personal decrees termed "Executive Orders," the aforesaid naval officer ejected from office the duly appointed officials of the Dominican executive, dissolved the national congress, forbade the holding of any elections, and arrogated to himself all the powers which the Dominican constitution invests in the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the Government. Justification for that astounding action was based on the theory that an existing treaty, the Dominican-American Convention, concluded in 1907, with the object of insuring a regular settlement of the external debt of the Dominican Republic, empowered the Government of the United States to wrest from the Dominican people their sovereignty, and to install an appointee of the American Government over their institutions, with the same power as comes from martial law during a state of war. Acting on this theory, "under the authority of the Government of the United States," according to the proclamation of occupation, the military governor subsequently declared himself, in his own words, "supreme legislator, supreme judge, and supreme executor"; established a regime of military force and courts-martial; set up a rigid censorship of a public and private opinion; reformed existing civil, criminal, and administrative laws; levied public taxes, and increased the public debt, and generally assumed the position of an irresponsible dictator over the population of a nation friendly to the United States, which had committed no act of aggression against that nation or her citizens, nor had been guilty, or even accused, of any breach of international law, and against which a state of war had not been declared.

The undersigned, duly elected President of the Dominican Republic, has never ceased to protest against the illegal suppression of Dominican independence and against the harsh ordeal of military dictatorship to which his people have been subjected ever since this unwarranted and illegal intervention took place.

Now that there is in the United States a new administration, pledged by the campaign declarations of its Chief Executive to right the wrongs done by the Wilson administration in the Dominican Republic, and it being believed that the policy of the present administration toward the weaker nations of the American Continent will revert to the honorable and traditional standards of justice set by the founders of this great Republic, the Dominican people, through the medium of their rightful President, invite the urgent attention to this international affair, affecting so vitally the happiness and the liberty of the Dominican people and the honor and good name of the American Nation.

The reasons asserted by President Wilson for the intervention and occupation, as set forth in the proclamation of occupation issued by Capt. H. S. Knapp, recite that the Dominican Republic had violated article 3 of the Dominican-American convention by having increased its public debt without the consent of the Government of the United States. The proclamation reads, in part:

"Whereas a treaty was concluded between the United States of America and the Republic of Santo Domingo on February 8, 1907, article 3 of which reads: 'Until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the bonds of the debt its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States. * * *'

"Whereas the Government of Santo Domingo has violated said article 3 on more than one occasion; and

"Whereas the Government of Santo Domingo has from time to time explained such violation by the necessity of incurring expense incident to the repression of revolution; and

"Whereas the United States Government, with great forbearance and with friendly desire to enable Santo Domingo to maintain domestic tranquillity and observe the terms of the aforesaid treaty, has urged upon the Government of Santo Domingo certain necessary measures which that Government has been unwilling or unable to adopt; and

"Whereas in consequence domestic tranquillity has been disturbed and is not now established, nor is the future observance of the treaty by the Government of Santo Domingo assured; and

"Whereas the Government of the United States is determined that the time has come to take measures to insure the observance of the provisions of the aforesaid treaty by the Republic of Santo Domingo and to maintain domestic tranquillity in the said Republic of Santo Domingo necessary thereto:

"Now, therefore, I, H. S. Knapp, captain, United States Navy, commanding the cruiser force of the United States Atlantic Fleet and the armed forces of the United States stationed in various places within the territory of the Dominican Republic, acting under the authority and by the direction of the Government of the United States, declare and announce to all concerned that the Republic of Santo Domingo is hereby placed in a state of military occupation by the forces under my command and is made subject to military government and to the exercise of military law applicable to such occupation."

The "necessary measures" as expressed in the proclamation of occupation which the Government of the United States "had urged upon the Government of Santo Domingo," and which the latter had "been unwilling or unable to adopt," were embodied in a proposed protocol of a treaty similar to the one which the Republic of Haiti had been compelled to accept under threat of military occupation, called for the control of the Dominican treasury and the Dominican Army and police and every instrument of public authority by officials appointed by the President of the United States. Said officials were to be paid by the Dominican Republic, yet held to no responsibility for their acts before the laws or the authorities of the Dominican Republic; and inasmuch as they were not subject either to the laws of the United States, they were to enjoy an unprecedented immunity and exercise an unlimited and irresponsible power over the Dominican people. It is clear that such appointees would contravene Dominican sovereignty, and the exercise of their dictatorial powers would mean the end of free government in the Dominican Republic and the erection of an irresponsible, dangerous, and despotic dictatorship over the Dominican people.

On December 4, 1916, the Dominican minister in Washington, acting under instructions received from the deposed Dominican Government, filed a protest at the State Department and before the Latin-American legations against the proceedings carried out in Santo Domingo and the resulting attack on Dominican sovereignty. The protest was based on the following general premises, forming the statement of the case from the Dominican standpoint:

1. Far from having violated Article III of the Dominican-American convention, that covenant had been most faithfully observed in all its clauses and purposes by the Dominican Government, and, whereas the service of the 1908 loan was being met even in excess of the minimum sums provided in the treaty, no public debt increasing the liabilities assumed by the United States in connection therewith had been created.

2. The Dominican Government denied that the Government of the United States had any right to intervene in the internal affairs of the Dominican Republic, excepting as provided in the convention to lend their protection, in case of necessity, to the officials in charge of the customs collections, which case had not occurred and was not in any way at issue. Nevertheless, the Dominican Government was willing to offer to the Government of the United States every substantial pledge in connection with their purpose to bring about the establishment of public order in a permanent way, and to provide for an improved national financial system. But, great and sincere as their desire was to satisfy the Government of the United States in this respect, and to insure for the Dominican people the benefits of political and financial reorganization, they could not be brought to accept measures involving a loss of national sovereignty, and the forfeiture of the liberty and the safety of the Dominican people, such as would result if they would agree to the treaty proposed by the American Government.

3. In the face of the accomplished fact of the military occupation and the violent suppression of Dominican sovereignty, the Dominican Republic made a formal protest to the American Government.

It can be said that the kernel of the whole matter is to be found in the refusal of the Dominican Government to accede to and sign a protocol of a protectorate, exactly similar to the one imposed on the Republic of Haiti, which the Government of the United States had been trying to force upon the Dominican Republic since November, 1915, providing for the control of the Dominican army and police by officials appointed by the President of the United States, tantamount to the forfeiture of Dominican independence and the suppression of the government in the Dominican Republic. The Dominican-American convention is a clearly framed covenant, entered into for clearly defined purposes. It is held by the President of the Dominican Republic that no interpretation of its clauses, however strained, could rightfully justify such a demand nor supply a legal basis for intervention and military occupation in any case.

In order to ascertain the scope of the provisions contained in Article III of the Dominican-American convention, it is necessary to recall the circumstances which brought about its creation, and to examine the aims of the parties thereto at the time of its conclusion. They may be summarized as follows:

Prior to the year 1905 the Dominican Republic had incurred in a foreign debt, arising principally out of loans contracted with creditors of different nationalities. Owing to lack of development and ensuing scarcity of revenue, the service of these foreign obligations was frequently interrupted. Attempts at consolidation brought no relief, until, in 1905, enormous arrears in unpaid principal and interest had accumulated.

In 1907 the Dominican Republic, desirous of sparing the United States a possible cause of embarrassment in connection with the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine, and at the same time, to give its foreign creditors full confidence in the solvency of the Dominican Government and its ability to pay the principal and interest of its national indebtedness, entered into a treaty with the United States, after a provisional agreement between the Executives of both nations had been in effect for two years.

The outstanding features of this covenant were:

- (a) The consolidation of the external debt of the Republic;
- (b) The issue of $20,000,000 bonds of the Dominican Republic, applicable to the cancellation of the public debt;

(c) The guaranty offered by the United States Government covering this bond issue;

(d) The supervision, by the United States Government, of the customs collections of the Dominican Republic, which were liened in the transaction;

(e) The allocation of a certain proportion of the customs receipts, collected by a receiver general, appointed by the President of the United States, for the service of the loan, as provided in the convention;

(f) The delivery by the general receiver to the Dominican Government of any surplus revenues, after the provisions relating to the service of the loan had been complied with, and the receivership expenses had been covered;

(g) The obligation, entered into by the Dominican Republic, not to increase its public debt, except by previous agreement with the Government of the United States, until the bond issue should be totally paid off.

The avowed motives of the military occupation rest on the interpretation of the clauses dealing with the features embodied in paragraphs (g) and (f), reading in their essential parts:

"On the first day of each calendar month the sum of $100,000 shall be paid by the receiver to the fiscal agent of the loan, and the remaining collection of the preceding month shall be paid over to the Dominican Government, or applied to the sinking fund for the purchase or redemption of bonds, as the Dominican Government may direct." (Art. I.)

"Until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the bonds of the debt, its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States." (Art. III.)

The purposes of the clause contained in Article III, to the effect that the Dominican Republic should not increase its public debt without the consent of the Government of the United States, was as must be clear; first, to prevent any impairment of the security covering the liabilities assumed by the United States through the treaty, the customs collections. Any increase in the public debt of the creditor—the Dominican Republic—might originate claims affecting her principal asset, the customs collections, on which the guarantor—the United States—held a lien; second, to prevent the Dominican Republic, while engaged in the gradual cancellation of the existing foreign indebtedness, to what then appeared to be the limit of her financial ability, from incurring in indiscriminate borrowing, which might result in a potential menace to the Monroe doctrine.

The provisions were being faithfully complied with by the Dominican Republic as follows:

(a) The sums provided in the convention to the ends specified in Article I were being collected without hindrance or opposition by the general receiver and applied by him as directed in the treaty; and cancellation of the loan was proceeding more rapidly than contemplated by the covenant.

The following excerpts from the report of the general receiver for the year 1919 will show how the situation stood in this respect:

Statement of sinking fund, Dominican Republic, $20,000,000, customs administration loan as of Dec. 31, 1919.

RECEIPTS.

From general receiver of customs, account calendar year—

1908	$331,757.5
1909	200,000.0
1910	260,820.1
1911	394,092.5
1912	482,772.5
1913	782,908.5
1914	207,666.5
1915	593,588.5
1916	664,644.5
1917	1,295,042.5
1918	788,608.5
1919	846,961.5
From interest allowed by fiscal agent	165,623.5
From interest received on bonds purchased	1,294,491.5

Total..... 8,309,037.10

DISBURSEMENTS.

For $7,784,950 customs administrations bonds purchased, par value-----	$7, 784, 950. 00
Less discount-----	341, 851. 14
	<hr/>
Cash balance (several items)-----	7, 443, 098. 86
	865, 939. 13
	<hr/>
Total-----	8, 309, 037. 99
Total of assets in sinking fund-----	8, 813, 075. 59

The above figures demonstrate that when intervention took place the Dominican Republic was fulfilling the financial obligations of the convention in excess of the minimum stipulated; and that the sinking fund, with the exception of the year 1914—owing then to commercial paralyzation resulting from the outbreak of the World War—kept steadily increasing.

(b) The Dominican Republic had not contracted any new public debt, increasing the liabilities assumed by the United States through the convention or impairing the security—the customs collections—pledged to the service of the loan.

As provided in Article I of the convention, the general receiver paid over to the Dominican Government the surplus outstanding of every month's collection after all the charges and expenses provided for the service of the loan had been met. There is no provision in the treaty determining the application of these sums, and so far as the Government of the United States is concerned in connection with the duties and liabilities assumed through the treaty, whatever application the Dominican Government saw fit to make of these funds would be legally and practically inconsequential, as long as their application in no way interfered with the duties of the general receiver and the service of the loan, and as long as new obligations, increasing the liabilities assumed by the United States through the Dominican-American convention, were not contracted.

The surplus thus received by the Dominican Government was generally applied to current budget expenses. During different periods in the years 1912-1916 the Dominican Government was forced to suspend payment on the regular national budget in order to provide for the expenses incidental to the existence of political disturbances. These conditions, however, in no way interfered with the service of the loan or the customs collections, which were being collected and applied by the general receiver, as specified in the convention. But salaries and other internal public items thus went partially unpaid, and a floating indebtedness, arising out of these arrears, principally on services rendered by Dominican citizens to the Dominican Government, was formed.

The Government of the United States on several occasions remonstrated with the Dominican Government over the creation of these internal credits, alleging that same were a "public debt" and that the Republic was thereby violating article 3 of the convention.

The Dominican Government held that the internal floating indebtedness was not a "public debt," whether legally or in the sense carried by the aim and words of the convention, and that the spirit and the letter of the treaty in the provision contained in article 3 directed the restriction therein included to apply to a regular public debt, increasing the liabilities assumed by the United States through the treaty or impairing the securities tendered in the same by the Dominican Republic.

It would seem that but little doubt can be entertained regarding the status of the internal floating indebtedness and the inadequacy of its being considered a public debt from a legal point of view. All authors agree that a public debt must bear a distinctive condition, the fact of its having been legally contracted or accepted by the State. A public debt is a contract debt, while the indebtedness incurred by the Dominican Government toward its own citizens was an occasional liability resulting from force majeure, which prevented the executive from making effective all the appropriations provided in the budget.

Regarding the point, still more important, perhaps, and more pertinent to the purpose and object of the convention, as to whether the existence of these internal credits increased in any way the liabilities assumed by the United States through that covenant, it seems absolutely impossible to argue successfully any such contention. How could these internal obligations, due in their immense majority to Dominican citizens, constitute a menace to the Monroe doctrine, which the convention was designed to safeguard in its integrity, or impair in any way the guarantee offered by the United States to cover the bond issue? They had not been and could not possibly become a cause for action by a foreign Government. Their creation and existence had not interfered and could not possibly interfere with the proper management and application of the customs collections as provided in the treaty by the receiver general.

The situation on its face does not seem to have justified the allegation made by the United States Government to the effect that the Dominican Republic had violated article 3 of the convention. But even had that claim been established, there is nothing in convention, nothing in international law, and it would seem, from the viewpoint of the Monroe doctrine, nothing in the fundamental policy of the United States to justify the violent action taken by the American Government of invading the Dominican Republic, overthrowing the constitutional Government, and suppressing its sovereignty as a sanction for an alleged violation of a treaty clause and for the refusal of the Dominican Government to subscribe to an unconstitutional protocol surrendering the sovereignty of the nation, the liberty of the people, and the principle of free government into the hands of appointees of the American Government.

How far the recent policy of the United States Government in the Dominican Republic has strayed from the true aims of the convention and from the principles and purposes pleading the American Government to conclude that treaty may be judged on examination of the following excerpt from President Roosevelt's address to the Senate on the subject in 1905, when he submitted the provisional protocol preceding the treaty:

"It can not be too often and too emphatically asserted that the United States has not the slightest desire for territorial aggrandizement at the expense of any of its southern neighbors and will not treat the Monroe doctrine as an excuse for such aggrandizement on its part.

"We do not propose to take any part of Santo Domingo or exercise any other control over the island save what is necessary to its financial rehabilitation in connection with the collection of revenue, part of which will be turned over to the Government to meet the necessary expense of running it, and part of which will be distributed pro rata among the creditors of the Republic upon a basis of absolute equity."

The mechanism provided in the treaty for the regular and unhampered collection of the customs duties by the general receiver and their proper application was designed to work adequately—as it actually and effectually did, under all circumstances. Had the United States Government considered, at the time the treaty was drafted, that military control of the Dominican Republic might become necessary to insure the attainment of the object pursued—the settlement of the foreign debt of the Dominican Republic—they would certainly not have consented to assume the liabilities and responsibilities devolving upon the United States through the covenant without securing by adequate provision the right to that action. As a matter of fact, at the time the convention was being drafted the Government of the United States had the opportunity to satisfy itself that possible revolutionary disturbances would not interfere with the management of customs collections by the general receiver as long as the officials in charge of the collections received due protection in the discharge of their duties, as was provided in the convention. This conviction was the result of experience, for during the initial period of the "modus vivendi" the supervision of customs collections and their application to a provisional fund by American officials was carried out under a state of widespread revolution. It is difficult to conceive that, with such an experience to build upon, the United States Government should have neglected to obtain by provision the necessary liberty of action, had the sound, evident object of the treaty been other than to insure a regular settlement of the Dominican external debt, or had that Government foreseen—as they could not fail to have foreseen if the case could really present itself—that revolutionary disturbances might interfere with the proper observance of the treaty. On the contrary, and as a result of their experience, the treaty was made revolution proof through the placing of the customs collections under the absolute control of the American general receiver, and the granting to that official and to his subordinates of due protection by both Governments.

The consequences of the violent and unwarranted action adopted by the Government of the United States in the Dominican Republic appear now in the form of a dismal legal situation. The constituted authorities of the Republic were deposed, and the military government, whose authority originates in the laws of war, has governed with dictatorial powers a people who were in no sense at war with the United States, and against whom no legal state of war existed. In the exercise of this singular authority the military government has overstepped even the broadest interpretation of the powers vested in such a government by the laws of war, inasmuch as it has assumed to act for the Dominican Republic in the performance of actions which only the people of that Republic, in the exercise of their sovereignty, and through their legal representatives, have the capacity to perform. Among the actions thus performed it is only necessary to cite the appointment of certain diplomatic envoys and the contraction of public debts. Outside of this special phase, and always assuming to act in the name of the Dominican Republic, the military government has promulgated and enforced taxation and legislation without the slightest representation of the people, without their consent, and in many instances indirect opposition to their expressed wishes.

The substance of the whole situation is that of an illegal government, arising out of an illegal intervention—as the present President of the United States characterized the Dominican occupation—suppressing the lawful Government of the Dominican Republic, and has been promulgating constitutional legislation, in the name of the Dominican Republic, for a period of nearly five years. That such proceedings should have been carried out under the authority of the people of the United States, the pioneers and champions of free government and liberty in the continent and throughout the world, adds only to the amazement of the case.

The illegal status of the military administration in the Dominican Republic is so evident as to necessitate no elaborate discussion. The late administration a few months before its end was made aware of it, and undertook to get out of the trouble it had placed itself in.

The plan prescribed by the last administration on 23d of December, 1920, for the prompt withdrawal of the American forces, which had occupied the territory of the Dominican Republic, was repudiated by the majority of the Dominican people in view of the conditions which were to be carried out before the retirement of the American forces and the restoration of the Dominican Government, and this notwithstanding the positive declaration that the time had arrived when the American Government should divest itself of the responsibilities assumed in the Republic. That plan was followed by another announced by the present administration and published by Rear Admiral Robison in Santo Domingo on the 14th day of June last. This new plan indicates a period of eight months for the definite withdrawal of the American forces and the restoration of a national Dominican Government; it constitutes the military governor the provisional Dominican executive, giving him the authority to promulgate an electoral law, to convene the people to the elections, to name diplomats who will receive his instructions, to join with the American Government in a treaty of evacuation, according to which the Dominican Republic will obligate itself (a) to ratify the acts of the military government; (b) to agree to a loan of $2,500,000 to be applied by the military government to complete certain public improvements; (c) to agree to a further guaranty to protect the payment of the public debt in case the customs revenues are not sufficient; and (d) to intrust the command and organization of the public Dominican forces to American officials, who would form a military mission, would receive compensation from the Dominican Government, be under the authority of the Dominican President, but would be named by the President of the United States.

This last plan has aroused a unanimous and formidable protest among the Dominican people, who absolutely repudiate it, for they understand such plan is in conflict with the inherent rights of their sovereignty and independence.

Without touching on any legal premises, I must distinctly point out that the demand to have the Dominican people consent to a control and command of its armed forces by American officers would in fact create a fundamental obstacle to the success of those aims of friendly assistance which, it is assumed, the Government of the United States has toward the people of the Dominican Republic.

This is not a proposition whose acceptance might depend on a more or less accurate comprehension on the part of the Dominican people of the friendly purposes by which it is inspired. There underlies a question most vital to the Dominican people, who long ago formed their opinions and intentions in regard to this matter that so much concerns their national life, present and future. It need only be recalled that it was precisely because of this that in 1916 they chose to incur—temporarily they were told it would be—the painful trial of military occupation and military Government rather than submit to the demand first made by the American Government upon the Dominican Government and people.

This same proposition, for the control of the armed forces of the Dominican Republic by American officers, "appointed by the President of the Dominican Republic," but "on designation or recommendation of the President of the United States," is textually the basis of the treaty proposed by President Wilson's administration to the Dominican Government in a note sent through the United States Legation in Santo Domingo on November 19, 1915, and later sought by that same administration to be forced by military occupation upon the Dominican Government; and it was this very intervention that the present Chief Executive of the United States charged as "illegal," when outlining before the American electorate his contemplated governmental policies.

The proposition was rejected by President Jimenez's administration in 1915. It was again rejected by my own administration in 1916, in the face of the most ruthless financial and military coercion, said rejection being the cause of proclamation of military government in the Dominican Republic. The people at that time manifested in an unmistakable manner that they preferred to suffer the consequences of that or any other act of force of the Government of the United States rather than voluntarily divest themselves of their sovereignty, surrendering by a treaty forced upon them the control and command of their armed forces to foreign officers. This predicament of the Dominican people in this respect has not undergone the slightest change or alteration throughout the five years of military occupation, and is the same to-day. If there is any change, it is that the harshness, incompetency, and costliness of the American military government have only strengthened their determination and confirmed them in their apprehension of the ills that would surely result from such an arrangement as Washington proposed and tried to force upon us.

The refusal of the Dominican Government, the President, his ministers of state, and the national congress to accept the proposition was inspired by unchallengeable motives of fidelity to the sacred trust committed to them and a firm desire to uphold and protect the constitution of their country. Had either the Jimenez administration in 1915, or my own in 1916, yielded to the demand of the Government of the United States, their officials would have been protected and kept in power by the Government of the United States through the contemplated arrangement, but they would have become justly and properly objects of execration by the Dominican people.

The motives, therefore, standing behind this steadfast and honest conduct on the part of the officials of two different and distinct Dominican administrations, and which were so loyally approved by the people even in the face of untold hardships and suffering caused by the military occupation of their territory, should, it seems to me, command serious consideration from all men inspired by the love of justice and patriotism. The opposition of the Dominican people to the Government or rule the United States sought and endeavored to impose upon them, was based upon two grounds: First, on an inherent love of liberty and independence such as inspired your forefathers to rebel against the British; and second, a well-grounded fear of countless irremediable ills they would be compelled to suffer as a consequence of the irresponsible power which such an arrangement would place in the hands of foreign officers destined to rule over them.

Such an apprehension, events have shown, was fully justified. The officers called to exercise these extraordinary powers would be really placed above every law and every effective control, other than the distant, indirect, and totally inadequate control which might be exercised over them by the Government of the United States. Possessing themselves or controlling every material agency of authority, they could easily force the legal agencies to conform entirely to their will, however arbitrary. The government of the Republic would soon become a sad tool of their caprice; the national institutions would function under their dictation, and the people would have no legal or material recourse open against this condition of vassalage, while their Government would either remain impotent to protect them against any excesses of such foreign officers, or, if perchance it would fall into weak or unworthy hands, it might accept any kind of tyranny in order to perpetuate themselves in power descending even to abuse of the laws and a prostitution of the public suffrage.

It is a universally admitted social axiom that no irresponsible agency of government can remain in existence without degenerating by natural gravitation into effective tyranny. The proposition in question would simply resolve itself in fact, if not in statute, in the perpetuation of an irresponsible military régime in Santo Domingo. Should any doubt as to the propriety of the foregoing assertion arise, such doubt might be dispelled by an impartial ponderation of the excesses committed by the subaltern military authorities of occupation in Santo Domingo, committed while these subaltern officers were responsible for their conduct, not before a native government, helpless to repress them, but before their own senior officers, who were honestly bent on having the laws and all personal and property rights respected. These excesses have been witnessed and commented upon by impartial Americans, and recognized by the authorities of the occupation in a general order of Rear Admiral H. S. Knapp, and in an official statement published by order of Admiral Snowden on January 9, 1920, in which it was specifically stated that "some subaltern military authorities had exceeded themselves to cruelty in their measures of repression." Such excesses are fatally inherent to a military régime and to the exercise of military supremacy in public administration. I hope I will not incur an indiscretion by recalling in this connection the condition of the Southern States of the Union when, at the termination of the Civil War, they were subjected to military governments; and these were administered, it is admitted, by general officers of national birth and unimpeachable character. No possible excellence of personal conditions can compensate or offset the blemishes and wrongs of a régime of force. A régime of absolute control of the armed forces of the Dominican Republic by American officers, whatever its external characteristics, will inevitably degenerate into a régime of force.

I can not bring myself to believe that the Dominican people merit in any way such harsh and severe treatment, whatever be the friendly motives inspiring such a policy on the part of the United States Government. Such a policy, furthermore, could not claim any other basis than the right of conquest, which the repeated pronouncements of the United States Government and its international policy, recently expressed by President Harding and Secretary Hughes, seem to conflict in every way. The fears expressed in regard to the future security of American life and property in the Dominican Republic can not, to my knowledge, be substantiated in one single instance of attack upon such persons or property, or any other foreigners, prior to the intervention.

The Dominican people, however, are willing and able to tender the most effective guaranties, not only in regard to the security of foreign life and property upon a cessation of the military occupation, but also in regard to a permanent suppression of political disturbances and the maintenance of public peace. I feel inclined to believe that an unbiased consideration of the suggestions I am about to submit will convince of the feasibility of harmonizing the interest of the United States Government by obtaining sufficient guaranties for the maintenance of public peace in Santo Domingo and in such a way as will not conflict with the just aspirations of the Dominican people for the preservation of their liberty and national dignity.

Summarizing our views on the basis of the foregoing considerations, we may reduce them to the following propositions:

1. The restoration of national government in the Dominican Republic should be carried out in such a way as to in no way impair or restrict the sovereignty of the Dominican people.
2. To this end the total evacuation of Dominican territory by the American naval forces, now exercising control through a military government, should be carried out as soon as said national government is duly constituted.
3. Concurrent upon the precedent conditions, the Dominican people should be accorded full opportunity to freely reorganize their administration in accordance with their own constitution and their own laws, and within the unhampered exercise of their sovereignty.

CONCLUSION.

(A) The Dominican Republic has always been, is, and desires to be a free and independent nation that has always been governed by its own laws since it was constituted on February 27, 1844, a sovereign State and assumed its position internationally.

(B) The Dominican Republic has been and is recognized by the nations of the world as a sovereign nation, self-governing and sufficient unto itself to comply with its duties as a sovereign State. The recognition has been recorded many times in treaties of peace, amity, and commerce entered into not only with the United States but also with the principal countries of the world. In consequence of such recognition the Dominican Republic has figured equally with the other nations, great and small, as an integral part with its voice and vote in international congresses, such as the Second Peace Congress at The Hague in 1907, and the Pan American Congresses called on different dates at distinct points in the Americas on the initiative of the Government of the United States or some of the Latin American Republics.

(C) The Dominican Republic has never subscribed with any nation any agreement which would restrict its capacity as sovereign State, nor established to its prejudice any kind of subordination of its political organization or own administration. The convention with the United States in 1907 alone demonstrates the sincere desire of the Dominican Republic to pay its debts, and the unlimited confidence which it had and maintains in the good faith and loyal friendship of the United States. That convention granted to the United States the authority to control the Dominican customs service, with the specific and exclusive object that each month there would be separated from the customs collections a fixed sum to insure the payment of interest and amortization of the public debt. During the 14 years under the convention the service of the Dominican debt has never failed to be met with absolute promptness, and more, by virtue of contingent receipts which might be and in effect have been increased year by year, the debt has been liquidated to such an extent that notwithstanding additional increases authorized by the American Government, it will be entirely liquidated, according to the calculations made and published by American officials, 33 years before the date of maturity stipulated.

(D) In no clause of that convention is the United States given the authority to undertake any kind of intervention, much less an armed one, in Dominican territory.

(E) The convention of 1907 does not accord any authority to the United States to intervene in any manner in the Dominican Republic, and though on the supposition that it might have been granted in the case of the failure of payment of the debt, nevertheless, in no way would such intervention be explained when the payments, as the annual reports of the general receiver show, has never failed to be regular, authentic, and publicly known.

(F) Neither does the convention of 1907 nor any other treaty made by the Dominican Republic accord to the Government of the United States or to the Government of any other nation the authority to intervene in the domestic affairs of the Republic on account of political disturbances. The real cause of these disturbances constitute a subject for deep study and concern for Dominicans, who for many years have sought as a remedy for this evil a new and modern political and administrative organization which would suppress political bossism and put an end to abuses of unscrupulous public officials and would permit the establishment of a popular, responsible government of, by, and for the people, capable of maintaining a broad program of peace, progress, and greater liberty.

(G) The friendly influence of the Government of the United States can be very beneficial to the Dominican people. It should not aspire to anything more than to be useful in the development both commercial and industrial and economic and political. But a system of subjection sanctioned by the American Government to accomplish these ends would only produce lamentable consequences. Instinctively the Dominican people have rejected it, because it constituted a threat against their national life. After having compared demonstrated acts, Dominicans are justified conscientiously in continuing to repudiate it.

(H) Finally, the situation created in Santo Domingo after five years of military occupation, with the destruction of the civil government by virtue of a foreign military government which has acted without the consent of the people, is anomalous, illogical, unjustifiable, and indefensible.

It is urged that an end be put to it, leaving the Dominican people alone and free to reconstruct their system of government and to continue managing it with their own laws, in their capacity of being free, sovereign, and independent.

STATEMENTS OF CAPT. C. S. FREEMAN, UNITED STATES NAVY, NAVY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, D. C., AND MAJ. EDWIN N.
MCLELLAN, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS, HEADQUARTERS
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS.

The CHAIRMAN. Capt. Freeman, you have a statement, I think, prepared at the request of the Secretary?

Capt. FREEMAN. Yes, sir; the Navy Department has prepared two separate statements, one on the Dominican Republic and the other on Haiti. They have been prepared in different offices of the department, and approach the subject in different ways. The Navy Department has had a very short time to make up a statement for the committee, and consequently it was thought best by the Assistant Secretary—the Secretary being absent from the city—to send down the officers who have been mainly responsible for making up these statements.

I have a memorandum prepared on the Dominican Republic, and Maj. McClellan has a somewhat different document prepared on the Haitian Republic. We are here simply to submit these; and if the committee requires any information in the shape of facts in regard to the Dominican Republic or Haiti we are prepared to answer in regard to them, but we do not represent the department as to its policy.

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of Maj. McClellan whether he prepared that statement in the light of this memoir?

Maj. MCCLELLAN. This statement was prepared at the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, to include all the possible facts, from the date of the original occupation of the Republic of Haiti in 1915 until the present time. It is just a copy of documents and reports. In other words, it is not a compilation of opinions or anything like that. It has nothing to do with any memorials or anything else. It is purely an open, frank statement, as far as possible, from the records of the Navy Department.

Senator KING. Then you might want to supplement that after an examination of the charges preferred in the memoir? I do not use the word "charges" in any offensive way, but the charges which may be preferred by the Dominican Government.

Maj. MCCLELLAN. I should say that the Secretary of the Navy would direct a representative to prepare a reply, or to cross-examine and carry on every investigation necessary which is disclosed by the memorial.

Senator KING. You would not feel, then, like withholding what you have this morning until—

Maj. MCCLELLAN (Interposing). No, sir; it is for the benefit of the committee in arriving at their conclusions on the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there no summary of the occupation, no preface to the—

Maj. MCCLELLAN. This is contained in chronological order, Senator. As a matter of fact, it gives a brief history of the Republic of Haiti right from the beginning down to 1921. Everything is chronologically arranged. If the committee desires, the Navy Department would be very glad to prepare a brief summary, but, in view of the fact that this material was prepared in practically two days, you can well see that one would not have the time to put the essential points in any digest or any summary.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that since two different officers in the department have prepared these records in two days, that they be prepared to file with the committee next week such supplementary matter as in their judgment would be useful to the committee; in the case of one, perhaps, a summary statement; and, in the case of the other, perhaps, some additional documentary matter.

Senator KING. I was going to suggest that that seems to me to be an immense volume, much of which is wholly irrelevant and immaterial.

Maj. MCCLELLAN. It is all very relevant, so far as any investigation is concerned. It shows the events, as well as the cause or reasons, historically, as well as the expedients, at the time of the occupation in 1915. It is not an argument, but merely the facts.

Senator KING. Then if you had further time, you would not abridge that?

Maj. MCCLELLAN. Not at all; I would merely supplement it with an index for the benefit of the committee, as well as certain documents.

The CHAIRMAN. You have, of course, a copy of that in the department?

Maj. MCCLELLAN. I have copies, except of the last 20 pages. I wrote it so hurriedly this morning that I could not finish it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you take that with you for your convenience, and return it to us with your index and summary, if that suits the other members of the committee?

Senator KING. I think that is a good suggestion.

(The matter referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS.

Washington, August 15, 1921.

Memorandum for Senator McCormick.

Subject: Memorandum on the Republic of Haiti.

Inclosure: 1.

1. In accordance with instructions received from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, there is transmitted herewith a short and concise report on the Republic of Haiti, in place of the original and more voluminous report which was delivered to you by Maj. McClellan on August 5, 1921.

JOHN A. LEJEUNE,

Major General, Commandant.

[Memorandum on the Republic of Haiti prepared for Senate committee appointed to inquire into the occupation and administration of the Republic of Haiti and the Dominican Republic by the forces of the United States.]

EARLY HISTORY OF THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI.

X The west one-third of the island of Haiti forms the Republic of Haiti while the east two-thirds comes within the boundaries of the Dominican Republic.

Haiti was discovered by Columbus, who landed on the Mole St. Nicholas December 6, 1492. Slaves were imported into Haiti by the Spaniards as early as 1512, and their descendants now reside in the Republic of Haiti. The treaty of 1697 divided the island, the western part to France and the eastern part to Spain. The treaty of 1777 fixed the boundaries between the two divisions. The national convention of 1791 conferred upon the free mulattoes all the privileges of French citizens. The decree conferring these rights being revoked, the mulattoes, joined by the plantation slaves, broke out in insurrection, and turmoil lasted for several years. A French commission proclaimed the abolition of slavery in 1793. In 1795 France acquired title to the entire island.

Toussaint l'Ouverture brought order out of the chaos that had existed since 1791 and then published, subject to the approval of France, a form of constitutional government under which he was to govern for life. This step aroused the suspicions of Bonaparte, who sent Gen. Le Clerc with 25,000 troops to thwart the ambitions of Toussaint. Le Clerc reestablished slavery. After a long struggle Le Clerc proposed terms, and Toussaint, induced by the most solemn guarantees on the part of the French, laid down his arms. He was sent to France, where, in 1803, he died in prison. This treatment of Toussaint caused the Haitians to believe themselves betrayed by the French, and they renewed the struggle under the leadership of Dessalines. The French withdrew from Haiti in 1803.

On January 1, 1804, occurred the declaration of Haitian independence and the restoration of the original name of Haiti. Since this date, a period of over 117 years, Haiti has maintained her independence without break, and this has caused the Haitians to be imbued with the most intense of national spirit. Dessalines was made ruler for life and later proclaimed himself Emperor. He was assassinated in 1806. Between 1806 and 1810 there was civil war between the followers of Christophe and Petion, and during this period the Spaniards reestablished themselves on the eastern part of the island. In 1818 Gen. Boyer succeeded Petion as ruler in the south, and after Christophe's death in 1820 reunited Haiti under one government. The entire island in 1822 again came under one ruler when Boyer reconquered the east from the Spaniards, the name Republic of Haiti being adopted. Boyer was driven into exile in 1843. In the next year the eastern part of the island established itself as the Dominican Republic, and, except for a period of about four years, starting with 1861, when Spain reasserted her authority, has remained independent.

Then followed Herard for the first five months of 1844; Guerrier, who was driven out of office and then died; Pierrot, who was overthrown in February, 1846; Riche, who died suddenly in February, 1847; Soulouque, who was at first President, then Emperor, abdicating under pressure in January, 1859;

Geffrard, who served from 1859 to 1867 and who instituted and developed public instruction; Salnave, who was executed by his countrymen in 1870; Saget, who served out his full term of four years and peacefully retired.

Dominique fled in 1876; Canal resigned; Salomon was overthrown in 1888; Legitime was forced into exile in 1889; Hyppolite fell from his horse and died in 1896; Simon Sam fled in 1902 as a rioting mob threatened his life; Nord Alexis fled in 1908; Antoine Simon fled in 1911; Leconte was blown up with his palace in 1912; Auguste died of a slow and vicious sickness, probably poison, in 1913; Michel Oreste fled into exile in January, 1914; Oreste Zamor ruled for only a brief period, February to October, 1914, his being a revolutionary government, retrograde and ephemeral; Theodore was overthrown in January, 1915; Vilbrun Guillaume Sam was murdered in 1915; and finally we have the present President, Philippe Sudre Dartiguenave, elected in August, 1915.

Thus there have been 2 Emperors, 1 King (Christophe), and 24 Presidents who rose and fell during the history of Haiti.

THE UNITED STATES CALLED UPON FREQUENTLY.

From the days of the American Revolution to the present the United States has been compelled to keep a watchful eye upon the incidents in Haiti, and a casual reading of the fates of the above-named rulers and the many reports on file in the Navy Department will indicate that naval vessels visited that island in the interest of the Haitians themselves, Americans, and other foreigners many times.

Without searching the records earlier than 1857 we find that the United States was called upon to send naval vessels to Haitian waters in the interest of law and order, for the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy for that year shows that the Cyane visited Cape Haitien for the relief of an American vessel and two American seamen seized upon suspicion by order of the Haitian Government, and the Secretary's report for 1859 discloses that the Brooklyn proceeded to Port au Prince and Aux Cayes to protect United States interests from suffering by the revolution then prevailing in Haiti.

The Secretary's report shows that naval vessels visited Haiti in 1866 because "revolutionary movements and civil disturbances" threatened "to place in jeopardy the lives and property of American residents." In the next year the Secretary reported that naval vessels had visited Haiti, a country "afflicted with perpetual discontent and revolution." Then follows visits in 1868, 1869, 1876, 1888, 1889, 1892, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1911, 1912, and 1913. In these years the trouble and disturbances in Haiti was of such a serious nature that the Secretary of the Navy felt called upon to comment upon the fact that warships had been sent there. No doubt there were many times during this period that interior disturbances affected foreign interests without the restraining hands of the United States.

CHRONIC CONDITIONS RECUR IN 1914—FOUR NATIONS LAND.

The U. S. S. South Carolina arrived at Port au Prince January 28, 1914, and found conditions so threatening to foreign residents and interests that it became urgently necessary to land the entire marine guard, in company with forces from the Lancaster (British), Conde (French), and Bremen (German). The marines of the South Carolina returned on board ship on the 9th of February. Returning to Port au Prince on March 8, 1914, because of political disturbances, the South Carolina found it imperatively necessary to remain in that port until April 14, 1914, while the U. S. S. Montana was also stationed at Port au Prince from January 25 to February 13, 1914.

The U. S. S. Washington arrived at Cape Haitien on June 29, 1914, for the purpose of protecting American and other foreign interests and remained there until July 8, 1914, when relieved by the U. S. S. South Carolina. Other naval vessels serving in Haitian waters during the political disturbances of 1914 were the U. S. S. New Jersey, U. S. S. Georgia, U. S. S. Tacoma, U. S. S. Petrel, U. S. S. Nashville, U. S. S. Wheeling, and the U. S. S. Hancock, carrying the Fifth Regiment of Marines.

The political situation in Haiti in 1914 was so uncertain that it occupied considerable time of the State Department.

EVENTS LEADING UP TO THE PRESENT OCCUPATION.

Early in 1915 the political situation in Haiti was such that the State Department became apprehensive for the safety of American and other foreign interests therein, the American consul at Cape Haitien requesting that a warship be sent there. In compliance with this request the U. S. S. Washington arrived at Cape Haitien on January 23, 1915, for the purpose of investigating political conditions, and left on the 25th for Port au Prince. It was during this month that Theodore was overthrown as President, and in March was succeeded by the most unfortunate Vilbrun Guillaume Sam. Shortly after the overthrow of Theodore, on February 2, the Secretary of State authorized the Secretary of the Navy to land marines and bluejackets to aid the American minister to Haiti, if such action became necessary; but as events turned out no forces were landed at this time, and Sam entered office as president.

During June, 1915, the French warship Descartes proceeded to Cape Haitien, as the French consular agent at that port was fearful for the safety of French residents and interests, and upon the arrival of the Descartes a landing party was sent ashore from that vessel. This force was withdrawn on the 24th.

The U. S. S. Washington, with Rear Admiral Caperton on board, arrived at Cape Haitien July 1, 1915, and on the 3d established a field radio station ashore, and on the 9th landed marines from the U. S. S. Washington and bluejackets from the Eagle.

On July 27, 1915, a revolution broke out in Port au Prince that resulted in the execution by the Haitians of a large number of political prisoners and the death of the President of Haiti, Sam, at the hands of a mob that violated the French Legation, in which Sam had taken asylum. Rear Admiral Caperton reported in part: "Dominican Legation violated Tuesday; Gen. Oscar, chief of arrondissement force, removed and killed. At about 10.30 a. m. this morning French Legation invaded by a mob of about 60 Haitians, better class; President Guillaume forcibly removed from upstairs room and killed at legation gate and body cut in pieces and paraded about town. No government or authority in city."

Upon the first report Rear Admiral Caperton, in the Washington, sailed from Cape Haitien for Port au Prince, leaving the Eagle to attend to affairs at the cape.

MARINES AND BLUEJACKETS LAND.

Upon arriving at Port au Prince at 11.50 a. m., July 28, Rear Admiral Caperton immediately assumed control of the situation. Under orders of the Navy Department, and in cooperation with the Department of State, Rear Admiral Caperton, on the afternoon of July 28, 1915, landed a provisional regiment of two battallions, composed of marines and bluejackets, under command of Capt. George Van Orden, United States Marine Corps, and occupied Port au Prince. No resistance was encountered except some sniping at the marines, which fire was returned, resulting in 2 Haitians being killed and 10 wounded.

The U. S. S. Eagle landed 20 men at Cape Haitien at the request of the French consul on the 28th. The Descartes landed a small French force at Port au Prince on August 2, 1915.

REENFORCEMENTS SENT TO HAITI.

At the request of Rear Admiral Caperton an additional regiment of marines was sent to Haiti, arriving at Port au Prince on August 4, 1915. The U. S. S. Tennessee arrived at Port au Prince on August 15, 1915, with another regiment and Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, who was placed in command of all troops ashore in Haiti.

PROCLAMATION OF ASSURANCE.

Pursuant to instructions received from the Navy Department on August 7, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton on August 10 issued the following proclamation to the Haitian people:

"I am directed by the United States Government to assure the Haitian people that the United States has no object in view except to insure, establish, and help to maintain Haitian independence and the establishment of a stable and firm government by the Haitian people.

"Every assistance will be given to the Haitian people in their attempt to secure these ends. It is the intention to retain United States forces in Haiti only so long as will be necessary for this purpose."

This proclamation was also published at St. Marc, Haiti, on August 10, 1915, and on August 18 Rear Admiral Caperton requested the American consul at Port au Prince to direct the several consular representatives of the United States in Haiti to give out the above proclamation in their districts.

PROCEDURE ADOPTED TO ASSIST HAITI.

On August 10, 1915, the Secretary of State advised the American minister in Haiti concerning the procedure which he should adopt for the purpose of assisting the Haitian National Assembly to elect a president of the Republic, viz: First. That Congress understand that the Government of the United States intends to uphold it but that it can not recognize action which does not establish in charge of Haitian affairs those whose abilities and dispositions give assurance of putting an end to factional disorder. Second. In order that no misunderstandings can possibly occur after election it should be made perfectly clear to candidates, as soon as possible, and in advance of their election, that the United States expects to be intrusted with the practical control of the customs and such financial control over the affairs of the Republic of Haiti as the United States may deem necessary for efficient administration. Further, that the Government of the United States considers it its duty to support a constitutional government. It means to assist in the establishment of such a government and to support it as long as necessity may require. It has no design upon the political or territorial integrity of Haiti. On the contrary what has been done, as well as what will be done, is conceived in an effort to aid the people of Haiti in establishing a stable Government and maintaining domestic peace throughout the Republic.

DARTIGUENAVE ELECTED PRESIDENT.

Election day, August 12, 1915, passed without disorder and Dartiguenave was elected president, votes for president being cast by congress as follows: Dartiguenave, 94; Cauvin, 14; Thezan, 4; Bobo, 3; 1 blank. Dartiguenave was declared elected amidst enthusiasm and immediately took the oath of office. Following his election he spoke, stating that he had never been chief of any faction, band, or group, and that he would govern solely for the benefit of Haiti, according to the constitution and the laws; he later expressed appreciation for American forces, which, he stated, had made possible an election free from intimidation.

REINFORCEMENTS SENT TO HAITI.

Rear Admiral Caperton, on August 19, 1915, requested that an additional regiment of marines of not less than two battalions of four companies each of Infantry and an Artillery battalion with five additional officers for staff positions, together with eight medical officers and hospital corpsmen and other equipment, be sent to Haiti and that upon receipt of said reinforcements he stated he would occupy the seaport towns in accordance with departmental instructions relative to occupation of customhouses. In compliance with this request the U. S. S. Tennessee on August 31 arrived in Port au Prince and landed Headquarters Artillery Battalion and the First and Ninth Companies, and then proceeded to Cape Haitien, where the Thirteenth Company landed on September 3. This battalion had an enlisted strength of 318 men, armed with twelve 2-inch landing guns and two 4.7-inch heavy field guns, and sailed from the United States August 26.

THE CUSTOMS TAKEN OVER.

The Navy Department cooperating with the State Department, on August 19, 1915, directed Rear Admiral Caperton to assume charge of the customhouses at Jacmel, Aux Cayes, Jeremie, Miragoane, Petit Goave, Port au Prince, St. Marc, Gonaives, Port de Paix, Cape Haitien, funds collected to be use for organization and maintenance of an efficient constabulary, for conducting such temporary public works as will afford immediate relief through employment for starving populace and discharged soldiers, and finally for supporting Dartiguenave government.

On August 30, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton informed the Secretary of the Navy that he had organized customs service for the seacoast of Haiti with Paymaster Charles Morris as administrator of customs, Navy pay and line officers being appointed as collectors of customs and captains of ports for the different ports and that he could not occupy Aux Cayes and Jacmel until the arrival of the U. S. S. Sacramento and requested that the arrival of that vessel be expedited. On August 31, Rear Admiral Caperton informed the Secretary of the Navy that "unless otherwise directed will occupy and begin administering customhouse at Port au Prince at 10 a. m., September 2." The customhouse at Port au Prince was taken over by the United States naval force on September 2, the Haitian Government having been advised in the premises and the following notice was published in the newspapers and otherwise:

" NOTICE.

"For the protection of the Haitian Government and people and for better safe guarding their interests, under the direction of the Government of the United States of America, I have assumed control of the maritime customs service of Haiti.

"The receipts from these customs will be collected by officers of the United States Navy and will be applied to improving the condition of the Haitian people and to the support of the Haitian Government. Funds not so expended will be held in trust for the time being for the people of Haiti by the Government of the United States."

THE TREATY.

As a result of the negotiations which had been carried on over a considerable period of time between the American chargé d'affaires and representatives of the Republic of Haiti, a treaty of mutual amity for the purpose of remedying the financial conditions and assisting the economic development and tranquility of Haiti was signed at Port au Prince, September 16, 1915, subsequently ratified by both the contracting parties, and proclaimed in the United States, May 3, 1916. The United States Government recognized the government of Dargenave of Haiti on September 17, fired the necessary salute, and Rear Admiral Caperton, accompanied by his staff, called on the President of the Republic of Haiti, his call being returned by the President of Haiti and his cabinet on September 18.

In the following proclamation the President of the United States proclaimed this treaty on May 3, 1916:

"Whereas a treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Haiti having for its objects the strengthening of the amity existing between the two countries, the remedying of the present condition of the revenues and finances of Haiti, the maintenance of the tranquility of that Republic, and the carrying out of plans for its economic development and prosperity was concluded and signed by their respective plenipotentiaries at Port au Prince on the 16th day of September, 1915, the original of which treaty, being in the English and French languages, is word for word as follows."

The preamble reads in part as follows:

"The United States and the Republic of Haiti desiring to confirm and strengthen the amity existing between them by the most cordial cooperation in measures for their common advantage;

"And the Republic of Haiti desiring to remedy the present condition of its revenues and finances, to maintain the tranquility of the Republic, to carry on plans for the economic development and prosperity of the Republic and its people;

"And the United States being in full sympathy with all of these aims and objects and desiring to contribute in all proper ways to their accomplishment"; etc.

Article II of this treaty provides for the nomination by the President of the United States and appointment by the President of the Republic of Haiti of a general receiver to supervise customs, and of a financial adviser. Article X provides for the establishment of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, to be organized and officered by Americans, nominated by the President of the United States and appointed by the President of Haiti. Article XIV provides that should the necessity occur the United States "will lend an efficient aid for the preservation of Haitian independence and the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty," and furthermore that the United States and the Republic of Haiti "shall have authority to take such steps as may be necessary to insure the complete attainment of any of the objects comprehended" in the treaty.

This treaty shall remain in "full force and virtue for the term of 10 years," and "further for another term of 10 years if, for specific reasons represented by either of the high contracting parties, the purpose" of the treaty has not been fully accomplished. Over five years of this period has expired.

MARTIAL LAW.

On August 30, 1915, Rear Admiral Caperton informed the Secretary of the Navy and the Commander in Chief as follows:

"On account increasing uneasiness Port au Prince, present Government confronted with conditions apparently unable to control, propagation by newspapers and public men of inflammatory propaganda against Government and American occupation, disloyalty to present Government of some Government officials, and in order to better support the present Government I will tomorrow, September 3, proclaim martial law in Port au Prince, Haiti. This action in accordance with American chargé d'affaires." Rear Admiral Caperton further announced, on the same date, that he had been requested by the President of Haiti to establish martial law. Pursuant to the above information, Rear Admiral Caperton formally issued the proclamation of martial law on September 3, 1915, at Port au Prince, Haiti:

"PROCLAMATION.

"Information having been received from the most reliable sources that the present Government of Haiti is confronted with conditions which they are unable to control, although loyally attempting to discharge the duties of their respective offices; and these facts having created a condition which requires the adoption of different measures than those heretofore applied; and in order to afford the inhabitants of Port au Prince and other territory hereinafter described the privileges of the Government, exercising all the functions necessary for the establishment and maintenance of the fundamental rights of man, I hereby, under my authority as commanding officer of the forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian waters, proclaim that martial law exists in the city of Port au Prince and the immediate territory now occupied by the forces under my command.

"I further proclaim, in accordance with the law of nations and the usages, customs, and functions of my own and other Governments, that I am invested with the power and responsibility of government in all its functions and branches throughout the territory above described, and the proper administration of such government by martial law will be provided for in regulations to be issued from time to time as required by the commanding officer of the forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian waters.

"The martial law herein proclaimed, and the things in that respect so ordered, will not be deemed or taken to interfere with the proceedings of the constitutional Government and Congress of Haiti, or with the administration of justice in the courts of law existing therein, which do not affect the military operations or the authorities of the Government of the United States of America.

"All the municipal and other civil employees are, therefore, requested to continue in their present vocations without change; and the military authorities will not interfere in the functions of the civil administration and the courts, except in so far as relates to persons violating military orders or regulations, or otherwise interfering with the exercise of military authority. All peaceful citizens can confidently pursue their usual occupations, feeling that they will be protected in their personal rights and property, as well as in their proper social relations.

"The commanding officer of the United States expeditionary force, Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, is empowered to issue the necessary regulations and appoint the necessary officers to make this martial law effective.

"Done at the city of Port au Prince, Haiti, this 8d day of September. A. D. 1915."

The commanding officers who had taken over the various coast towns in the adjoining territory of Haiti were informed by Rear Admiral Caperton on September 21 that his proclamation of September 3, relative to martial law, applied to all the territory within their jurisdiction, and appointed the provost marshal and the provost judge for each said town and territory immediately surrounding.

On September 4, 1916, the chargé d'affaires, Port au Prince, reported to the Secretary of State that all civil officials provided for by the treaty have now taken their offices, and requested information as to turning over all Federal civil administration at present conducted by President's orders to the Haitian Government, in reply to which the Secretary of State announced that the time had not yet arrived for the withdrawal of the naval forces in Haiti and the termination of martial law, and that it was the desire of the department that the present status be continued until such time as the gendarmerie has proved itself loyal and efficient in all emergencies and the internal peace of Haiti is thereby definitely assured.

On September 22, 1920, the Judge Advocate General of the Navy rendered legal opinion with reference to the status of the marines in Haiti, which is partially quoted below:

"The military forces of the United States have not displaced the civil government of Haiti and established a military government of the United States in that country, but are engaged pursuant to law in lending efficient aid to the Republic of Haiti in preserving a republican form of government and suppressing domestic violence. By treaty between the United States and Haiti, signed September 16, 1915, duly ratified by both Governments and proclaimed May 3, 1916 (39 Stat., 1654), one object of which, as stated in the preamble, was 'to maintain the tranquility of the Republic [of Haiti],' it was provided (Art. XIV) that—

"The high contracting parties shall have authority to take such steps as may be necessary to insure the complete attainment of any of the objects comprehended in this treaty, and should the necessity occur the United States will lend an efficient aid for the preservation of Haitian independence and the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty."

"Pursuant to the above treaty and upon recommendation of the State Department expressly reciting the desirability 'that every effort should be made to put the provisions thereof in operation with the least delay,' Congress enacted a law which was approved by the President of the United States on June 12, 1916 (39 Stat., 223), and which provided in part—

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to detail to assist the Republic of Haiti such officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy and the United States Marine Corps as may be mutually agreed upon by him and the President of the Republic of Haiti."

"Thereafter, on June 12, 1918, the Republic of Haiti adopted a new constitution, article 127 of which provided that—

"The present constitution and all the treaties actually in force or to be included hereafter and all the laws decreed in accordance with this constitution or with these treaties shall constitute the law of the country, and their relative superiority shall be determined by the order in which they are here mentioned."

"The treaty of 1916 above quoted was in force on the date of the Haitian constitution, it having been expressly provided in said treaty (Art. XVI) that 'the present treaty shall remain in full force and virtue for the term of 10 years, to be counted from the day of exchange of ratifications, and, further, for another term of 10 years if, for specific reasons presented by either of the high contracting parties, the purpose of this treaty has not been fully accomplished. Accordingly, the said treaty of 1916 was by explicit provision of the Haitian constitution of 1918 declared to be 'the law of the country'; that is, the law of Haiti, just as under the United States Constitution (Art. VI) the said treaty of May 3, 1916, and the act of Congress of June 12, 1916, enacted pursuant to said treaty, are declared to be 'the supreme law of the land'; that is, the law of the United States.

"In other words, the United States has guaranteed to the Haitian Republic that it will lend efficient aid in preserving government and tranquility in that country, just as it has given a similar guaranty to the States of this Union, and Congress has given discretion to the President of the United States to detail land and naval forces to enforce this guaranty in both cases upon mutu-agreement between the President of the United States and the Government requiring such assistance.

"The marine brigade is now in Haiti by authority of law for the purposes of maintaining the recognized Government of that Republic and preserving tranquillity, occupying in this respect a status substantially identical with that which would exist should Federal troops be sent into a State of this Union upon the request of the recognized government of that State for the same purpose.

"Our military forces operating in Haiti, pursuant to the treaty and the act of Congress above cited, by mutual agreement between this Government and the Republic of Haiti, for the purpose of suppressing armed uprisings and maintaining the constitutional Government which has been recognized by the President of the United States, have the same powers and duties as the military forces of Haiti in the administration of martial law in that country and in the resort to the laws and usages of war, for the existing conditions of local disturbance constitute, in the language of the Supreme Court, 'a state of war'—not a state of war between the United States and Haiti, but domestic war which the United States, in the fulfillment of its treaty obligations, is bound to assist the Government of Haiti to suppress.

"That martial law in Haiti was originally established by the head of our military forces in that country upon the request of the Haitian President is shown by the official records of this department; and indirect reference to this fact is also to be found in the opening paragraph of the proclamation of martial law.

"That the martial law thus established was not intended to displace the constitutional Government of Haiti, but was in support of that Government, is expressly disclosed by the following further paragraph of the aforesaid proclamation:

"The martial law herein proclaimed, and the things in that respect so ordered, will not be deemed or taken to interfere with the proceedings of the constitutional Government and congress of Haiti, or with the administration of justice in the courts of law existing therein, which do not affect the military operations or the authorities of the Government of the United States of America."

"The above-quoted proclamation was issued on September 3, 1915. The martial law thus established has been continued ever since, with the consent of the Government of Haiti, as shown by the numerous instances in which the President of that Republic has decorated members of our military forces and extended to them his most cordial expressions of appreciation for their services to his country; also, the new Haitian constitution expressly provides (Title VII) that 'all the acts of the Government of the United States during its military occupation of Haiti are ratified and validated.' Our operations in Haiti have also been conducted with the express sanction of Congress since the act of June, 1916, above cited, which placed entirely in the discretion of the President of the United States the detail of such military forces of the Navy and Marine Corps to assist the Republic of Haiti 'as may be mutually agreed upon by him and the President of the Republic of Haiti.'

"Such being the status of our military forces in Haiti, engaged in administering martial law in support of the constitutional government, in a country in which a state of domestic war exists, there can be no question that the military commander of such forces is authorized to take any steps necessary and sanctioned by the laws and customs of war to meet the exigencies of the situation. Military commissions and provost courts are recognized instrumentalities of martial law. Recourse to such exceptional military courts is justified whenever the civil courts are closed, or when necessary for the trial of offenses against the military forces or violations of regulations required to make martial law effective. Otherwise, in the language of the Supreme Court above quoted, 'martial law and the military array of the Government would be mere parade, and rather encourage attack than repel it.' In the proclamation heretofore quoted, it was stated that upon this point that 'the military authorities will not interfere in the functions of the civil administration and the courts except in so far as relates to persons violating military orders or regulations, or otherwise interfering with the exercise of military authority.' This department's records show that the territory under martial law has been extended to include parts of Haiti not specifically embraced in the original proclamation; it does not, however, appear that the jurisdiction of military courts has been enlarged so as to embrace offenses not described in that proclamation, and therefore the trial of such other offenses must properly be left to the civil courts."

THE SO-CALLED CENSORSHIP.

The following order was promulgated throughout the Republic of Haiti on September 3, 1915:

"The freedom of the press will not be interfered with, but license will not be tolerated. The publishing of false or incendiary propaganda against the Government of the United States or the Government of Haiti, or the publishing of any false, indecent, or obscene propaganda, letters signed or unsigned, or matter which tends to disturb the public peace will be dealt with by the military courts. The writers of such articles and the publishers thereof will be held responsible for such utterances and will be subject to fine or imprisonment, or both, as may be determined."

This ban was modified inferentially recently and with unfortunate results.

A paraphrase of a dispatch from the brigade commander dated January 9, 1921, to the Major General Commandant follows:

"Rush. 8608. President of Haiti sent me to-day the following letter:

"DEAR MONSIEUR LE COLONEL: Certain newspapers, relying upon an impunity which until now has been assured them, for some time past have been insulting the officers of the gendarmerie and the Government, spreading the most insidious propaganda and causing uneasiness among the people.

"If we persist in viewing with indifference this state of affairs which I qualify as intolerable, I foresee that the military officials must expect to witness acts of a still more regrettable nature.

"I therefore address myself to you, to whom is intrusted the maintaining of public security and peace, asking you to take all measures that are demanded by the circumstances.

"In case you judge it is necessary to have them, the Government holds at your disposition other facts, apart from the above.

"Accept, Dear Monsieur le Colonel, the assurance of my sentiments of cordial consideration.

"DARTIGUENAVE."

"Have replied, acknowledging receipt of letter and stating that I have taken the subject matter under consideration. Prompt instructions requested.

"JOHN H. RUSSELL."

The following letter dated January 18, 1921, was written by the brigade commander to the Chief of Naval Operations, Navy Department, via the Major General Commandant:

"1. In paragraphs 11 and 12 of the above reference, copy attached hereto, it was pointed out that the Haitian politicians had found a veritable gold mine in the situation that had been created for them during the summer months.

"2. Since the writing of the above report the political conditions in Haiti have gradually been growing worse. There have been several causes that have contributed to this end. Among them may be named the following:

"(1) The scurrilous and insulting articles that daily appear in the press defaming the Haitian Government, the occupation, and the gendarmerie.

"(2) So-called patriotic meeting and assemblies where unbridled tongues give forth villifying words against the Haitian Government, the occupation, and the gendarmerie.

"(3) The lack of any attempt on the part of the Haitian Government to put a stop to such abuses and the knowledge that the military occupation will not interfere.

"(4) The knowledge of the people that the Haitian courts would not support the Haitian Government in any attempt to check abuses.

"(5) The general dislike of the black man for the white.

"(6) The prevalent belief that the occupation will soon be withdrawn and Haiti left to her own devices.

"(7) The support of certain so-called patriotic societies by persons or organizations in the United States.

"(8) The present poor economic condition of the country which has led to many unemployed.

"(9) And last, but far from least, the intense rivalry among the politicians for the next presidency. The candidates are lining up and seeking by every means to promote their own interests.

"3. The result of all this turmoil and license is bound to affect the military situation. Tranquillity continues to reign throughout the entire country, but rumors regarding contemplated disturbances are daily becoming more numerous. It is true that when run down nothing is found, but it is my opinion, founded on a knowledge of the Haitian and an absolute knowledge of the military situation in Haiti that, unless steps are shortly taken to curb the license now being permitted, local disturbances will occur and eventually the tranquillity of the country will be again disrupted.

"4. From a military point of view the situation can be kept well in hand with the troops at my command, but life and property can be destroyed and a general condition of unrest created that will again necessitate active and forceful measures which, in my opinion, could well be avoided.

"5. It is my opinion that the Haitian Government should be forced to openly admit its inability to restrain the press and protect itself, the occupation and the gendarmerie, from its insulting and scurrilous remarks due to the inefficiency and inadequacy of the judiciary system of Haiti. Such admission has already been made but not openly. If so made it would throw the onus of such work on the military occupation, which could put in operation laws similar to those now existing in the Dominican Republic relating to the press, freedom of speech, etc.

"6. I have deemed it my duty to make the above report, as I am firmly of the belief that some action toward the bridling of the press should be undertaken, and I desire, as a matter of self-protection, to present this opinion in order that if such a condition is allowed to continue unabated and disturbances occur the military occupation will not be held responsible therefor."

On January 28, 1921, Rear Admiral Snowden, United States Navy, military governor of Santo Domingo and military representative of the United States in Haiti, placed the following indorsement on the above letter:

"1. A copy of the above-mentioned report has just come into the hands of the undersigned.

"2. I approve and support in the strongest terms the letter and advice of the brigade commander in Haiti and believe that the situation is critical as regards the near future.

"3. The conditions are such as can not be permitted to continue and is impossible of control under the present policy of free and unlimited license as to libel, defamation, and malicious propaganda.

"4. I can not too strongly urge the defense of the military forces from malicious libel and propaganda by laws or orders permitting free speech but not license.

"5. It is a fact that the present policy of license regarding propaganda, etc., here and in Haiti will before long no doubt use the power of the military forces to control the situation at the expense of many lives on both sides, but measures should be at once taken to curb these attacks upon the military forces, in order that a critical condition may not be brought about."

The Secretary of the Navy wrote as follows to the Secretary of State on February 15, 1921:

Referring to my letter of February 7, 1921 (P. D. 238-6), in which I inclosed copies of two confidential reports from the brigade commander of the United States marine brigade in Haiti, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report from the military governor of Santo Domingo, who is also the military representative of the United States in Haiti, in which he submits his comment on the brigade commander's report of January 18, 1921, which was one of the reports submitted in my letter, above cited.

Particular attention is invited to the closing sentence of the governor's letter, in which he states as follows:

"I have no doubt of the power of the military forces to control the situation at the expense of many lives on both sides, but measures should be at once taken to curb these attacks upon the military forces in order that a critical condition may not be brought about."

In the following dispatch to the commandant of the Marine Corps, date May 17, 1921, the brigade commander requested authority to bring to trial certain persons:

"Special rush 8617 for Opnay Haitian press continues to publish scurrilous and insulting articles daily. These articles are untruthful, incendiary in character, and seriously tend to disturb the peace in Port au Prince, creating a condition of grave danger between the gendarmerie and marines and natives. The Haitian Government should be forced to protect the officers and men of the gendarmerie and occupation, or the occupation should be allowed to protect itself. The gendarmerie begin to feel that they are not being supported. It is generally known, and has been stated by the President, that Haitian courts will not convict such cases, as trial must be by jury, and the juries are with the people whose passions have been aroused by unbridled press. Believe that threat of trial or only one case would be sufficient to restore to normal conditions. Earnestly recommend that I be authorized to try by provost court those concerned in the publishing of falsehoods or articles against the gendarmerie and occupation. Request early reply. 1640."

The following dispatch, dated May 24, 1921, was sent by the Secretary of the Navy to the brigade commander:

"8624. The proclamation of martial law as proclaimed on September 3, 1915, and ratified by Haitian constitution reserved from the jurisdiction of civil courts of Haiti those things which affect the military operations or the authorities of the Government of the United States of America. Agitation against United States officials who are aiding and supporting constitutional Government tending to undermine their authority and coupled with political agitation looking to destruction of the constitutional government will lead to revolution and anarchy with consequent destruction of life and property and prolonged misery for Haitian people. Not only in self-defense of American forces but in self-defense of Haitian Government and people such measures must be taken as will suppress such agitation and prevent return of violent disorders. From the information before you, you will determine what action under martial law the crisis demands and act accordingly, keeping in mind the idea of action only in self-defense of your command and Haitian Government, and employing processes of martial law only where your conservative judgment admits the situation demands its exercise, and then restricting penalties to serve the purposes of prevention rather than punishment. In respect to those who attack the Haitian President and Government direct rather than through the American forces, it would be advisable to have the Haitian President request you or direct the chief of gendarmerie to proceed against them through the agencies of martial law which is maintained for and in behalf of the constitutional Government of Haiti. You would thereby have on record a statement of what the Haitian state construes the crisis demands in the way of prevention in order to preclude the engineering of domestic disorder and attempts to overthrow the constitutional government by violence. In trials before military commissions or provost courts the charge should cite the offense against the military forces or the violation of a regulation adopted to make martial law effective. Should there be insufficient regulations to cover the existing situation such should be promulgated. In the absence of appropriate regulations or which to base a trial, those who, from the information before you, you have reasonable grounds to believe are concerned in unlawful opposition and the encouragement of domestic violence may be arrested and held in confinement until the exigency has passed and the constituted authorities are able to execute the laws, 1645, Sec. Nav."

In carrying out the above instructions the brigade commander on May 26, 1921, published the following proclamation:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, May 26, 1921.

To all inhabitants:

The United States forces in Haiti are engaged in aiding and supporting the constitutional Government of Haiti and are your friends.

By their efforts and those of the gendarmerie of Haiti peace and tranquility have been established throughout your land, permitting you to cultivate your gardens, conduct your business, and earn an honest living.

The only agitation that is being carried on in all Haiti is that undertaken by a few newspapers in the large cities and by a few persons in so-called political speeches.

This agitation, however, is a menace to the condition of law and order that has been given to you, and consequently it becomes necessary to issue the following order under the powers and authority of martial law.

ORDER.

While the freedom of the press and speeches are practically unrestricted, articles or speeches that are of an incendiary nature or reflect adversely upon the forces in Haiti or tend to stir up an agitation against the United States officials who are aiding and supporting the constitutional Government of Haiti, or articles or speeches at the President or the Haitian Government are prohibited. Any offender against this order will be brought to trial before a military tribunal.

JOHN H. RUSSELL,

Colonel, United States Marine Corps, Commanding First Brigade, United States Marines, and United States Forces in Haiti.

On the date the above proclamation was published the President of the Republic of Haiti wrote a letter to the brigade commander reading in part as follows:

"I have this day received your proclamation dated May 26, 1921. It has my full and entire approval, and I desire that it be given its full and entire effect.

"Pray accept dear M. le Colonel the renewed expression of my best sentiments.

"DARTIGUENAVE."

On June 24, 1921, the following memorandum was prepared for the Secretary of the Navy and the major general commandant:

MEMORANDUM.

"1. For some time past the American authorities in Haiti did not concern themselves with the character of articles published in the Haitian newspapers. A very small percentage of the population in Haiti is able to read, and as the circulation of the Haitian newspaper seldom exceeds a few hundred it was considered that such newspapers would not exercise much influence outside of a few large towns, and they did not exercise much influence until recently.

"2. Partly as a reflection of race disturbances and agitation in the United States, partly as a reflection of the late political campaign in the United States, but principally owing to the characteristic which many Haitian writers have of working themselves into a passion with little or no propocation, freedom of the press was construed to be unlimited license to attack not only the Government of Haiti and the American occupation, but also the personal and private character of any American or any Haitian official.

"3. Continued and unrestrained abuse of officers and men had a tendency to destroy any friendly relationship between the marines and the native population, and the attacks gradually assumed more and more the nature of propaganda toward a new revolution against the constitutional government of Haiti and threatened to recall the condition of anarchy which had recently been suppressed.

"4. A copy of the dispatch from the brigade commander in Haiti quoting from an article published in a Haitian newspaper, a copy of the order prohibiting incendiary articles from being published in Haiti, and a copy of the department's dispatch to the brigade commander authorizing such action are attached hereto.

"5. In interpreting the order the usual rules of interpretation should be followed and the order should be considered as a whole. Considered in such wise, it is apparent that it is intended not to prohibit constructive criticism or the advocacy of policies different from those advocated by the Government of Haiti, or to otherwise interfere with freedom of speech and press, but simply to prevent the publication of articles or speeches which are in the nature of propaganda calculated and intended to bring on a new revolution and a condition of anarchy which, as stated in the Secretary's dispatch, will inevitably lead to destruction of life and property and prolonged misery for the Haitian people.

"6. So far as attacks on individuals are concerned, no action is intended to suppress these unless they are slanderous or libelous. Charges made against Americans, whether presented privately or publicly, are always properly investigated, and no attempt to suppress such charges is contemplated, except in those cases where they are inspired by a desire to create disorder and are based on nothing but an evil imagination.

"7. In our own country we are not without examples, and recent ones, of unfortunate riotings and killings having resulted from a failure of the proper authorities to prevent the cultivation of criminal mob violence. It is the desire to avoid such violence in Haiti that led to the department's action in respect to those in Haiti who attempt to stir up the evil and the ignorant to violence. There is inclosed a quotation from a letter from the President of Haiti to the brigade commander fully approving the action taken. It was largely upon the President's urgent representation that the proclamation was issued.

"8. In addition to the above-mentioned inclosures there is also attached an excerpt from a Haitian newspaper article which refers particularly to ex-President Wilson."

The dispatch of the brigade commander referred to in the above memorandum follows:

"8627. Reference your 8625-1415, Courier Haitien published article April 16 on departure of Col. Hooker, in part as follows: 'Man proposes, God disposes. He did not think that he would leave Haiti so soon. He did not think that he would go without having executed his infamous project against us.

"PAR. 2. We wish you bon voyage, Col. Hooker. As to the money that you have taken from Haiti, as to the fortune that you have amassed in the country in violation of our poor peasants, the brave Cacos, you will not enjoy it yourself, and for all the wrong that you have done to a good, peaceful, and hard-working people for the sole purpose of enriching yourself at its expense, your children will pay to the fourth generation for this.

"PAR. 4. Col. Hooker, the shades of Pierre Pinede, of Saj Peralte, and of such others that you have sent to their forefathers rejoice at your departure and curse you.

"PAR. 5. With pockets full of gold, depart happily, but remember that there is an eminent justice that sooner or later will make you pay for all the suffering that you have made the Haitien people endure.

"PAR. 6. The curses of the widows, the orphans, and the bereaved fiancées of your innumerable victims accompany you, Col. Hooker.'

"PAR. 7. Jolibois Fils editor sent paper to Hooker marked, 'Copy of paper with compliments.' Some days afterwards Hooker entered Cinema and spoke to Chevallier. Jolibois was talking with Chevallier at the time and saluted Hooker. Hooker told him he did not mind attacks on or criticism of his official acts, but that he had protected him, and that a personal attack was the act of a pig. Hooker then went to a theater and nothing further occurred. Long account of incident published in paper by Jolibois, together with letter and cable sent. Summon ordering brigade inspector immediately investigated Jolibois' manner and demeanor as taken by Hooker, Jolibois in no way threatens at any time during evening.

"PAR. 8. Officers and men of brigade and gendarmes were sent the Haitien daily. Call Marine Corps veritable Huns. Presence of marine alone permits such insulting attacks, for under Haitian régime the editor would have been imprisoned and papers would have been stopped. Pinede died natural death from consumption and smallpox. Hooker not in Haiti when Saul Peralte was killed.

"PAR. 9. In above attack Jolibois is evidently trying to stir up people against occupation. Notice how he speaks of brave Cacos. Papers distributed and are read to people by agents in interior. 1745."

The newspaper article referred to in the foregoing memorandum that villifies ex-President Wilson reads as follows:

[Extract from article appearing in Les Annales Capoisees, Cape Haitien, Republic of Haiti, under date of Mar. 4, 1921.]

"To-day in the history of Haiti the 4th of March is the beginning of a new era. Mr. Harding, the defender of our cause and advocate of our rights, had entered the White House as President of the United States in place of Mr. Woodrow Wilson, the man of baneful prejudices, who conspired against the existence of our country with the complicity of a group of business men in America, such as Messrs. Farnham & Co. May he retire to private life followed by the maledictions of Haitian people and may he be perpetually tormented by remorse, that canker of a guilty conscience, have a sad and taciturn ending, continually gnashing his teeth, a prey to horrible hallucinations and believing himself to be always pursued by the invisible specters of those of us who have died martyr to the cause of liberty. Like Cain may he never find a resting place upon the face of this earth and may he on his death bed eat 'Les Excrements De Son Vase,' like the man who no longer has faith in the divine mercy. This is the fate that I wish for him and which will without failure come to him, for there exists that Heavenly justice which never forgives the crimes that have been committed against an entire nation."

LARGE FORCE REQUIRED.

Rear Admiral Caperton on March 13, 1916, reported that the total shore forces in Haiti amounted to not more than 1,700 enlisted men, and stated that it was not considered practicable to maintain military control of the country with a smaller force.

On March 11, 1916, the Secretary of the Navy sent Rear Admiral Caperton the following dispatch paraphrased as follows: "Relinquish no part of military control which you are now exercising in Haiti, nor without receipt of further instructions put end to martial law as now in force."

POLICY OF UNITED STATES.

During December, 1916, the Secretary of the Navy in a dispatch to Capt. Knapp outlined the attitude of the United States Government toward the Government of Haiti as follows:

"* * * the United States policy has been to support President Dartigueve so long as his conduct conforms to correct principles and to the agreements between Haiti and the United States. Any attempt to overthrow President Dartigueve will not be countenanced, nor will any legislative action annulling any decree of the President during the time when no legislative body was in session be permitted. On the other hand, the United States will consider such action to be the beginning of revolution and disorder in the Republic. * * *"

THE ELECTIONS.

The general elections in Haiti were held on January 16 and 17, 1917, without any marked disorder. Considerable repeating and other frauds were attempted, but generally without success. Arrangements for the election were apparently thoroughly successful and the action of the occupation widely appreciated.

On April 21, 1917, the cabinet and national assembly met in apparently the best of feeling with no friction present. In a speech Vincent, who presided, stated that Haitian peace was due to the United States, and with her assistance much progress would result. Following adjournment the entire cabinet called on the commander of the first provisional brigade and assured him that they desired America's continued assistance and wished to cooperate.

The present situation with regard to elections in Haiti is summed up in the following extracts from a report by the brigade commander dated April 4, 1921, reading as follows:

"In a study of the political situation in Haiti it must be ever borne in mind that the Haitian politician represents but an infinitesimal part of the population of Haiti."

"The possibility of an election being held next January [1922] for Haitian deputies and senators and the election of a president by the assembly in the following April has served to complicate an already involved political situation.

"Numerous candidates for the presidency have already announced themselves. In fact, the time is apparently propitious for the Haitian politician and any Haitian, born of a Haitian father, who has engaged in politics, has any following and some money to spend in advancing his cause may be considered to be in the field for the highest honors.

"The one outstanding fact that is apparent through the midst of political talk, which has now reached the boiling point, is the intense hatred of all Haitian politicians for the existing Government. To their minds the Government must be changed, they care not how, in order to make room for some one else to fill the presidential chair, and consequently they are united against the Government.

"Recently an educated Haitian in northern Haiti, who advocated the withdrawal of the occupation, was asked whether if the occupation withdrew he would support the Government, the constitution, and the laws of Haiti. He replied that if the occupation withdrew that, of course, the existing Government must fall at once. When asked if another president was installed who was not to his liking he would support him or endeavor to overthrow his Government, he could conceive of only the latter alternative.

"The question that is heard on all sides is, 'Will the elections for the assembly be held next January?' At present it is impossible to answer, as the Haitian Government has given no definite reply to this question, which has been asked many times.

"The question that one naturally asks is, Does the law require the holding of the elections for the National Assembly in January next? The constitution of Haiti states that the election must be held on the 10th of January in an even year. The year shall be set by the President of the Republic in a decree issued at least three months before the meeting of the primary assemblies. In other words, the elections will be held when the President believes that the condition of the country is such as to permit of it. The question of holding the election, therefore, lies entirely with the President, but next year a new President must be elected, or rather the time of office of the present incumbent expires, and if there is no assembly who will elect the President? The Conseil d'Etat was empowered by the constitution to act, for legislative purposes, in the place of the assembly. This Council of State is, however, but a creature of the President, as all its members are appointed by him, and it is reasonable to expect that if so empowered it would unquestionably not have the power. On the other hand, from my talks with Haitian Government takes the view that the acts of the Conseil d'Etat can not be confined to legislative acts only, but that it has as broad powers as those of the National Assembly.

"If, on the other hand, the claim is upheld that the Conseil d'Etat has not the power to assume electoral functions, and, furthermore, the President fails to hold the elections in January for senators and deputies, how, then, can a President be elected, and under such conditions would the present incumbent be justified in remaining.

"These are all questions that here in Haiti are uppermost in the minds of those closely allied to Haitian affairs, and at the present time it is difficult to see how any of them can be settled without causing much discontent and feeling among the Haitian politicians, of whom many are already sinking their small fortunes in promoting their candidacies. It must be further remembered that the Haitian politician has heretofore run the country—he has controlled the mass. The Union Patriotique has among its members many candidates for the Presidency, but if no election is held all these men will unite in a common cause, and then we have a more or less organized body united against the Haitian Government and against our efforts here if we support that Government in its action.

"In addition, in the coast towns the newspapers are maintaining their antioccupation and anti-Government attitude, and are almost daily publishing insulting and vitriolic articles.

WAR DECLARED ON GERMANY.

On May 3 the Haitian cabinet decided to send the National Assembly a message recommending that war be declared on Germany. Much confusion resulted. On May 5 the National Assembly received the President's message recommending the declaration of war. This caused an attack on the cabinet but the cabinet was sustained. On May 12 the brigade commander reported to the State Department that the Haitian cabinet had decided to break diplomatic relations with Germany and to hand the chargé d'affaires his passport. War against Germany was eventually declared by Haiti on July 13, 1918.

VISITS OF PRESIDENT INTO COUNTRY.

On December 11, 1917, an automobile was driven for the first time over the road from Gonaves to Cape Haitien. This was the first wheeled vehicle that had traveled this road in 112 years. Having received a report concerning this the Major General Commandant addressed the brigade commander as follows: "My sincere congratulations to all who have been instrumental in doing this great work."

On January 3, 1913, the President of the Republic of Haiti with his party left Port au Prince in an automobile at 4 a. m. and arrived at Cape Haitien at 7.50 p. m., making stops at Arcahaie, St. Marc, Dessalines, Gonaives, Ennery, Plaisance, and Limbe. On January 9, the presidential party left Cape Haitien and returned to Port au Prince. The towns passed through were all decorated and great enthusiasm was shown, clearly demonstrating the contentment and happiness of the people. This was the first time in the history of the country that a President of Haiti had been able to visit the northern cities of Haiti without a protecting army at his back.

In a speech to Haitian people on April 15, 1920, the President of the Republic stated that he, the President, had five years ago signed a convention with the United States, that he was a Haitian and loved his country, and that he would sign such a convention five times over if need be to clear up the brigandage in Haiti. He further told them what a great and powerful country the United States was, and that the white officers and men now giving them protection and allowing them to pursue their work were men of the highest honor and integrity, who were devoted to the interest of their country and were working for the good of Haiti, and that it was necessary that the Haitians assist them in every way. His remarks were well received and in the opinion of the brigade commander had an excellent effect. This speech by the President was made during a tour in which he made an extended trip through northern Haiti delivering addresses in many of the larger cities. The president was received enthusiastically everywhere along the route and newspaper men who accompanied the party declared in their papers that pacification was restored. The President made excellent speeches and was greatly pleased at the results of the trip.

THE CONSTITUTION.

It having been agreed that the new constitution for Haiti as amended by order of the State Department should be submitted to the Haitian people for their vote on June 12, 1918, arrangements were made by Col. Russell for taking care of any disturbances that might arise. In his report Col. Russell stated that the voting polls were opened at 7 a. m. and closed at 5 p. m. At Port au Prince all stores were closed, and although crowds were around the voting booths they were most orderly. Reports from all over the Republic soon indicated that the new constitution would be adopted by a large majority vote and that no disorders would occur. In his report the next day, June 13, 1917, Col. Russell reported that the constitution had been adopted by an overwhelming majority, up to the present time returns showed 69,337 affirmative votes and 335 negatives. No disorders during the day.

Shortly after the adoption of the constitution the President of Haiti stated that he intended to call only such men to his assistance (in his cabinet) as he knew to be capable, honorable, and disposed to assist him in the work of reconstruction of the country.

THE CONVENTION WITH CACO CHIEFS.

Col. Waller on October 1, 1915, met the hostile Caco chief at Quartier Morin and an agreement was drawn up, signed by both sides, providing in part that the Cacos would disarm immediately and turn in all arms and ammunitions to the United States forces and return to their homes and not interfere with railroads, telegraph, telephone, commerce, agriculture, or other industries of the country, etc. After the signing of this convention there ensued a period during which conditions were very unsettled in northern Haiti. The Caco forces were scattered over a territory of approximately 2,000 to 2,500 square miles, roughly, within the territory included between St. Marc, Gonaives, Port de Paix, Cape Haitien, Fort Liberte, Hinche, Ennery, the principal centers of their activities being Gonaives, Quartier Morin, Le Trou, Fort Liberte district, and Grand Riviere; the district along the border from Ouanaminth to Carice was held by troops of the former Government. It was understood that the disarming of the soldiers would take place at the same time as the disarming of the Cacos by their chief in the same district. The Cacos, however, proved to be very insincere in their attitude on disarming, which resulted in several operations of some importance during the month of October, 1915, chief of which was the attack by the American forces on Fort Dipitie and operations incident thereto, which resulted in a considerable number of casualties to the Cacos.

On October 27, Col. Waller left Port au Prince for Cape Haitien to conduct the necessary operations to subdue the Cacos. Arriving at Cape Haitien the plans for the operations were somewhat accelerated by the continued attacks on the marines at Bajon and the sniping at patrols between Grand Riviere and Bajon. During November, 1915, these operations were carried out and Fort Riviere, the stronghold of the Cacos was captured November 17.

"CACO" DEFINED.

In a report to the commander of the cruiser squadron, Col. Waller gave the following definition of a "Caco": "It must be explained that the Cacos have been the controlling elements in all revolutions. They were purchased by first one candidate and then another. Finishing a contract with one man, they having put him in power, would immediately sell their services to the next aspirant to unseat the first."

UNNECESSARY FORCE PROHIBITED.

On November 20 the Secretary of the Navy informed Rear Admiral Caperton that the department was strongly impressed with the number of Haitians killed and felt that a severe lesson had been taught the Cacos and believed that a proper control could be maintained to preserve order and protect innocent without further offensive operations. In reply Rear Admiral Caperton informed the Secretary of the Navy that all operations except protective patrolling had been suspended and that directions had been given that every effort should be to prevent loss of life on both sides, that the expeditionary force is maintaining military control of the ports of entry of Haiti and undertaking such other operations as necessary to preserve peace and order in the territory contiguous thereto.

MODUS VIVENDI EMBODYING TERMS OF TREATY.

On November 11, 1915, the treaty was ratified by the Haitian Senate after much delay, and on November 29 a modus vivendi embodying the exact terms of the treaty was signed by plenipotentiaries of the United States and Haiti to establish some method of procedure while awaiting exchange of ratifications. The modus vivendi, however, was not carried out by the United States at this time owing to constitutional restrictions in the matter of appointing officers as officials without congressional action.

THE GENDARMERIE.

The American minister in Haiti on January 10 informed Rear Admiral Caperton that the State Department on January 8, 1916, had advised him concerning the organization of the gendarmerie; that it had been agreed between the State Department and the Haitian commission that "members of the gendarmerie shall form the personal guard of the President of Haiti and the gendarmerie shall be the sole police and military force of the country," thereby abolishing the palace guard as unnecessary.

On October 15, 1915, the Secretary of the Navy decided as follows:

"Article I, section 9, clause 8, of the Constitution of the United States prohibits any person holding any office of profit or trust under the United States from holding or accepting any office, present, or emolument, or title from any foreign State, unless Congress shall consent thereto. While officers of the United States on duty in Haiti could not without the consent of Congress hold office, receive emolument, etc., under the Haitian Government, they are not prohibited by the Constitution or any law of the United States 'from rendering a friendly service' to that State, such as assisting to organize a gendarmerie. (See Op. 13, Atty. Gen., 537, 538.) However, at the present date there is no authority whereby such officers could become officers in such a force by appointment from the Government of Haiti."

On June 12, 1916, an act to authorize and empower officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps to serve under the Government of the Republic of Haiti was enacted, as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to detail to assist the Republic of Haiti such officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy and the United States Marine Corps as may be mutually agreed upon by him and the President of the Republic of Haiti: Provided, That the officers and enlisted men so detailed be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept from the Government of Haiti the said employment with compensation and enrolments from the said Government of Haiti, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

"SEC. 2. That to insure the continuance of this work during such time as may be desirable, the President may have the power of substitution in the case of the termination of the detail of any officer or enlisted man, for any cause: Provided, That during the continuance of such details the officers and enlisted men shall continue to receive the pay and allowances of their ranks or ratings in the Navy or Marine Corps.

"SEC. 3. That the following increase in the United States Marine Corps be, and the same is hereby authorized: Two majors, 12 captains, 18 first lieutenants, 2 assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain, 1 assistant paymaster with the rank of captain, 5 quartermaster sergeants, 5 first sergeants, 5 gunnery sergeants, and 11 sergeants.

"SEC. 4. That the following increase in the United States Navy be, and the same is hereby, authorized: One surgeon, 2 passed assistant surgeons, 5 hospital stewards, and 10 hospital apprentices, first class.

"SEC. 5. That officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps detailed for duty to assist the Republic of Haiti shall be entitled to the same credit for such service, for longevity, retirement, foreign service, pay, and for all other purposes, that they would receive if they were serving with the Navy or with the Marine Corps."

Marine and naval officers were immediately appointed by the President of the Republic of Haiti after nomination by the President of the United States to officer and administer the Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

From October 18, 1915, to February 1, 1916, the gendarmerie acted in accordance with instructions issued by the expeditionary commander. On February 1, 1916, the following proclamation was issued changing those duties from purely police to include both military and police and absolutely supplanted the old régime:

" PROCLAMATION.

"Whereas the President of Haiti and his cabinet have decreed that on this date the commandants of communes and the chiefs of sections are abolished, and also that all military and police duties of the commandants of arrondissements are taken away, it is hereby ordered that, from this date, all the military and police duties heretofore performed by those officers be performed by the Gendarmerie d'Haiti supported by the expeditionary forces under my command."

Pursuant to this order, the gendarmes then in service were transferred to all parts of Haiti, both in the large and small towns, appropriate increase made in strength, and the gendarmerie took up its duties under the following instructions issued by the expeditionary commander regarding its functions:

1. Preservation of order.
2. Protection of individual rights.
3. Protection of property.
4. Supervision of arms.
5. Prevention of smuggling.
6. Protect and report on conditions of highways and bridges. When so ordered by the commandant of the gendarmerie, the gendarmes will require, according to law, the proper inhabitants to alter or repair public highways and bridges, and will supervise this work. At the request of the mayor of the commune they may, when ordered by the proper officer of the gendarmerie, undertake this work.
7. Protect and report on conditions of the telegraph and telephone service. When ordered by a commissioned officer of the gendarmerie, will have the authority to censor all messages and to take charge of any station or office when necessary for the good of the public.
8. Report on and supervise the use of the public lands according to law.
9. Protect and report on conditions of public buildings.
10. Collection of vital statistics, including the census, when ordered.
11. Report on and protect public irrigation works.
12. Enforce sanitary orders and regulations.
13. Report on and enforce regulations preventing spread of animal diseases.
14. Report on and enforce regulations preventing spread of epidemics.

15. Plenary control in time of great disorder following war, rebellion, earthquakes, typhoons, etc.

16. Control of prisons.

17. Issuance of permits for travel within the Republic.

18. Agricultural reports.

19. Require all weights and measures to conform to legal standards.

20. Enforce harbor and docking regulations.

These duties have since been modified as follows:

On August 24, 1916, in an agreement between the United States and Haiti the maintenance and operation of the telegraph and telephone lines were put under the engineer of Haiti.

On January 4, 1917, the Secretary of the Interior issued an order that permits for travel within the Republic were no longer necessary.

On May 31, 1919, the building, upkeep, and repair of roads were turned over to the direct supervision of the engineer of Haiti.

With these exceptions the duties and functions of the gendarmerie are as present as outlined above.

On August 24, 1916, the gendarmerie agreement (protocol to treaty) was ratified by the United States, and on the same date the commandant of the Marine Corps directed that the officers and enlisted men then serving be transferred out of the marine brigade and into the gendarmerie.

The difficulties with which the gendarmerie had to cope in the early days were almost multitudinous. The conditions, both urban and rural, the results of over a hundred years' custom, were suddenly changed, and these changes were manifestly not agreeable to the old officials replaced by this new organization.

On July 5, 1916, the municipal and rural police were abolished and the entire policing of Haiti placed in the hands of the gendarmerie. This had to be done as each commune had its own "private" police which extended into the sections of the commune and through custom and law degenerated to such an extent that the chief of section had the authority to require any citizen to arrest any other and countenanced arrests of which he had no previous knowledge.

The gendarme as a soldier has done excellent work not only under their white officers but under their native noncommissioned officers as well. On many occasions they have met and defeated greatly superior forces. From the date of their organization the native gendarme has on no occasion deserted his white officer.

The gendarmerie has direct charge of all the prisons and prisoners of Haiti. During the past year the number of prisoners had increased, due to captures made in the field. At each district headquarters there is a main prison. Each district and post have a "lockup."

The following is a list of district prisons, with a tabulation of prisoners of hand, June 30, 1920, and the number confined and released during the month of June, 1920:

Districts.	On hand June 30.	Confined during month.	Released during month.
Port au Prince.....	451	100	16
Pétionville.....	175	279	15
Petit Goave.....	289	267	20
Jacmel.....	113	155	13
Aux Cayes.....	171	111	17
Jeremie.....	126	74	6
Mirebalais.....	190	85	4
St. Marc.....	173	254	20
Gonaïves.....	387	327	20
Cape (civil).....	491	263	10
Cape (district).....	20	80	9
Port de Paix.....	132	113	11
Le Trou.....	34	18	1
Port Chabert.....	306	80	31
Grand Rivière.....	97	116	11
Ouanaminthe.....	116	275	20
Hinche.....	147	130	9
Croix La Source.....	54	76	2
Total.....	3,471	2,743	238

NOTE.—This table is practically the average number per month during the past year.

At the larger prisons, Port au Prince and Cape Haitien, the prisoners are taught a trade, and when their product is marketable they are given a percentage on their work. The money derived in this manner is given to them on release or may be allotted by them to their families if the term of confinement is for a long period. All the gendarme uniforms and the clothing for prisoners are manufactured by prison labor. A garden is required for prisons for the betterment of the gendarme and prison rations. At Post Chabert, near Cape Haitien, a prison farm is in operation, giving healthy, open-air work to over 100 prisoners. The idea of this farm is in addition to aiding the ration in cost, to experiment as to the methods of cultivation, mostly in native products, and to give the benefit of better methods to the Haitian general public, letting them graphically see the results. Gardens are also in operation at all posts.

Telegraph and telephone lines all over Haiti were put in working order and kept up by the gendarmerie, assisted by the occupation until turned over to the engineer. Since that time side lines necessary for official work were put in by the gendarmerie connecting Circa la Source, Hinche, Thomonde, Thomassique, Port de Paix, Valliere, etc., with the outer world. With the exception of the last two places the material was specially ordered from the United States and paid for by the gendarmerie. These lines are still kept up by the gendarmerie and held until such time as civil operators can be found to enter these localities and take over. Lately the engineer has supplied necessary repair material when needed.

With the exception of the larger seacoast towns the gendarmerie cooperating with the sanitary engineer of Haiti has supervision of the sanitary service practically over the whole island. Every gendarme post has a dispensary or small hospital where, in the absence of the sanitary service, inhabitants receive treatment free of charge.

Gendarmerie schools have been opened at all posts. This has been a godsend to the enlisted man and is greatly appreciated by them. Reading, writing, and simple figuring is as much as has been attempted so far.

The medaille militaire (Haitian medal of honor) was awarded to the following officers and men of the Constabulary Detachment. This medal is awarded for conspicuous conduct in the field:

Lieut. Col. F. M. Wise.	First Lieut. J. W. Knighton.
Lieut. Col. R. S. Hooker.	Second Lieut. H. H. Hanneken.
Maj. J. J. Meade.	Sergt. Joseph O. Vanhorn.
Maj. W. N. Hill.	Corpl. Archie M. Ackroyd.
Maj. W. W. Buckley.	Corpl. Clair S. Christian.
Maj. A. A. Vandegrift.	Corpl. Roger E. Kirchhoff.
Corpl. Eugene S. Jones.	Corpl. Manuel E. Perry.
Corpl. William R. Button.	Corpl. Lewis B. Puller.
Corpl. E. S. Winfrey.	Pvt. 1st Class M. F. Brown.
Corpl. H. R. Wood.
Lieut. Commander J. S. Helm, M. C., U. S. N.

One hundred and five Haitien members of the gendarmerie received the medaille militaire. These presentations were made at Port au Prince and Cape Haitien by the president of Haiti with appropriate ceremonies. Congressional medals of honor were awarded to Second Lieut. H. H. Hanneken and Corpl. William R. Button for the successful attack on the Charlemagne M. Peralte.

The present organization of the gendarmerie is as follows:

Chief.....	1
Assistant chief.....	1
Directors, line.....	3
Director, quartermaster, paymaster.....	1
Director, medical.....	1
Inspectors, line.....	10
Inspectors, quartermaster.....	2
Inspectors, medical.....	2
Captains.....	18
Captain, inspector, Coast Guard.....	1
First lieutenants, line.....	23
First lieutenants, medical.....	3
Second lieutenants, line.....	39

Second lieutenants, medical.....	8
Second lieutenants, machine gun.....	10
First lieutenants, Coast Guard.....	3
First sergeants.....	12
Sergeants.....	112
Corporals.....	262
Field musicians.....	4
Privates.....	2,100

The pay of the enlisted personnel is as follows:

	Per month
First sergeants.....	$25.00
Sergeants.....	20.00
Corporals.....	15.00
Field musicians.....	10.00
Privates.....	10.00

In addition to the above each gendarme is allowed 15 cents a day for rations. Clothing is furnished as needed, and with the exception of a few articles, such as belts, shoes, etc., is manufactured in prisons. The term of enlistment for the gendarmes is three years. The gendarmes are armed with the Springfield rifle loaned by the Marine Corps.

Without going into detail the gendarmerie is a complete military unit, modeled after our own organizations, having its own transport, medical, quartermaster and commissary services, post exchanges, etc.

Since the formation of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, the following named officers of the Marine Corps have been chiefs of that organization: Maj. Smedley D. Butler, until May 1, 1918, when he was succeeded by Maj. Alexander S. Williams, who served as chief until relieved by Lieut. Col. Frederic M. Wise on July 19, 1919. Lieut. Col. Wise was relieved by Lieut. Col. Douglas C. M. Dougal on April 15, 1921.

CORVEE.

Soon after the American occupation of Haiti it was realized that good roads between the principal towns were a military necessity, for, due to the chaotic conditions prevailing in Haiti as a result of the almost incessant revolutions there were no roads in Haiti outside of the towns and cities, and communication between these points by land was almost impossible. The main trunk road from Port au Prince to Cape Haitien was impassable for wheeled traffic and required from two to three weeks to make the journey by animal.

By the word "corvee" is meant a system of enforced labor on roads. In Haiti such a system has formed a part of the law for many years, but prior to the American occupation it had not been enforced for some time. By the corvee system, men living in a district were required to work on the main road or artery in that district a certain number of days during each year. The Haitian Government was without funds to employ labor for road work or, in fact, for any public work. It was heavily in debt to the extent of some $31,000,000, and the United States was trying to rehabilitate it. Naturally the first act of the United States was to enforce law and order and obtain peace throughout the land, and in order to accomplish this good roads were essential.

By authority of the President of Haiti, the law (Code Rural, sec. 3, Ch. V, arts. 52 to 65) requiring the inhabitants to do a certain amount of work on the roads was enforced. This was known as the corvee.

The gendarmie of Haiti, which was formed soon after the American occupation, acting for the Haitian Government, put into effect this old corvee law. Under this law the road to Cape Haitien was begun in October, 1917, and finished about December 31, 1917. When this road was completed the system continued, and although legal gradually fell from favor. The "membres agricoles" and "magistrats communaux," the Haitian officials who kept the lists of workmen and made out working details, saw a valuable source of income and to the advantage of it. Persons who did not wish to work could buy immunity, and the consequence was that to a great extent the same man, those who could not pay, were chosen for work over and over again. An attempt to remedy this was made by the issuance of certificates to the workmen signed by the local gendarmie officer, made upon the completion of each man's work. It was rumored that these certificates were destroyed by the Haitian officials unless bribes were forthcoming, but it was difficult to obtain proof on account of their over the people. This, coupled with the fact that in some cases laborers were held overtime and worked out of their immediate localities, was the reason the corvée system became obnoxious to the people. The corvée was discontinued on October 1, 1918, and forbidden in any form, but unfortunately through a misinterpretation of this order the corvée continued in the Maissade-Hinche district for a while after this date. In order to make absolutely certain that this discontinuance was complete the following proclamation was published on August 22, 1919:

"Citizens of Haiti:

"The time has come to put a stop to further bloodshed. It has been necessary to use stern measures to repress the disorders in the north, and with the recent arrival of military engines we can use even sterner methods, but I hope, with your help, to be able to abandon such means. I ask your assistance, and I ask you to have faith in the good intentions which the President and people of the United States of America entertain toward your country.

"The corvée has been done away with entirely. Work on the roads is entirely voluntary and will be paid for daily. The workmen will be free to come and go when it pleases them; they shall be paid for the hours they work. Any injustices committed by native or American officials should be reported to American military officials, and justice will be done and the offender punished.

"It is the desire of the American people to establish security and prosperity in this country. It can not be done while the bandits burn and pillage. All good inhabitants should give the greatest assistance to officers and men of the occupation in suppressing the bandits. All natives who have been forced to join these thieves and bandits masquerading under the name of cacos, if they desire to resume their peaceful farming, have but to report to the American military officials, assure them of their peaceful intent and future loyalty, and a full pardon and all possible protection will be granted. This protection is impossible if the country people continue to support the bandits calling themselves cacos.

"I personally promise you that the United States Government only desires to give to the citizens of Haiti security and prosperity and the enjoyment of liberty, equality, and fraternity."

The following quotation from report of Rear Admiral H. S. Knapp, dated October 14, 1920, to the Secretary of the Navy, gives valuable information concerning this subject:

"55. One of the matters undertaken by the gendarmerie was the opening up of roads for wheel traffic. Under its auspices a road over 250 miles long was opened up from a point west of Port au Prince to Cape Haitien in the north, and, indeed, to Ouanaminthe in the northeast, on the Dominican border. This was a great achievement for the progress of Haiti, whose roads capable of taking wheel traffic had therefore been a negligible quantity. The road was built across the mountains for a considerable portion of its length and, in view of the fact that the gendarmerie is not by its organization provided with engineering talent, the achievement is all the more remarkable. In addition, other roads were built by the gendarmerie into the interior. The criticism of these roads has been made that they were built for military purposes. That they serve a military use is perfectly plain; but the critics, if they will take pains to inform themselves of the orders when the roads were built, will find that the stress laid on their building was to open up the country for the benefit of the inhabitants. The President of Haiti in public speeches has expressed high appreciation of the value of the roads constructed by the gendarmerie.

"56. These roads were built under what has come to be described as the 'corvée system of labor.' The Rural Code of Haiti contains a law relating to the maintenance and repairs of public highways, of which a copy has already been sent to the department in another communication. This law provides in article 54 that—"Public highways and communications will be maintained and repaired by the inhabitants, in rotation, in each section through which these roads pass and each time repairs are necessary."

"Similar laws exist in the United States, but the word 'corvée' is not used in their connection. Article 53 of the same law provides that—

"Highways, public and private roads are placed under the supervision of the authorities and agents of the rural police."

"Other articles provide for the calling out of the necessary labor to maintain and repair the roads. The gendarmerie, after its organization, replaced the rural police mentioned in this law, which went into effect January 1, 1865, and still remains upon the statute books. In applying the so-called corvée system the gendarmerie was acting under an existing law, and did so under an order of the President of Haiti.

"57. As at first applied, the inhabitants of the sections through which the road passed offered no objections, but quite the reverse, and the general sentiment was very favorable to the construction of the road, which in places was not new work but consisted of discovering and mending the old roads which existed at the time of the French in Haiti before independence, but which had become overgrown and in places entirely lost. The through road to the north was hailed on all sides as a signal mark of progress. As time went on, however, an abuse crept in; the inhabitants of other sections than those through which the road passed were forced to work on the roads. This undoubtedly created grave discontent, which was reflected in the attitude of the people. I find no authority in the Rural Code for taking the inhabitants from one section and making them work in another section, but I am convinced from what I have heard that this was done. The laborers worked under the supervision of the gendarmerie and hence were under military control. When not authorized by the Rural Code this was unjustified by law, and the whole practice, even legally administered, was a drawback to the development of the gendarmerie itself in its true function as the police agency of the country. The ranking officers of the gendarmerie at that time are not now in Haiti, and what has just been said must in justification to them be qualified by the statement that I have not been able since being here to ask any presentation of the case from their point of view. I am only able to state my conclusions, as far as I can reach them, from such investigations as I have made since my arrival in Haiti.

"58. At the instigation of the senior officer of the occupation in Haiti, the President, on October 1, 1918, directed the discontinuance of the use of the corvée system on the roads of the Republic, and the commanding officer of the gendarmerie issued an order in compliance with those instructions. Even then, however, the employment of corvée labor did not cease everywhere. The order of discontinuance did not mention, in at least one instance, a road where corvée labor was then employed, and the local commanding officer took the legalistic point of view that his section was not included under the terms of the order. However legally created, the effect was unfortunate. As soon as the fact did become definitely known in Port au Prince that the order was not being obeyed steps were at once taken to stop all corvée work. In one or two instances it did not cease then. For this the local officers in immediate charge, and especially the department commander of the north, in whose jurisdiction this disobedience of orders occurred, are responsible and blameworthy. The corvée is now nonexistent in any form. The law, however, has not been repealed, and it still may legally be put into operation by the Haitian Government. I personally believe the law to be a good one if legally administered.

"59. The roads that were built by corvée labor are invaluable to the progress of the country. Had they been built in strict accord with the law, a very praiseworthy achievement would have resulted, with no reproach of illegality, or even of overstepping the law, which reproach now seems to attach to a public work of such high value in itself."

GEN. LEJEUNE INSPECTS AND IS SATISFIED.

On October 4, 1920, Major General Commandant John A. Lejeune concluded a report to the Secretary of the Navy with this paragraph:

"During my tour of inspection in Haiti I found the marines to be in a highly efficient condition. Their health, except for some cases of malaria, was excellent. Their discipline was superb and their morale high. As I inspected the detachments located at isolated points far in the interior of Haiti, I was filled with admiration of their fine appearance and efficient condition. My heart was filled with pride to see these splendid men giving to their country and the Republic of Haiti such intelligent, zealous, efficient, and courageous service. I feel that the American people have every right to be proud of their representatives who are now wearing the uniform of the Marine Corps in Haiti."

THE MAYO COURT OF INQUIRY.

The Secretary of the Navy, under date of October 16, 1920, convened a court of inquiry, consisting of Rear Admiral Henry T. Mayo, as president, Rear Admiral James H. Oliver, and Maj. Gen. Wendell C. Neville, as additional members.

and Maj. Jesse F. Dyer, as judge advocate, to inquire into the alleged indiscriminate killings of Haitians and other unjustifiable acts by members of the United States naval service, including those detailed to duty with the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, against the persons and property of Haitians since the American occupation, July 28, 1915. The inquiry was completed on October 19, 1920, and the findings of the court follow:

FINDING OF FACTS.

1. The court finds that two unjustifiable homicides have been committed, one each, by two of the personnel of the United States naval service which has served in Haiti since July 28, 1915, and that 16 other serious acts of violence have been perpetrated against citizens of Haiti during the same period by individuals of such personnel.

2. The court finds further that these offenses were all isolated acts of individuals and that in every case the responsible party was duly brought to trial before a general court-martial, convicted, and sentenced.

3. The court has found no evidence of the commission of any other unjustifiable homicides or other serious unjustifiable acts of oppression or of violence against any of the citizens of Haiti or unjustifiable damage or destruction of their property caused by any of the personnel in question.

In view of the fact that the only unjustifiable acts found by the court to have been committed are those wherein disciplinary action has already been taken and where no further proceedings could be had in the matter, the court has not deemed it necessary to report further upon the question of responsibility.

CONCLUSIONS.

Referring to paragraph 2 of the precept, it is the conclusion of the court that there have been no proper grounds for the statement that "practically indiscriminate killing of natives has been going on for some time" as alleged in the letter from Brig. Gen. George Barnett, United States Marine Corps, to Col. John H. Russell, United States Marine Corps.

Referring to the amendment of the precept calling for the conclusions of the court as to the general conduct of the personnel of the naval service in Haiti since July 28, 1915, the court does not consider that the small number of isolated crimes, or offenses that have been committed by a few individuals of the service during the period in question are entitled to any considerable weight in forming a conclusion as to the general conduct of such personnel. It was inevitable that some offenses would be committed. However, considering the conditions of service in Haiti, it is remarkable that the offenses were so few in number and that they all may be chargeable to the ordinary defects of human character, such defects as result in the commission of similar offenses in the United States and elsewhere in the best regulated communities.

The general conduct of our troops of occupation can be fairly judged by the results of that occupation.

Now, for the first time in more than a hundred years, tranquillity and security of life and property may be said to prevail in Haiti.

The Haitian people themselves welcomed the coming of our men and are unwilling to have them depart.

The establishment and maintenance of tranquil conditions and then of security of life and property all over the Republic of Haiti has been an arduous and dangerous and thankless task. That task our marines have performed with fidelity and great gallantry.

The court can not refrain from recording its opinion of much, and that the most serious part, of the reflections which have been made upon the officers who have served in Haiti.

The outstanding characteristic of those officers, from the brigade commander down, has been their sympathetic attitude toward every step that would lead to a betterment of the country and to improvement in the physical, mental, and moral conditions of the population.

With slender resources and inadequate administrative authority, they have accomplished much, where anything more than suppression of organized insurrection seem impossible.

The above remarks apply with particular force to those officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps who have been serving as officers of the gendarmerie of Haiti.

After a careful study of the matters in issue, based not only upon the evidence in the record, but also upon other original and reliable sources of information, and the court's own observations while in Haiti, the court regards the charges which have been published as ill considered, regrettable, and thoroughly unwarranted reflections on a portion of the United States Marine Corps, which has performed difficult, dangerous, and delicate duty in Haiti in a manner which, instead of calling for adverse criticism, is entitled to the highest commendation.

The record of the proceedings of this twenty-first day of the inquiry was read and approved, and the court having finished the inquiry, then at 11 o'clock a. m. adjourned to await the action of the convening authority.

LITERACY AND EDUCATION IN HAITI.

Illiteracy in the Republic of Haiti has been conservatively estimated to be at from 95 to 98 per cent. On December 3, 1920, Major General Commandant John A. Lejeune, signed the following indorsement to the Secretary of the Navy, the subject of the indorsement reading "Carrying out the terms of the treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Haiti by organizing and administering an educational system (including primary) for the Republic of Haiti":

"1. This correspondence is forwarded with the strongest approval and expressing the opinion that it will not be until the United States seriously assumes the duty of educating the Haitians and pursuing such duty to a satisfactory conclusion that the pacification and occupation of the Republic of Haiti, which has been so successfully accomplished, will bear fruit; and further that the law of the United States, and the treaty proclaimed May 3, 1916, will not only permit but requires the performance of this duty.

"2. Under the provisions of the act of June 12, 1916 (39 Stat., 223), the President of the United States is authorized in his discretion, to detail to assist the Republic of Haiti such officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps as may be mutually agreed upon by him and the President of the Republic of Haiti, and personnel so appointed are authorized by this act to accept such employment with compensation and emoluments from the Republic of Haiti, subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

"3 The above-mentioned law was enacted solely for the purpose of carrying into effect the terms of the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Haiti proclaimed May 3, 1916, and while up to the present date its provisions have been exerted mainly for the carrying out of Articles X and XIII of the treaty concerning the gendarmerie and engineers, it is in no way restricted in its operation to those purposes, and it contains adequate authorization for the purpose of detaching personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps to initiate, organize, and administer a system of education for the Republic of Haiti.

"4. While the subject of education is not expressly mentioned in the treaty, as is the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, sanitation, etc., nevertheless important provisions of the treaty can not be carried out unless the United States and the Republic of Haiti, by protocol or separate agreement based on certain general provisions of the treaty, agree to have education (including primary) in the Republic of Haiti administered in a manner similar to that prescribed in Article X of the treaty for the preservation of domestic peace by the gendarmerie. While such action might be based upon moral grounds or upon the expedient of following a path necessary to the rehabilitation of Haiti, it is believed that the treaty contains sufficient and adequate authority upon which to proceed. Surely such an injection of assistance by the United States into the internal affairs of Haiti should be less criticizable than that in matters pertaining to the armed forces of the Republic through which sovereignty is usually maintained.

"5. In effect, the treaty was negotiated and ratified by both States for the purpose of assisting in the 'economic development and prosperity' of the Republic of Haiti (preamble), for the 'efficient development of its agricultural, mineral, and commercial resources and in the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a firm and solid basis' (Art. I), to 'promote material prosperity' (Art. IX) for the 'development of its natural resources' (Art. XIII), and for the 'sanitation and public improvement of the Republic' (Art. XIII). None of these can be accomplished unless the education of the Haitian people, beginning at the bottom, is made possible by the assistance, contemplated by the treaty, by the United States.

"6. Particular attention is invited to Article XIV providing that the United States of America and the Republic of Haiti shall have authority to take such steps as may be necessary to assure the 'complete attainment of any of the objects comprehended in this treaty,' and also to the words of the preamble reading that 'the United States being in full sympathy with all of these aims and objects and desirous to contribute in all proper ways to their accomplishment.'

"7. Without considering what might have been avoided by the inclusion of an article in the treaty providing for performance of this serious duty, or that the United States might have anticipated a failure on the part of the Haitian Government to efficiently and satisfactorily perform this duty of education, the fact confronts the United States at this time that the duty has been unperformed and also that it is highly improbable that unless the United States does assist, the Republic of Haiti will never evolve to such a self-sustaining status that the United States would be justified in withdrawing. An occupation of a foreign country, though best-intentioned, is doomed to failure if it begins and ends in a military phase.

"8. At the present time the effort of American officials, including Marine Corps and Navy personnel, have been limited to moral suasion and to influencing the Haitian officials and Haitian public opinion toward administering an efficient system of education, and these efforts, limited as they are, have failed.

"9. It might be remarked that the treaty was not negotiated primarily for the purpose of permitting the United States to conduct indefinitely those activities included within the treaty phrase of 'aims and objects,' but rather for the education of the Haitian people and thus enabling the Republic of Haiti to become a self-sustaining and 'going' State. The act of taking over certain functions of the Government was a mere incident in the course of events contemplated by the treaty, the final of which being that of turning back a practically perfect governmental machine to a people educated and capable of administering and maintaining it level with an efficient standard.

"10. The United States may install the most excellent road system, it may establish the most efficient Gendarmerie to maintain domestic peace and police, it may place sanitation upon a healthful basis, it may assist in the economic development and prosperity, and may arrange the finances satisfactorily, but if the Haitian people themselves are not elevated by education to the plane on which the people of an average modern State dwell, no positive and enduring benefit will have been conferred upon them, and the occupation will have been in vain, unless they have been educated to the degree that they are able to conduct their own affairs unaided by an occupying force.

"11. In conclusion, the recommendation of the brigade commander, approved by Rear Admiral Knapp, is approved, that a protocol or separate agreement be arranged with the Republic of Haiti, providing for the administration of educational matters, including primary education, in a manner similar to that outlined in Article X for the Gendarmerie."

The Secretary of the Navy in forwarding the above to the Secretary of State placed on it the following indorsement:

"This correspondence is forwarded with the strongest approval of the Navy Department. The opinion of the Major General Commandant, 'It will not be until the United States seriously assumes the duty of educating the Haitians and pursuing such duty to a satisfactory conclusion that the pacification and occupation of the Republic of Haiti, which has been so successfully accomplished, will bear fruit,' is concurred in.

"The Navy Department will be pleased to assist in such manner as may be possible and practicable in establishing and administering an efficient educational system for the Republic of Haiti with the object of enabling that Republic to reach such a self-sustaining status as will justify the United States in withdrawing its military forces therefrom."

TWO INTERESTING LETTERS.

The Secretary of the Navy and the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps frequently receive letters praising the work of the naval service in the Republic of Haiti. The following replies by Gen. Lejeune to two of these letters, dated November 15 and 19, 1920, respectively, are of interest:

"I was particularly interested in your statement, which I believe is a correct conclusion, that the few irregular acts on the part of marines toward the Haitians were the acts of individuals and not a part of the policy established by those in positions of responsibility, and that the responsible officers have always been deeply chagrined by the occasional failures of their subordinates to carry out not only their definite orders and instructions but the principles to which all civilized peoples are devoted.

"As far as the participation of the Marine Corps in these affairs is concerned, it not only must but is satisfied to stand on its record, even though such record has been marred by the occasional unauthorized acts of individuals, and there is not the slightest desire to evade responsibility for any incident. Every general rule of normal human conduct has an occasional variation, and the general rule of a successful administration of Haitian affairs, from the Marine Corps point of view, has I am sure been proved by the exception. Unfortunately, the almost consistent success of the marines' good work has been smothered by the publicity accorded the exceptions.

"Your reference to the illiteracy of the Haitian people, which you estimate is from 95 to 98 per cent, is quite pertinent, and I believe that it will not be until the United States seriously assumes the duty of educating them and pursues such duty to a successful conclusion that the pacification of the Republic of Haiti, which has been so successfully accomplished, will bear fruit.

"Upon my recent visit to both of these countries, I found the military situation and general condition to be excellent in so far as the Marine Corps was responsible, and your words and those of many others who have been kind enough to express themselves to me would indicate that the general American public will in the end undoubtedly take this viewpoint and accord to their fellow Americans, who have so unselfishly taken up this work, a degree of praise and vindication which will compensate them for the unmerited criticism caused by the delinquencies of a few individuals."

"Those parts of your letters which refer to sanitation, and its improvement under the occupation, to the roads built, to the political condition of Haiti, and to the improvement in Haitian finances proved very interesting to me. I was particularly interested in that part of your letter which outlines the duties of the United States to be: First, 'to put down rebellion, obtain arms and ammunition, and to restore order in the country'; second, 'to provide sanitation'; third, 'to form a government for the Haitians which would be stable and secure'; fourth, 'to ascertain, adjudge, and liquidate the debts'; fifth, 'teach the Haitians how to govern themselves'; and sixth, 'turn the Government over to the Haitians for their own governing when the Haitians were capable of self-government.'

"I am sure that the great majority of Americans will agree with your conclusions that the purpose is evident that the United States desires to give to Haiti a permanent, stable and safe government, and in the meantime and while working out its destiny to educate the Haitian so that he may take over the management of that government when he is able to do so."

SECRETARY DENBY VISITS HAITI.

The Secretary of the Navy on March 27, 1921, arrived in Port au Prince and on the same day, in company with the American minister, called on the President of the Republic of Haiti. The Secretary afterwards inspected the marines' and gendarmes' posts in Haiti and crossed the border into the Dominican Republic on March 30, 1921. Secretary Denby, upon his return to the United States, expressed high praise of the marines' work in Haiti.

OFFICERS IN COMMAND.

Rear Admiral W. B. Caperton, commander cruiser force, was senior naval officer present from July 28, 1915, to July 19, 1916, when he was relieved by Rear Admiral C. F. Pond, who in turn was relieved by Rear Admiral H. S. Knapp on November 22, 1916.

Since March 31, 1917, these naval officers have held the designation of military governor of Santo Domingo and military representative of the United States in Haiti. When the revolution broke out in the Dominican Republic in May, 1916, Rear Admiral Caperton proceeded to the city of Santo Domingo and assumed control of the situation. From that date on he and his successors resided in that city and despite the above-mentioned title could, if necessary, exercise but little direct control over Haitian affairs.

Rear Admiral Thomas Snowden on February 25, 1919, relieved Read Admiral Knapp, and remained in command until relieved by Rear Admiral S. S. Robison, June 2, 1921.

The following-named officers of the Marine Corps have been in command of the First Provisional Brigade, United States Marine Corps, ashore in the Republic of Haiti, since the formation of that brigade: Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, until November 22, 1916, when he was relieved by Col. Eli K. Cole. Col. Cole was relieved by Col. John H. Russell on November 28, 1917. Brig. Gen. Albertus W. Catlin on December 7, 1918, relieved Col. Russell and was succeeded on July 15, 1919, by Lieut. Col. Louis McC. Little. Lieut. Col. Little was relieved on October 1, 1919, by Col. John H. Russell, who is at present in command. Since May, 1916, these officers have virtually been in control of naval affairs in the Republic of Haiti, in view of the demands made upon the time of above-mentioned naval officers by Dominican affairs.

This memorandum practically contains no reference to military operations. Such is unnecessary, except to state that the marines successfully carried out the major mission assigned to them by the Navy Department that acted in accordance with the requests of the Department of State. This major mission was the military one of pacification and the maintenance of peace and order in the Republic of Haiti.

In addition to having so thoroughly completed their military mission, the marines have done everything legally within their power to assist the Haitian people and their Government. It would take many pages to adequately describe the constructive measures they have carried out. Handicapped by a total absence of any express control over education, judiciary, agricultural, etc., systems, they have done what they could through informal and persuasive methods. The gendarmerie is a monument to the military, administrative, and executive efficiency of the marines. They pay all the Haitian civil employees coming under their jurisdiction and there is yet to be any malfeasance in such duty. They have built roads, administer the telegraph and telephone systems, assist in agricultural matters, hold schools for the gendarmes, and so on. The contrast between the ordinary natives and the native gendarme is so marked that any observing American is thrilled with pride in viewing the superior condition, both physically and mentally, of the latter. When it is realized that the mission of the marines in Haiti is first the pacification and maintenance of order and the constitutional government, the success achieved by him in these matters beyond the military is remarkable and encourages those interested in Haiti to believe in the ultimate success of the occupation.

INVESTIGATION BY SENATE COMMITTEE.

Three Haitian delegates (H. Pauléus Sannon, Sténio Vincent, and Perceval Thoby) who visited Washington on May 9, 1921, with the purpose of presenting memorials to President Harding, the State Department, and Congress, demanding the withdrawal of the United States military forces, the immediate abolition of martial law and courts based on it, abrogation of the convention of 1915, and the convocation of a constituent assembly, issued a copy of the memorial on May 8, 1921, in which were repeated such charges against our military forces as caused an investigation to be made by the Navy Department through the medium of the Mayo court of inquiry in 1920. On May 9, 1921, Secretary of the Navy Denby stated that the Navy Department welcomed any investigation that Congress might care to make. "The Marine Corps did a splendid work there as humanely as it was possible to do it," Secretary Denby is quoted as saying, "and the Naval Establishment has functioned in Haiti in a manner seldom equalled by military occupation anywhere." When he visited Haiti recently on a tour of inspection he saw evidence on every hand, Mr. Denby said, to convince him that the continued presence of American marines on the island was desirable.

The first meeting of the Senate committee, of which Senator Medill McCormick is chairman, was held on August 5, 1921.

THIS MEMORANDUM IS BUT A SYNOPSIS.

The foregoing is but a brief and synoptical summary of the events occurring in the Republic of Haiti. In order to ascertain any desired details, the annual reports of the Secretary of the Navy, reports of the Major General Commandant, particularly those of Gens. Lejeune and Barnett, the various reports of Rear Admiral H. S. Knapp, and the files, records, and archives of the Navy Department and Marine Corps should be consulted.

Capt. FREEMAN. This matter I have is with regard to the Dominican Republic. The CHAIRMAN. Will you leave that with us?

Capt. FREEMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Any additional matter that you care to present next week we will be glad to have.

Senator KING. Do you mean to say that is the case of the Navy with respect to the Dominican Republic?

Capt. FREEMAN. I do not mean, Mr. Senator, that it is a case, because we are not making a case. It is a statement of the facts. It is simply an attempt to state the facts in relation to the occupation and administration of the Dominican Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me suggest that I do not conceive that the committee ought to address itself to the consideration of a case. This inquiry is pretty broad in its scope.

Senator KING. I used the word "case" as a sort of generic term. The presentation of the facts as they consider them to be is what I meant.

Capt. FREEMAN. That is what it is intended to be—a summary of the facts in regard to the occupation and subsequent administration of the Dominican Republic to date.

Senator KING. Upon reading the presentation by Mr. Knowles and those whom he represents would it necessitate a revision and a review or a supplementing of this document? If so, it occurs to me, if you have got to file another, that you better keep this until you can bring it down to date. Of course I am only saying that in the interest of saving the expense of printing. We do not want to print two statements.

The CHAIRMAN. I think we want their statements independently of one another in the first instance. We will receive your statement if there is no objection.

(The matter referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS AND CORRESPONDENCE ON DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

There are in print available for distribution the following volumes treating in part or in whole of the Dominican Republic:

Annual reports of the Secretary of the Navy, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920. Attention is especially invited to Appendix D of the Report of 1920.

Santo Domingo; Its Past and its Present Condition. Prepared by members of the military government of Santo Domingo.

Report on Economic and Financial Conditions of the Dominican Republic. Lieut. Commander Arthur H. Mayo, Supply Corps, United States Navy.

Report of Department of State of Finance and Commerce of the Dominican Republic, 1916-1919, with Estimates for 1920. Lieut. Commander Arthur H. Mayo, Supply Corps, United States Navy.

In addition there are available in the files of the Navy Department:

Seven bound volumes of correspondence covering Santo Dominican affairs during the years 1905, 1906, 1911.

Collections of executive orders issued by the military governor of Santo Domingo.

Quarterly reports of the military governor of Santo Domingo.

Records of military commissions and other military courts held in the Dominican Republic.

Special reports and general correspondence relating to the Dominican Republic.

[Memorandum on Dominican Republic prepared for Senate committee appointed to inquire into the occupation and administration of the territories of the Republic of Haiti and the Dominican Republic by the forces of the United States.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF NAVAL OPERATIONS,
Washington, August 5, 1921.

The Dominican Republic, occupying the eastern two-thirds of the island of Haiti, was proclaimed on February 27, 1844, and the present flag of the Republic was raised. This inception of the present Republic represented a suc-successful revolt against the then Haitian (black) ruler of the Spanish-speaking survivors of a series of wars and uprisings extending over the beginning of the nineteenth century. A constitution, modeled after our own, was promulgated in November, 1844, and the commanding general of the Dominican army was elected president. He resigned in August, 1848, in the face of a threatened revolution and two successive presidents were in power during the next 18 months. The third president of the Republic was the first to serve a full term of office. Following his administration, revolution succeeded revolution in seemingly endless sequence. These civil quarrels of the Dominicans, interspersed with wars with Haiti, brought about an occupation of the Republic by Spanish troops from 1861 to 1865. When the Spanish troops were withdrawn, following a two years' revolt against their rule, and it is to be noted that the Dominican people actually fought against the Spanish occupation, after bearing with it from March, 1861, to August, 1863, the revolutionary struggles for political power continued and have marked the history of the country up until its occupation by United States forces.

The steps leading up to the present occupation by United States forces may be traced back to 1904. The culmination of more than a half century of revolutions was a hopeless piling up of the public debt and ultimately, in 1904, the default of the entire interest on this debt. Negotiations were entered into which resulted in arrangements being made to liquidate the debts owed the United States by pledging the customhouse receipts of some of the larger ports as security. On October 20, 1904, an American agent was, by agreement with the Dominican Government, placed in charge of the customhouse at Puerto Plata.

Foreign nations, noting the success of this plan, began to exert pressure with a view to securing the payment of their debts through control of certain customhouses pledged to them. Foreign intervention becoming imminent, the Dominican Government applied to the United States for assistance, and, in February, 1905, the protocol of an agreement between the United States and the Dominican Republic was approved, providing for the collection of the Dominican customs revenues under the direction of the United States, and the segregation of a specified portion toward the ultimate payment of the debt. This agreement went into effect on April 1, 1905, and continued as the modus vivendi until superseded by a new fiscal treaty agreed upon by the United States and the Dominican Congress, and taking effect on August 1, 1907. The provisions of this fiscal treaty still apply and require that the customs revenues of the Republic be collected by a general receiver of Dominican customs, appointed by the President of the United States, and that a portion of the income be set aside by him for the service of the bond issues made by the Dominican Government for the defrayment of the public debt.

Although the political leaders could no longer count on captured customhouses to give them an immediate financial return on their revolutionary activities, revolutions nevertheless continued. This unsettled condition of the country necessitated the maintenance of a considerable naval force in Dominican waters, in order that our assistant collectors of customs might not be at the mercy of irresponsible mobs or bands of irregular troops. During 1905 an average of 11 vessels, mostly of the gunboat and cruiser type, was continuously maintained in Dominican waters throughout the 12 months of the year. This force was a source of considerable expense and constant concern to the Navy Department. The number of vessels decreased in subsequent years, as the country gradually accepted the idea of American customs receivers in its ports, but the repeated revolutions and disturbances continued to give concern, and our naval vessels in Dominican waters were a familiar sight until after the establishment of the occupation. Now, visits of strictly military units are very rare, naval communication with the Republic being largely confined to transports and cargo vessels.

While it may be admitted that conditions improved somewhat in the Dominican Republic after 1905, it may be well to indicate the almost continuous condition of turmoil and agitation, which existed even after the prize of office yielded less financial return than when all of the revenues of the Republic were at the disposition of the Government. As a result of a revolution, Gen. Carlos F. Morales became President on June 19, 1904. It was during his administration that the collection of Dominican customs by American agents began. Naturally, the "outs" strongly opposed this method of assuring the payment of the public debt, and the agitation against Morales finally reached such a violent stage that he fled the country to save his life. He returned ultimately, and resigned on January 12, 1906, the vice president, Gen. Ramon Caceres, assuming the presidency. Caceres completed his term of office and was reelected on July 1, 1908.

There followed various uprisings of political malcontents and a border clash with Haiti also occurred. Then on November 19, 1911, Caceres was assassinated by political conspirators, and Senator Eladio Victoria was designated provisional president by the National Assembly (both houses of the Dominican Congress). On February 27, 1912, he was duly elected constitutional president, but the method of his election was contested by opposing factions, and uprising began throughout the country. When it became evident that the Government could not control the situation, the United States Government offered its good offices. As a result of joint negotiations, the Dominican Congress convened, accepted the resignation of Victoria, and designated Monseigneur Adolfo A. Nouel, archbishop of Santo Domingo, as President. The archbishop appears to have recognized the hopeless state of the Government, due to the inability of the professional politicians to accept anything except personal success in the shape of appointments and patronage. He therefore resigned and left for Europe. He has since returned and continues his labors as a public-spirited citizen.

The Dominican Congress filled the vacancy caused by the resignation of the archbishop by designating Gen. Jose Bordas Valdez provisional president. He assumed office on April 14, 1913, with a view to serving out a one-year term. His assumption of office was the signal for another revolution. Again a United States commission came to Santo Domingo. The agreement then arrived at provided for the resignation of Bordas, and the Dominican Congress designated Dr. Ramon Baez, son of a former president, as provisional president on August 27, 1914. The agreement also provided for the general election of a constitutional president, and the popular elections which followed resulted in the reelection of a former president, Juan Isidro Jimenez.

Through this series of uprisings and revolutions we come to the situation that confronted the United States during that delicate period when, with a World War gathering headway, the usual international checks and balances were all awry. The Dominican Congress needed money. The customs receipts were in the hands of the United States. The internal revenues were undependable and might, and very generally did, fall into the hands of a local political chief at any time. The granting of an increasing number of foreign concessions, therefore represented an easy means of acquiring quickly the needed ready money to finance the mushroom governments. German and British influence possessed considerable strength in the country, the former doubtless preponderant. The Dominican Republic would prove a military base of importance for commerce-destroyers if it could be involved in the European struggle. The whole influence of our country was being thrown on the side of preserving neutrality and preventing a spread of the European quarrel to the Western Hemisphere.

Fortunately the election of Jimenez, who took office on December 5, 1914, was followed by a brief period of comparative calm in the Dominican Republic. The elements of disorganization were present, however, awaiting favorable opportunity for expression. In April, 1916, Gen. Desiderio Arias, secretary of war, executed a coup d'etat, deposed Jimenez, and seized the executive power. At this point the United States Government intervened and with the consent of the rightful though deposed President, Jimenez, landed naval forces on May 5, 1916, and pacified Santo Domingo City, the capital. Jimenez then resigned, and the council of ministers assumed control of affairs.

During June, 1916, United States naval and marine forces were landed at various points in the country with a view to putting an end to the rebellion still being actively fostered under the leadership of Gen. Arias. A short and decisive campaign of about two weeks was conducted by the marines under the command of Col. Joseph H. Pendleton in the north of the island, which resulted in the quelling of organized opposition and the occupation of the principal north coast ports. Thereafter the important interior points of the country were occupied without serious difficulty, and peace was restored, except for the operation of bandit bands.

Meanwhile the Dominican Congress convened, following the resignation of President Jimenez, and designated as provisional president Dr. Federico Henriquez y Carvajal to serve for a period of six months. It is to be observed that the Dominican constitution of 1908, which is still in force, did not provide for a vice president, the motive doubtless being to avoid the temptation afforded to the incumbent of that office to do away with his chief and establish himself in power. The Dominican constitution provides, however, that the Congress shall designate by law the person to fill the office of the presidency in case of the incapacity, resignation, removal, or death of the President, and the secretaries of state (council of ministers) are obliged to convoke the Congress for this specific purpose immediately when the vacancy exists.

Our international relations were now rapidly approaching a critical stage. It was highly desirable to have peaceful conditions close to our own boundaries, and the United States Government therefore stipulated that a new treaty be drawn with the new Dominican Government guaranteeing the maintenance of law and order and further assuring the payment of Dominican financial obligations. This treaty was in reality the price of recognition, and Dr. Henriquez refused to accede to the terms. Thereupon the United States authorities refused to pay over any of the revenues of the Republic. There being no surplus in the treasury, Government salaries ceased throughout the Republic. This deadlock continued from early August, 1916, until late November of the same year, when, all efforts to induce the Dominican authorities to conduct their Government in a manner conducive to the maintenance of internal peace and to the satisfactory conduct of foreign relations having proved of no avail, the United States Government on November 29, 1916, proclaimed a state of military occupation of the Dominican Republic by the naval and marine forces of the United States and made the Republic subject to military government. The proclamation of occupation, prepared in its essentials in the city of Washington, was issued by Capt. H. S. Knapp, United States Navy, commander cruiser force, United States Atlantic Fleet, and over his signature, and was in the following words:

"PROCLAMATION OF OCCUPATION.

"Whereas a treaty was concluded between the United States of America and the Republic of Santo Domingo on February 8, 1907, Article III of which reads:

"Until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the bonds of the debt its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States. A like agreement shall be necessary to modify the import duties, it being an indispensable condition for the modification of such duties that the Dominican Executive demonstrate, and that the President of the United States recognize, that, on the basis of exportations and importations to the like amount and the like character during two years preceding that in which it is desired to make such modification, the total net customs receipts would at such altered rates of duties have been for each of such two years in excess of the sum of $2,000,000 United States gold"; and

"Whereas the Government of Santo Domingo has violated the said Article III on more than one occasion; and

"Whereas the Government of Santo Domingo has from time to time explained such violation by the necessity of incurring expense incident to the repression of revolution; and

"Whereas the United States Government, with great forbearance and with a friendly desire to enable Santo Domingo to maintain domestic tranquillity and observe the terms of the aforesaid treaty, has urged upon the Government of Santo Domingo certain necessary measures which that Government has been unwilling or unable to adopt; and

"Whereas in consequence domestic tranquillity has been disturbed and is not now established, nor is the future observance of the treaty by the Government of Santo Domingo assured; and

"Whereas the Government of the United States is determined that the time has come to take measures to insure the observance of the provisions of the aforesaid treaty by the Republic of Santo Domingo and to maintain the domestic tranquillity in the said Republic of Santo Domingo necessary thereto:

"Now, therefore, I. H. S. Knapp, captain, United States Navy, commanding the cruiser force of the United States Atlantic Fleet, and the armed forces of the United States stationed in various places within the territory of the Republic of Santo Domingo, acting under the authority and by direction of the Government of the United States, declare and announce to all concerned that the Republic of Santo Domingo is hereby placed in a state of military occupation by the forces under my command, and is made subject to military government and to the exercise of military law applicable to such occupation.

"This military occupation is undertaken with no immediate or ulterior object of destroying the sovereignty of the Republic of Santo Domingo, but, on the contrary, is designed to give aid to that country in returning to a condition of internal order that will enable it to observe the terms of the treaty aforesaid, and the obligations resting upon it as one of the family of nations.

"Dominican statutes, therefore, will continue in effect in so far as they do not conflict with the objects of the occupation or necessary regulations established thereunder, and their lawful administration will continue in the hands of such duly authorized Dominican officials as may be necessary, all under the oversight and control of the United States forces exercising military Government.

"The ordinary administration of justice, both in civil and criminal matters, through the regularly constituted Dominican courts will not be interfered with by the military government herein established; but cases to which a member of the United States forces in occupation is a party, or in which are involved contempt or defiance of the authority of the military government, will be tried by tribunals set up by the military government.

"All revenue accruing to the Dominican Government, including revenues hitherto accrued and unpaid, whether from custom duties under the terms of the treaty concluded on February 8, 1907, the receivership established by which remains in effect, or from internal revenue, shall be paid to the military government herein established which will, in trust for the Republic of Santo Domingo, hold such revenue and will make all the proper legal disbursements therefrom necessary for the administration of the Dominican Government, and for the purposes of the occupation.

"I call upon the citizens of, and residents, and sojourners in Santo Domingo, to cooperate with the forces of the United States in occupation to the end that the purposes thereof may promptly be attained, and that the country may be restored to domestic order and tranquillity, and to the prosperity that can be attained only under such conditions.

"The forces of the United States in occupation will act in accordance with military law governing their conduct, with due respect for the personal and property rights of citizens of and residents and sojourners in Santo Domingo, upholding Dominican laws, in so far as they do not conflict with the purposes for which the occupation is undertaken.

"H. W. KNAPP,

"Captain, United States Navy,

"Commander Cruiser Force, United States Atlantic Fleet.

"U. S. S. 'OLYMPIA,' FLAGSHIP,

"SANTO DOMINGO CITY, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC,

"November 29, 1916."

22. The military government established under Capt. (later Rear Admiral) Knapp as the first military governor of Santo Domingo has continued in force throughout the Dominican Republic ever since. It suffered, however, an unexpected evolution almost at its inception because of the refusal of the leading Dominican authorities to function with but under it, as called for in the terms of the proclamation. The situation which developed is perhaps best expressed in the words of the military governor as follows:

"After the issuance of the proclamation of military government, I waited for some days to see if the members of the provisional government would in any way cooperate with the military government in carrying on the ordinary administration of affairs. The hope that I had in this direction proved to be unfounded, and I was assured by persons most familiar with conditions here that I could expect no assistance of the kind. I established the offices of the military government in the Government palace. Upon taking possession, it was found that the President and all of the members of the cabinet had come to their offices after the proclamation of military government, had cleaned out their desks, and had not since appeared in the Government palace. It was an evident case of desertion. Under the circumstances, as the affairs of government had to go on under intelligent administration, I placed the several departments of the Dominican Government in charge of officers under my command.

"This action was forced upon me by the attitude of the members of the Dominican Government. It did not appear possible to get Dominicans of the proper caliber who would accept these high administrative offices, for they were afraid of the criticism that they would receive from their own people.

I could not force Dominicans into office, but I was able to direct officers under my command to assume these duties. The action taken prevented the utter disorganization of governmental administration. There were, moreover, some particular reasons why it was necessary to have some of the cabinet offices promptly filled. It was desirable to begin as soon as possible public works, which had been interrupted by the state of turmoil that had existed, and by the arrangements under the treaty of 1907 the necessary funds required the signature of Dominican officials before they could be withdrawn from the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, which is the depository of the Dominican loan.

"The result has been most fortunate. Unforeseen as the action taken was to me when I came to Santo Domingo, looking back, I now consider that it has helped enormously in the progress of the objects for which the occupation was undertaken. The American officers have been administering their departments with a high degree of intelligence and zeal, and, of course, with integrity and freedom from affiliations here that have never been questioned in them, but could not have been counted upon with Dominican officials: Had Dominicans remained in office, I should have had to have their actions constantly observed in any event; but the advantage of having officers actually administering, instead of observing and checking the administration of others, has been evident. Not only is this true from the point of view of the military government but it is true also from the point of view of many disinterested Dominicans. I have myself been asked, almost begged, by Dominicans not to disturb the existing order of things for a long period; not to think of putting Dominicans in these offices, but to continue the administration of affairs through the American officers, whose work is giving such great satisfaction to all disinterested people and whose presence in the responsible Dominican offices is resented only by the class which has brought the Dominican Government to the low plane which has made it a reproach. I can not claim any prevision leading up to my action, but I regard that action, taken by force of circumstances, as the most fortunate thing that could have happened.

"The sessions of the Dominican Congress, by the constitution in effect, begin on the 27th of February, which is the day celebrated as the anniversary of independence. The sessions last for 90 days, and may be prolonged for 60 days more. Every two years the terms expire of one-half of the deputies and one-third of the senators. Upon the advent of military government there were calls for election which had been issued by the late provisional government to fill these vacancies. The holding of elections at that time was out of the question in the minds of all persons whom I consulted, including Dominicans themselves. I therefore issued executive order No. 12 on the 26th of December, 1916, after I had had sufficient time to familiarize myself with conditions and to receive reports from the marine officers in the more distant parts of the country, none of whom believed in the elections being held. The executive order met the approval of all who wished well to Santo Domingo.

"In view of the fact that a quorum of the Congress did not exist, owing to the constitutional termination of the services of certain of the senators and representatives, and to the fact that elections were forbidden in the interests of the general pacification of the country, the existence of Congress became of no value to the country; on the contrary, it was represented to me, and I concurred in the conclusion, that it would be unwise to leave the country with the anticipation of an early filling of the congressional vacancies with the subsequent elections that should be held. I, therefore, on January 2, suspended the Congress and likewise suspended from office senators and deputies whose terms had not expired. Like the order suspending elections, that suspending the Congress met with almost universal approbation, as a measure that would go far to removing disturbing political agitation.

"For some time before the advent of military government, there had been sitting in Santo Domingo a special constituent assembly under the auspices of the provisional government, which the United States had refused to recognize. This constituent assembly finished its work on the very day that military government was proclaimed, and shortly thereafter the new constitution appeared in print. I refused to recognize it and the calls for election that were issued in accordance with its provisions. The proposed constitution is a dead letter, except for such value as it may have when a recognized constitutional assembly shall meet in the future."

With the failure of Dominicans of sufficient education to cooperate with the military government, the administration of the Dominican Republic and the destinies of the Dominican people passed entirely into the hands of the United States Government. The situation was without precedent. To withdraw meant anarchy. To remain meant the acceptance of undivided responsibility for the functioning of a nation which basically the United States recognized as a sovereign power. Some working doctrine was essential upon which to base our conduct of affairs. It was found in the thought that the military Government administers the government of the Dominican Republic in trust for the Dominican people, in whom, in the words of article 13 of the Dominican constitution, "sovereignty is vested solely."

If the small political class, constituting perhaps about 5 per cent of the population, and the remaining persons of some degree of education, constituting at most another 5 per cent, would not or could not unite to contribute to the military Government that small measure of cooperation which would serve automatically to shorten the occupation and restore the absolute and unqualified sovereignty of the Dominican State, then it behooved the military Government to produce out of the people of the Republic a personnel who could be entrusted with the lawful and just administration of a modern civilized sovereign power in the family of nations.

With this end in view and in the hope meanwhile that actual contact with honest administration might produce enlightenment and a desire to assist in the minds of that small percentage of the population, qualified mentally, if not morally, to conduct affairs of state, the military Government proceeded to establish complete peace throughout the Republic, and began an intensive system of public instruction, public works, and honest control of finance.

The government of the Republic is administered by the military Government in accordance with Dominican laws, except as it has been found necessary to modify or supplement them by executive orders. The general policy of administration is set by the Department of State of the United States, acting through the Navy Department. The general policy being outlined by the Department of State, the Navy Department indicates this policy to the military governor who applies it in his administration of affairs. The Navy Department does not interfere with the details of administration, leaving all such matters to the determination and initiative of the military governor. Through his quarterly reports and special correspondence to the Navy Department, together with a consideration of his executive orders, copies of which he submits for information upon issue, the Department is enabled to determine whether the policy outlined by the Department of State is being carried out by the military governor. Major questions are referred to the Navy Department by the military governor for consideration, and, as such questions usually involve matters of policy, the opinion of the Department of State is sought. Occasionally situations develop in which a change of policy appears warranted. At such times, a more or less considerable interchange of correspondence occurs, followed by a return to normal conditions, when the intercourse between the military governor and the Navy Department is confined to routine reports on accomplished facts. In this manner, the closest cooperation and coordination exists between the Navy Department and the military governor, without the Navy Department being an administrative agency and with the military governor left with a free hand under the guidance of policy dictated by the Department of State. This method of carrying on the military government in its relations with the United States Government has produced excellent results, and the occasional lapses from it that have produced slight confusion at times have proved its efficacy as an established practice.

INITIAL ESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE.

Owing to the custom of jail deliveries upon the outbreak of every revolution, the country was overrun with criminals of all classes, many of them of the most brutal kind. To this custom is attributable the system of brigandage in the Dominican Republic, which continuously worked against the improved conditions in the country, the so-called bandits robbing and murdering their own people while avoiding the military authorities. Under the military government this banditry has been practically wiped out, although there exist still certain vagabonds or highway robbers in the eastern section of the country. The military forces occupied the country with garrisons in certain cities and outposts, with a system of patrols to insure the maintenance of peace and to protect inhabitants against the attacks of ne'er-do-wells. Under this system the country is receiving the blessings of peace and is progressing as never before in its history. Fully 95 per cent of the people avail themselves of the peaceful opportunity to pursue their callings, the remainder being revolutionary and obstructive politicians incapable of any fruitful work.

Upon the remains of the old Guardia Republicana has been erected an efficient constabulary, which is intended to police the entire Republic and to be the only military force in the country upon the turning over of the Government to its own representatives. This organization has been vastly improved and is still undergoing an evolution to perfect it and to make it an object of pride to all law-abiding citizens. It is the purpose to have this constabulary cover the entire Republic and to absorb all police functions. At present a large number of its officers are United States citizens, selected from the Marine Corps and elsewhere, but it is hoped to bring the force to such a high state of efficiency that Dominicans of good families will be glad to be identified with it.

INTERIOR ADMINISTRATION.

Before the occupation by the United States, the laws of the Dominican Republic provided for a division of the country into 12 Provinces, for each of which there was a governor appointed by the executive power. Communication by road between the various sections of the country and the capitals of the Provinces was practically nonexistent. This condition fostered the growth of an undue power on the part of the governors of the Provinces, who exercised within their respective jurisdictions practically complete control over the public forces, the police, and other governmental agencies.

The weakness of the central government, combined with the lack of proper means of communication, frequently resulted in defiance of the authority of the central government by the provisional governors and the consequent illegal abuse of power.

The military government has succeeded in reducing the power of these semi-independent governors to the status of proper civil governors with limited governmental functions. The governors now, instead of being oppressors of people of their Provinces, as was so frequently the case under the old régime, are able assistants of the military governor through their efforts for the education of the people, and they are exerting much influence toward good government generally.

The communes into which the Provinces are divided are governed locally by the ayuntamientos, or boards of aldermen, which formerly were elected, but since the occupation have been appointed by the military governor. The former system permitted of many abuses and much misgovernment, particularly through lack of accountability to any authority higher than their own.

Great improvement has been made in municipal administration through laws issued by the military Government. One of these laws constitutes a commission form of local government through the reduction in the number of members of the aldermanic boards, a change which has produced much greater efficiency in the conduct of municipal business.

Vexatious local taxes have been abolished and the financial affairs of the municipalities have been put upon a sound basis, while the control of the central government by means of an auditing system has removed many of the old opportunities for defalcations and misappropriations of funds. Certain handicaps have been encountered because of the lack of suitable personnel among the Dominicans to carry on the local governments, but the contrast for the better is marked between the old careless and inefficient and frequently dishonest local governments and the present Ayuntamientos, which endeavor to act for the good of their communes.

FINANCES.

When the United States intervened in the governmental affairs of the Dominican Republic there were six months' salaries of all government officials unpaid. Supply bills of the various departments of the governments had not been settled for long periods. The employees of the Government and merchants were demanding the payment of their just claims. A floating indebtedness consisting of claims of all descriptions had been created to the amount of approximately $15,000,000 in direct disregard of the terms of the American-Dominican convention of 1907. The cash balance of the Government was nonexistent, since the Government account with the depository was overdrawn in the amount of $14,234.63.

Instances were found where officials who had certified their right to salaries had not been within 80 miles of their work or office and had never occupied the positions designated, except in name. Pay rolls with a dozen or more names were found that had been receipted in the handwriting of one individual, and it was also found to be the custom with the heads of some offices to obtain the salaries of all of the employees of their office and to pay the employees such part of their salaries as was deemed fit, the head of the office retaining the balance for his own use. Other pay rolls were found pledged by the head of the office to local speculators who had purchased them for trivial amounts and were loudly demanding payment. The whole fiscal system was found to be honey-combed with graft. The vast majority of officers were dishonest and the records were found to have been deliberately falsified in hundreds of cases. Officials charged with the collection of internal revenue, with disbursing funds, and with the receipt and custody of supplies were receiving ridiculously low salaries, and graft had become so much a part of the system that practically all officials took toll of the funds passing through their hands, or accepted bribes, turning their backs to permit others to commit similar breaches of their trust.

The military government had organized the collection of the internal revenues of the country, and under honest and efficient management the collections have increased from an average of $700,000 prior to the occupation to about $4,000,000 annually. The cost of collection of internal revenues had dropped from 14 per cent in 1915 to about 5 per cent. In order to adjudicate the multitude of claims presented to the Government there was appointed in 1917 a Dominican claims commission, which continued in session for about three years. A total of 9,038 claims were filed, amounting to $19,980,518.48. Awards were made by the commission on 6,287 of these claims, to the amount of $4,292,342.52.

Many taxes existed, especially communal taxes, which bore unfairly upon the poor and acted as a drag to business in general. The military Government has eliminated the majority of these taxes and has established a tax on property, which has been successfully administered.

A tariff commission was appointed to make a study of the tariff and make recommendations for a downward reduction. The consent of the United States Government was secured to this revision of the tariff and a new tariff was placed in effect on January 1, 1920. Under this new tariff, transportation media, agricultural machinery and tools, industrial machinery, building material, and, in general, articles necessary for the development of the Republic have been placed upon the free list. The rates of duty have been greatly reduced on articles of necessity where the reductions would assist in lowering the cost of living. This tariff revision resulted in an increase in importations which, although entering the country at reduced rates, have resulted in record customs collections due to the increase in the volume of importations.

Criticism has been made from time to time of the fact that it has been found necessary to borrow money and thus nominally increase the bonded indebtedness in the face of the increased prosperity of the Republic known generally to exist. This condition is brought about by the terms of the various loan agreements. If the Dominican Government, in the person of the military governor, could slow up the redemption of bonds, this course would certainly be followed. The money paid against the defrayment of the Dominican national debt, as represented by its bond issues, is obligatory under the loan terms. As a matter of fact the Dominican Republic, under the military government, is a victim of overprosperity. In general the loan agreements provide for the payment of a fixed sum annually plus a percentage of the amount by which the customs revenues of any year exceed another fixed sum. It is apparent from this general statement that increased prosperity represented by increased amounts from the customs revenue does not and can not redound to the immediate advantage of the Dominican Government. In other words, surplus customs revenues go, in the main, to the retirement of bond issues before they are due rather than to apply to expenditures wholly justifiable for the good of the people and the country, and warranted by the revenue returns. Needless to say, this condition of affairs is only temporary under existing conditions. It is at present evident that the $20,000,000 customs administration loan made in 1908 will be paid off by 1925, instead of 1958; that is, 33 years before it is due. The $4,000,000 bond issue of 1918 will be paid off about the end of the next calendar year, instead of in 1938; that is, about 16 years before it is due.

The recent $2,500,000 short-term bond issue will be paid by June 1, 1925. The short term and consequently high rate of this last bond issue results from the basic stipulation that its life be limited by the duration of the term of the preent receivership general of customs, which expires with the final payment of the $20,000,000 loan of 1908.

At the present writing the Dominican Republic, in common with other West Indian governments, is suffering from the decided slump in the sugar, coffee, and cacao markets. This set-back can be only temporary in character, and is due to trade conditions over which the military government of the Dominican Republic has no control.

The diligent conserving of public funds has permitted more than three and a half million dollars to be assigned from the surplus for appropriations for the building of roads, schools, public buildings, and port-improvements. Every effort is being bent to the completion of suitable roads which will open much-needed communication between all parts of the Republic and permit of the development of the interior.

The customhouses, wharves, and other properties of the State were found to be in a deplorable condition. These properties have now been placed in good condition. Wharves have been extended and warehouse facilities increased at practically all the ports. This work is still being continued.

The military government has been obliged to contend against a standard of honesty in the Republic, which, in so far as Government funds were concerned, was decidedly low. It is only by continual watchfulness, constant supervision, and frequent and efficient inspection that considerable losses in Government funds can be avoided even now. Some small losses have been suffered, but the general graft, dishonesty, and inefficiency with which the former treasury organization was honeycombed have been almost wholly eliminated.

ROADS AND OTHER PUBLIC WORKS.

The military government is carrying on an extensive road-building program with the intention of connecting all the roads of the Republic. These roads will at the same time open up and facilitate the development of large areas of very fertile country. Previous to 1916 there were only about 65 kilometers of good roads in the entire Dominican Republic. Since November, 1916, there have been constructed more than 150 kilometers of new macadam roads, 7 large steel bridges, 8 large concrete bridges, and many wooden bridges. In addition there have been more than 150 kilometers of second and 300 kilometers of third-class roads constructed in various parts of the country. Five large concrete bridges are being constructed and will be finished before the withdrawal of the occupation. The most ambitious as well, as the most important road now under construction, is a highway of about 290 kilometers, extending from Santo Domingo city on the south coast to the cities of La Vega, Santiago, and Monte Cristi on the north coast. This road will shorten travel time between Santo Domingo city and New York by four days, the time involved in the steamer trip around the eastern end of the island. Another important road, which will be finished before the withdrawal of the occupation, is that from Santo Domingo city to San Pedro de Macoris, connecting the two most important ports on the south coast. This road is 70 kilometers long.

The military government has constructed a new customhouse at Santo Domingo city, and has plans for the improvement of the present wharf and dredging of the channel. The same kind of work has been carried on at San Pedro de Macoris, where two new reinforced concrete piers are nearing completion. At Puerto Plata, on the north coast, a modern reinforced concrete pier was completed a short time ago. A modern water supply system has been installed in the town of Azua, near Santo Domingo city, and plans are under way for an excellent water system in the capital city itself.

Along the coast the lighthouse service has been improved and maintained and new burners installed everywhere. A lighthouse tender has been purchased and placed in service. The former Government-owned dredge has been docked, repaired, and maintained in operation. A new dredge, the Yaque, has been purchased and is in use.

Repairs and alterations have been made to numerous Government buildings which were in very poor condition. These buildings have been made serviceable and sanitary improvements installed.

Two steel radio towers 150 feet high have been erected at Santo Domingo city and a radio station has been placed in operation. Many new school buildings are under way, and provision has been made for the expenditure of about $150,000 more to complete construction.

POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

In place of the paralyzed condition of the mail and telegraph service, due to disorders existent when the military occupation took over the administration of affairs, the post-office and telephone system has been unified and placed under civil service. Twice as much business has been handled as formerly and such important changes made in the systems that the time required for the delivery of mail across the island has been reduced to 4 days instead of 10 to 14 days. A trunk telephone line from Santo Domingo City to the northern coast has been undertaken. City telephone systems have been established in Santo Domingo City, Le Vega, Santiago de los Caballeros, La Romana, San Francisco de Macoris, San Pedro de Macoris, Monte Cristi, and Puerto Plata. A topographical survey of the Dominican Republic is being made and will be well advanced before it will be necessary to discontinue it due to the prospective withdrawal. This topographical survey has been accompanied by the making of a land survey for the purpose of properly delineating and marking the boundaries of land under various owners.

On account of the richness of the Dominican Republic in minerals it has been found necessary to promulgate orders to stop exploitation of the mineral wealth, which was not being carried on in good faith, and a new mining law has been promulgated covering mining concessions. A law for the conservation and distribution of water in arid and semiarid regions has been promulgated and is in operation.

It has been the endeavor of the military government to build up and improve all means of communication between the various sections of the country, to improve the numerous ports, and to maintain and better the conditions of navigation aids, to modernize all construction, and to open the interior of the Republic to a higher civilization.

AGRICULTURE.

Before June, 1917, nothing had been done in the Dominican Republic along the line of modern agriculture education. Since then educational work has been instituted and has expanded and improved considerably, until at present there are between 30 and 40 instructors in various sections of the country.

In order to focus this work and provide the necessary places for experiments with various crops, an agricultural experimental station has been established near Santo Domingo City, with a ground area of about 150 acres. The following structures have been placed in operation: Barn, bungalow, silo, dipping tank, and propagation house. A veterinarian and an animal husbandryman have been employed to improve conditions of the stock. Pure-bred poultry, horses, cattle, and hogs have been imported. At the same location there has been constructed an agricultural college, with a view of educating one Dominican from each Province yearly, in order to fit them for agricultural instructors and managers of agricultural enterprises. Two agricultural experimental substations have been established. Orchards of American fruit trees have been planted and appear to be doing well. Demonstration plots are being worked on various farms, with a view to showing by practical physical demonstration the best agricultural methods.

A forestry law has been promulgated with a view to protecting the soil from erosion and thus conserve the forests and the natural beauty of the country. Laws have been established prohibiting the importation of coconut seeds in order to protect the Republic from the introduction of the destructive bud rot disease present in the other Antilles. A similar law has been issued covering the importation of cotton seeds. The Agricultural Review, a Government publication, is published monthly. It contains information of value to agricultural interests and has a free circulation of about 3,000.

JUSTICE AND PRISONS.

During the military occupation of Santo Domingo there has not been one case of corruption of a judge, nor has any venal act upon the part of a judge been reported. Many reforms have been made in the judicial organization with a view to expediting the trial of offenders.

Ramshackle and unsanitary prisons have been repaired or rebuilt and new ones constructed. A modern penitentiary is now in course of construction which will accommodate 500 prisoners. Two correctional schools for boys of tender age have been established. In these two schools manual training is taught and the inmates are trained in carpentering, tailoring, and shoemaking.

At the time of the occupation only civil marriages were recognized by law, and the judges, who had a monopoly of the business, charged such high fees for marriages that many of the poorer classes could ill afford to have the ceremony performed. Executive orders issued by the military government have corrected this evil, and hundreds and perhaps thousand of persons who have openly lived as husband and wife without ever enjoying a civil ceremony have now taken advantage of the inexpensive cost of marriage and have thereby in many cases legitimized their children.

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

Before the reforms initiated under the military Government, public education in the Dominican Republic was very ineffective. There was great confusion in regard to the law on the subject, and for several years practically no school law was recognized. Primary education was for the most part confined to schools with one or two teachers in the most important towns. There were no rural schools. Town schools deserved the name only when they were in the hands of private teachers. The usual salaries of teachers in primary schools ranged from $8 to $9 a month, and, under favorable conditions, were not paid more than eight or nine months in the year. There were no more than 18,000 pupils in all schools, although statistics of these times are neither constant nor reliable.

One of the first acts of the military Government was to form a commission of prominent Dominicans to report upon conditions then existing regarding education, and to formulate recommendation looking to their improvement and the establishment of a system of education that would best serve the interests of the people of the Republic.

This commission sat for almost a year, and prepared and recommended the following draft of laws:

1. Law on compulsory school attendance.
2. Law for the direction of public schools.
3. General studies law.
4. University law.
5. Law on theological seminary.
6. Organic law on public education.
7. Law of school revenues.

The first six laws were promulgated with very slight modification by the military Government and now constitute the school code of the country.

There were until recently about 1,500 teachers of all classes in actual service. It has been temporarily necessary to consolidate certain of the schools and the duties of certain of the teachers, on account of the decrease in internal revenues due to unfavorable economic conditions which have prevailed more or less throughout the West Indies. This situation will undoubtedly be of comparatively short duration, although it has been made the subject of unfavorable criticism of the military Government. It may be pertinent to remark at this point on the peculiarly vexatious character of such unfavorable criticism. The statement is made that schools have been closed by direction of the military Government. This statement is wholly true. It is added that the military Government is depriving the children of the Dominican Republic of their right to an elementary education. In so far as the temporary closing of certain schools is concerned, this statement is also true. The presentation of these two isolated facts, however, wholly ignores the increase of school attendance during the military occupation and the vast improvement in school conditions.

The rural school-teachers draw a salary of from $55 to $75 a month, as against salaries of $8 to $15 before the reform. Graded school-teachers draw salaries of from $60 to $100 a month, as against salaries of from $20 to $40 before the reform. Summer schools are provided for the teachers and certificates are required for all teachers. The capacity of the teaching force has been one of the surprises of the development of the schools.

The school attendance has increased from about 18,000 to more than 100,000 in all schools. The increase in the school population is not due to the compulsory attendance alone. It is a consequence of the more efficient school work of the teachers, as well as of the greater attraction in the schools for the pupils and a better social condition resulting from the occupation.

Before the reform, schools were invariably located in dirty, miserable quarters. A school usually consisted of a room of small size with two or three board benches for the pupils and a broken chair for the teacher. At present the schools are working in the best houses of every town, and schools are now neat, pleasant places, although it has been necessary to maintain the schools very largely in rented buildings until the program of construction of schoolhouses has been completed.

There is a recognized drawback to this otherwise favorable review of the school situation. Although efforts are made to employ competent teachers and certificates of qualification are required of them, there is a lack of thorough school inspection and an absence of definite information as to the actual progress of the pupils as a whole under the opportunities afforded them. With time, this drawback would undoubtedly disappear, under the present administration of affairs.

SANITARY AND PUBLIC HEALTH CONDITIONS.

Upon the establishment of the military government, sanitary and public health activities in the Dominican Republic were almost entirely lacking. A sanitary law was in existence, but little or no attention was paid to it. Cities and towns were dirty; elementary sanitation was neglected, and the few hospitals in the country were in a sadly neglected state and totally inadequate. There was no real attempt toward disease control.

A new sanitary law has been promulgated, creating a national department of sanitation and beneficence. This law centralizes the administration of sanitation and public health matters and the practice of medical professions under the control of a secretary of state for sanitation and beneficence and places this department on a level with the other departments of the Government. The secretary is assisted by a national public-health council, an advisory body of representative Dominicans.

The country is divided into sanitary districts, each district being in charge of a district sanitary officer immediately responsible to the secretary. Dominicans are appointed to all positions of responsibility under the department of sanitation and beneficence wherever practicable.

A national leper colony and leprosarium is being completed. Inadequate charity hospitals and orphanages have been reorganized under the general direction of the department of sanitation. Existing hospitals are being enlarged, and plans for several new hospitals are being completed. A series of small dispensaries for the treatment of the poor throughout the country is a feature of the sanitary administration.

Under the military government, there has been established an adequate national sanitary organization for the administration of sanitary and public health affairs, including municipal sanitation, hospitalization, quarantine, the practice of the medical profession, the sale of drugs, national and municipal charity work so far as the public health is concerned, the compilation of vital statistics, and the control of disease. The training of personnel under this organization is going forward, with a view to making secure the future sanitation and public health of the country as a whole.

GENERAL COMMENT.

It has been pointed out that, following a long period of turmoil in the Dominican Republic, during which the United States repeatedly offered its good offices with a view to straightening out affairs and preventing foreign intervention, the United States Government directed the occupation of the country and its administration under military government by forces under the immediate supervision of the Navy Department. The Navy was assigned the task of carrying on in the Dominican Republic under policy outlined by the United States Government and has continued to do so until the present time, when an endeavor is being made to accomplish a withdrawal of the military government in accordance with the terms of a proclamation issued on June 14, 1921, in the following terms:

" PROCLAMATION.

"Whereas, by proclamation of the military governor of Santo Domingo, dated December 23, 1920, it was announced to the people of the Dominican Republic that the Government of the United States desired to inaugurate the simple processes of its rapid withdrawal from the responsibilities assumed in connection with Dominican affairs; and

"Whereas it is necessary that a duly constituted government of the Dominican Republic exist before the withdrawal of the United States may be effective, in order that the functions of Government may be resumed by it in an orderly manner.

"Now, therefore, I, Samuel S. Robinson, rear admiral, United States Navy, military governor of Santo Domingo, acting under the authority and by direction of the Government of the United States, declare and announce to all concerned that the Government of the United States proposes to withdraw its military forces from the Dominican Republic in accordance with the steps set forth herein. It is the desire of the Government of the United States to assure itself before its withdrawal is accomplished that the independence and territorial integrity of the Dominican Republic, the maintenance of public order, and the security of life and property, will be adequately safeguarded, and to turn over the administration of the Dominican Republic to a responsible Dominican Government duly established in accordance with the existing constitution and laws. To this end, it calls upon the Dominican people to lend to it their helpful cooperation with the hope that the withdrawal of the United States may be completed, if such cooperation is given, in the manner hereinafter provided, within a period of eight months.

"The executive power vested by the Dominican constitution in the President of the Republic will be exercised by the military governor of Santo Domingo until a duly elected and proclaimed president of the Republic shall have taken office and until a convention of evacuation shall have been signed by the President and confirmed by the Dominican Congress.

"Within one month from the date of this proclamation the military governor will convene the primary assemblies to assemble 30 days after the date of the decree of convocation in conformity with articles 82 and 83 of the constitution. These assemblies shall proceed to elect the electors as prescribed by article 84 of the constitution. In order that these elections may be held without disorder and in order that the will of the Dominican people may be freely expressed, these elections will be held under the supervision of the authorities designated by the military governor.

"The electoral college thus elected by the primary assemblies shall, in accordance with article 85 of the constitution, proceed to elect senators, deputies, and alternates for the latter, and to prepare lists for the justices of the supreme court of justice, of the appellate courts, and the tribunals and courts of the first instance, as prescribed by article 85 of the constitution. The military governor, performing the functions of chief executive, will then appoint, in accordance with article 53 of the constitution, certain Dominican citizens as representatives of the Republic to negotiate a convention of evacuation. In order that the enjoyment of individual rights may be insured, and in order that the peace and prosperity of the Republic may be conserved, the said convention of evacuation shall contain the following provisions:

"1. Ratification of all of the acts of the military government.

"2. Validation of the final loan of $2,500,000, which is the minimum loan required in order to complete the public works which are now in actual course of construction and which can be completed during the period required for the withdrawal of the military occupation, and which are deemed essential to the success of the new Government of the Republic and to the well-being of the Dominican people.

"3. Extension of the duties of the general receiver of Dominican customs, appointed under the convention of 1907, to the said loan.

"4. Extension of the powers of the general receiver of Dominican customs to the collection and disbursement of such portion of the internal revenue of the Republic as may prove to be necessary should the custom revenue at any time be insufficient to meet the service of the foreign debt of the Republic.

"5. The obligations on the part of the Dominican Government, in order to preserve peace, to afford adequate protection to life and property, and to secure the discharging of all obligations of the Dominican Republic, to maintain an efficient Guardia Nacional, urban and rural, composed of native Dominicans. To this end it shall also be agreed in said convention that the President of the Dominican Republic shall at once request the President of the United States to send a military mission to the Dominican Republic charged with the duty of securing the competent organization of such Guardia Nacional, the Guardia Nacional to be officered by such Dominican officers as may be competent to undertake such service conditions, and for such time as may be found necessary to effect the efficient organization with American officers appointed by the President of the Dominican Republic upon nomination of the President of the United States. The expenses of said mission will be paid by the Dominican Republic, and the said mission will be invested by the Executive of the Dominican Republic with proper and adequate authority to accomplish the purpose above stated.

"The military governor will thereupon convene the Dominican Congress in extraordinary session to confirm the convention of evacuation referred to above. The military governor will then assemble the electoral college for the purpose of electing a President of the Dominican Republic in accordance with article 85 of the constitution, and simultaneously officials other than the Senators and deputies elected at the first convocation of the electoral college will be installed in office. The Dominican President so elected will then take office in accordance with article 51 of the constitution upon this ratification of the convention of evacuation, at the same time signing the convention of evacuation as confirmed by the Dominican congress. Assuming that through the cooperation of the people of the Dominican Republic a condition of peace and good order obtains, the military governor will transfer to the duly elected President of the Republic all of his authority and the military Government will cease, and thereupon the forces of the United States will be at once withdrawn.

"The further assistance of the advisory commission appointed under the proclamation of December 23, 1920, being no longer required, it is hereby dissolved, with the expression of the grateful appreciation of the Government of the United States for the self-sacrificing service of the patriotic citizens of the Dominican Republic of whom it has been composed.

"S. S. ROBISON,

"Rear Admiral, United States Navy,

"Military Governor of Santo Domingo.

"SANTO DOMINGO, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

"June 14, 1921."

(Whereupon the committee adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.)

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

The committee met pursuant to adjournment at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in the committee room, Capitol, Senator Medill McCormick presiding.

Present: Senators McCormick (chairman), Oddie, and Pomerene.

Also present: Mr. Ernest Angell, representing the Hati-Santo Domingo Independence Society, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Union Patriotique D'Haiti; Mr. Horace G. Knowles, representing the Patriotic League of the Dominican Republic and the deposed Dominican Government; and Mr. Roger L. Farnham, representing the National City Bank of New York City.

STATEMENT OF MR. ROGER L. FARNHAM, VICE PRESIDENT NATIONAL CITY BANK, NEW YORK, N. Y.

THE CHAIRMAN. Mr. Farnham, will you please give your full name?

MR. FARNHAM. Roger L. Farnham.

THE CHAIRMAN. Give your connection with the National City Bank and your business.

MR. FARNHAM. Vice president National City Bank, New York.

THE CHAIRMAN. And your business interests are those of the Bank in Haiti?

MR. FARNHAM. Yes.

THE CHAIRMAN. You may go to any length you choose on that subject.

MR. FARNHAM. As to the position of the bank, you mean?

THE CHAIRMAN. How does it come that the bank is interested in Haiti, or the National Bank of Haiti, and to what extent is it interested?

MR. FARNHAM. In 1910 the old National Bank of Haiti was reorganized in connection with a new Government loan taken by some French bankers.

SENATOR POMERENE. Was that a private bank?

MR. FARNHAM. Yes; that was a private bank, which had had a contract to act as treasury of the Haitian Government. But due to some internal difficulties and bad management, the bank had practically failed, and it was reorganized with strong group of French bankers behind it, and in connection with that reorganization a new contract was made between the Haitian Government and the bank, under which contract the bank was to make certain annual loans to the Government, for purposes of the budget, and it also was to act as the treasury of the Government, receiving all revenues—not collecting any, but receiving them—and paying out all disbursements for account of the Government.

SENATOR POMERENE. That was prior to 1910?

MR. FARNHAM. No; I am reciting the subject of the 1910 contract.

Also under that contract the bank was to be the bank of issue of the currency of the country.

For some reason, Senator Knox, who was then Secretary of State here, intervened in the matter, and objected to the contract as it originally was drawn, saying that it was very onerous to the Haitian people, and also he felt that some American banking interests ought to be represented. He did not favor the preponderance of French interests, and at his request several bankers from New York visited Washington and discussed the matter with him. The result was that the National City Bank of New York, Messrs. Speyer & Co., Hallgarten & Co., and Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. each became subscribers to 2,000 shares of the capital stock of the company, which is a French organization operating under a French charter.

The capital stock was 40,000 shares. Out of that the National City Bank acquired 2,000 shares, and the other interests, respectively, 2,000 shares each. Those shares represented 125 francs paid in, the par value being 500 francs. At the same time the German bank, Berliner Handel Gesellschaft, acquired 2,000 shares.

The changes which Senator Knox, then Secretary of State, brought about in the original contract, were quite to the benefit of the Haitians. From that time on the bank has been conducted as a French institution, with, I think, three Americans on the board of directors, but the practical management of the bank was from Paris. The American directors had practically little to do. The bank has its principal office in Port au Prince, and nine branches or agencies throughout the country.

That situation continued until the time of the American intervention in Haiti in 1915 or perhaps a short time before that, when, because of the World War, the French people were so taken up with matters at home that they asked the American directors to assume the management of the affairs of the bank, and from that time on the active management has been from New York rather than from Paris, although the board was continued in Paris and was consulted from time to time.

Shortly after the European war broke out Secretary of State Bryan, in several interviews, suggested the advisability of the American interests acquiring the French shares in the bank, and making it an American bank. That suggestion was repeated from time to time, and after some extended conferences. I think in 1917, just before the United States entered the war, the National City Bank purchased the stock held by the other three American parties, Hallgarten, Speyer, and Ladenburg Thalmann, so that that gave the National City Bank about 8,000 shares of stock in the bank, out of 40,000 shares.

Senator POMERENE. At 500 francs per share?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; par value, of which 125 francs had been paid in. The stock of the bank never was issued, never has been issued. An inscription was made on the books of the bank in Paris, stating the fact of the subscription, and each participant was issued a certificate.

Senator POMERENE. Well, your subscribers were without the evidence—

Mr. FARNHAM. Except in the form of a certificate.

About a year and a half ago, after several suggestions from the State Department, negotiations were entered into, with the result that the National City Bank purchased all the assets of the French institution.

Senator POMERENE. Including the German interests?

Mr. FARNHAM. All, yes, all of the assets. Under the circumstances, Senator, it was rather difficult to buy the stock. At a shareholders' meeting held in Paris, where all the shareholders were represented—and there were about 6,000 shareholders of the bank altogether—it was voted to accept the offer of the National City Bank, which was $1,400,000.

Senator POMERENE. Let me understand that. Do I understand you to say all the shareholders? Does that include the German shareholders who were there?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; all shares of the German bank had been seized by the French Government, and the French Government acted in that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was Secretary of State at that time?

Mr. FARNHAM. At the time we made the offer for the assets?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. FARNHAM. I think Mr. Lansing. The bank paid $1,400,000, the understanding being that the assets would be transferred to a new company which the National City Bank would create; the French company would be discontinued, the charter surrendered, and the money would be distributed to the shareholders. That has not been carried out because it has been impossible to obtain from the Haitian council of state its approval for the transfer of the contract between the Haitian Government and the French bank to the new organization. The Haitians agreed to do it. Their minister and representatives went over the matter here in Washington at the State Department and signed their assent to the transfer, requesting that the new corporation, if we could see our way to do it, should be a Haitian corporation rather than an American one, and we complied, and drew up an organization in Haiti, under the same title as now exists, the Banque Nationale Republique d'Haiti, but up to now it has been impossible to get the approval of that Government to the transfer of the contract, and so we are continuing the bank under the actual ownership of the National City Bank, but under the French charter, and with the French officials and directors remaining as they have been. Mr. Poirson, the vice president of the Banque Union Parisien, is president and I am vice president. The board is equally divided between French and Americans. That is the only interest the National City Bank has in Haiti, and all that it ever has had.

Senator POMERENE. You are continuing your operations down there just as heretofore.

Mr. FARNHAM. We are continuing operations as a bank; yes, sir. We have carried out the obligations of the contract; from time to time we have made advances to the Haitian Government, so that the obligations of the Government to the bank to-day amount to $1,733,154. I forget the exact cents.

Senator POMERENE. What are your assets?

Mr. FARNHAM. That we hold a note of the Haitian Government for, which is at the approval of the State Department here, and bears the signature of the American financial adviser. That note is due and payable on the 31st of December of this year. It was made two years ago.

Senator POMERENE. What are the total assets of the bank?

Mr. FARNHAM. Of the Haiti Bank?

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. FARNHAM. We have just had an examination made. They are approximately a million and a half, with the note of the Haitian Government.

Senator POMERENE. In addition to that?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; including that.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps I might ask here, in order that the information might be in the record, what other banking institution is there in Haiti, and how many branches has it?

Mr. FARNHAM. The Royal Bank of Canada, a British bank, is there. It has an office in Port au Prince, one at Aux Cayas, and one at Cape Haitien.

The CHAIRMAN. What relation, if any, is there between the National City Bank, its stockholders, and the railways built under the so-called McDonald concessions?

Mr. FARNHAM. The National City Bank did not have and never has had any interest in that railroad except a loan of $500,000 made to the contracting company building the railroad, the bank receiving as collateral for that loan, $870,000 and some odd, of the bonds of the railroad company. That is the only interest the National City Bank has ever had in the railroad. The railroad was financed by a syndicate gotten up by W. R. Grace & Co., and the control of the capital stock of the railroad is with that syndicate. In that syndicate—the Grace Syndicate, so-called—one of its subscribers is the Ethelburga Syndicate, an English institution which owns 50 per cent of the capital stock of the railroad, so that the ownership of the railroad is divided equally between the English interests and a group of Americans. I think there are 12 in the American group. The stock never was issued to the public. It has always been held by the group.

The CHAIRMAN. That was one of those English interests which makes a business of investing in the enterprises and utilities of undeveloped countries, I take it?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you indicate where this railroad is on the map?

Mr. FARNHAM. The railroad runs from Port au Prince, following practically that real line out to the shore there, and from here out to that point, St. Marc. It runs from Gonaives to a place called Emery; and from Cape Haitien to a place called Bahon. It is in three sections. The original plan was to bring it way down here into this country [indicating on map], and so on below the Artibonite River, until it got to St. Marc, but that is practically an impossible proposition on account of the mountains. It can be brought over the mountains here at Bahon, and come in through here, and the engineers have been trying to find some way to get across this range of mountains here.

Senator POMERENE. This is all Greek to me. You say there are three sections. Are they not connected?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; not at all. They were built at the same time. One section was started here and another section here. [Indicating on map.]

Senator POMERENE. Now, you say here and here. Will you indicate it for the record?

Mr. FARNHAM. From Cape Haitien to Bahon. From Cape Haitien, on the north, it goes south to a point called Bahon 37 kilometers; and from Gonaives, on the west coast—that is another section—inland and eastward 33 kilometers to Ennery; and from St. Marc, also on the west coast, south to Port au Prince 102 kilometers.

Senator POMERENE. What are the several industrial activities which suggested the building of these roads in those particular sections or localities?

Mr. FARNHAM. In the Gonaives-Ennery section of the road the idea was to reach some coal deposits inland. The coal was thought to be valuable. It is not, because it is nothing but lignite and of a rather poor quality at that. The remainder of the line, from Cape Haitien to Bahon and from Port au Prince to St. Marc, are the two ends, if you please, of what was laid out to be a through line from the north to the south. They pass through a country which could produce sugar cane in large quantities, bananas, and cotton. There is no cultivation in Haiti, as we understand the term.

Senator POMERENE. Are the climatic and soil conditions there such as to make it a reasonable competitor of Cuba?

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, in a small way. The climatic and soil conditions are quite all right for sugar, cotton, coffee, and cocoa. There is an abundance of labor, after it is educated. The area susceptible of that sort of cultivation, of course, is somewhat limited compared to Cuba. It is generally thought by those who have investigated the situation that sugar can be made in Haiti as cheaply as in Cuba after the natives have been taught how to handle the cultivation of the cane. The same applies to cotton, cocoa, and coffee. At the present time the cotton and coffee grows practically wild. It was brought there in the days of the French, but for the last 100 years it has just taken care of itself. It propagates itself; there is no cultivation. There are no plantations. The only cultivation that you see as you go through the country is here and there small garden patches, which are cultivated by the women, of beans, sweet potatoes, and yams. There is no cultivation of bananas, no cultivation of cotton; and the sugar cane which you see growing practically all over the country in the fertile parts, the valleys and plains, is a propagation of what was put there by the French. The country is susceptible of a good deal of development, but it will require capital, and it will require some time to educate the Haitian to become a good laborer.

In recent years a number of Haitians—several thousand—have been taken over to Cuba during the sugar season to work in the fields. They are fair laborers. They can not match up with the Jamaican in the fields nor with the Spanish Gallego. If you sit on your horse in the cane fields in the cane season, as I have done, and watch two Gallegos working together and two Jamaican Negroes and two Haitians, you will see the piles of cane cut by the two Gallegos and the two Jamaicans grow almost twice as fast as the pile cut and thrown by the Haitians. They seem to lack the muscular strength. I know that in the construction of this railroad in Haiti, where we had them as laborers, the American foremen, who had previously been on railroad construction in Mexico and all up and down South America and in the United States, told me—and I saw myself, too—that they reckoned four Haitians were necessary to do the work of one good Irish track hand.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask, Mr. Farnham, is that possibly—

Mr. FARNHAM. They were very weak, and they had no food.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). A matter of nourishment?

Mr. FARNHAM. Nourishment almost entirely, and ignorance in handling matters of that sort.

Senator POMERENE. Naturally, they have the physical strength, have they?

Mr. FARNHAM. Generally speaking, I should say no. The women are all strong, big, husky persons. The majority of the men are rather light and small, underfed. They seem to lack the physique.

Senator POMERENE. How do you account for the difference between the sexes?

Mr. FARNHAM. I do not know, but it is observable as soon as you go among the people, particularly in the country. The men are rather light in weight, and they do not seem to have the stamina. They can not stand up under hard work.

Senator ODDIE. Is there anything in the climate?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think the climate has something to do with it, but still in Santo Domingo, which has practically the same climate, or in Panama, which has even a worse climate to work in than Haiti, the Negroes there work satisfactorily.

Senator POMERENE. That statement surprises me very much. I am not disputing it at all. Do you mean to say that the women are actually or simply relatively stronger than the men?

Mr. FARNHAM. On the whole, I think they are actually stronger. The women perform the labor in the gardens; they do all the marketing; they think nothing of tramping 50 miles to market, carrying on their heads almost unbelievable loads. You will see a woman driving two or three burros, and she will be carrying on top of her own head more than any one of the burros. They will walk all night, many of them very fast. They will walk as fast as a good horse will walk and carry that heavy load over the island. They come into the market place at Port au Prince two or three times a week, particularly on Saturday, probably 5,000 or 6,000 women, who have come in from all directions. You will see some at the other principal towns like Cape Haitien and St. Marc. Fifty per cent of them have carried on their own heads what they bring to market.

Senator POMERENE. In doing this work in the construction of the railroads, is that done by the women or the men?

Mr. FARNHAM. The men. The women would not work at that. You can not get a woman to work cutting cane, but they will pick coffee and cotton, they will work in the garden, they will cultivate their garden stuff. I think if you should see a group of women and a group of men you would immediately notice the difference in their physique, their whole set-up.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Farnham, I think the committee would be interested to have your impression of political and economic conditions preceding the occupation, and the incidents of the occupation, and all events and conditions subsequent to the occupation.

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, I would like to preface what I would say by the statement that what I know of this country is gained by trips on horseback through the interior. I have made in Haiti seven trips on horseback, one of 33 days and one of 30 days and five of a fortnight each. I have made two in Santo Domingo, one of 34 days and another of 17 days, on the trail. I went with a party through Santo Domingo, and usually there have been two or three men with me on the trips through Haiti, and we have gone very well equipped, because we had saddle horses brought there from Wyoming and American pack mules. We had two horses apiece, so that we rode one in the morning and one in the afternoon, which permitted of pretty fast riding. In that way we have covered all of Santo Domingo and all of Haiti, except these two arms. That portion I have not been in. I have sailed around the coast of the arms, but I have not traveled over them. But I have been over practically all the rest of Haiti and Santo Domingo on horseback, and it is from these trips that I have been able to observe conditions.

My first trip was made in June, 1911, in Haiti. In 1913 I made the first trip through Santo Domingo and in 1918 the second. At that time—I am speaking now of 1911—and from then until the American occupation in Haiti, it was almost a condition—

Senator POMERENE. What was the date of the American occupation in Haiti?

Mr. FARNHAM. July, 1915. The country was in a state of almost continuous revolution, one man trying to succeed the other as President and so get control of the treasury.

Senator POMERENE. You are speaking of Haiti, not of Santo Domingo?

Mr. FARNHAM. Haiti. In that time I think there were seven Presidents.

The CHAIRMAN. In four years—from 1911 to 1915?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes. Simon was President in 1911, and went out on the 1st of August that year, and so on. There were seven Presidents up to the time of the American occupation in July, 1915. During that period, in riding through the country one saw very few men. They were either in the Government army or in the revolutionary army, or hiding out in the hills to escape both. The majority of them were engaged in the latter occupation, keeping out there with their families. The cultivation, such as it was, by the women was considerably limited, and between either the revolutionary army or the Government army a great many small villages were destroyed, the houses burnt up, the people killed, and every sort of an outrage which you may imagine going with a movement of that sort.

It was under those conditions that they attempted to construct the Haiti railroad, but revolutionary conditions became so bad in 1913 that the management suspended the construction of it, and in 1914 they had to suspend operation of the sections which had been completed, and no trains were operated for nearly a year—until after the American troops landed there. Then, at the request of the commanding officers, the road was put in some operation, with an occasional train, which gradually increased until conditions permitted the normal daily operation of trains.

The Governments which followed each other were revolutionary Governments, each one getting the country into debt more deeply. I think that was the situation which the Americans found when they arrived there, following the killing of the last President, Sam.

As to Santo Domingo, the conditions there, you should understand, are quite different from Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me submit this to the members of the committee: It seems to me that we had better confine the witnesses to one subject. If we attempt to consider the conditions and the problems in both countries simultaneously, I think we shall be in great difficulties. Will you just address yourself, therefore, Mr. Farnham, to the question of Haiti?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think that is all I can say about that. The business of the country was in control of the Germans, 90 per cent of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The commerce?

Mr. FARNHAM. The commerce of the country, both the import and export business. The German ships controlled the shipping. No other vessels went there, with the exception of an occasional ship from France, of the French Transatlantic Line. They had a vessel which called there about once a month, sometimes once in two months, but outside of that the traffic was in the control of the Hamburg-American Line, and the German merchants worked in conjunction with that line. They profited considerably through the revolutions. They loaned money to the would-be presidents to finance their revolutionary movements at what resulted in a profitable rate of remuneration to them.

In 1917, when we went into the war, Haiti declared war also on Germany, and the Germans were forced to leave the island. Their property was conscripted by the Haitian Government and placed in liquidation. Some two months ago that ban was lifted and practically all the Germans are back in Haiti, they have resumed their old business, and the property and funds which were taken from them then are now being returned to them, their buildings, lands, stores, together with some $2,000,000 cash, which was realized from the sale of certain goods taken from their stores.

There are two or three half-German, half-Haitian houses in the country, one English house, and in the last two or three years two or three American individuals have opened up business there, but they are small.

The country has been served during the war by the Panama Steamship Line, which passes practically by the door, going back and forth to the canal—the diversion in and out is rather small—and that has rendered a weekly service which has been very necessary to the country for both passengers and mail, freight, and merchandise. An effort, I understand, is being made to discontinue that service. I think it is very desirable—

Senator POMERENE. An effort by whom?

Mr. FARNHAM. I do not know. I understand the Shipping Board have some control over it. A petition is now being circulated for everyone interested to sign to have the Panama steamship service to Haiti retained. Personally, I think it should be. I think it is very desirable to have an American steamship line going into that country?

Senator POMERENE. Has the German service been continued there, or renewed again?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; not yet. I understand it is to be. I was informed a week ago by one of the former employees of the Hamburg-American Line that it is now attempting to resume their service from New York to Haiti and through the Caribbean.

The CHAIRMAN. Did not the Hamburg-American Line, in a sense, dominate that entire island trade?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; before the war they did. They practically made the rates for the whole Caribbean, for all the American lines and all other lines.

The CHAIRMAN. With headquarters at St. Thomas?

Mr. FARNHAM. They had a big coaling station there; yes; but they served Venezuela, Panama, Jamaica, and Haiti. They laid out a certain district, which they monopolized to themselves and fixed rates.

Senator POMERENE. You have spoken of the National City Bank's interest there, and of the Canadian bank. Did the Germans have any banking interests there?

Mr. FARNHAM. No, sir. Quite a number of German houses were private banks themselves. They practically did their own banking business. Very few of the Germans did business with any outside bank. They shipped their goods by the German line, and their mail was handled in the same way, and their drafts went out in the same way. The only thing they did with the National Bank of Haiti prior to the American intervention was to obtain from the bank from time to time as they wanted them the necessary paper gourde, which was the money of the country, of the denomination of 20 cents, nominal value, and then when the crop season would be over they would change these gourdes back to dollars. The gourde is a paper bill about the size of our dollar bill, in denominations of ones, twos, tens, and twenties.

Senator ODDIE. You mentioned some influence that is being brought to bear to have the Panama steamship service discontinued.

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. I would like to know a little more about that.

Mr. FARNHAM. Senator, I can not tell you very much about it myself. Two or three times it has been reported that the Panama steamship service was to be withdrawn from Haiti and to be substituted by the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. For some years that company has maintained a service through the Caribbean, particularly to Jamaica and some of the eastward islands, but more recently they have operated ships from Nova Scotia to Haiti and to Santo Domingo. That service seemed to come about after the establishment in Haiti of the Royal Bank of Canada. I do not know if this is true, but it has been reported to us by our representatives in the island that the English bank offered loans to Haitian merchants on condition that they would buy Canadian goods rather than American goods. It is a fact that the ships from Nova Scotia brought out fish, cotton goods, and supplies of that sort which are used in Haiti, and would take away coffee, cocoa, and logwood. Whether they intend to put on a regular service in the event the Panama service is withdrawn I do not know, but a week ago I was advised by a former employee of the Hamburg-American Line that they soon expected to resume their service to Haiti.

Senator ODDIE. Who is pressing to bring about the withdrawal of the Panama ships?

Mr. FARNHAM. I could not tell you, Senator.

Senator ODDIE. I wondered what interest was dominant in that effort.

Mr. FARNHAM. I do not know. That service is a very good one. It is regular, and I think the rates probably are more favorable to the Haitians than previously the country has enjoyed.

Senator POMERENE. You have spoken of the interest of the National City Bank. What other substantial interests are there in Haiti?

Mr. FARNHAM. There are two only. A group of Americans organized a company about three years ago to undertake to develop a plain located about here [indicating on map] in cotton, and they put into cultivation, I think, some 2,500 or 3,000 acres. Instead of using the Haitian cotton, which is a long staple and very tough sort of cotton, and which the island originally grew, they brought seed from the United States. Whether that was responsible for what happened I do not know, but the whole thing was a failure. The cotton did not grow. It would grow that high [indicating] and then proceed to die. They sprayed it, they did everything, but they could not cultivate it.

Alongside of it they had a small tract of Haitian cotton which grew. I think they gathered about 100 bales from that, but their 2,500 acres of cotton raised from the imported seed, I think, died, and they have practically abandoned for the time being their plants there. I understand they invested altogether nearly $1,000,000. They acquired a very large tract of land, and they brought tractors and breaking-up plows; they brought a great deal of machinery into Haiti. For the time being they are doing nothing.

There was another company formed, in which the Germans, who originally controlled the entire property, participated. That was called the Haitian-American Sugar Co. That was organized by some Americans, in conjunction with certain Germans in Port au Prince. That company acquired the stock of the electric light company of Port au Prince; also a small, narrow-gauge railroad running from Port au Prince out to this lake, about 30 miles; also a tramway in the city, the wharf at Port au Prince, and they were also to build, and did build, a sugar mill about a mile and half from Port au Prince. They have there a very fine mill. I think it has a capacity of about 200,000 sacks of sugar.

They undertook to get sugar cane from the plains of Cul-de-Sac, which 100 or more years ago under French management was a very productive territory for sugar. They had some difficulties with the natives, and were unable to get a sufficient supply of cane, and their affairs went badly and did not work out. About nine months ago the company went into the hands of receivers, and about eight weeks ago the property was sold at a receiver's sale in New York, and it was bought in by several banks that had loaned money to the enterprise and were interested. I believe they contemplate reorganization when conditions get a little better.

Senator POMERENE. What is the total of the American investment in Haiti?

Mr. FARNHAM. It is rather hard to answer, Senator. As to the bank, I have told you. As to the railroad, the so-called Grace syndicate paid in practically all of its underwriting obligations, $2,225,000. The cotton enterprise at the north involved about $1,000,000. What was put into the Haitian-American operation by Americans I do not know. They claimed to have assets altogether of about $12,000,000, but I rather doubt that.

The CHAIRMAN. What did they sell for at the receiver's sale?

Mr. FARNHAM. $650,000; but that was a mere nominal figure. It was bought in by the banks, with the understanding on the part of the court which appointed the receiver that a reorganization would be effected and that all subscribers to the original company would be given an opportunity to participate.

Senator POMERENE. What did the German interests amount to, in your judgment?

Mr. FARNHAM. In invested capital I should say a relatively small amount, representing investments only in buildings at the different ports and in lighters and a wharf. The Germans built this wharf at Port au Prince. I think that cost them about $275,000. Perhaps in the railroad, the tramway, and the electric light company they had invested $1,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. They were primarily merchants and middlemen?

Mr. FARNHAM. They were merchants and middlemen. You see, before the American occupation, and before the treaty and the new constitution of Haiti, foreigners could not own any land. That was prohibited. Some of the Germans married Haitian women in order to get land, but the amount of land they acquired was relatively small, and was of no importance. They bought the products of the country and exported them, and they imported cotton goods, eatables, etc. They did their own banking business. They speculated in gourdes, and they made considerable profit out of financing revolutions. They were not landowners, in the proper sense of the word. Through a marriage or some association with a Haitian woman they would own a few houses in one town or another.

Senator POMERENE. They were rather exploiters?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. What have you to say about the British and the amount of their interests there?

Mr. FARNHAM. Nil.

Senator POMERENE. And the Canadians?

Mr. FARNHAM. Nil.

The CHAIRMAN. Outside of the bank.

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; outside of the Canadian bank. The American-Foreign Banking Corporation opened a bank there and carried it on for a year and a half, but that is closed and discontinued.

Senator ODDIE. Who were the Americans interested with the Haitians in the Haitian-American Corporation?

Mr. FARNHAM. I could not tell you, Senator. A private banking house in Chicago, by the name of Breed, Elliott & Harrison, and some others, were interested in it, and I think the preferred stock of the company was sold generally to the public, more in the Middle States, I think in Illinois and Indiana, than in the East. I think the bulk of the preferred stock of that corporation was sold in those States.

Senator POMERENE. Who was it that first took the initiative which led up to our sending our marines into Haiti?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think we went in there primarily because the French had already stepped in and taken possession. When we went in there the French had sent a warship and troops and had landed at Cape Haitien, on account of the revolutionary conditions, and were in possession, administering the affairs of the city.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the Navy Department has covered that.

Mr. FARNHAM. And on account of that situation we sent Admiral Caperton out there. He displaced the French occupation. Later they landed their troops at Port au Prince at the same time we did, and those troops remained there until a treaty was negotiated six months later.

Senator POMERENE. How many troops have we down there now?

Mr. FARNHAM. I could not tell you.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all in the record. We should like very much to have Mr. Farnham give us his impressions of the occupation and its administration of the country.

Mr. FARNHAM. My impressions on that, Senator, will have to be confined to just what I saw there.

The CHAIRMAN. The occupation has continued now nearly six years. There was a period of what we might call pacification, and there was later a period—I think you might designate it—

Mr. FARNHAM. I would like to mention that before the American occupation there were no roads in Haïti; there was only one way of going about, and that was by horseback, anywhere and everywhere. There were a few automobiles that had been introduced into Port au Prince, but they could not go outside of the town. All travel was either on foot or on horse all over the country. The idea of this railroad was to effect some means of communication between the north and south. Before the roads were built travel was very tiresome and tedious. You had to go over mountains, swim rivers, and it was a very difficult trip, particularly in the rainy season, when it was almost impossible to get through.

After the American occupation, and the country had become quieted down, there was some discussion by Government officials at this end about road building and improvement, but there was no policy, and there was nothing except talk. In the meanwhile the marines started in and built a road so that it was possible to go from Port au Prince through St. Marc to Gonaïves, and overland to Cape Haïtien easily in 12 hours. It was a wonderful road, beautifully done.

Senator POMERENE. How is that done; by what means of locomotion?

Mr. FARNHAM. Automobile.

Senator POMERENE. What is the distance?

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, that road, I would say, is about 140 miles.

Senator POMERENE. Was that done by the Americans, at their expense, or was it charged to the Haïtien Government?

Mr. FARNHAM. That was done under the direction of the marines, with their own engineers, and by Haïtian labor.

Senator POMERENE. Who paid the labor?

Mr. FARNHAM. That labor was handled under a law of Haïti which provides that all men can be conscripted for three days at a time to work upon the roads, and it was under that law that the actual labor was performed. The marine engineers laid out the lines, and did all of the engineering work. It was supervised by marines. The labor was by Haïtians.

Senator POMERENE. Then the only cash outlay would be for overhead expenses, substantially?

Mr. FARNHAM. I was told—whether it is true or not I have no means of knowing—that the entire cash outlay for that road was something under $250,000, covering the outlay for powder and dynamite, for in some places they had to blast, and for the material necessary to make some small bridges. I am inclined to think that is perhaps true.

Senator POMERENE. It costs $250,000 to build about 5 miles of road in the United States.

Mr. FARNHAM. Any person who had traveled the country before and subsequently went over that road and saw the sort of road that was built could have nothing but commendation for the marines. It was a great piece of work.

The CHAIRMAN. Have they built other roads?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; they have made other roads there, but I am calling this the main road through to the north. They have built something like 100 miles of other roads in different parts of the island, and very good roads. I might add that they are wide enough for two automobiles to pass, and they are over the mountains some 4,000 feet above the sea and down again.

Senator POMERENE. Am I to infer from your statement that while they had this law for conscripting labor for road building they had never operated under it until the marines took hold of it?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; the Haïtians had built no roads. There were no roads, only trails; that is all, bridle paths.

Senator ODDIE. How many miles is the main road?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think about 140. I may be in error, but that is approximately the distance.

Senator ODDIE. In figuring the cost of that road, labor—

Mr. FARNHAM (interposing). The labor was paid nothing. The officers adopted generally the plan which was adopted in the construction of railroads. They fed the men—gave them meals such as they probably never before had had. From my observation in many places it was difficult to drive the men away from the work. They were taken for three days and then told to get out. A large percentage said they wanted to stay in the camp and work. There have been statements made that men were abused and shot, and that may be true—I do not know—but I was up and down that trail quite a bit during the construction at infrequent periods, and I saw nothing of that.

Senator POMERENE. Did you hear of it while you were there?

Mr. FARNHAM. Only in one case. I heard they had a gang of prisoners in one spot that were pretty bad, and that they had had to shoot two or three of them that tried to run away. I rode into one place one afternoon, and I did see some men that were marked off as prisoners. I saw men with handcuffs tucked in their belts working away with the rest. The thing that attracted my attention was the handcuffs hanging to the belts. I think the marines had a very difficult time when they first went in there; there is no doubt about it. The Haitians had all sorts of rifles, good, bad, and indifferent. They were out in the woods. They were bossed by various military chiefs who did not want to lose their positions.

Senator POMERENE. Haitian chiefs?

Mr. FARNHAM. Haitians entirely—in the Haitian Army. And so in the early part of the invasion there was a good deal of sniping and bushwhacking on the part of the natives. Before the American occupation there was never any danger to a white man who traveled in the country. I have been through while the revolutions were on, and a white man was not molested. If he kept out of the mess himself and minded his own business he was perfectly safe.

Senator POMERENE. The white men felt perfectly free to travel across the country?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes. There were not many white men in the country. Before the American occupation I doubt if there were 75 white men in the whole country—straight whites. There were some mulattoes; but, including the Germans, I doubt if there were over 75 white men in the entire country of Haiti. After the American occupation many of the Haitians seemed to turn against the whites, and all white men looked alike.

Senator POMERENE. After the occupation?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. To what do you attribute that?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think that the natives were aroused by the talk of the chiefs and the military generals to believe that the whites were going to make slaves of them again. That was the usual cry; and that the Haitians would have to resist the marines if they wanted to get rid of them, otherwise they would be made slaves. That is the fear that is uppermost in the minds of all Haitians, as ignorant as they are.

Senator POMERENE. What portion of those people can read and write?

Mr. FARNHAM. I doubt if out of the two and a half million there are 50,000 that can read or write. They speak an unknown patois; I do not know what it is. I remember that on one of my trips through the island I had an Englishman with me who had lived for many years in South Africa, in the Congo country, and spoke Kaffir. He tried it on the natives, and all of the old people seemed to understand it, and could talk with him, and he had never been in Haiti before. He noticed many peculiarities of the people, which he said were the same as those of some tribes on the West Coast of Africa. The Haitians, as you probably know, were brought from Africa to Haiti. As late as 1800 they were bringing them in as slaves.

Senator POMERENE. Who?

Mr. FARNHAM. The French, who occupied the island and controlled it in those days. It was the French who developed the coffee, sugar, and indigo industry in Haiti. They had large plantations there, and Haiti produced in those days great quantities of sugar, but in the revolution of 1804 those were all destroyed.

Senator POMERENE. Are the literate and the educated class pure blacks?

Mr. FARNHAM. Of the educated class the majority of them are. A few of the mulattoes are well educated. There are perhaps 250 or 300 men in the whole island who have had a very superior education abroad. They are very highly educated, members of the French bar, some of the English bar, some educated at Oxford, and others at educational institutions in France. They have lived abroad and have acquired the polish of the European; they are very well read in literature; they are pretty good diplomats, very cunning, and a considerable number of them are absolutely untrustworthy; I mean they do not stick to what they agree to.

Senator POMERENE. Are they leaders in these revolutionary movements?

Mr. FARNHAM. They are leaders. The country, up to the time of the American occupation, had been at the mercy of that small coterie of intellectuals who had kept themselves in power by means of revolutions, and who had controlled the finances of the country and profited out of the revenues. The bank, which is the treasury of the government, was compelled, of course, to honor the order of the secretary of the treasury, whoever he might be, nor could we question payments directed by him, although we might realize that they were not really payments which should be made. The arrangement, of course, left the treasury at the mercy of the politicians. They did observe their foreign obligations; they always met the interest on the outstanding bonds in France; they usually took care of their budget, until 1912, when they began to run behind and spent money faster than they were taking it in. Their income in normal times should be between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 gold, United States money, just from their customs. There was and is no other income, no method of taxation.

Land titles are without value. In the city of Port au Prince, Cape Hatien, and one or two of the other important points, I think the titles to city property are good, generally speaking, but when you get out in the open country, outside of these cities, there are no points of survey. There evidently has been no survey of the island in 100 years. It is difficult to locate land, as described by the property owners. People will offer for sale land which they claim to own. If you ask if they have a deed, they will say "yes," but when they hand it to you it is usually a letter from some general who has taken their horse or pigs or other valuables, and in substance it says, "You can live where you are as long as you want." That is a literal translation of the paper they call a deed.

The CHAIRMAN. That is from the general d'arrondissement?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Farnham, I wish you would speak of the work of pacification and the policy of development of the occupation.

Mr. FARNHAM. I never knew of any policy, Senator. I think that is the trouble with Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. When the work of pacification was complete—and that was about when, in your judgment?

Mr. FARNHAM. In 1918 Haiti was as quiet as a churchyard—practically disarmed.

The CHAIRMAN. We had been there three years?

Mr. FARNHAM. And the relations, as far as I could observe, between the occupation and the natives were very good. The people who were educated, one and all, were awaiting the announcement of some plan of development—something which would bring about the construction of roads or bring in American capital to develop the sugar industry or cotton industry under the occupation. No plan seemed to be forthcoming. The men who were in charge of the military occupation all were awaiting it, and they did not know what to do. Many of them had programs which they worked out themselves, or thought out, but they were powerless to put them into effect. I think it was due almost entirely to our failure at that time—and when I say our failure I mean the failure of the United States Government—to present some well-defined plan for the development of that country that led to the renewal of revolutionary conditions. The war came on; they could not export their commodities; there were no ships; they had no money; the best people were really hungry, and they were hard put to it to get enough to eat—people who were theretofore well to do—and they appealed to the American officials for something, but the American officials could do nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. What form did the appeal take, if you know? Was there any formal memorial?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; I do not know of anything of that sort, but I know that individuals and groups did go to the financial adviser at that time, Mr. Ruan, I believe, and to the American minister and others, asking that something be done to give employment to the people of the country—something which would place the ordinary exports and the funds derived therefrom which stopped. I was informed that representations repeatedly were made to Washington of the whole situation, with the request that some plan of development be given them. Personally I called on the Secretary of State at Washington three times and suggested that something of that sort should be done rather promptly. It was not done, and the fallen Haitian military began to talk to the ignorant countrymen—

The CHAIRMAN. We were pursuing a policy of watchful waiting?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes. They led the countryman to believe, and rightly, that it was much worse off than before the American occupation; that the occupation had not brought any benefits to him, except perhaps the death of some of his relatives in the early days, and out of that grew conditions which were worse than prevailed when we first went in. Now, the country is again disarmed, and we have conditions to-day in Haiti practically the same as they were in 1918, peaceful, the people being ready for some comprehensive plan of development. I think before that can be carried out, a change will have to be brought about in the Government position. The dual government under the treaty which it seems to me makes impossible progress there. Nothing can be done by the United States officials.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no central, responsible authority to be found?

Mr. FARNHAM. No. The representatives of the United States, the financial adviser, the military commanders, and the American minister can do nothing without the consent of the Haitians, which they do not get, and the Haitians on their part can do nothing without the approval of the financial adviser. It is a deadlock, and has been so ever since the treaty was put into effect. I do not believe the American officials are to blame for the failure to do something.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, if you would care to do so, will you fix responsibility for the failure to develop and to apply a policy in Haiti?

Mr. FARNHAM. I would not to do that, Senator; I do not think I can. I can only say that no policy was forthcoming.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it in Washington or Port au Prince?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think it was in Washington. Port au Prince had no instructions from Washington. I think that the officers at that time were in command—and they were all strangers to me; I never met any of them. I met them in Haiti, men like Gen. Butler and Gen. Cole, who were in command of the military, and some of the engineers—I think they were as far as they dared go to do something in the way of progress and development. I think, in building these roads, they acted on their own initiative. I understood that instructions about that came from Washington. They wanted to have the people occupied at something. Gen. Cole approached the head of the railroad company to see whether a resumption could be had of the construction of the railroad, but that was impossible, due to the financial situation.

Senator ODDIE. Is there any trouble or lack of unity among the Haitians—that is, in regard to supporting their President?

Mr. FARNHAM. In doing what?

Senator ODDIE. In supporting their President.

Mr. FARNHAM. I think there are the usual political difficulties that there are in every country.

Senator ODDIE. Nothing serious now?

Mr. FARNHAM. No. Of course, each man thinks he ought to be president and would give a good administration. It is the usual political situation.

Mr. ODDIE. Well, the present President, then, is as strong as any man could be there?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think so, under the circumstances. I do not see what man could do more than this man has done. There has been for the last several years a well-defined position on the part of the President and the members of his cabinet and the leading politicians against the American occupation. They were aroused to that by the writings and talk of certain people who thought the Haitians were being abused and that the Americans had no business to be in Haiti. Of course, that would be a popular topic with the politicians, because if the Americans got out they would at once control the funds of the country again; but I feel confident that if the Americans do leave, there would be no development of the country by the Haitians. They would be left just where it was before we went there. The people are sufficiently educated yet to take up, of their own initiative, any development.

They have not the money and they have yet to learn agriculture, as we understand it, and the politicians have no interest in doing that sort of thing. (Whereupon, at 12 o'clock noon, a recess was taken until 3 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled at 3 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of recess, Senator McCormick (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. You were saying, when the hearing was suspended, Mr. Farnham, that the Haitians knew nothing of agriculture, as we understand it. Has anything been done under the occupation to teach them?

Mr. FARNHAM. Not that I know of. I know of nothing that has been definitely undertaken in Haiti since the occupation commenced to develop with the natives the agricultural resources of the island or to seriously develop schools or educational methods. The only schools that I know of in the island are those maintained (and existing before the occupation) by the Jesuit priests, the French priests in the island. At some points they have schools, and they are undertaking to teach the Haitian children. They receive a very small amount of money annually from the Haitian Government, which they apply to purchasing books and materials for those schools—an exceedingly small amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Is anything being done to encourage the Haitians to work? Is he any more secure in the possession of his property or his savings than he was before?

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, he is not now liable to have what he has taken away from him, as under the old rule. Before the American occupation there was a military government in vogue throughout the island. The generals were divided into the generals d'arrondissement and the generals de la place. In their respective districts they were all powerful. They controlled the people as absolutely as if they were czars. The majority of the people did not know who was president and had no interest in it. They were interested more particularly in who might be, under some revolution, the general de la place or the general d'arrondissement, and how much that general might take away from them of their property. In traveling through the country it was necessary to have a pass, which you presented when you arrived at each place where there was a body of troops.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that true for the Haitian citizen as well as the foreigner?

Mr. FARNHAM. All Haitians had to get a pass to travel. You had to present your pass to the officer at that place, tell him whence you had come, and about how long you would stay, and where you were going. In the majority of cases the officer was unable to read your passport. Frequently they would hold it upside down and pretend to read it and hand it back to you, but if you gave them a little compensation that was all that was necessary. Those generals controlled practically everything in their districts when the construction of the railroad was commenced. During the first year it was quite customary, when the men who worked for the construction company received their pay, for the general of that vicinity to be on hand with troops and seize those men as soon as they were paid, put them in jail and take their money away from them, and on Monday they would bring them back to work, all tied together with ropes, and deliver them here. We appealed to the President to break that practice up, because it was difficult to get men. After they had been robbed in that way two or three times they would not work, and we were all the time having to obtain new men. But the appeals to the President at Port au Prince were without avail. It was some time before the practice was given up, and then it was very largely due to the activities of the people in charge of the construction work.

The market women, in passing these places of residence of the commander in the country districts, usually had to give up some of their coffee and some of their cotton as a toll, and frequently, after selling their produce in the town, they would have what they purchased in part taken away from them when they went out. I have frequently seen one woman driving a whole lot of burros on the return trip, while the other women of the party were making a detour through the woods with what they had purchased, in order to avoid the military posts.

In Port au Prince, up to 1915, if you wanted to go out after 6 o'clock at night and wanted to take dinner with a friend, for example, you had to get a pass to go from your house to his. You were stopped at every street corner by the military. That was so in every town of the island. There were military posted at the corners always all night. That custom persisted up to of the American occupation.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let us go back a little, Mr. Farnham. In what did Senator Knox secure the modification of the terms of the bank contract in favor of the Haitians?

Mr. FARNHAM. As I was not present at that time, but was in Europe, I simply state what I was informed. The terms of the loan were rather conservative in favor of the bankers. My understanding is that Senator Knox secured a modification of the terms, so that the bonds brought to the Haitians a return. Also I think he succeeded in having reduced the charges which the contract provided the bank should make for the service rendered to the Government. I was informed by some of my associates who took part in the conferences that he caused modifications to be conceded by the French which were very considerable to the advantage of the Haitian Government.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to turn for a moment again to the question of the corvée, to learn if you have anything to say with regard to the policy which was subsequently attempted by the department of taking men away from the neighborhood in which they lived, and to what extent that practice troubled.

Mr. FARNHAM. I can not answer that from personal knowledge, Senator. It is only hearsay. I was told that the practice had obtained to some extent that men from the south were carried to the north, and vice versa, but it was a matter of hearsay only.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know anything about the charge that the men were being taken under the corvée, when they attempted to escape, were shot?

Mr. FARNHAM. That is a matter of hearsay; I do not know of my own knowledge. At the times when I was in Haiti, when I was along that road, I know none of that. I would say, however, in that connection that my observation of the work were during the régime of Gen. Butler. The people in our country in Haiti have informed me that after he left the island to go to France in 1900, a good deal happened under his successor that did not occur under his administration.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was his successor?

Mr. FARNHAM. A naval officer.

The CHAIRMAN. Williams?

Mr. FARNHAM. William, yes; I do not know what his rank was. I think he was a marine officer; I am not sure. I could not tell you about him from my recall, his name was Williams.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been reported that under Alexander Williams there were abuses in the administration of the corvée which did not obtain under Butler.

Mr. FARNHAM. That was the report that came to me from our employees in the office.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they specific abuses?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; the shifting of men from one part of the island to another, the abuse of some of the men by the minor officers in immediate charge of them, and I have heard that some of them, trying to get away, were shot. But, as I say, that is not a matter of my personal, direct knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. In your judgment, were the roads, and especially the principal highway, of commercial as well as military value?

Mr. FARNHAM. That they built?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, indeed; they facilitated very greatly the travel between the north and the south, which theretofore was confined to the few people who could make it on horseback and by the rather infrequent passage of steamships around the coast.

The CHAIRMAN. Do the peasants avail themselves of these roads in large numbers?

Mr. FARNHAM. I have always found it so when I have been on the market women traveling to market and coming back, and quite a number of people on foot traveling from one point to another in the interior of the country. One road in particular I think has been of very great advantage to the people in the interior; that is the road from Port au Prince across the plains to the de-Sac, over the mountains to a place called Mirebalais, which was almost inaccessible before that road was built. People had to come down the Artibonite River to St. Marc, and then down the coast to Port au Prince, rather than make that journey across there.

The CHAIRMAN. The road, of course, was built out of Haitian funds?

Mr. FARNHAM. That is my understanding; such expenses as were incurred.

The CHAIRMAN. What were the circumstances under which Secretary Bryan suggested that Americans acquire the French shares in the bank; did that suggestion come directly to the National City Bank?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; because—well, it came, in the first instance, to Mr. Werhane, who at that time was vice president of the bank, and myself, in a conference which we had one day with Secretary Bryan, in which he expressed the view that it would be rather advantageous to the country if the banking interests of the island were American rather than French, and asked why we did not undertake to acquire control of the bank. There was some discussion of the suggestion, and from time to time thereafter the matter was brought up in conferences which we had with the Secretary on Haitian matters in general. The idea seemed to be to eliminate, so far as possible, European influences in the island.

The CHAIRMAN. As I remember it, you testified that $1,400,000 was paid for the assets of the bank remaining in the hands of foreign owners?

Mr. FARNHAM. No, sir; if you will pardon me; we paid $1,400,000 for all the assets of the bank, that purchase price to be distributed to the shareholders.

The CHAIRMAN. What were those assets?

Mr. FARNHAM. The assets were all the property of the bank, including the real estate. The bank owned its building in Port au Prince, and at two or three other places in the island.

The CHAIRMAN. That included the Government note?

Mr. FARNHAM. It included the value of the Government contract.

The CHAIRMAN. No; I meant the sum due the bank from the Government of Haiti, which is now maturing in December?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; the $1,400,000 included all assets, including the money in bank, receivables, the property of the bank, loans outstanding, which were considered good, reserves in Paris, and the reserve in New York. The bank has very few deposits.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they at that time include the sum due the bank from the Government of Haiti?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes. I think, perhaps, I may have answered wrongly to your question before. I had it in mind during the recess when Senator Pomerene spoke of it. The amount due the Government was included in the assets.

The CHAIRMAN. I am just trying to make clear to myself the probable value of the assets for which you paid that sum.

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, I think I answered that this morning, $1,500,000. We paid practically what the bank was worth, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the bank was worth $1,500,000, and the note of the Government of Haiti amounted to $1,000,000?

Mr. FARNHAM. To-day its assets are worth $1,500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not include among the assets that note, then, which amounts to $1,500,000?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; including that, and then deducting the liabilities of the bank, we will get a net worth of $1,500,000. We had to assume practically all the liabilities of the bank in purchasing it. You see, the bank is owing now, and has to pay—in fact, is paying out, $2,000,000, which it holds for the account of the Germans in Haiti. We had also to pay the cost of creating the new currency of the bank, as provided under the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. When was the interest payment on the foreign debt suspended, in 1914 or 1915?

Mr. FARNHAM. In 1914, on the interest. They defaulted on the payment of the amortization, I think, about 1911.

The CHAIRMAN. On the amortization?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir; the sinking-fund charges on one of the issues. You see, there are three loans outstanding, the last one being a loan of 1910.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they begin to default on the interest before the occupation?

Mr. FARNHAM. They were actually in default. The bank loaned them the money to complete that payment in 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. They were in arrears?

Mr. FARNHAM. They were in arrears. They had not the money themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. Has any of the interest on the debt been paid since the occupation?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir; under Mr. McIlhenny, who has applied so income to the payment of the interest. I think, if I recall right, it went up to the 1st of January last. I know we transferred and converted francs $3,000,000 United States money, which was sent to Paris and the payment of the interest and arrears, and I think some other were transferred for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. What about the payment of the interest on the debt?

Mr. FARNHAM. I do not believe that has been taken care of.

The CHAIRMAN. When was the default on that begun?

Mr. FARNHAM. I am inclined to think that on some of that interest on some of those bonds the default took place in 1913 on the first subsequently on the other issues.

The CHAIRMAN. The Government had ceased payment of the interest before the occupation, then?

Mr. FARNHAM. That is my recollection, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you care to say anything of the capacity and actions of the Americans in Haiti, whether in the diplomatic service, office of the financial adviser or the collector?

Mr. FARNHAM. I do not think it is my province to make any Those officers whom I met in Haiti in those capacities were all strong men. I knew none of them until I met them in the positions they were feeling, speaking of them as a group, is that they did the best they view of the conditions with which they were confronted under the the absence of any definite policy to be pursued. They always seemed to be drifting and waiting for some plan to be presented to them, and they should proceed. Their hands practically were tied because of the difficulty of obtaining the approval or consent of the Haitian administration of everything they proposed to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. In connection with the recalcitrancy of the Haitian Government, is there anything you can tell the committee about the dissensions in the Haitian Senate?

Mr. FARNHAM. I could not. I was not there when it occurred, and I know is hearsay statements by people who were there. I think the matter was told fully in the newspapers at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. As you remember those newspaper accounts, were they substantially accurate?

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, generally speaking, I think they were correct and were some extravagances in them.

The CHAIRMAN. If I understood you correctly this afternoon, in your opinion there has been no policy established here in Washington?

Mr. FARNHAM. So far as I ever heard of.

The CHAIRMAN. And nothing has been done for the economic reform of the country?

Mr. FARNHAM. Not that I know of.

The CHAIRMAN. Or the establishment of schools generally?

Mr. FARNHAM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Nor for the development of agriculture?

Mr. FARNHAM. Not that I know of. I would say that Gen. Cole—who is General, or Col. Cole—who was first in command, and subsequently Russell, now in command of the marines, and Mr. McIlhenny all have been of that sort. My understanding is that they sent them to Washington for suggestions for which they would like to have had approval so that they could proceed to carry such ideas out, but, to the best of my knowledge, none was forthcoming, and certainly nothing has ever been done there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Government has done nothing to develop the education of the Haitian people for self-government, locally or generally?

Mr. FARNHAM. Not so far as I know.

The CHAIRMAN. I wonder if you would not be willing to send to the committee from New York any suggestions which you might care to make for constructive economic and political policy in Haiti?

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, I would be glad to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like you to think over that.

We were talking this morning of the railroad, which is now in the hands of a receiver, is it not?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And you are the receiver of the railroad?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you the president of the railroad, too, Mr. Farnham?

Mr. FARNHAM. I was president of the railroad company; yes, sir. I took that in order to look after the interests of the bank in respect of the loan made to the construction company.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you originally the president of the railroad?

Mr. FARNHAM. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It was only when the financial situation became hazardous?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think at the commencement of 1913, if I recall rightly, I was made president of the railroad.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it in financial difficulties then, as far back as then?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir; it had been experiencing a good deal of trouble in the construction. The Haitian Government had refused to deliver the definitive bonds on such portion of the work as had been completed. The money provided by the bonds had been exhausted, and the syndicate had been called upon to furnish money through the underwriting which had been undertaken. My position in respect of the railroad is one of a representative character, in so far as being president and director is concerned. I have no personal interest in it. I have no personal investment in Haiti of any kind, in anything, and never have had.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the contract between the Haitian Government and original concessionaire available?

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, you mean the present railroad? The original railroad was commenced, I think, away back in 1905, and—

The CHAIRMAN. You were speaking of the bonds which the—

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, yes; that contract I have in New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you send us a copy of that?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the security which the bank had for this advance to the construction company?

Mr. FARNHAM. The definitive bonds of the railroad company, bearing the guaranty of the Republic of Haiti to pay the interest and sinking-fund charges whenever this railroad was unable to earn the same.

The CHAIRMAN. How much in bonds was the Haitian Government obliged to put up as security for that credit?

Mr. FARNHAM. The construction company deposited bonds of the value of $878,000, I think. I can give you the exact figure later, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. For a loan of half a million?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And is half a million the sum they advanced?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the Government in default now on those bonds, or on the interest on those bonds?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir. They paid two coupons, and after that they were in default.

The CHAIRMAN. In this connection, who is Mr. Lind?

Mr. FARNHAM. He was a telegraph lineman employed by the construction company at the time they were erecting the telephone and telegraph line of the railroad company. Subsequently, he did general work for the construction company, and at the time the construction work and operation of the railroad was suspended he was maintained there, after the forces were dismissed, as a sort of watchman, with headquarters at St. Marc. He was for the time being in charge of the property of the construction company. He was there at the time the American occupation occurred and had general charge of the property at the time the resumption of the railroad service took place. He continued, I do not know how long, Senator, a few months, and then it was advisable to make a change, and he went out of the employ of the company.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time he left the employ of the company what work was he engaged in doing for the company?

Mr. FARNHAM. He was engaged, in general, in looking after the operation of the trains. He was not a railroad man at all, but we could not get anyone to go there at that time to do that work.

The CHAIRMAN. What was he a sort of operating superintendent?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; without that title. It seemed advisable to make a change in his position at the time it was done.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not want to press for the reasons for his dismissal.

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, I think the high officials of the American occupation felt that a change in the management would be desirable. I think there was a lack of cooperation. Mr. Lind and the resident manager in Cape Haitien, Mr. Woolard, both received very explicit instructions. American occupation commenced to cooperate in every way and to facilities for the officers and the troops, and to put themselves at the disposal of the officials of the occupation, and to not haggle over at all but to do what was wanted, and if there was a difference of opinion would be dealt with later on. Mr. Woolard was able to observe the conditions very fully, but Mr. Lind did not seem to be able to comprehend. It was a matter of temperament, I think, more than anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. I want before we adjourn to touch again upon the instances of the landing of the marines. You indicated this morning the landing of American naval forces had been precipitated by the French forces first, prior to the landing of our forces?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; the French had landed at Cape Haitien. A French force was on in the north.

The CHAIRMAN. What occasion had they to land? Were they French interests or French interests?

Mr. FARNHAM. There have always been, since I have known the country, more French people and more French capital engaged in commerce in Haiti at and around Cape Haitien than in any other part of the island. There are probably, too, fewer Germans there than at other points on the island, and it was, I think, largely on account of that predominance of French interests and because the revolution at that moment was prevailing in the vicinity, Cape Haitien, that the French landed at that place. The French force of men, and practically took possession of the whole situation, and the result that peace was restored, the revolutionists were driven out of the country, and things were going along in normal fashion in Cape Haitien.

The CHAIRMAN. Prior to the landing of any American force?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did American forces land them at Cape Haitien, Port au Prince later on?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; Admiral Caperton was sent to Cape Haitien, and he ranked the French captain or the French officer, whoever it might be. The French withdrew on board their ship, which, my understanding, was away; they simply took their men on board ship.

The CHAIRMAN. After the American forces had landed?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the French land at Port au Prince later?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir. My understanding of that is that they landed before the Americans. I was not present at that time in Haiti, so I cannot say you the reports made to me by our railroad and bank people who were present.

The CHAIRMAN. Since we have discussed the landing at that time, will you throw any light upon the landing of the marines from the Machias at Port au Prince on December 17, 1914—that would be prior to the occupation—removal of a sum of money from the bank vaults in Port au Prince, New York?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir. We had in the vaults of the bank at that time a considerable amount of gold. There had been repeated demands upon the Haitian Government for further loans from the bank, which demands had been refused, and there were threats by the various officials of the Haitian Government that they would raid the bank and take that money. Threats or threats had reached Mr. Bryan—how I do not know—who was then Secretary of State, and he requested some of us to come to Washington and discuss the matter with him. Mr. Werhane, the then vice president of the Bank of America and myself came here, and after a long discussion of the whole situation, we arranged that at least half a million dollars should be brought to New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Out of how much?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think we had then about a million dollars there. We retained some in the island. We had thought some of transferring it to New York ourselves, but there was no way of getting it over there at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that the gold reserve of the gourde circulation?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir; it was a part of that.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, under the terms of the contract with the bank, did the gold reserve the property of the bank or of the Government?

Mr. FARNHAM. It was held by the bank in trust for that particular purpose. The money had been derived from the sale of the bonds issued by the Haitian Government in the loan of 1910, to the specific amount of $2,000,000, or ances, which was set aside under the contract for the purpose of retiring the old paper money under a law of retirement to be enacted by the Haitian Congress. Such a law was not enacted promptly. In fact, I think it was about 1913 when it was passed, and the bank was instructed to commence the retirement of the old paper gourdes, and for that purpose, if I recall rightly, of the 2,000,000 we sent $1,000,000 in gold to Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. The bonds had been sold in New York?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; in France. No issue had ever been brought out in New York, but all in France. The retirement had proceeded for only a very small amount when a new government came in power, and they stopped the retreat, so it was called.

The CHAIRMAN. The retreat of the money?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes; and the subsequent Government ordered it commenced gain, and then countermanded its order, and it was in those times when the demands were made upon the bank for further loans, and we refused those after consultation with the State Department here.

The reason the money was brought from Haiti to New York in a warship was because it was impossible to obtain insurance upon it in the small ships of the Dutch Line which were then operating. It was after presenting that situation to the Secretary of State that it was arranged that the Machias, I think it was, would bring the money to New York. It was brought up and placed on deposit in New York and held there for the account of the retreat, in which it subsequently was employed. The Haitian officials did carry out their threat finally to raid the bank. The then minister of state, I think it was, the minister of foreign affairs, led a detachment of troops one day to the bank and they broke in. The man in charge managed to close the door of the large vault, but the soldiers obtained $62,000 in gold from the cash drawers and went away with that.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the attitude of the resident director of the bank, whose name was Desrue?

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, Mr. Desrue had been employed in the bank for quite while. What do you mean by his attitude?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I see in a report by M. Louis Borno that he attributes to Mr. Desrue the information that the removal of the Treasury to New York was unnecessary.

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, Mr. Desrue, I do not imagine, knew anything about it until he received instructions to deliver the money to the officers of the ship.

The CHAIRMAN. What was his function in the bank there?

Mr. FARNHAM. He was at that time acting manager of the bank. He was in charge of the affairs of the bank at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he remain there in charge for long afterwards?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; he was succeeded by a new manager whom we obtained, a Mr. Scarpa. Mr. Desrue is now acting assistant manager of the bank. He is still in the employ of the bank.

The CHAIRMAN. Subsequently, the bank, acting through Monsieur Casenave and yourself, under date of the 10th of July, 1916, made what agreement relative to the reserve?

Mr. FARNHAM. That was an agreement which was arrived at after about a year's discussion here, participated in by the officials of the Haitian Government, who were sent here for that purpose, in an endeavor to reach a new and final agreement covering the retreat of the old money, the issue of new bills for the bank, and an adjustment as to the amount which had been so far retired, and how much of the money had been used for that purpose. There were some other considerations also.

The CHAIRMAN. You made that agreement?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir; that was entered into.

The CHAIRMAN. Has it been carried out?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the money been retired and the new issue made?

Mr. FARNHAM. Practically all of it; yes, sir. There is a relatively small amount of the old money remaining outstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. You agreed at the same time to return the sum carried to New York?

Mr. FARNHAM. It has been done, together with all the accrued interest thereon during the time it was up here, a part of the time 2½ per cent, a part of the time 3 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I think before we conclude we ought to touch up the charges which are made in Haiti relative to a monopoly of import and export of gold, and perhaps foreign exchange. Can you throw on that, Mr. Farnham?

Mr. FARNHAM. Well, I personally did not take part in those matters concerning the matter you refer to. That was attended to by Mr. Allen that time one of the vice presidents of the City Bank, and who for that time had been manager of the bank in Haiti. I think there has always been a misunderstanding about that. The paragraph which the Haitian Government objected to in the monetary reform agreement, as it was called, was intended to give the bank any monopoly of the sort described. The bank has had that monopoly, except in so far as you would find it in the fact that it was the only bank in Haiti until the advent of the American-Foreign Banking Corporation, and subsequently the Royal Bank of Canada. No other bank operated during the life of the bank to prevent the German merchants from bringing in gold if they wanted to or shipping gold out, and they could have brought gold into the country, or I could or anybody. So the bank with the bank and others brought in and shipped out their own currency.

In this connection—and, if you please, I am giving my own understanding because at the time I did not participate in the matter—Mr. McElwaine, some of the other officials who were then representing this Government in Haiti felt that it would be advisable to have some sort of a control over the amount—not control, but a means of knowing, if you please, the money coming in or any considerable amount of gold in or out, and in that connection prepared a paragraph, which was inserted in the agreement and subsequently modified. In its changed form it was referred to the Department, and I know quite a number of those merchants and others who had misunderstood the original paragraph and opposed it in its original form did give their approval to the amended form. Under the modified form other banks could have brought in gold, and they could have shipped it out. The Haiti Bank would have purchased bills on responsible banks in the United States at the prevailing rate of exchange plus the ordinary commission of 1 per cent, which was what it had always done, or what the Royal Bank of Canada would do, or what the American-Foreign Banking Corporation would do.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Farnham. Mr. Allen is now in New York?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir. He resigned from the National City Bank in November, I think, to become the president of the American-Foreign Banking Corporation, where he now is.

The CHAIRMAN. What are his initials?

Mr. FARNHAM. John H.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else you have to say to the commission?

Mr. FARNHAM. I think not.

I would, however, like to answer one question you asked me concerning the future of Haiti. I believe that Haiti can be made exceedingly prosperous by developing certain lines—sugar, coffee, cotton, and tobacco. I think that the Haitians should be taught to become a good and efficient laborer. If left alone by the United States, he is as peaceful as a child, and as harmless. In fact, the Haitians are nothing but grown-up children, ignorant of all agricultural methods, and they know nothing of machinery. They must be taught. I think that the United States could be put into effect in Haiti, which would give the people, the young people, particularly, the children, opportunities for education; establish a direct and complete control over the finances of the country under a budget, I think it would be but a few years before Haiti would be able to take care of all her obligations out of her revenues, and have a surplus left, and I think it would become, considering its relative size, a prosperous country as Cuba has proven to be.

The CHAIRMAN. At various times in the past you made suggestions to the State Department for the development of a policy. Were those suggestions very formal, written suggestions, or only in the course of conversation?

Mr. FARNHAM. No; they were made, on two or three occasions, at the request of the President, through Mr. Bryan. They went to Mr. Bryan on his own request.

The CHAIRMAN. In writing?

Mr. FARNHAM. Yes, sir. I do not know whether they are in the files of the State Department or whether they were passed on to President Wilson, but on two or three occasions I was requested to prepare a paper of that sort.

ODDIE. What are the sanitary conditions in Haiti?

FARNHAM. Now, in Port au Prince and in the principal towns they are the buildings and houses lack sanitary appliances, as we understand almost completely, but the streets in Port au Prince, the principal have been paved.

CHAIRMAN. Is that true of St. Marc and Cape Haitien, too?

FARNHAM. Yes, sir; the streets of Port au Prince have been paved, some and some of the principal streets of St. Marc and Cape Haitien and Aux have been macadamized, and all are swept and kept quite clean under revision of the military.

ODDIE. Have the conditions along that line been improved since American occupation?

FARNHAM. There was not any such thing before. The only thing which before anywhere was in Port au Prince, where about a year, I think, the American occupation some contractors had undertaken the paving of some of the streets in Port au Prince. That work was suspended at the beginning of the American occupation and resumed some months later under the direction of Army or Navy engineers, and a considerable amount of work has been done there. The noticeable change, however, is in the small towns, which were very filthy, and with nothing at all approaching sanitation. Now, the situation is different and the streets are clean.

ODDIE. What has been done since the American occupation in reference to the public health?

FARNHAM. Beyond the measures I have just described, I know of nothing more. I do not know just what could be done. The people live all over the country. They live in little shacks which are pretty dirty. The people, the Haitian country people, are very clean. They spend a considerable portion of their time in the rivers and streams washing themselves and their clothes.

ODDIE. I mean in regard to combating disease.

FARNHAM. I think very little. Until this smallpox outbreak of a year ago there has been quite some years since there has been any epidemic in the country. Last time it was yellow fever. I think that was 12 or 14 years ago. The United States marines have charge of the sanitation there, and they employ men in cleaning up the streets and keeping them clean. (Witness was thereupon excused.)

CHAIRMAN. Thereupon presented the following list of witnesses, whom he called to the committee should be called during the course of its hearings:)

1. W. B. Caperton, United States Navy.

2. Josephus Daniels, Raleigh, N. C.

3. Robert Lansing, Washington, D. C.

4. Pilkington, P. W. Chapman & Co., third floor, 115 Broadway, New York

City, 3604 Broadway, apartment 4, New York City, telephone Audubon

5. Tippenhauer, 723 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

6. Luckerman, 110 Crawford Street, care of E. Levy, Roxbury, Mass.

7. Burrows, 253 Belgrade Avenue, Roslindale, Mass.

8. W. Johnson, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

9. J. Seligman, care of James W. Johnson, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York

City. 10. Ton Evans, First Baptist Church, Port Matilda, Pa.

11. George Barnett, United States Marine Corps, headquarters Department of the Pacific, San Francisco, Calif.

12. Medley Butler, United States Marine Corps, Quantico, Va.

13. Admiral Knapp, United States Navy.

14. Middleton W. Waller, United States Marine Corps.

15. L. Farnham, vice president National City Bank, New York City.

16. A. McIlhenny, financial adviser Haitian Government, care of State Department, Washington, D. C.

17. Judge Colby, 1315 F Street, American National Bank Building, Washington, D. C.; 32 Nassau Street, New York City.

18. L. Allen, president American-Foreign Banking Corporation, New York

City. Thereupon the committee adjourned until 10.30 o'clock a. m. Wednesday, May 2, 1921.)

REPORT INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

Committee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m. pursuant to adjournment, Senator McCormick (chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators McCormick, Oddie, King, and Pomerene.

Present: Mr. Ernest Angell, representing the Haiti-Santo Domingo Independence Society, etc.

GELL. I request the privilege of the committee of being allowed to put directly to witnesses called before the committee. In making this I do so because I feel that it is probable that as to many of the witnesses only in this manner that the essential facts can be brought out, have made a detailed study of the situation, and in many cases have had detailed interviews with the witnesses; know what they will say before the committee, and, without any reflection whatever upon the committee, in many of these instances the members of the committee have not had opportunity to talk with the witnesses beforehand, and can have only a general idea as to what the witnesses will testify, so I therefore request that privilege.

POMERENE. In whose behalf do you appear?

GELL. I appear on behalf of the Haiti-Santo Domingo Independence Society, the Union Patriotique d'Haiti, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. I appeared at the first hearing, and have attended the hearings, in fact, and submitted on behalf of these organizations a Memorial, an outline statement of the joint position assumed by the various groups.

CHAIRMAN. I suggest that the committee consider Capt. Angell's request and make its decision.

POMERENE. Yes.

The following papers are copies of memorandum, sworn affidavits, and letters from President Harding, ex-President Woodrow Wilson, ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, Senator Hitchcock (then chairman of Foreign Relations Committee), and letters subsequently written the Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the United States Navy, by Hon. T. Ch. Moravia, consul general of the Republic of Haiti at Washington, D. C., with replies of Second Assistant Secretary of State, in behalf of then President Wilson, from Josephus Daniels, etc., showing the strenuous and persistent efforts made through official channels of Government of late administration for over two years to right the wrongs of same in the black Republic of Haiti, and the appeals made for interviews and the appointment of a commission to investigate the conduct of American forces in Haiti and by the first official spokesman the Rev. L. Ton Evans until at last brought to an end and scandalous conditions, with the approval of the late Theodore Roosevelt to President Harding and the national Republican council at Washington, D. C., with the result of present Senate committee (commission) appointed President to investigate the occupation and administrations of the Republics of Haiti and Santo Domingo by the forces of the United States.)

CHESTNUT AVENUE, KINGSTON, PA., October

HON. WOODROW WILSON,
President of United States.

DEAR PRESIDENT: May I respectfully request a brief interview affairs, that I hope will lead to the appointment of a commission to investigate conditions there?

The present situation is very bad, and I have faithfully pledged leaders of this little nation, irrespective of creed or politics, that I merely see you but assured them the moment matters are placed before President a commission will be granted to go carefully into these so grave Haitian affairs.

I have just forwarded a memorandum addressed to you, sir, to my friend Dr. T. Jesse Jones, of the Government Bureau of Education, containing brief sketch of self, with relation to Haiti grievances commencing with recommendations.

The names of Dr. Moton, Dr. Dillard, Dr. Brink, Hon. Geo. Foster, Father Curran, Dr. Jesse Jones, and Admiral Caperton, or men of this type are suggested as members of this commission, not merely to make a full and thorough investigation of present wrong but from the evidence at the inquiry, so as to formulate a simple and satisfactory plan for future development of this Negro republic along the lines of treatment in light of "war ideals."

Having come directly to the States, and mainly for this purpose, I profoundly appreciate such an interview at this time, and, if agreeable, Dr. Jesse Jones, and Dr. Brown (president of my own missionary board) will come whenever convenient for you to see us next week or at least return to Haiti this month.

I am most anxious for the sake of our President and our Government that everything shall be satisfactorily adjusted and real constructive work in developing Haiti shall as soon as possible be proceeded with on terms that are understood and explained by our President.

I have purposely refrained from making any public references to the serious and sad conditions in the Black Republic in preaching or addresses, and thus far have kept from Negro convention, and for same reason attend forthcoming race congress (though invited) at Washington this fall for the iteration of the cruel and brutal scenes, as I have personally witnessed them, will immediately "fire" not only an audience of Negroes but Baptists of both North and South and Protestants of America generally. At this critical period we are anxious to avoid, sincerely believing (and repeatedly assured the leaders and Haitians) will be immediately and effectively remedied the moment matters are brought to your personal attention grounds furnished to justify such action on your part.

As I am leaving for Baptist conventions in North Carolina, where I myself shall speak on conditions of Negro womanhood in Haiti, and expect to meet Dr. Brown, a reply addressed to him there will reach you day or Monday. Praying God to spare your valuable life, etc., and I remain, sir, your friend, and Haiti.

NOTE.—As requested, Mr. Tumulty replied in behalf of President. His letter was handed over to Mr. Lansing to be dealt with, directing me to make all further communications re Haiti to Secretary of State. All further correspondence both with Lansing and Tumulty in behalf of poor Haiti proved of no use.
 L. T. E.

NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL, LINCOLN HEIGHTS,
 Washington, D. C., October 1

HON. GILBERT M. HITCHCOCK,
Chairman of Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

DEAR SIR: While appreciating the brief interview given me on Wednesday, and the serious conditions in Haiti, and demanding urgent attention of the Government, I wish to state that the following morning Mr. Stabler, an Assistant Secretary at the State office and in charge of Haiti affairs, and after my appeal (and even threat of bringing matters before Senate and Congress) last fixed Monday morning, 11 o'clock, to go carefully with me into the matters.

As I understand that this very official it was who made complaint to the missionary board, absolutely misunderstood my position, and therefore gro

ed my attitude to these Negroes, demand ng of them my being recalled e black Republic on account of my Christian activities (without defining ctivities) has now granted me the opportunity sought (though post- efused me by the Negro committee of the Lott Carey Mission Board), understand I am sure under these circumstances the reasonableness of using my placing these facts before you, with evidence substantiating or consideration of yourself and Senate Foreign Relations Committee ter this interview (official) with above Secretary Stabler.

ed he and the State Department fail to attend at once to this urgent and call the special attention of the President to same, then it will uty as an American citizen, not to say a Christian missionary, to come Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, through you as chairman, with of having this special commission immediately appointed, and see that ut treaty made by our own Government is scrupulously carried out, and e light of our present "war ideals" proclaimed at this moment through- whole civilized world.

ivilized, humane, democratic United States Government, with a Chris- sident, and at a moment we ourselves are champion ng the sanctity of and liberties and rights of small nations in Europe and Asia must itself utely freed from the very insinuation, not to say the open charge now Haiti and by Haitians all over the Republic, of actual insincerity and and attempt to repudiate our solemn treaty obligations at this time in k Republic.

e myself personally and persistently maintained that all mistakes, s, if not something worse (crimes and treachery on the part of officers e both in Haiti, backed by some in Washington), which have caused the reversion of feeling in Haiti's present attitude toward our President, ment, and everything American, and which are back of these insinua- d charges are without the knowledge of President or responsible United Government, and, furthermore, the moment these are directly and offi- brought before them the whole business will receive immediate atten- everything adjusted.

ing you for interview and interest, I have the honor to remain, sin- ours, and for Christ and Haiti.

d at request of Senator Hitchcock, chairman of Committee on Foreign Rela- of the Government; and also Mr. Stabler, of the Latin-American section of ate Department, to latter of whom it was submitted Monday morning, October 18, for presentation through Secretary Lansing to the President.]

NDUM TO THE HON. WOODROW WILSON, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, ESENT SITUATION IN HAITI, SHOWING SOME OF THE CAUSES OF DISCON- WITH RECOMMENDATIONS AND REQUEST FOR A COMMISSION TO CAREFULLY IGATE THE MATTERS COMPLAINED OF AND FURTHER FORMULATE A SIMPLE FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE BLACK REPUBLIC ALONG TREATY LINES, E LIGHT OF WAR IDEALS OF OUR GOVERNMENT, PARTICULARLY AS SET BY THE PRESIDENT HIMSELF AT WASHINGTON'S TOMB THE 4TH OF JULY AND SINCE.

PREAMBLE.

th as an American citizen and a Christian missionary, naturally moved apathy for Haiti and its over 2,000,000 Negroes at this time of suffer- distress, and looking to the United States for redress of their griev- and while assuring you of the genuine gratitude, shared by every loyal otic Haitian, both educated and uneducated alike, that Admiral Cap- ed his American marines at Port au Prince, thus rescuing their politi- and revolutionary bleeding Republic from the iron grasp and selfish Germans, who for years had financially and murderously exploited aid of Berlin money and ammunition; and expressing our deep appre- of the splendid work already done in Haiti by our "American occupa- and under exceptional (European) war conditions, the Lott Carey Mis- Foreign Baptist Board and myself, as its missionary and superintend- alti, are at the present moment, and just when our Christian President ized, humane, and democratic United States Government are cham- the "sanctity of treaties," liberties, and rights of small nations, still more anxious, if possible, we shall ourselves be perfectly free from suspicion, not to say insincerity, and charges of a desire to "repudiate our own treaty obligations either in Haiti or any other part of the world."

I have therefore respectfully but resolutely maintained that what takes, blunders, or, indeed, something worse, committed by officers, gendarmes (native police), and other representatives we have in Haiti, causing a version of feeling throughout the whole black Republic against our Government, and everything American, which is positively the cause of mistakes, blunders, etc., have been actually committed without the knowledge therefore without the sanction or authority, of either our President or our visible United States Government; and, indeed, moreover, I added, that what are properly brought to the direct attention of our Government at Washington a fair and thorough investigation will be at once made and matters set for in the expressed language of the treaty itself—

"The United States, as well as the Republic of Haiti, desire to continue and strengthen the amity existing between them by the most cordial co-operation in measures for their common advantages, to maintain tranquillity of the public to carry out plans for the economic development and prosperity of the Republic and its people."

As showing my own position, relation to, and interest in Haiti, the following brief statement regarding myself may be necessary:

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

Born and educated in Wales; graduated in 1887 from Haverfordwest Baptist Seminary, specializing in theology, philosophy, and political economy, as well as securing the London scholarship.

I was ordained the same year at the new and growing Barry District missionary-pastor, and where I also soon became the organizing secretary of the Barry and District Gospel Temperance Council, embracing the social as well as temperance activities; in fact, of all the evangelical and friendly societies of that section.

This brought me into personal touch and active association with the leaders and social reformers of Britain, many of whom, such as Horace Maclean, chairman of committees in the British House of Commons; Lloyd-George, prime minister and secretary of war of Great Britain; and whom I have been privileged to instruct in fights against booze; together with the late Sir Sam T. Evans, president-judge of Britain's prize wars, count as personal friends.

The latter also defended me before Lord Mercy, of Titanic and fame, in a libel case, which drew considerable attention at the time, the plaintiff pleaded guilty to prostituting his public position, misapplying public funds, and had to quit all civic and public offices and leave the country (Lord Mercy commended the valuable service rendered by the writer to the community through exposing dishonesty in high public offices.)

In 1891 my Barry church allowed me to travel in the East, visiting Palestine, Asia Minor, Turkey, etc.; and in 1892 I accepted the position of general missionary of the Jamaica Missionary Board in Haiti, but in the following year, owing to serious illness of wife, returned to Wales and settled again in Cardiff Dock.

Early in 1902 resigned to accept First Baptist Church, Edwards, when among other letters of commendation was one from Mr. Lloyd-George. Believing in a republican form of government, I took out citizen papers in Pennsylvania, but in 1908, after resigning this charge, and speaking out the churches of Wales on Haiti and its people, as well as here in the United States, I returned as field secretary to the Black Republic.

While in Jamaica in 1910, in behalf of Haiti, and after personally investigating the religious and social as well as economic conditions there at the abject state of East Indians (coolies), called contract laborers by the planters (and corporations), but better known as "scabs" in this country, how Jamaica was being depleted of its own Negro sons of the soil, who (this species of slavery) were forced in thousands to Cuba, Panama, and elsewhere for work or starve in their island home. I took up the matter with the Government and through the parliamentary secretary of the Labor Department to the House of Commons.

With the aid of the Anti-Slavery Society (London), and after circulating 300 Welsh, Irish, Scotch, as well as English members of the British cluding Prime Minister Asquith, George, and others of the cabinet, as the King, and setting forth some very startling facts, substantiated by figures (colonial) and documentary evidence, the Government (in spite of so-called findings and recommendations of their recent royal commissions) perpetuate the unjust, immoral, and cruel system in the West Indies) "act in council" very soon compelled the governors of Jamaica and . etc., to pass at once legislation curbing those (British and American) planters and fruit growers who insisted on having cheap coolie labor. The Labor Party further got the Government to prohibit the exploitation of the Indian British subjects as serfs and slaves. (Sir Lewis Harcourt, Secretary for their Colonies, wrote thanking me in Haiti for furnishing the Government with these facts.)

I not only represented Haiti at and took public part in the World's Alliance in Philadelphia but was privileged that same year to bring a letter to the States from Haiti signed by late President Leconte, Hon. J. E. (for years representing Haiti in Washington and at Berlin), with nearly a million Haitians, such as senators and ex-senators, deputies and ex-deputies of all the courts, inspectors, generals, Haitian employers of labor, earnestly praying Messrs. Rockefeller, Carnegie, and others of our American philanthropists to establish in Haiti a "national industrial college" on a basis, such for instance as Hampton and Tuskegee. It was deposited for some time here in Washington at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace (through victory) Bureau, under the care of the East and North.

President Simon and his Government at the time, who heartily supported the "project" as they called it, promised 300 acres of land for this purpose, also practically all the civic councils in the Republic passed, resolutely and officially wrote thanking me for my deep interest in Haiti and their kind expressing sincere hope that my mission to the States in their behalf would be crowned with success. (Dr. Furniss, our United States minister to Port au Prince, and our American Consul Livingston at the Cape, emphatically indorsed the petition and gave highest commendations.)

In pleading with our Negroes of the South during 1912 to come to the aid of their own race in the black Republic, the present Lott Carey Foreign Baptist Convention partly responded, and to their credit it decided to undertake the evangelization of this field, and for this purpose sent their president, Dr. C. S. and Dr. A. M. Moore to visit the Republic. The white Baptists of the Convention template to cooperate with our board after the war.

At the end of last year Mrs. Evans and myself again left the States to visit superintendents, etc., under our Lott Carey Board in Haiti.

SPECIAL GRIEVANCES.

I have appealed repeatedly to our Government for aid and protection to Haiti's people, and as representative of Haiti's Presidents more than once during the reign of President Cleveland, Taft, and the present administration, I therefore not only rejoiced at last come to the rescue of these quiet, kind-hearted, and helpless people from atonic tyranny, but I was determined to assist our "American occupiers" as far as possible (and proper for missionaries) in our work.

I am however delighted at the generous terms of the "treaty" which at its commencement I understood in the light of the official declarations of President Taft. I have during the last seven or eight months in Haiti been shocked and saddened by what I have been an eyewitness of, apart altogether from the evidence of others, as to the deliberate and ruthless violations of the "treaty," both in spirit and letter, to wit:

1. The forcing of a new constitution upon the people, under military pressure of the gendarmes (native police) of the American occupation, on the 12th of June last, and so as to change the land clause in favor of the white and to accomplish this by methods which would be declared in the most advanced and civilized countries as both illegal and fraudulent.

2. The intelligent Haitians connected with the Government, or American occupiers who in fear and trembling were compelled to vote, be dismissed, or imprisoned if they refused, very aptly described these humiliating proceedings as "planting a dagger into the very heart of their own Negro Republic."

3. The closing on two separate occasions of Senate and Chamber of Deputies at Port au Prince and turning out by military force (gendarmes) under the command of the Haiti people's only representative bodies; then locking the Senate and Chamber doors against them, exactly as the late Czar did to the Russian people's Duma; and while friendly to our United States Government and favorable to our American occupation merely, it is said, because they tested against and opposed (as illegal and unconstitutional) to change the constitution, they felt to be the vital clause in their constitution, namely, the withdrawal of land from the white foreigner and American speculator.

Haitian judges who declared this to be illegal are said to have been driven out of office or imprisoned, or both, and in spite that under the new constitution foreigners (white and colored) could hold real estate on the same terms as in District of Columbia—that is, by becoming Haitian citizens. See "Haiti, Her History and Her Detractors," by the late Hon. J. M. W. McKim, Haitian minister for years in Washington.

3. The taking through force and much brutality, leading frequent disorders by ignorant, immoral, and drunken "armed gendarmes" in the exercise of our "occupation" of innocent men and women; even members of the clergy driven from their simple homes, small habitations, at their work to their business, as well as on the way to divine worship—cruelly and tightly together and marching same as African slave gangs to prison.

The writer and others were eyewitnesses of this Sunday morning, June 1, 1900, and present at the occupation doctor's treatment of the wounded through such brutal handling, unhealed for many weeks and months, which the white American doctor said was very frequently the case.

It is only fair to state, however, that owing to the terrible amount of alcohol and taffia drinking among white and native officers and gendarmes, "occupation," Col. Russell (to whose attention I had called a few cases) has lately and as a protective measure issued a proclamation under heavy penalty the sale of such to their men in uniform. This should now be made to extend to the whole Republic, and applied to white and black.

4. The arresting of natives in large numbers (again by force) at their own little small farms, and making them work on new roads, miles away, "armed gendarmes," and for merely a gourde (20 American cents) a day without food, as affirmed by the natives and corroborated by the general opinion.

The reason given is twofold—the failure of our United States Government to make the necessary "loans" to enable the "occupation" to pay a part of an illegal construction placed by American representatives on the ground (or custom) called corvée: requiring natives (farmers) to give so much time a year to repair roads opposite their own habitations.

OTHER REASONS GENERALLY ALLEGED.

These serious frictions and cruel treatment of natives which excite passions, leading to resentment and murder, are said also to be the result of frequent changes made by the United States Government as to their representatives in Haiti since Admiral Caperton and his marines landed in the Republic years ago; and that in and for most of such appointments subsequent to the Roman Catholic Church, through the Pope's special delegate, the American Prince, and the American capitalists now in Haiti, are largely responsible.

Entangling alliances of such character and diverse interests only tend to strengthen the position and add to the power and efficiency of our occupation (whose influence and official authority in Haiti should be paramount), nor can they inspire the confidence of either the Haitian people or its people, in fact, in the pure and impartial administration of our own President and Government stand for, and we have official evidence to give Haiti after years of exploitation by European filibusterers, scrupulous and dishonest speculators.

The influence of the Pope's white delegate and the white priests and black Presidents, cabinets, etc., has always been something akin to Rasputin, the monk, on the late Czar and Czarina, plus the corporations have invaded the Black Republic, and one of which boasts of unlimited wealth with stockholders close to the United States Government, and therefore right of way in the Black Republic.

This one claims in Haiti to supply the United States Government with its airplane fleet, etc., and its representative in our Republic, the "Pan-American Magazine" last year, admits "that soldier and and Santo Domingo switch from soldier to anything from blacksmith to court judge," and in another number of the same magazine he peremptorily demanded "that article 6 of the Haitian constitution, which specifies that a foreigner (which is entirely false, as shown already by the late Hon. Mr. [?]) may own land, must be repealed."

RECOMMENDATIONS SINCERELY URGED.

A very careful observation, frequent consultations with Presidents and other educated and uneducated, Catholics and Protestants alike, white and black, including officers of our American occupation, and those even next door to Dartigueville at this moment—and especially since Haiti, like every country, must in the main, educationally, industrially—as well as religiously—be gradually developed by its own trained Negro sons and daughters under sympathetic, experienced, and efficient American leadership—I have no doubt therefore in suggesting the following to the earnest consideration of the President and Government:

First, in the spiritual interests of the Protestant and Catholic churches, it is indispensable to honest and efficient administration, both should be officially and completely separated from the Haitian Government exactly as in the United States.

Second, the Protestant churches receive a small subvention (appropriation) to pay their missionaries and pastors' salaries of something like $4,000 annually, while the Catholic Church, altogether and including maintenance of an American Catholic College to train white priests for Haiti in France, draws $150,000 to $200,000 yearly from the coffers of the bankrupt Black Republic (now through the hands of the United States general receiver). The constitution of the Haitian Republic strictly stipulates that all religions, whether Protestant or Catholic, in Haiti are equally free. The old constitution is defunct several years ago, and the Pope, a foreign potentate, and has no right to make any contract with the Haitian Government, nor the United States. (See Art. XI, on p. 8 of treaty.)

Third, Articles VIII and IX, on pages 6 and 7 of treaty, not only make no provision for the financing of either Protestant preachers or Catholic missionaries, etc., but emphatically prohibits the diversion by the American general receiver in Haiti, and appointed by our United States Government, of any portion of the revenues collected by him for any such purpose, and more especially in the financial condition the Haitian Government is in at the present time. (See above articles of treaty.)

Fourth, the United States Government shall itself, or jointly with Rockefeller, and other such known foundations, and in accord with the prayer of the treaty referred to deposited at Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, establish in Haiti a "National Industrial School," with such a board of trustees as Mr. Moton or Dr. T. Jesse Jones at the head, and under a joint board of American and Haitians appointed by our President, and for the training of the young manhood and womanhood for educational, industrial, and even readership in their own Republic.

Fifth, that our Government shall also see that when Haiti's new public instruction scheme is introduced, free, compulsory, and under present changed conditions—English made equally as essential with French and the Bible, or portions thereof as agreeable to both Protestant and Catholic—is read in the above industrial college shall become incorporated as an important part of Haiti's educational equipment.

Sixth, that small native ownership of land shall be created by the United States Government and "loans" made on simplest terms, and through a special board of above "industrial school" conferences and exhibitions shall be planned at convenient centers to encourage and teach the small farmer to his habitation along scientific lines and to the best advantage.

Seventh, contemplated by the treaty between the United States and Haiti, that a series of agricultural, and industrial, as well as the educational development of the Black Republic shall be initiated by, financed through, and supervised by the United States Government, and neither delegated to individuals or nations who may have officials of the United States or the Haitian Republics financially interested therein. (See treaty, Art. Q, and p. 4.)

(f) Now that Haiti has declared war, Germans interned, our United States Government shall grant us our full share of all necessities by way of the lowest price; make generous "loans" to enable our occupation with its constructive program, and give all their Haitian laborers not less than a gourde and a half (30 American cents) a day. All forced labor and the case of prisoners and known criminals) to be at once abolished and a quiet and peace-loving people. (Maintenance "by the United States Government in Haiti adequate for the protection of life, property and individual liberty. See treaty, Art. XIV, p. 8.)

(g) Consistent with the sacred principle of "religious liberty" and the interest of sane Christian efforts and efficient missionary work among the Negroes of Haiti, all tendencies to multiply sects should be discouraged. The evangelical churches now in the Republic be encouraged to (voluntarily) cooperate or even unite where this can be done in the interest of good and New Testament life and conduct.

(h) Finally, and with a view of speedily adjusting matters in favor of convincing the people of the sincerity and absolute "good faith" of our United States Government, I respectfully but strongly recommend that a commission be appointed with authority to hear evidence, protect witnesses, whether citizens or employees of the Haitian Government or our own occupation, and to propose to gentlemen who will make a fair and thorough investigation of the present conditions, but will further be able to formulate a satisfactory plan for the future development of the black republic along treaty lines, and in the light of "war ideals" as expressed by both our President and Secretary of State. (This commission is especially demanded by the Haitian people.)

To this end I, therefore, suggest the following names: Hon. M. V. Peabody, Massachusetts; Dr. T. Jesse Jones, Educational Bureau, United States; Hon. G. Moton, Tuskegee, Ala.; Dr. J. Dilliard, Virginia; Dr. Gilbert B. Gambrell, Texas; Father Curran, Pennsylvania; and Admiral C. D. Evans, United States Government, who first landed marines in Haiti.

Our President and Government, as well as any commission of experienced, and highly qualified persons commanding the implicit confidence of both our Government and the American people, can rely not only on the Lott Carey Baptist Foreign Board and myself, as its representative, but all the Protestant and Haitian Catholic leaders alike throughout the Republic will render every assistance possible so as to adjust matters amicably and satisfactorily, maintaining, for instance, our American ideals, prestige and power among the civilized nations of the world, and at the same time developing long-neglected Haiti and its people into a model Republic, public, and cementing them as mentioned in the treaty in the close of amity and brotherhood to us as an United States sister Republic. honor to remain,

Sincerely and loyally, yours, and for Christ and Haiti,

L. TOMLINSON

(A civilian possessed with expert knowledge of the Republic and its people about the same relation to Secretary of State as Col. House does to the President, should prove an invaluable aid to the state office in handling the problem.)

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, to wit:

On this 30th day of October, 1918, before me, the subscriber, a Notary Public in and for the District aforesaid, personally appeared Reuben C. Evans, an American citizen, residing at St. Mark, Haiti, being superintendent of missions, and made oath in due form of law that facts stated herein, with exception of those under section 2, in the memorandum submitted to me, in re of grievances of Haiti, are true to the best of my knowledge and belief, and those under section 2 of the same will be attested to before a commission to be created by the President, and under the United States Government for the protection and by leading persons in Haiti.

L. TOMLINSON

Subscribed and sworn to before me.

[SEAL.]

CHARLES S. CUMMINGS

Notary Public, District of Columbia

My commission expires June 13, 1923.

PEACE THROUGH VICTORY.

CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE.
No. 2 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C., October 18, 1918.

s to certify that in the fall of 1912 the (Rev.) Dr. L. Ton Evans, gentleman and educational superintendent of the Baptist Mission in Haiti, in my hands a petition signed by some 3,000 leading and influential of that island, praying for the establishment in Haiti of a "national and industrial college," similar to Tuskegee and Hampton, on a Christian basis. A remarkable petition remained in the hands of the endowment for some time and after consideration by the executive committee of the endowment was returned to Dr. Evans, who, unfortunately, lost it while traveling in the company with Dr. T. Jesse Jones (commissioner of education).

S. N. S. NORTH,
Assistant Secretary.

Number of copies of the above was ordered to be printed by the executive committee of the "National Race Congress" at its Wednesday meeting, October 23, 1918, as to further inform itself with a view to taking some definite action on this important matter before the President and our Government for the protection of their own people in Haiti.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 2, 1918.

DR. L. TON EVANS,
Chestrnut Street, Kingston, Pa.

The department has received your memorandum upon conditions in Haiti presented on October 21, addressed to the President of the United States, and wishes to inform you that it is receiving the serious consideration of this department as well as of the various other branches of the Government concerned. The department will be pleased to communicate with you at a later date after a careful study of the matters contained in your memorandum is terminated. I am, sir, your obedient servant, for the Secretary of State.

ALVEY A. ADEE,
Second Assistant Secretary.

[A letter to Hon. Hitchcock, chairman of Foreign Relations Committee, pleading for him for an interview with President Wilson, and presentation of petition (random) urging the appointment of a commission re Haiti affairs.]

SENATE OFFICE OF FOREIGN RELATIONS,
November 2, 1918.

CHAIRMAN HITCHCOCK: Accompanying this note is the memorandum submitted at our previous interview, and setting forth the serious conditions in Haiti.

Today, while again at the State Department, I handed a copy of same to the Secretary of Mr. Lansing; he assured me it would be given the Secretary of State the same evening. It was also given Mr. Tumulty, for presentation throughout this morning to the President, and promised to be informed as to whether an interview would be allowed in reference to appointment of a commission for investigation of affairs in the Black Republic. You have undoubtedly seen the statement made through the Associated Press by ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, to the effect that the Haiti Republic is nonexistent to-day, which is true in substance and in fact. I must fully urge your immediate attention to this important matter. I am anxious, if possible, to prevent this from becoming a political party and so can not believe that either our President or our responsible States Government actually know the real facts, which by military or officialism have been persistently withheld from President Wilson and the public, though I sent a registered letter last June direct from Port au Prince, Haiti, to President at the White House, setting forth these things. Another registered letter was forwarded by same mail to ex-President Theodore Roosevelt at Oyster Bay.)

Can you therefore at once and before Monday secure this interview of our President to promise to consider the matter and appointment of a commission to thoroughly and carefully go into Haitian affairs, and—

1. With such promise of commission, to invest same with power to investigate, pay necessary expenses of same, and give these our United States Government adequate protection.

2. Give immediate notification of appointment of commission both in French and English, in the Monitor (Haiti Government's official daily) and in Haitian papers.

3. Finally, that some such person of the legal status of ex-Judge Hughes be counsel or chairman of same, so as to guarantee that even if of and matter referred to shall be impartially and thoroughly gone into, that our President and responsible Government shall be cleared from all suspicion of insincerity, and especially the serious charge (in Haiti) of desire on their part to repudiate in the Black Republic the sacred obligations of their own solemn treaty, made and ratified by the United States Governments, through their representatives, May, 1916.

Sincerely yours,

L. TON EVANS

General Superintendent of Haiti Baptist Convention

NOTE.—Though subsequently waited upon by Senator Hitchcock, at his chambers, accompanied by a strong delegation of white and colored representatives representing northern and southern white Baptists; National and Local colored Baptist conventions, chairman of Race Congress, Colored Baptist Church, with chairman of Washington Baptists, etc., pleading for a commission, we failed to move the Senator.

SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE
Washington, D. C., November 1, 1916

HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
Ex-President of the United States.

DEAR COLONEL: Am writing to heartily thank you for your reply to me here, and to my letter sent from Port au Prince (Haiti) to you setting forth the terrible conditions in poor Haiti consequent of the American and criminal blunders of the American occupation.

Your own statement this week, issued through the Associated Press, that Haiti, under the United States treaty, has completely lost her Republic as such, and such an exposure by you, as the black man's reprobation will bring joy and hope to thousands in Haiti who will read this.

As I anticipated in my letter to you from Port au Prince (immediately after my interview with Col. Russell and earnest pleading with him to save poor Haiti's constitution the following week, but to indefinitely postpone the fake voting and allow me to cable President Wilson to at once appoint a committee of investigation here, which reason I gave for inclosing my communication to President Wilson), the latter was intercepted by military officialism and profiteering politicians of the occupation in certain members of the administration who determinedly and wickedly hold the sad conditions in the Black Republic.

As seen in inclosed copy of letter to Senator Hitchcock, it's no use with President Wilson and the administration. If they refuse to appoint a commission and immediately and efficiently act in the matter, then we must see Senator Lodge and insist on bringing it before Foreign Relations Committee and Congress and the great American public.

Sincerely thanking you for your interest, for Christ and Haiti.

L. TON

[Reply and indorsement of suggestion to bring before Senator Lodge and chairman of Foreign Relations declines finally to act and President refuses to appoint the demanded commission of investigation.]

THE KANSAS CITY STAR, OFFICE OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT
347 Madison Avenue, November 2, 1916

L. TON EVANS,
New Howard House, 600 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. EVANS: I thank you for your letter. After what has already been done, the suggestion you yourself make is certainly as good as can offer. In fact, in the face of the conditions which exist and you described, I do not really know what else to suggest.

Faithfully, yours,

T. ROOSEVELT.

WYOMING, PA., March 27, 1920.

SECRETARY DANIELS,

United States Navy, District of Columbia.

SECRETARY: Inclosed memorandum and sworn affidavit submitted to the Secretary of State, and State Departments, and Senator Hitchcock to the Senate, October, 1918, with present folder will show the serious and deplorable conditions now in vogue in Haiti consequent chiefly to blundering, unskillful, and murderous methods adopted most unfortunately by our military occupation, nullifying and directly repudiating both in spirit and in fact the sacred treaty made between great and powerful United States and the small, weak, and helpless Black Republic on the one hand, and the Second Assistant Secretary Adey, of State Department, in the name of the United States Government, acknowledged receipt of this memorandum, etc., with its earnest request for the immediate appointment of a special commission to thoroughly investigate the matters, and the Government solemnly assured me in Secretary Adey's letter that prompt measures were actually then being taken by all departments interested in Haiti affairs, and conditions "were at the moment under serious consideration" that were set forth in said memorandum; and that the United States Government would notify me officially of the results of their investigations.

Seven months have elapsed since above assurance, with not a word from the Government.

Meantime, however, conditions have been allowed to grow rapidly worse, as stated in the "folder," and these suffering, oppressed, enraged, and sickened people, as evidenced even by riots between marines and gendarmes, not to say the more frequent and daring raids by so-called bandits, are daily growing in strength and numbers as well, and having the sympathy of the more of the moderate, intelligent, and educated and better class of Haitians who have lost respect for and confidence in our American occupation account.

Our influence, therefore, on the wane, and our prestige and power all gone, and our motive and integrity as a democratic, civilized, not to say a just nation (and as pointed out in memorandum) suspected and undermined (in 1918), it is no wonder that the staff correspondent of the New York Tribune, visiting Haiti a little over a month ago, should state:

"It should be remembered that there are many highly educated and substantial citizens of Port au Prince (and he might add in other towns and cities of Haiti) who are no more Cacos than Henry Cabot Lodge is a Hudson River fisherman, and none the less desire a complete change of administration and the end of the present occupation." (See Literary Digest, Mar. 27, 1920, p. 52.)

Under this brutal, bolshevistic American régime, and owing to this criminal and willful refusal of said departments at Washington to officially function after acknowledging receipt of direct and definite inquiries, under these conditions, and the responsible United States Government's official inaction, they were then (October, 1918) actually dealing with the situation; it is not surprising that consequently the white drinking portion of our officials complained of and their gendarmes should become more and more defiant in their barbaric treatment of the poor natives, and even brutal and inhuman toward the whites (both American and European).

Under these conditions in Haiti, under the complete political domination and control of the United States Government marines, and under the emphatic terms of the treaty, drawn up and ratified in Washington by President Wilson and United States Senate, in May of 1916, guaranteeing the integrity of the Negro Republic as such, and ample protection to its liberty, etc.: on my own return to Haiti in December of 1918 (two months after the official assurance was given me by the State Department, and my assurance I relied), it was not at all surprising to have my private residence immediately and ruthlessly invaded by armed native police without notice, and at the imperative and imperious command of one of these white officers of the American occupation.

After arrest I was paraded under heavy armed Negro guard through public streets, cursed and threatened with being shot, etc., by enraged, intoxicated white American marine officers, then driven to prison; was thoroughly searched and photo of my wife and two boys, photo of Wilson, with Mr. Adey, of the State Department's official letter (and me of the United States Government's investigation into cruel, barbarous and murderous conduct in Haiti, etc.), were all with other articles—money, glasses, etc.—all taken away, thence thrust into a dark, and strictly confined behind a thick door, the heavy bar drawn up behind me, and a constant armed guard kept day and night, and no other person dare visit or see me.

Within this strictly confined and guarded old French small cell, with hard, bare floor, without stool nor chair, half starved and literally for air in a close tropical climate. I thus spent 13 longest and darkest nights of my life, amid the yells and groans of about 180 half-clad men and women, and some babes, prisoners, beaten, bruised, and at times or starved to death by native officials commanded by a stern, drunk officer of the occupation, often away a whole day, with no food for prisoners, most of whom were marched like slaves every morning under guard to do corvée work some miles away.

Every moment amid this hideous surroundings and expecting my pounce upon and beaten to death or violently dragged forth from the dark dungeon before a "firing squad" like the British nurse, Edith Cavell, the Huns at Brussels (for these poor Negro armed officers dared not shoot the white marine captain at the risk of their lives, when enraged like me under the influence of liquor).

After being here 11 days in this condition, physically tortured and agonizing, the St. Marc, Negro high court, feeling that such barbarity and scandalized Haiti, for never did the Haiti Government arrest or even native Christian ministers, not to say white missionaries and citizens, so the high Negro court commanded bringing the prisoner to trial.

I was informed by the Negro judge advocate, the natives unknown (Catholics and Protestants) had employed to defend me at this court, that every charge completely broke down, the high court declared my arrest and imprisonment illegal and unwarrantable; demanded my liberty, with ample protection; further decreeing that I be paid damages in lieu of sufferings caused and torture and agony endured.

Wherefore, Mr. Secretary, and as I understand you to be the supreme command and directly responsible to the Government for affairs in Haiti, I respectfully request an interview in reference—

1. Question of indemnity decreed by judgment of Negro high court at St. Marc for illegal imprisonment, etc., by white marine officer of the United States after notification and warning.

2. The matter of appointment of special commission, as demanded in memorandum presented, and composed of such competent statesmen suggested, with Hon. Charles Hughes or some one of equal status as to thoroughly investigate Haiti affairs and formulate a simple plan for Haiti according to treaty.

Though pressed to bring this matter before Senate in 1919, and landing in New York from Haiti, April of last year, I have persisted in believing in the sincerity of the present Government, in spite of insinuations and bitter criticisms of the administration, but at last must fully insist on approaching the President, through you, re my own imprisonment and the appointment at once of a commission.

In my patient effort to see the President before resorting to the appealing to the American public, I have had the indorsement of educated and intelligent leaders; native and white missionaries of the public; the Hon. T. Ch. Moravia, present minister of the Haiti Government in Washington; and even the late ex-President Roosevelt wrote me before his death that I try every possible means to reach President Wilson direct before bringing this matter before either Senate or Congress. American people, stating, "I can not think of any better plan and more able than the very one you pursue," though previous to this Roosevelt was a real friend of Haiti, whose untimely death, much lamented in the public, issued through the Associated Press, as seen in the Washington Post, October 23, 1918, "That the Haiti-Negro Republic under the Democratic Administration, and in spite of their treaty to the contrary, had become no more than a puppet state, which is perfectly true in substance and in fact."

re, therefore, more cruel sufferings and prevent further ruthless brutal and wanton bloodshed by either white or colored, the restoration of and establishment of peace and good will, which alone can bring prosperity and plenty to Haiti, actually restore the lost influence, prestige, and confidence and power in and of the United States and the American people as humane and a civilized people, if not the greatest civilizing and ennobling nation in the world to-day.

I pray that this final attempt will prove successful, amid other pressures, to interview the President and lead even yet to a satisfactory solution of the two questions mentioned.

As we are, however, denied and finally driven to the Senate, and a Senate committee or commission be appointed, then an exhaustive hearing will be held, when not only Col. Russell, Brig. Gen. Catlin, Gen. Willard of the Haiti Gendarmerie, the two American corporations, with certain administration officials here at Washington, will be summoned and examined with a view at last to right poor Haiti's wrongs and remove the stain and disgrace now upon our own flag.

Haiti in all probability will help finally settle both the fate of the treaty with Europe as well as the fate also of the Democratic administration if I trow not, at the forthcoming general election, and by the Americans settle themselves. To avoid this I sincerely hope you and the President will meet at this interview.

Yours, for Christ and Haiti.

L. TON EVANS.

---

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, May 1, 1920.

MR. TON EVANS,

Wyoming, Pa.

DEAR MR. EVANS: I have received your letter and will be pleased to see such time as you may suggest. The Navy Department has been very interested in the work in Haiti and is doing all it can to secure the best conditions.

Very truly, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

---

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, September 1, 1920.

MR. TON EVANS,

Wyoming, Pa.

DEAR MR. EVANS: I am in receipt of your favor of August 27, and write you that I am having a study made of the situation in Haiti, and when this is completed I will let you hear from me.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

My letter of August 27 expressed the missionary's plan to come at once to Washington for the interview as per Secretary of Navy's letter of May 1, 1920, and conditions in Haiti were growing worse, and that delay meant not only loss of time and brutality but more murder of innocent Haitians. Since his letter the Navy Secretary hurriedly dispatched Gen. John A. Lejeune to Haiti to inquire and immediately report up to date. Mr. Daniels, according to his wish, sent copy of Lejeune's report to writer, but put off the personal interview.—L. T. E.

Report of Gen. Lejeune was officially forwarded to Mr. Ton Evans, and follows:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
Washington, October 4, 1920.

The Major General Commandant.

Secretary of the Navy.

Report of the military situation in Haiti during the period July 1, 1920 to date and report of my inspection of the First Brigade, United States Marines, stationed in the Republic of Haiti.

In accordance with your verbal instructions, I am submitting for your information and consideration a report covering the period that I have held the office of Major General Commandant United States Marine Corps, concerning conditions affecting the military situation in Haiti.

2. The area of Haiti is approximately 10,000 square miles. The country is very mountainous. Between the great mountain ranges lie densely populated river valleys of extraordinary fertility. Haiti is, therefore, exceptionally well adapted for the activities of bandit bands. In fact, throughout the country banditry has been prevalent, the bands being recruited from runaway and escaped criminals and from the class of men who prefer to live by robbery rather than by their own labor. Banditry has been one of the greatest evils in Haiti. Haitian people have had to contend with, not only because of the action done the people by the depredations of the bandits but also for the reason that the bandit bands have formed the nuclei of the so-called revolutionaries, which have so frequently devastated Haiti and drenched its soil in blood. One of the main missions of the marines stationed in Haiti is the suppression of banditry and the maintenance of peace and tranquillity.

3. All reports received at headquarters United States Marine Corps have been on duty as Major General Commandant have indicated that the bandit situation was steadily improving, and that conditions from the Marine Corps point of view were very satisfactory. However, in order that I might be fully informed in regard to Marine Corps affairs, it was deemed advisable for me to visit Haiti and make a personal inspection of the marines on duty. I accordingly proceeded to Haiti early in the month of September in company with Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, who assisted me in my inspection.

4. The marines in Haiti are commanded by Col. John H. Russell, a just, and humane officer. I found, during my inspection, that not only had he handled the bandit situation in a masterly manner, but that he had issued the most comprehensive instructions requiring a kindly treatment of the inhabitants by our own men, and that his subordinate officers were enforcing these instructions in a loyal and conscientious manner.

DIARY OF EVENTS.

September 4, 1920.—6.15 p. m., arrived at Port au Prince, Haiti, and immediately disembarked.

September 5, 1920.—9 a. m., conferred with brigade commander and members of his staff at brigade headquarters. 11 a. m., received all officers stationed at Port au Prince. In the afternoon, conferred with the financial adviser of the Government of Haiti and other officials of the Marine Corps concerning conditions in Haiti.

September 6, 1920.—Forenoon, reviewed and inspected the battalion of Haitian gendarmes stationed in Port au Prince; inspected the battalions of marines also stationed in Port au Prince, the marine barracks, the headquarters of the gendarmerie of Haiti, the gendarmerie headquarters, the national headquarters of the gendarmes, the Marine Corps depot of supplies, radio station, and the naval field hospital. Called on the American minister.

12 noon, called officially on the President of Haiti, and was received by him and his entire cabinet. The President made an address in which he expressed his appreciation of the work of the marines and of the gendarmerie in Haiti, and expressed his gratitude to the Marine Corps for having maintained peace and tranquillity in the Republic of Haiti. I replied to the address. The President decorated Brig. Gen. Butler with the Medaille Militaire of Haiti on account of his distinguished service to Haiti in organizing, equipping, training, and commanding the gendarmerie.

Afternoon, the American minister returned my call and I conferred with him and the officers of the first brigade of marines and the gendarmerie concerning conditions in Haiti.

September 7, 1920.—6 a. m., left Port au Prince and proceeded by automobile to Mirebalais and Las Cahobas, at which places I inspected the Marine garrisons and camps and the detachments of gendarmes and their barracks.

At both places we were received by large delegations of Haitians headed by the local officials, who made addresses expressing their gratitude for the splendid work done by the marines in maintaining peace and order, thereby permitting the industrious and peaceful people of Haiti to cultivate their farms and conduct their business without molestation. I replied to each of these addresses, and greeted personally each member of the delegations.

6.15 p. m., returned to Port au Prince.

ember 8, 1920.—Continued conferences with officers, the financial advisor, American minister, and with Haitian citizens.

ember 9, 1920.—5 a. m., left Port au Prince by automobile for San Michel, Marc, Gonaives, and Ennery; inspected all gendarme posts at towns en route. 6.30 p. m., arrived at San Michel.

ember 10, 1920.—7 a. m., left San Michel for Maissade and Hinche. I was met at each place by large delegations of Haitian citizens headed by local chiefs and French priests. Inspected Marine Corps and gendarme posts at Hinche and Hinche and the small detachments of marines en route. The delegations of citizens above referred to expressed their appreciation of the work that was being done by the Marine Corps and the Haitian gendarmes in maintaining peace and good order. 5.30 p. m., returned to San Michel. 7 to 10 p. m., conducted investigation of affairs in Haiti, conferring with former officers of the gendarmerie.

ember 11, 1920.—7.30 a. m., inspected marine detachment and camp at San Michel. 11 a. m., left San Michel for Cape Haitien via Ennery, Plaisance, and Ennery, inspecting gendarmes and the gendarm posts en route. At 4 p. m., arrived at Cape Haitien.

ember 12, 1920.—9 a. m., inspected marine detachment, camp, depot of mail, radio station, naval field hospital, detachment of gendarmes, their barracks, and the Haitian prison. 11.30 a. m., received a delegation of promissaries of Cape Haitien and conferred with them concerning the condition of the section.

In the afternoon, received all Marine Corps officers stationed at Cape Haitien.

ember 13, 1920.—4 a. m., left Cape Haitien for Ouanaminthe via Quartier Limonade, and Le Trou. Inspected all detachments of gendarmes en route, the prison farms at Poste Chaubert, and the marine and gendarme detachments at Ouanaminthe.

10 a. m., having completed my inspection of the First Brigade United Marines, we left Haiti, crossed the Massacre River (boundary between Haiti and Santo Domingo), and began the inspection of the Second Brigade United States Marines and the Guardia Nacional of Santo Domingo.

DISTRIBUTION OF FIRST BRIGADE.

The force of marines in Haiti, consisting of about 1,350 men, is organized in three brigades of two small regiments, the Second and Eighth. The Eighth Regiment is stationed in southern Haiti and the Second Regiment in the north. The headquarters of the Eighth Regiment is quartered in Port au Prince, the headquarters of the regiment is near Mirebalais, and the remainder of the regiment is stationed at Mirebalais and Las Cahobas, with small posts along the road to Port au Prince. The headquarters and one battalion of the Second Regiment are stationed at Cape Haitien and the remainder of the regiment is stationed at San Michel, Hinche, and Maissade, with small detachments at Thomonde, Ouanaminthe, and at points along the roads from Hinche and Maissade to Port au Prince. Brigade headquarters and the aviation squadron are located at Port au Prince.

For tactical purposes the forces of both regiments in the interior of Haiti are commanded by the commanding officer of the Eighth Regiment. This arrangement is necessary in order to secure coordination in putting down bandits. The Second Regiment is commanded by Col. Randolph C. Berkeley and the Eighth Regiment by Lieut. Col. Louis McC. Little. Naval field hospitals are located at Port au Prince and Cape Haitien.

SUPPLY.

Troops in the field are supplied by means of railroads, motor trucks, and mules, motor trucks being utilized wherever the roads are passable, and mules over trails. In spite of great difficulties, due to almost impassable high mountain ranges, and rivers swollen by tropical rains, the troops are supplied, and the rations and other supplies to be up to the standard. There were no complaints, except at Hinche, where there was a temporary scarcity of beef in the country.

THE MILITARY SITUATION.

The military situation to be in excellent condition and a state of peace and tranquillity prevailing throughout Haiti. We traveled through the country without a guard and found no evidences of hostility on the part of natives.

The marines and gendarmes stationed in the interior of Haiti send out patrols in command of officers. The patrols visit all sections of the country, not only to prevent banditry but also in order to assure the natives they will be protected from depredations by bandits. This has had a beneficial effect, and throughout Haiti we found the natives busily at cultivating their farms and carrying their produce to market.

There are now no large bandit bands in existence, the only menace to security being a number of small bands who hide in the mountains and live by stealth. These bands are being gradually dispersed. One of the most encouraging circumstances connected with the bandit situation is the fact that former bandits have voluntarily quit the mountains and gone to work.

A short while ago a small patrol of gendarmes engaged in a skirmish with one of these bands and dispersed it, and Louisnord, the last important band leader in Haiti, was killed.

Until banditry has been completely stamped out, however, it is essential for the welfare of Haiti that the present disposition of Marine Corps forces in the interior should not be changed.

RELATIONS BETWEEN THE MARINE CORPS AND THE CIVIL POPULATION OF HAITI

In my inspection of marines I conferred with large numbers of Haitian officials, including the President and his cabinet, with Haitians not holding any official positions, and with French priests. I found that there was throughout Haiti a strong sentiment of gratitude to the marines for the fact that they were doing for the welfare of the industrious, peaceful, and abiding Haitian people, and that, on the whole, very friendly feelings existed on the part of the inhabitants toward the marines. There have been, of course, some cases of ill feeling between individuals. For instance, while I was at Port au Prince two marines, while walking along a city street at night, were severely stabbed from behind by Haitians, who succeeded in making their escape, and I found in the guardhouse there several marines who had been tried by court martial for engaging in brawls with Haitians. Affairs of this kind are, of course, very regrettable, but are, nevertheless, unavoidable, and are liable to occur at any place at home or abroad where troops are stationed.

The French priest at Hinche, with whom I had a long conference, told me that he had been stationed there for 13 years, and that conditions at Hinche, which had been a center of bandit activity, were better than they had been during his ministry in Haiti, and that the officers and marines stationed there were doing all in their power to cultivate good feeling and to gain the confidence of the Haitian people.

In visiting the various posts I invariably made inquiry concerning the relations between the marines and the population, and found at each place that the commanding officer, acting under the instructions of Col. John H. Russell, the brigade commander, was insistent that the men under his command should treat the inhabitants in a just and kindly manner. It was easy to see from the manner and actions of the thousands of people we met in the towns and on the roads in the interior that a very kind and friendly feeling exists toward the marines wearing the uniform of the United States Marine Corps.

GENDARMERIE D'HAITI.

The Gendarmerie d'Haiti is a force of 2,500 Haitians, officered chiefly by commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps. This force is the sole police and military force authorized by Haitian laws. It polices the towns and country districts, and is therefore a combination of municipal police and rural constabulary. It also has charge of all Haitian prisons and jails. I made careful inspection of the detachments of gendarmes, their barracks, and Haitian prisons, and at all places visited found the Gendarmerie d'Haiti in a highly efficient condition. It was most gratifying to see the soldierly bearing, neatness, and efficient performance of duty on the part of the gendarmes; also the immaculate cleanliness of their barracks and the prisons of which they have charge. The condition of the national penitentiary at Port au Prince was Cape Haitien is especially deserving of the highest commendation. Officers and men of the Marine Corps, who command the gendarmerie, insure that there had not been a single case of disloyalty to their officers. No part of any member of the gendarmerie since this organization had been created, and that they felt perfect confidence in the courage and loyalty of the men serving in its ranks.

DISCIPLINE, CONDUCT, HEALTH, AND MORALE OF MARINE CORPS FORCES.

On my tour of inspection in Haiti I found the marines to be in a highly efficient condition. Their health, except for some cases of malaria, was excellent. Their discipline was superb and their morale high. As I inspected the posts located at isolated points far in the interior of Haiti, I was filled with admiration of their fine appearance and efficient condition. My heart went out with pride to see these splendid men giving to their country and to the people of Haiti such intelligent, zealous, efficient, and courageous service. That the American people have every right to be proud of their representatives who are now wearing the uniform of the Marine Corps in Haiti.

JOHN A. LEJEUNE.

SAYS HAITIANS APPROVE OUR ACTION.

WAR SECRETARY DANIELS: When about to mail you my letter to-day I was across in this morning's New York Times what purports to be a reply from Mr. Harding, as to conditions and cruelties in Haiti, etc.

After a careful reading of quotations from official statements or report of Mr. John A. Lejeune's hurried visit made after my first letter to you in which they fail to touch the vital points.

Nevertheless if a report of the administration's own official, specially appointed by yourself (since, if not directly through my own letter to the Navy Department six months ago) as the new directing head of the Marine Corps since June 30, 1920, in Haiti, and as having so recently assumed official duties, relied upon, I am certainly glad to learn that at last our officials here may be the attitude of the gendarmerie) are beginning not only to understand the Haitians, but the actual meaning of their own mission and the United States Government's real purpose in the Black Republic.

I readily state that had I not been anxious from the commencement (three months ago) to keep entirely out of party politics in missionary and Haitian affairs, that I still, in spite of the strong criticism and severe condemnation of the President, Secretary of the Navy, etc., firmly believed that you both sincerely sought to right all the past and present wrongs committed under this administration in a poor Haiti, I would certainly, after reading this morning's statement, have immediately wired a most startling reply through the Associated Press. I am disappointedly convinced that further efforts on the part of Haiti and the United States are utterly futile and a mere waste of time.

Before Secretary Daniels means to have this interview at once, and the President are prepared to act, as suggested in my previous letter and the appeal herein attached, will you then please send prompt reply by letter.

I remain, sincerely, yours, etc.

L. TON EVANS.

LYNN, WYOMING COUNTY, PA., October 6, 1920.

BWTHYN, WYOMING COUNTY, PA., October 2, 1920.

EPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

WAR SECRETARY: After what has just transpired through the public press here, as well as from Washington, I must respectfully insist on the necessity of an official interview with you (and the President) not later than this week, and as stated in letter of March 27 last in reference to—substantial reparation from the United States Government as decreed by the court of Saint Marc high court (Haiti) in January of 1918 (an abstract official copy of which is in my possession) and as previous to my illegal arrest and imprisonment with malicious intent, such physical torture, mental agony, moral and financial damages I have suffered since, as borne out by the four medical certificates from my annuity board, of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, and which board has recognized my claim (as member thereof) for services rendered as Baptist missionary in and under the treatment of the foreign mission field of Haiti, under my own American flag, strictly confined, deprived of nourishment, etc., for 13 days and 13 nights in a small, narrow dungeon, momentarily expecting (like the Negro) to be either set upon and clubbed to death, or violently dragged off to a firing squad like Edith Cavell, the British nurse, only in my case, under the command of an American white officer, in collusion and conspiracy with the drinking and drunken officials of my own United States Government, representatives of our President Wilson, under what can be termed a savage, and murderous régime pursued by the American occupiers of the black republic.

It should be pointed out that previous to this, a proclamation signed by Daniels (of the United States Navy) faithfully signed, and officially issued, both in English and French, by Col. John H. Russell, United States Marine Corps, commanding United States forces ashore in Haiti, has been scattered throughout the republic, supposed to be observed and enforced in the interest of the morale of our own boys; all officials, general officers and members of gendarmerie (native armed forces), as well as essential to official discipline, the military authorities, and the moral efficiency of our United States Government's American occupation in Haiti; but forsooth this was spurned, and flouted by many of the officials, members of Marine Corps, and especially (if not followed by all of their superior officers) the gendarmes.

Seeing therefore that the Haiti rum (if not the Haiti brand of rum) has demoralized, stupefied, and brutalized the supposed better elements of the superiorly civilized white American soldier and civilian exactly through tropical heat, and other climatic conditions to which the Negro (unaccustomed) the same as they did their less fortunate Negro brethren, respectfully, and most earnestly pleaded with Col. Russell at the time of the issuance of this proclamation (owing to the degrading, and demoralizing effects of alcohol upon white and black in our midst) to apply its ban all throughout the Haiti Republic, and forbid the manufacture, and sale of rum, as well as the sale of liquors of all kinds.

Above proclamation reads as follows:

"The sale of intoxicants to persons of military and naval forces of the United States in uniform is forbidden throughout the Republic of Haiti, before and after July 20, 1918. A violation of this order will be considered as an offense to the interests of the United States, and the offender will be tried before a United States military tribunal.

"Done at Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, this 16th day of July, 1918.

This official interview (or confidential if preferred) is immediately requested, furthermore—

2. For the purpose of a guarantee from our own President of the United States, at once by him of a special commission of some such Christian statesmen, educational experts, military, legal, and religious representatives as H. Dillard, Virginia; Maj. Moton, principal of Tuskegee, Ala.; Dr. W. E. B. DuBois, president of southern Baptists, whose convention of 3,000 members decided to evangelize Haiti through breakdown of small, incompetent negro committee (Texas); Hon. George Peabody, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dr. Gilbert N. Brink, education secretary of Latin American Institute, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dr. Thomas Jesse Jones, author of standard work on institutions for colored and negro industrial schools, officially of the United States Government, Washington, D. C.; Rev. J. J. Curran, Roman Catholic social and temperance reformer, Pennsylvania; I. M. Speer, president of Latin American cooperative missionary committee, New York; Admiral Caperton, United States Government's officer of administration, who first landed the marines in Haiti, July, 1915; with, and legal adviser of same, Charles E. Hughes, ex-Justice of the United States Supreme Court; and so as to carefully and thoroughly investigate the affairs and formulate a simple plan whereby to develop the negro people according to the treaty made and signed by President W.

representative on the one part and representative of the Haitian Republic on the other in Washington, D. C., May, 1916.

As exactly as requested by Haiti, as far as this little nation has been able to express itself through me as its representative, and demanded in a memorandum presented the President through Mr. Tumulty and Mr. Robert Taft through his confidential clerk, two years ago, and expressly prepared and rewritten and printed form setting forth the grievances of Haiti, with recommendations, at request of Senator Hitchcock and one Stabler, secretary of the Latin-American section of the State Department, in charge of Haitian affairs as well as the request of the executive committee of the American negro congress at its duly convened meeting in the city of Washington, D. C., May 23, 1918.

Above secretary of the Latin-American section of the State Department, I thought it a part of his Government official duties and as a diplomat in charge of Haitian affairs, and while Mrs. Evans and myself were in the Haiti mission field, with no knowledge of what was going on nor opportunity to defend ourselves, to enter with others into collusion with members of our Haiti committee in North Carolina, Richmond, and Baltimore seems, not only to deliberately and falsely misrepresent us and our Haiti, but to take further mean advantage of our morally weak and racially incompetent negro brethren of above missionary committee by intrigue and political, if not also by financial, influence to abruptly, without knowledge or consent of the Lott Carey Colored Baptist Convention or of the national foreign missionary board, and without absolutely any chance of opposition, to cut off our small, irregularly paid salaries at the moment I was lying on the hard, bare floor of an old French negro slave prison cell in Haiti, literally gasping for a breath of air.

Learning that my typewritten copy of memorandum and petition in behalf of Haiti, in spite of urgency and the personal promise of secretary of Latin-American section, etc., to present it immediately to the Secretary of State and the President, still remained in his own office or pigeonholed 12 days after, I handed another and a printed copy of memorandum, including a duly sworn affidavit to facts contained therein, through Mr. Tumulty at the White House to the President, with another printed copy, etc., on same day through his confidential clerk to Mr. Lansing at the State Department, and also furnished copies to Senator Hitchcock, for members of Senate Foreign Relations Committee, of which he was chairman, on the day I interviewed him at the Senate chambers, with a delegation of some 12 Christian ministers (white and colored) and representing national negro Baptist conventions, Lott Carey convention; colored Methodists; white Baptists (North and South); Christian ministers and Baptist associations (white) of District of Columbia, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, as well as the president of the negro race congress, pleading with him to arrange an interview with the President.

Mr. A. A. Adey, on November 2, 1918, wrote acknowledging receipt of memorandum directed to President, as stated in previous letters, and in which I fully informed me that the grave conditions set forth therein "were actual at that moment" (of his writing) "receiving the most serious consideration of the Department of State, as well as all the other branches of the Government directly concerned in Haiti."

He further assured me that the department would communicate with me by a later date, "after the careful study of the matters contained in memorandum." Though now two years have passed not a single word has been received from either Mr. Tumulty or Second Assistant Secretary of State as a result of the Government's own so-called private and official investigation. Indeed such an "investigation" was ever seriously contemplated, not undertaken.

This deliberate and criminal neglect in a matter of vital and urgent importance in a close island of the Caribbean Sea, and touching our honor as a nation, and directly affecting the life and death of thousands of helpless people, pointed out at the time in memorandum, and this flat refusal of the Government to appoint commission to thoroughly investigate, or the responsible members of the administration themselves to take action after giving assurance to do so, thus allowing things to take their own course and to grow from bad to worse is directly responsible not simply for the continuance of drunken and brutal white and colored officials of the "American occupation," referred to in the said memorandum, in their immoral and hard-conduct unchecked.

But this deliberate and criminal neglect is responsible for their ment, and their growing more daring and defiant in their brutality, with consequently more murders among whites as well as blacks, last culminating in the infamous "official conspiracy" of illegally private study, without summons, arresting, street parading under arms, imprisoning, inhumanly treating with malicious and murderous intent white civilian American citizen and a Protestant and Baptist missionary.

Such indeed was the disgrace and scandal at this high-handed, brutal attack of "American occupation" officials, unheard of and before in the history of the Negro Republic, even in the bloodiest rebellion period, and such the moral shock, profound indignation, and bitter of the natives that the Negro high court of St. Marc felt compelled for humanity's sake, to at last interfere, call a session extraordinary, and (though in so doing they risked their jobs, and even their own "occupation" officials being supreme) that the white American of the United States citizen and Baptist missionary at once from his case so as to be legally tried, with the result stated, that on examining trumperty charge completely broke down, the officers of the "American occupation" implicated commanded to immediately set free the missionary, what remained of the little raped and robbed Negro Republic call protect him and his Christian work, the court adding that for the justice done and cruel suffering inflicted the Haiti law decreed that a substantial indemnity be paid.

I have sincerely believed and stoutly maintained, Mr. Secretary, on three years, as you may see from the memorandum in your possession.

(1) That our President and administration at Washington would state real facts and correct and true statement as to exact conditions in Haiti; that you would not hesitate to move for an impartial investigation. I told Senator Hitchcock when pleading with him to see the President more than two years ago, by a competent commission, and that the very numerous unjustifiable blunders, wrongs, crimes, political frauds, military slammings of senate and chamber's doors in face of people's repression, late Czar to his sorrow did with the Russian people's duma, not mention the further infamous rape of the Negro constitution and of a figurehead and a puppet Negro president by the responsible "American occupation" as a bluff and blind, but immediately seen through and as an insult by rank and file, as well as intelligent and educated Haitians, proven and shown beyond a doubt to have been the real causes of the reversion of feeling toward the "American occupation," hatred for the United States Government, and actual contempt for our American flag have instantly acted.

Is it not sad indeed to have to state that after nearly five years of "American occupation" operations in Haiti, under our Democratic administration, the people of the little black republic sincerely and firmly believe that the mission of the United States Government and the American people is to reestablish slavery in their midst once more; abrogate and annul the Toussaint Louverture (their Washington and Lincoln), just exactly as the nineteenth century Napoleon, then the terror, tyrant, and blood, of Europe, which France, treacherously tried, but ignominiously failed, waste of millions of dollars, and a loss of 40,000 of their proud soldiers, who were as much killed by the negroes' rum, the negro fever, as by the negroes' sword, and which apparently Almighty God named as powerful allies to assist these despised, and inferiorly equipped in their gallant, righteous, and then successful struggles for personal and national independence over 100 years ago; and just as America, George Washington a few years before had successfully fought to free the colonies from the conservative oppression and the Tory tyranny of old England, then proud and Prussian King.

(2) It was my own firm belief furthermore, based upon President Wilson's own address at Washington's tomb July 4, 1918, a careful study of the points, and his courageous and unflinching stand against Germany's powers; with the principles he and our Representatives in Congress declared, echoed by the whole American Nation, on our entrance into the war, as well as throughout the World War, which, by the way, with his Philadelphia Ledger, with Washington on one side, and immortal on the other, I had prominently hanging up in my study down in Philadelphia, mention his present attitude on the European treaty and League of Nations.

the whole Democratic Party is committed and morally our whole American people, in fact, and in some form or another—the President and administration would therefore seize on the first opportunity “to indignantly repudiate” all such acts, not merely in behalf and the Government, but in behalf of the whole American people, immediately proceed in a statesmanlike manner to carry out the recommendations of said commission, appointed by himself, and in this black republic, bound to us by a sacred treaty—he would without hesitation apply these principles, he rightly insisted that Germany and all Europe, and indeed Italy, should be made to adopt by her himself establishing at the close of a civil occupation in Haiti, through at once reopening of senate and of deputies, and by also the complete restoration of the raped constitution, that he would in the spirit, and according to the wording of the treaty, have initiated with indorsement (after due explanation) by the senate and chambers, such industrial, economical, fiscal, and educational reforms as would at once win the implicit confidence of the natives, and fully convince these Negroes, whom we must not forget have been perpetually and systematically deceived, betrayed, exploited, and plundered for 100 years by Europeans, and so-called white friends, under religious, social, and philanthropic pleas, and pretenses, consisting of priests, profiteers, if not a few Protestants, unfortunately, but invariably some-ack of their revolutions, for which Negroes themselves are blamed.

That our United States Government would show as stipulated in our covenant, that we are in Haiti first, last, and all the time to protect the republic as much indeed from the horde of American land grabbers, and colored, as from German, French, Dutch, or even British and Irish rascals and dishonest speculators, thus proving beyond the shadow of a doubt that Haiti, America, and the whole world—that our mission in the small republic is none other than humane and benevolent, as a great civilizing, christianizing, Nation to honorably carry out the terms of our generous treaty meant treaty.

However, I am seriously mistaken in my estimate of our President and his sincerity of his administration, and that after two years of persistent shown by the silence of Hitchcock, Tumulty, and Adee, the Navy Department, in complete charge of Marines in Haiti, as well as gendarmerie, and you as Secretary, will further delay or decline to listen to present appeal in behalf of Haiti, and now also for myself, then as a duty to my family, and more especially to these nearly 3,000,000 Negroes, whose leaders, are absolutely gagged while their country is pillaged, their people raped, and people butchered by hyphenated Americans who as foreigners represent our own Government and liberty-loving nation, who on a square deal, I shall now have to comply with the personal advice of my dear and sincere friend of Haiti, the late ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, revered and never more lamented in the black republic than at this time of their dire distress, and given me in his last letter from his New York office in Madison Avenue November 2, 1918, on the eve of my own last visit to be forgotten visit from the States to my old missionary field of Haiti. This advice was, that after failing in my efforts with President Wilson's administration, whose duty was to right their own Democratic wrongs, I then to immediately approach the Republican Party, who with such men as Root, Hughes, Taft, Lodge, Knox, Johnson, and, say, Harding, would have me and the Negroes of Haiti the moment they were given the oppor-portunity. I now therefore, be compelled to direct my Haiti appeal to Marion I doubt be welcomed by Senator Harding, Republican nominee for the presidency, and also the Republican leaders if it were only as an eyewitness of the senseless, criminal, and scandalous rape committed upon this small, helpless Republic by her big neighbor and wealthy, strong sister Republic of the United States, officially bound by a sacred treaty, signed and ratified in 1916 during this World War May, 1916, and in which treaty the present administration solemnly pledged, if necessary, to use the United States powerful whole Army of Uncle Sam to jealously protect and safely defend her against all nations, etc.

I will be also glad to greet me as the only one American citizen doing any work there, and privileged on the spot, and therefore before the Senate, committed, to strongly protest in my own behalf, and even in behalf of the French white protestant Christian missionaries of Haiti, not to mention the broken-hearted ex-senators, ex-deputies, weeping judges of a failed can occupation," with ex-judges, lawyers, doctors, Negro preachers, and in general, and with whom I came in contact everywhere throughout the Republic as a missionary superintendent.

All my endeavors to reach the President at Washington and so as to as Americans from this great humiliation and prevent us from being Government of hypocrites and termed a Nation of traitors, classee with Germany and her now ex-Kaiser in that nefarious rape of Bel other small country, and under so-called military necessity, viewing t treaty as a mere "scrap of paper," were all at that time, as they h since intercepted, before the censorship was applied to Haiti, and purp most deliberately and determinedly frustrated by either incompet profiteering officials, or both, in Haiti and at Washington, with the s tions and disgrace herein described as the logical and inevitable resul truthfully set forth by Senator Harding in his Marion address.

As being the oldest white missionary, as well as then the only citizen laboring in the black Republic, and who for years had used influence with our United States Government and in behalf of Haiti president the Republic's leaders during Roosevelt's, Taft's, and the present administration, and visited Mr. Ade at our State Department more than once beseech Uncle Sam to come to Haiti's rescue and act the part of a big man as the late President Theodore Roosevelt and Gen. Wood, under the Roosevelt administration, for instance, did in Cuba. I therefore felt not only prior to 1916 treaty, but had unflinching faith in the integrity of our President Wilson, and sincerity of our responsible Democratic administration that it would be lived up to. Hence, the first intimation, followed by an announcement in the Monitor, Haiti's official paper, that the "American occupation" was to radically change the constitution of the Negro Republic personally to me and of course caused a moral shock throughout Haiti and declared a national immoral, and dishonest everywhere.

At first I thought it a foolish, though senseless, hoax, but when as intelligent, excited, and half-frenzied natives of its truth, then I decided any such document proposing to take negro lands and give to whites, could have been inspired at some German headquarters in New York or Chicago by hyphenated Americans with Berlin money at the back of it. It was, I thought, the work of persons jealous of our "American occupation," who determined not merely to kill our (then) American growing influence in the black republic, but, in fact, intriguing with the enemy (the United States) by this time joined Britain and the Allies in the war), the overthrow of President Wilson, and the downfall of his administration.

I immediately, therefore, as a loyal American, left St. Marc, our Haiti, for Port-au-Prince, from where on the 5th of June, 1918, and have first officially denied the opportunity of cabling the White House, Washington, D. C. I sent a registered letter to President Wilson, explaining the consternation in Haiti, respectfully demanding postponement of so-called "voting" on the constitution, with an appointment by him of a committee to at once in matters so as to avoid this public and national scandal, but this registered letter was intercepted by the President's own private secretary, or at the State Department.

Anticipating this, however, from reliable information to hand, as to between officials in Haiti and at Washington, with certain financial pro the island, I sent also another registered letter the very same day to dent Theodore Roosevelt at Oyster Bay, N. Y., inclosing therein a copy written our President, with my special reason for adopting this unusual The latter was safely received at Sagamore Bay, and a courteous re arrived.

Definite information conveyed in this, with additional evidence, though it failed to move Senator Hitchcock, etc., enabled ex-President to vent in his criticism of the 14 points, etc., to emphatically declare the Associated Press, as appeared in Washington papers October 23, 1918.

"That the Negro Republic of Haiti was nonexistent under the De laudation, in spite of their treaty," and which the Government a fington dared not then nor since his death to deny.

All these letters and copies of other communications in Haiti and w ernment I have in my possession, including photograph of President, and two little lads, with Hon. Adée's official acknowledgment of memo and assurance of the Government's investigation, "serious considera tions in Haiti, etc., which were on me when arrested, paraded through streets, under armed guard, but taken from me in prison when searched, and put into my cell at the stern command of United States' white captain of patrol."

also the photograph of the negro judge advocate, the poor natives whom I myself had engaged to assist in my defense at the aforesaid high court, whom like the rest was too terrified to attempt to visit my strictly prison cell for fear of being shot.

In addition to these, a photograph of myself surrounded by native soldiers, which was taken in the far interior, and four days after my removal with my prison-grown beard. I was en route for the cape (extreme west) at midnight of same day the high court set me free (and by same means, under threats of using military force, and in a small boat), to the Caribbean Sea, for another trial, with probable imprisonment before me, if not certain death.

The capital of the north, Cape Haiti, was at last reached, having been never to preach in that section, threatened to be shot by a white, and intoxicated American officer who, ignoring and sneering at Secretary's official letter, and another of an American captain of that section, behaved like a maniac, and before the terrorized native Christians, who led me to his American headquarters, openly cursed God, Christianity, Christian ministers and missionaries to be imposters and hypocrites. That the "malicious conspiracy" of our American official drunken I suddenly collapsed.

For Negro judge, forced, like others, by the officials, assured me and promises there was absolutely no legal charge brought against me, and that must have been communicated with to drop everything. My own presence, English, French (white), and native witnesses, and the St. Marc's high court must have evidently filled the conspirators with consternation, and fear, if not shame.

this reproach upon the honesty, veracity, not to say honor, of our people, which I sincerely sought to prevent, but through American treachery absolutely so far failed, is now immediately and irrevocably eradicated. Wiped out forever, such treacherous conduct can not fail to recoil upon the whole nation, as, for instance, the betrayal of those negroes of the Cape State, Africa, recently was revisited upon Belgium; and even the banishment of Napoleon to St. Helena by the British swiftly and followed his own treacherous treatment of Toussaint, "the Moses and Savior of the Blacks," for in the inspiring words of this great chief and noble as well as gallant general, to Brunet, his French captor and him in chains on transferring him from the frigate Creole to the man-of-war, the Hero, off Cape Haiti, the beginning of last century, to his cruel and shameful torture and death in the south of France), said:

"I may indeed to-day cut down the tree of the negro's liberty and independence but the roots are so deep and profound that the trunk will soon sprout again in Haiti."

In making this statement and further reiteration of present sad conditions, and my last appeal in spite of the startling published admission and most confession of your late Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Frank-velt (cause of my suspicion June 5, 1918, and justifying my own ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, as well as President Wilson), and the fact that our President and the administration's present term of exercise of power are about to expire, to be followed, possibly by a new Government, I still confidently believe that if the President and will only respond to poor Haiti's cry, immediately act and seriously and generously undertake to right the Republic's wrongs along such lines as herein and as pointed out two years ago in the memorandum previously submitted, only law and order will be at once established, but real peace and abundance will also follow throughout Haiti; yes, including the mountain regions where the supposed Cacos are said to dwell, etc.

It could not fail to secure for President, yourself, and administration (the whole American Nation) the undying gratitude of these misunderstood, maligned but kind-hearted negroes, and even the sincere admiration of the civilized and Christian world.

It is to add that as a pioneer missionary with over 25 years of unique experience in Haiti: with an intimate acquaintance of these negroes of every religious creed and political persuasion throughout the Republic (wh again and again traveled through by day and by night, even in time of revolutions, without either a revolver or a knife) and as an American and missionary lecturer on "Haiti's past, present, and future," given of times in churches, ministers' conferences, colleges, associations, conventions in States (North and South), England, Wales, Jamaica, and internationally known among Baptists and leading evangelicals, to beseech you to heed Haiti's imperative demand for justice at the hands of the United States.

I have sincerely desired and earnestly prayed you might give me opportunity, pleasure, and delight, not only to defend, but applaud, first to the Pacific and from Dakotas to Gulf, as well as in other lands (first and press), President Wilson and his administration's sound, constant, not regenerative work and creation in fact of a peaceful, prosperous model negro republic in land of Loveture, superstitious, priest-ridden, distracted, politically exploited, revolutionary torn, financially bankrupt only a few years ago, thus showing the world the potentialities of the whole Negro race.

Yes; if, by your present prompt action I am indeed now permitted, a pleasure in describing Haiti as the unfortunate man referred to in the parable, waylaid, robbed, and bleeding from every pore, Jerusalem and Jericho, to express also my joy, that while others pass the other side, in the Providence of a merciful God who created of all nations, it was our own wealthy, strong, and powerful United States and great American Nation under Christian leadership of a brave and competent statesman, President Wilson, which came along and played the rôle of good Samaritan.

Whether my prayer will be answered, and desire gratified now, and bleeding wounds shall be healed, or this waylaid black republic shall be plundered and butchered, is, therefore, now up to you and President.

Sincerely, yours, for Christ, Haiti, and humanity,

L. TON

THE SECRETARY OF THE NA
Washington, October .

MY DEAR SIR: In the absence of Secretary Daniels, I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 5. Upon the Secretary's return to me I will bring the matter to his attention.

Very truly, yours,

EDWARD E. BRITTON, Private Secretary

Mr. L. TON EVANS,
Burthyn, Wyoming, Pa.

STATEMENT OF REV. L. TON EVANS, WYOMING, PA. (A OF HAITI).

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Evans, will you give your name and address?

Mr. EVANS. My name is L. Ton Evans.

The CHAIRMAN. Your address?

Mr. EVANS. Since returning from Haiti my residence is at Wyoming.

The CHAIRMAN. Your purpose of vocation in Haiti?

Mr. EVANS. I have been pioneer missionary and field secretary of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. In Haiti?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; in Haiti, and for, altogether, 28 years either in speaking and pleading in behalf of Haiti and the Haitian people throughout the United States and in England and Wales.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you in Haiti during the years immediately preceding the occupation?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; many years before.

The CHAIRMAN. During the years immediately preceding the occupation?

Mr. EVANS. I left at the beginning of 1912, and again returned with me in 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. And from 1917 until when were you in Haiti?

Mr. EVANS. From 1917 to April of 1919, when I returned to the States.

The CHAIRMAN. Then your knowledge of conditions prior to the occupation terminated in 1912, or three years before the occupation took place?

Mr. EVANS. Personally, yes; but early in 1912 I had a long private interview with the late President Leconte at the palace in Port au Prince, and brought several requests from him to our State Department here at Washington, but the department failed to act.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us go back to the period prior to your departure in 1912. How long were you in the Republic of Haiti consecutively before you left in 1912?

Mr. EVANS. I was there from 1908, though I made a short visit to Jamaica and officially as delegate to Baptist World Alliance in Philadelphia in the meantime.

The CHAIRMAN. Until the year 1912?

Mr. EVANS. Until 1912; but as superintendent missionary I frequently visited the States and other countries, churches, and societies, returning again to Jacmel, in the southeast, where I resided, though as field secretary and superintendent my work took me all over the Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. How many missionaries were under your direction as superintendent, or how many missions, let me say?

Mr. EVANS. Well, altogether, we had over 1,000 members at that time in something like 16 churches, 12 mission stations with 8 missionaries and 20 native preachers or assistants, and in addition 15 or more teachers in our day schools.

The CHAIRMAN. How many American missionaries were under your supervision in Haiti?

Mr. EVANS. Eight. I was the only American citizen, however, among all Protestant ministers at that time in Haiti. Several of these native missionaries and one white French citizen were educated here in the States.

Haiti Baptist Mission (operated by both Lott Cary Foreign Board and the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society)—Statistics re churches, missions, pastors, native preachers, members, baptisms, with Sunday and evangelical day schools, offerings, etc., for year ending June, 1918.

(By L. Ton Evans, general superintendent.)

Church.	Mission.	Pastor.	Native preachers.	Sunday school teachers.	Baptisms.	Converts taught.	Candidates.	Died.	Members.	Sunday School scholars.	New missions.	Marriages.	Total offerings.	Haitian gourdes.	Day schools.	Church buildings.	Walled buildings.	Homes and huts.
Cape Haiti.		C. Jean Jacques	4	3	3	14			40	59			47	235		1		†1
Du Nord.		V. Eustache
Fort Liberty.		C. Jean Jacques	2	3	3	35	2	2	52	77	1	1	41	205	1	1	1
Grand Riviere.		Elie Mark.				15	1											†1
Du Nord Zebing.
Jacmel (Tabernacle).		N. P. Lherisson.	15	3	95	2,000	30	3	692	100	1	40	580	2,900	2	1	1
	Bethlehem.			3						30					1		1
	Carnel.			1						34						*
	Jericho.			2						40						1
	Morian.			2						45						1
	Oliviere.			2						50						1
	Banet.			2						39						1
	Bethesda.			2						55						1
	Central.			2						32						1
	Bethel.			2						36						*	1
	Gebson.			1						37						1
		Dumay Alexis.	1	2	1	27	2		12				9	45
Massade.									37				15	75
Pignon.									20
Port au Prince (Capital).		L. Hypolite.	1	1	2	4			25
Port de Paix (Mission).		J. Thomas.	1	1	2	3		1	9									†1
St. Marc (Ebenezer).		L. Ton Evans.	5	3	17	65	8	3	58	12	1	3	214	1,070	1	*
	Pisgah.			2	9	27	12		14	36
St. Michel (Isle Gonave).		V. Eustache.	2	1	9				15		1	2	10	50				†1
	Bethania.			1					20									†1
St. Raphael (Habitation Ballo).		Dumay Alexis.	2	5		6		4	33	26		2	45	225		1		†1
St. Louis (Mission).			1	1				1	5									†1
Trou (Du Nord).		Elie Mark.	4	1	2	12	6		35	51	2	1	155	775		1		†1

"The 15 church buildings are of stone, or in Spanish walls, comfortable, and free of debt, but the two marked * not finished. St. Marc, the largest Protestant church on island, has $200 debt, with $200 more added in purchasing a valuable lot adjoining for parsonage and woman's training school. This, with $100 to complete church (now 25 years in building), makes total indebtedness $500, or 2,500 gourdes.

"The 6 wattling-built and covered with brush roof have sides covered with mud, whitewashed within and without, constructed by the voluntary labor of the people of the immediate section, anxious for a place of worship and the preaching of the evangel in their midst. They are in all country places, and mark the first stage of the cause, and as such serve their purpose well; they are replaced by substantial churches as the mission progresses, and funds come in.

"Of the 9 with mark † 7 are merely wattled-made houses, or huts, small and inconvenient, and simply meant for temporary use, and as yet really preaching stations.

"Since the burning down of our substantial and comfortable churches at the important towns of Port-de-Paix and Cape Haiti, with a population of 7,000 and 30,000 or more, respectively, the few believers now in the former worship at the native preacher's own home, while the latter hold divine worship and their preaching service in a house whose rent is paid for by the Haiti Government.

"To command the respect of all classes of Haitians, and Government representatives and other Americans coming here just Baptists must have substantial churches and comfortable Christian homes in the cities and towns along the coast. These and a parsonage are essential for a missionary so as to be independent and devote himself whole-heartedly to aggressive evangelism, and making it absolutely unnecessary to compromise the board, denomination, as well as church and himself, by accepting Government aid of any kind."

Senator POMERENE. Black were they?

The CHAIRMAN. Were they native Haitians?

Mr. EVANS. Native Haitians; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Negro citizens of the Republic?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; of the Republic, but educated some of them at the Baptist Theological Seminary, Newton Center, Mass.—New England.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you tell the committee, in your own way, briefly, your estimate of the Government of Haiti during the years from 1908 to 1912; the condition of public order, the security of the Haitian citizen in his person and in his property. The administration of justice and, in short, the various aspects of the Haitian Government state?

Mr. EVANS. I am sorry to say that conditions were far from satisfactory. In fact there were periodical political disturbances, which at times culminated in bloody fights, and followed by devastation of the country, discouraging the people, all but crushing their native aspirations, and hope of ever becoming fit to take their place among surrounding nations. It is but fair to add, however, that I found the people of Haiti, a simple, innocent, peace-loving, if not the most kind-hearted I ever met with. During all the years spent there, and I frequently traveled night and day all over the country, even the most outlandish, alone and without a guide, and never carried any weapon, even during the exciting periods of revolutions. Once only did the natives make an attempt to attack me, and then it was through my own aggressiveness in penetrating into the mysteries of devil worship—voodooism and the demon dance; the voodoo priest, known as papa-loi, who actually led in what appeared to be a ferocious attack, has been long converted, and many of his followers, while the papa-loi has been one of our faithful assistant preachers in that section for years.

Back of these revolutions to my own knowledge, and commonly known throughout Haiti, has always been the white man, and the white man's money, and among whom have been at times British, American, French, and other European, but chief among these the last 20 years has been a strong German element, I regret to say. I brought these conditions, with main causes of the political disturbances, during 1902, by means of a letter before President Theodore Roosevelt—which I shall put in the record—and came to Washington again during President Taft's and the beginning of President Wilson's administrations, specially pointing out this fact, and urging our Government to come to Haiti, and Haiti's defense.

Merchants throughout Haiti, the majority of whom are Germans, have been all along acting either as consuls, or vice consuls of their European Government, hence are in Haiti unfortunately in this dual capacity. These are the invisible but potent political forces back of the Haitian revolution.

HAITIAN CIVIL WAR.

MOUNT VERNON, EDWARDSVILLE, PA., August 1, 1891.

President ROOSEVELT.

SIR: I beg very respectfully to call your special attention to a political and humanitarian point of view is of urgent importance in the present revolutionary war that is now being waged in north and south America and causing such misery and suffering not to mention cruel bloodshed and assassination and murder.

The barbaric methods adopted to establish certain political parties and which are such frequent occurrence both in Haiti and Santo Domingo and among peoples of the same race, religion, and language are means initiated by the masses, but are simply the work of a few greedy seekers who subordinate and sacrifice the public welfare to their own and sordid interests.

For many years past these revolutionary movements, bring desolation to the country in general and people in particular, morally, by denying necessary security for life and property, thwarting personal enterprise and legitimate developments along commercial lines, completely crushing national aspirations to rise in the march of progress and civilization, although as a race they have now been politically free for more than 100 years.

These constant upheavals, fraught with so much ruin and loss of life, which the island seems utterly unable to resist, are the work as already of a few natives, mostly refugees, residing in Jamaica and France, and by European and American money lenders, who financially support and wise fomented them. Ammunition for such purpose is smuggled in from two places, where these plots are planned and hatched by Europeans and Germans.

While rejoicing at your Government's prompt action in dispatching troops to aid American citizens in the north (Cape Haitian), yet from high as well as humanitarian reasons, may I strongly urge upon you the advisability of extending the same protection at least for life to the natives themselves here, and in other cities along the coast, where they are left at the mercy of these unscrupulous, unprincipled avaricious and lawless marauders whose one desire is to get a firm grip hold of the small purse strings so as to enrich themselves and few following at the expense of robbing the whole community, and keeping the country in abject poverty.

Should you be able to offer this protection and to safeguard the country from this policy of rapine and plunder long pursued by dishonest plunderers, I can assure you, sir, that hundreds of thousands of the suffering throughout that region would feel forever grateful to the United States for such benevolent interposition as nothing less than a godsend, and of long looked and much prayed for day of deliverance and the inauguration of a new era; after many years in a state of political and moral degradation, worse, if possible, than that of slavery in olden days.

In advising and urging this immediate interference I am by no means insensible to the delicate nature of the task, and certainly some of the risks which such a procedure involves.

Yet is it not immoral, cruel, yes criminal, that poor Haiti, like the old who fell among thieves on the highway to Jericho, robbed, wounded, bleeding from every pore, should be severely left alone in her blood to die, simply for fear of being misunderstood or of arousing the suspicion or jealousy of some other nation? Such risks are certainly more imaginary than real.

If this great commonwealth that without a single moment's delay to the aid of Fort De France recently, showed its practical sympathy and gave its generous help to the sorrow-stricken inhabitants of Martinique, St. Vincent, were again, and in this case, to play the part of the Good Samaritan, and with or without the cooperation of England act as guarantor for order and good government, and see that the laws and elections, as stipulated by the Constitution, were rigidly enforced, further merit the unstinted praise and unbounded admiration of the world.

It is quite patent to all that those who now pretend to rule Haiti are politically as well as morally utterly unfit; and that the sad and heart-rending state of affairs in that island constitutes a serious menace to the best interests of England and the States, which, if continued, must reflect discreditably upon these two great powers so immediately concerned in the Caribbean Sea.

The practice of appointing storekeepers and merchants who do business with the natives, and who so often benefit financially by these internal troubles as official and semiofficial representatives of foreign Governments, is neither calculated to inspire confidence in the inhabitants nor likely to add to official efficiency in the discharge of their duties to their respective governments.

The cost of supervising the island, as suggested, if thought practical, might be easily borne by Haiti itself, seeing the advantages derived from such a course. The expenses would be more than saved by disbanding the present army (for should the States safeguard the shores from invasions by foreign powers and political filibusters) so that the men can go home to cultivate their grounds and otherwise develop their country—a small number only retained merely to police the interior and preserve law and order in cities along the coasts.

In addition to the immense benefits bestowed upon these Republics, such as placing the race in a position to work out its political and social salvation, this great Commonwealth would once more demonstrate to the world at large her position in the forefront of governments, which seeks to use her great power and mighty influence not to add territorial possessions and increase her wealth, but for something higher and nobler, viz, to protect the weak against the strong, to establish law and order where now chaos and terror reign supreme, to encourage honest industry, to further national progress, yea, to develop and advance the truest and best form of civilization.

An expression of sympathy with above object and appeal, and especially of hearty willingness, with or without the cooperation of England, to take immediate steps in this matter so as to save further suffering and prevent bloodshed, will be esteemed a great favor.

In behalf of hundreds of thousands of neglected and downtrodden negroes of Haiti.

Yours, very sincerely,

L. TON EVANS,

Field Secretary and Baptist Pioneer Missionary in Haiti.

MR. EVANS. While dealing with this phase of the question in fixing responsibility I should point to the committee, how intelligent, educated Haitians, and there are quite a number of smart and bright persons among the better class, with a touch of French politeness and some refinement after years of training in the schools, colleges, and universities of Paris, return to their island home with changed ideas and altogether different, and in many respects higher aspirations. Their education and classical training in Europe makes them dissatisfied with conditions in Haiti, and properly so.

THE CHAIRMAN. Now, if you will not go too far afield, Mr. Evans, what is the bearing of the education of these Haitians on the machinations of the foreigners when incited to revolution?

MR. EVANS. The direct bearing of it is this, that being discontented with conditions in Haiti, and moved with a strong desire and newly enkindled patriotism as the result of their training in Paris and contact with Europeans, and having nothing special to do in poor Haiti they become an easy prey to foreigners, and the white man with political intentions and profiteering desires, to be used and exploited by them under the pretence that an overthrow of the president and change of government will result, and, indeed, is inevitable to the bettering of conditions and development of the Black Republic.

SENATOR POMERENE. Do I understand you to mean that they become the prey of these foreign elements?

MR. EVANS. Exactly so, through their dissatisfaction with Haiti's very low and backward condition, and often a burning love for their country, with desire for the betterment of Haiti, mostly inexperienced, unsuspecting the white foreigner's motive, and that they merely meant to exploit them and their country and get a firm grip of the Republic's purse strings—customs.

SENATOR POMERENE. I take it that your thought is that these foreigners are there for the purpose of exploiting rather than for the improvement of the country?

MR. EVANS. I would not like to put it in that way in reference to all foreigners. There might have been other motives at first, but seeing a fine opportunity for exploitation among these good natured, innocent, im- yet unskilled, though somewhat educated people, these foreigners, and Germans, have been eager to take full advantage of it, also opposing means and actually stultifying Haiti's efforts to disentangle itself from the Germans, and their intrigues when discovered, so as to ally itself with the United States and seek our Government's closer friendship and good will and encouragement and protection to develop their own rich resources graphically their closest neighbor, in fact.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Evans, are these foreigners who foment revolution accustomed to make monetary advances to revolutionary generals and to pay rates?

Mr. EVANS. Yes, sir; most decidedly.

The CHAIRMAN. Selling arms?

Mr. EVANS. That is so.

The CHAIRMAN. In short, they have a direct profit in inciting revolution.

Mr. EVANS. Absolutely so, and in constantly fomenting political dissension. For instance, in August of 1911, when returning from the World Peace Conference at Philadelphia, a German banker from Haiti sat next me on the boat. In conversing about the recent revolutions of 1910 which I had seen and gone through, and describing to him the terrible sufferings, and bloodshed, this German banker answered, though not in Haiti, that he actually knew more about them than I did. He then added: "I financed them from Berlin, as well as the previous revolutions. I furnished ammunition, and have been staying in Germany several months arranging these matters." Remembering the devastation and murder committed by the friend the Rev. George Angus, a British subject and missionary from Haiti, through stray shots of revolutionists fomented and financed from Germany, I jumped to my feet, denounced his cowardly, cruel, and murderous suggestion, adding, he should have been made to face the Haitian cannon fire, to smell his own German powder from the barrel of the Haitian gun, to be ashamed of his mean, despicable, and, indeed, devilish acts, then he turned on himself and his crowd, while the poor, helpless, and deluded Haitians bore the whole blame and were called "assassins" and "cutthroats."

There is also jealousy and a growing hatred against the United States, increasing interest and influence in Haiti and the Caribbean Sea, which the United States and its influence are always recognized and backed up by England, to the chagrin of Germans and their supporters in Haiti the last decade.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Evans, I do not think we need to go so far as that.

Mr. EVANS. But is it not too bad that these Negroes should be made to bear the whole blame and painted everywhere as brutes and savages, if not as cannibals, through the cowardly and greedy exploitation of the whites and his money?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, Mr. Evans, we want all the facts rather than mere opinions. During those four years preceding your departure in 1912 what was the condition of the Haitian peasant, his relation to the general de la place, the general d'arrondissement; did he get justice in the courts?

Mr. EVANS. I believe they did. I heard very little complaint. When I had an occasion to go to court the Haitian judge showed ability and impartiality. Officials of the court and other Government departments, in occasional delays, were invariably polite. Being privileged as a missionary and an American citizen, I was given a free pass, hence I was not bothered with ordinary officials about "permits" to travel, and of what was somewhat strict on account of the said revolutions. I put in to the secretary a copy of one of these free permits, signed by the secretary of the interior, a member of Haitian cabinet.

[Liberte. Egalite. Fraternite.]

REPUBLIQUE D'HAITI.

PORT AU PRINCE le 23 Décembre, 1911, au 10 8me De l'Indépendance.

LE SECRÉTAIRE D'ÉTAT, au Département de l'Intérieur:

Accorde, par les présente, permis au Révérend I. Ton Evans, Secrétaire Général de la Mission Baptiste pour Haiti de voyage Librement dans toute la République.

Les autorités civile et militaires sont invités à lui prêter aide et protection au besoin.

Fait à Port au Prince le 23 Décembre, 1911 au 10 8° de l'Indépendance.

Emigista à le Secrétaire d'Etat de l'Intérieur et de la Police Générale, le 23 Décembre, 1911, au 10 8° de l'Indépendance, au No. 461.

LE CHEF DE DIVISION.

THE CHAIRMAN. Tell us the lot of the peasant. What is his relation to the general d'arrondissement and general-da-la-place? Is he free to go where he will? Are his taxes justly levied, and so on?

MR. EVANS. Taxes? There are not many taxable things in Haiti.

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes.

MR. EVANS. There are not many articles taxed in Haiti. Imports are the chief source of revenue. These financial arrangements of the Government did not come within my purview. As I have said, the political conditions obligated them to be strict as to permits for traveling within or for leaving the Republic. Though discouraged by revolutions to raise crops, I found the peasants often thrifty, and certain sections of the Republic showed labor and skill with some good crops. As a whole, however, and considering the richness of the soil, instability of government, and no market, Haiti is in a very backward condition industrially. To prevent revolutions and encourage the cultivation of this rich land, I came again and again to our State Department at Washington urging our Government to protect Haiti and act the big brother to this weak and defenceless little nation.

For this reason the petition signed by nearly 3,000 Haitians, including Presidents Simon and Laconte and all leading Haitians of the Republic, was gotten up and presented to secretary of Carnegie's international peace bureau and of the Rockefeller Foundation praying for a normal and industrial college for Haiti and on Christian basis like Tuskegee. A copy of this will be placed in record.

The granting of large concessions by way of plantations and the land for railroads to the American contractor Macdonald by President Simon was an honest endeavor to open up the country for industrial cultivation of the land on a large scale by Haitians and for Haiti's benefit, but under leadership of the white man with modern implements.

This was defeated through the German propaganda in starting a revolution and the overthrow of President Simon and his government in 1911. The Germans persisted that Simon had "sold Haiti to the United States."

Senator POMERENE. Who was this railroad contractor?

MR. EVANS. Mr. Macdonald, of New York. It was freely said in Haiti that in addition to subsequently fomenting and financing this revolution which finally ousted President Simon, a sum of not less than $350,000 of German money was actually spent in bribing senate or house members or both, at Port au Prince so as not to ratify the said contracts. In his heroic endeavor to put down this rebellion and emphatically contradicting the Germans' propaganda, I saw the aged President in actual tears and all but broken hearted, as he told me if the United States Government had come to his aid the Government and so the railroad and plantations would have been saved, if not thousands of Haitian lives.

Senator POMERENE. As I understood you, you used the expression "sold to the United States." What did you mean by that?

MR. EVANS. That the Haiti Republic had been handed over to the United States Government and people for a consideration, and that President Simon had betrayed the Haitians.

Senator POMERENE. That the President did?

MR. EVANS. Yes; that Antoine Simon, the then President of the black Republic, had done it. This, of course, was revolution propaganda of the German element—to arouse the natives to rebel against and overthrow their President—and it succeeded, whereas he had done the best possible thing under the circumstances to open up industries, and, as he said, to secure labor, with fair pay to the natives. These contracts and land to Macdonald were to revert to the Haitian Government after a number of years.

Senator POMERENE. I think I misunderstood you at first. You mean they said he had sold Haiti; is that it?

MR. EVANS. Yes; it was a willful misrepresentation of the actual truth by these German propagandists, playing on the sentiment of these quiet, ignorant people, who have a burning passion, however, for their own Negro republic.

The CHAIRMAN. You started to tell a while ago of a message which Leconte gave you. What message was that?

Mr. EVANS. It was that if he was to have a stable Government, a continued in the executive office to carry out the urgent reforms he had commenced, and those he contemplated, "he must have the close practical help, protection, and encouragement of the United States Government, whose interests were paramount in Haiti and Central America."

Cincinnatus Leconte had spent some years at Washington as Haitian consul, could speak English fluently, and, in my opinion, was the best and cultured Haitian, with a practical turn of mind, that ever sat in the presidential palace at Port au Prince.

I put in a quotation in the record, from one of my circulars, written in 1912, and referring to Leconte's election as President and consequent prospects at last for Haiti politically, educationally, and religiously.

THE RADICAL CHANGE IN THE HAITI GOVERNMENT.

"America and the outside world, and even 90 per cent of the Haitians themselves, are at present ignorant as to the magnitude of the change in transformation, which has recently taken place with the coming in of a new Government, and that in the most unexpected and providential manner. The second revolution of last year was started by the savage Caicos, or rather by the shippers and devil devotees near the Dominican frontier in the north of the way part of the Republic. In reality it was a case of Satan driving out Satan.

"President Leconte and his ministry represent the intelligence and the future of the country. There is to be found to-day in palace and cabinet not only a new type of civilization but an atmosphere of refinement, which, if wisely directed, backed up by a fearless policy and sympathetic and efficient administration, our United States Government, and the blessing of God, must ere long bring about a beneficent change throughout the country, long neglected, with 3,000,000 poverty-stricken but withal kind-hearted people.

"It is really Haiti's first civil government. The next few years, if wisely directed, are fraught with tremendous consequences to this land.

"Yes; the psychological moment has come, and which many have long awaited, fully and anxiously forward to, and some of us even fervently prayed for the last 10, 15, and 20 years. There must now be no time lost in waiting for our help and rescue; for the uplift of Haiti means actually the uplift of the whole Negro race. For reasons partly geographical, political, and socially providential, the true character and capacity of the African race, its government, etc., will be judged by what the black man is really capable of in an independent Republic of Haiti."

Senator POMERENE. Without going into details, and the chairman's opinions rather than facts, and I do not care to pursue that further, I stated that this German banker in Haiti told you that he financed the revolution?

Mr. EVANS. Yes, sir; I did.

Senator POMERENE. Have you any other evidential facts which would support your conclusion that he or other Germans were financing that revolution?

Mr. EVANS. It was common knowledge in 1910 or 1911, perhaps 1912, something like $350,000 of German money had been spent to prevent the confirmation or ratification of the Macdonalds' contracts and land contracts. Ex-President Simon, who still lives in Haiti and can be called before the committee, was in consequence compelled to threaten the use of force to bring the senate or house together for the purpose of ratification.

Senator POMERENE. You regard him as entirely loyal to Haiti's interests, etc.?

Mr. EVANS. I believe so; many—in fact all the Presidents who succeeded him in reforms are powerless because of the German influence in the past.

Senator POMERENE. Is that true of President Leconte?

Mr. EVANS. Indeed, even more so than in President Simon's case, he was better educated, had filled important offices, and knew the United States and American people, if not also Germany and Germans, better than did President Simon before or after him at Port au Prince.

Senator POMERENE. Were any of these Presidents that they have had there since your own acquaintance with Haiti under the domination of these German propagandists?

Mr. EVANS. I would like to explain here, so that the committee may really understand the difficulty and impossibility for any Haitian President alone and unaided by the United States, England, or France to withstand the powerful, ruthless, and murderous German propaganda at Port-au-Prince and Cape-Haitien in the past. Leconte at one time was absolutely dominated by these Germans, and was put up by them for the Presidency, and made a strong candidate, and was all but elected several years ago. He was again their candidate in 1911 against Simon, but, having at last seen through the German intrigue, refused to head the revolution and become candidate, and only reluctantly consented at the last moment, seeing the serious peril to himself of blank refusal, being under, no doubt, special obligation to this controlling and financing German power.

During our interview at the presidential palace, alone, discussing, in view of the backward condition of the country, his—Leconte—responsibility as Haiti's newly elected President, how we in the United States, with Britain, looked for a real change in the conduct of Haiti affairs, and, indeed, that the time had arrived, unless we saw a decided improvement—the United States Government had for years felt a grave responsibility re Haiti and could not put off much longer the demand for a stable Government with, indeed, a higher civilization and a more humane conduct of political and public affairs—we would be compelled to act. I assured him, however, that there was absolutely no truth, as I had assured Simon and Haiti's responsible leaders, in the statements made by Germans and others, namely, "That we coveted an acre of Haitian territory," which, if we did, we could have had the two Republics, in fact, 20 years ago with Britain and France's unanimous consent and hearty benediction, but his was not American policy.

He believed implicitly what I said, expressed his strong desire and determination to proceed with improvements, but stated he would be helpless against the influence mentioned, and then his last wish was that I immediately return to Washington to urge the Government to assist and stand behind him.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this President Leconte to whom you refer, or is it Simon?

Mr. EVANS. I am now referring to the late President Leconte. At his special request, I came to Washington and had an interview with Second Assistant State Secretary Adee, but nothing was done, I deeply regret to say.

The CHAIRMAN. What year was this?

Mr. EVANS. The beginning of 1912. In requesting that a capable person be once sent to Haiti in an unofficial capacity, altogether apart from our American minister or United States consul in the black Republic, yet close to the Secretary of State and United States President, and one that would have a freer access to Haiti's President than any diplomat, Mr. Adee termed what I suggested as new diplomacy and expressed a doubt as to whether the black President would really be willing to receive such. I replied that President Leconte had expressed a very similar doubt as to the United States President and our State Department, adding that unfortunately we forgot that white as well as colored were not free from suspicion. Though no one was sent from Washington, Leconte started to reform—made voodoo dances and orgies illegal; reduced the army to one-third or one-half; and raised the type standard; built the present fine barracks occupied now by our marines at Port-au-Prince. As anticipated, he was assassinated with others, and palace blown up. The leaders in Haiti have but one opinion as to how it was done. In 1912, not long after that, I left for Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Evans, after your departure in 1912 you did not return again until 1917. Tell us of your impressions as to conditions in Haiti on your arrival in 1917 and give us any facts regarding the occupation which you think might be useful to the committee.

Mr. EVANS. Before answering this question, may I briefly explain?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. EVANS. Between 1912 and 1917, though away from Haiti, I was in constant correspondence with the churches and our missionary brethren there without any censor, which, however, I have had since my coming from Haiti in 1919 to date, and in my position as honorary field secretary. Thus, for instance, I was kept in close touch with affairs in Haiti by this means and what appeared in our American press. For instance, finding that our Government had armed the marines in Haiti, and preparing a treaty with the Negro Republic, I wrote to President Wilson, inclosing a number of my references—one from right Hon. David Lloyd-George—offering to resign my church at Lansford, Pa., and as an American citizen and Christian missionary with long experience for the purpose of rendering assistance to our Government by explaining to the Haitians the meaning of apparent "invasion" so as to avoid serious misunderstandings, bloody conflicts, if not open rebellion, and prove equally helpful to officers of American marines as to the Haitians themselves. A copy of this letter is handed here for the record and is as follows:

[Copy of letter to President Woodrow Wilson, United States.]

LANSFORD, PA., September 1, 1918.

HON. WOODROW WILSON,

President of the United States.

DEAR PRESIDENT: I propose next week to visit Washington, D. C., so as to see the two native young women I brought a few years ago from Haiti, and have just graduated at the National Missionary Training School for Colored Young Women on Lincoln Heights, D. C.

I am very anxious to have the honor of a brief interview on this occasion, with reference to Haiti, either Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday of next week, and at a time most convenient to the President, especially seeing that the present is the most momentous period in the history of the black Republic (the discovery of the island by Columbus) and the people, under the general leadership of the brave, noble, and immortal Touissant L'Overture (Haiti's Lincoln, George Washington in one), secured for them both emancipation from slavery and political independence from France and Napoleon.

Hundreds of thousands of Haitians, if not indeed the rank and file of the Republic, when the high motives and benevolent intentions of our United States Government and the true meaning of the present step become clearly and thoroughly understood, will sincerely thank God and the present administration, through you, sir, for establishing a protectorate, thus actually coming to Haiti's rescue and saving her from cruel and savage bloodshed, etc., perpetrated by a few selfish, professional, and corrupted politicians exclusively by certain Europeans and "hyphenated" Americans residing in Haiti (ostensibly German bankers, merchants, etc., but filled with wicked jealous and bitter hatred (unfortunately) against our Government, and the natural and inevitable growing influence of this Christian and humane nation in the Caribbean Sea and throughout Central America, if not, indeed, the whole of the world at the present moment.

Inclosed<sup>1</sup> will show the President my own present and past relations with the black Republic and its people, as well as the "raison d'être" in asking the honor of a short interview at this important juncture.

For Christ and Haiti,

Yours, sincerely,

L. TON EVANS

Honorary Foreign Secretary, etc., to Haiti Missionary Committee.

P. S.—Though a native of Wales, and claim among my personal friends and associates in social, moral, and religious work there the Right Hon. Lloyd-George, M. P., Sir Sam. T. Evans, president-judge of Great Britain's war prize court, etc., yet I am a full-fledged American citizen, without either "if" or a "hyphen."

Mr. Tumulty replied in behalf of the President, requested me to write a letter rather than have an interview with Mr. Wilson at that time, and which I immediately did, though it amounted to nothing. In fact, my candid opinion was that neither my first nor second letter went further than Secretary Tumulty.

With the committee's permission, I shall read a page of my report sent to Haiti in 1918 to my missionary committee in the States, showing, on the spot, and looking around, both my surprise and deep appreciation of some of the good work of our American marines.

The CHAIRMAN. I wonder if you might not give that to the stenographer for incorporation in the record.

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be unnecessary to read it. Just give it to me when you will?

Mr. EVANS. May I read a few paragraphs before I hand it over to the record?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

<sup>1</sup> These meant references as to character and work in Haiti, etc.

(Mr. Evans thereupon read certain portions of report referred to, which is here printed, as follows:)

HAITI BAPTIST MISSION REPORT FOR 1918.

After an enjoyable voyage from New York, and in spite of war, submarines, etc., we landed safely in Haiti Thanksgiving Day, November 29, last year, and were welcomed back by all the churches and friends, and none more heartily than by late Judge Orius and family (whom we mourn and miss). Letters and wires of welcome also came from pastors and friends from all over the Republic.

POLITICAL AND SANITARY REFORMS, WITH PEACE AT LAST.

The first thing which struck me as soon as we landed and looked around was the complete change wrought through the coming of our American occupation.

The general appearance in this little filthy town and all towns and cities in Haiti, though from nestling between the hills and shaded by the broad banana leaves and stately palm and coconut trees have a beautiful tropical appearance from aboard of steamers, away at sea, are on closer acquaintance proverbially dirty, yet since our marines have been here things have greatly improved by way of well-swept roads, free of decayed vegetation and mosquito-breeding stagnant pools, etc.

What, however, surprised and pleased me most was the order and quiet, with pleasant and placid faces of natives, instead of suppressed feelings, anxious fears, and sad countenances, with exciting looks; the running here and there; then the sound of doors and shutters (there are no glass windows in Haiti) suddenly banged and bolted, followed by shots and bullets, no one seemed to know from where, in fact; then cries and wild shrieks of women and small children rending the midday as well as the midnight air—I well remember in old revolutionary days. As the result, such a calm and growing confidence among the natives themselves as the result of the occupation compels me to thank God, and I am sure tens of thousands of others here all over the Republic do so in silent gratitude, both to the Almighty as well as the United States Government, that at last (at the earnest bidding of the British consul general and French minister in Haiti) Admiral Caperton landed our American marines that day at Port-au-Prince, and thus rescue poor, politically and revolutionary torn and bleeding Haiti from the selfish and sordid greed and iron grasp of Germans, who financially and murderously exploited this country and people for many years with Berlin money and ammunition.

Great, indeed, as above reforms have been, I saw actual transformation in prisons and hospitals (called hospices by the Catholics), and so your superintendent will quote from his recent letter to chief of hygiene department of the occupation:

"Mrs. Evans and myself take quite an interest in our little St. Marc Hospital, as we do in our local calabash (prison), and often go around the sick of the one and conduct religious services on Sunday afternoons in the other.

"We can not but notice the contrast between things to-day and years ago due to your efficient work.

"This is particularly true of the Jacmel prison and hospital which on my recent tour south as superintendent I had the privilege of visiting in company with our marine captain and doctor.

"These reforms alone, in interest of health and humanity, proved what a goldsend has been the friendly intervention of our Government (so far) along these lines in Haiti.

"May I respectfully ask whether you contemplate changing the name of hospice into city or general hospital, so as to make them equally as accessible, pleasant, and agreeable to Protestants and Catholics alike, and seeing they are maintained by the Government, aided by local and general public?"

Sickly Protestants could not be persuaded to go to the hospice. There was a fundamental objection which I desired to remove, if possible, now that the United States Government operated them.

SENATOR POMERENE. This was a report made by you to whom?

MR. EVANS. To my Negro missionary committee in the States, and show them some of the blessings brought to Haiti through our friendly intervention as an United States Government, and for all of which there was then a profound feeling of gratitude.

Senator POMERENE. Do you discuss the following conditions there and the revolutionary conditions?

Mr. EVANS. No; but there seemed to be such misunderstanding, if representations, in the States, and even a bitter feeling among American Baptists, absolutely ignorant of real conditions in Haiti, through the fomented and financial revolutions—to any kind of United States intervention that I felt it my duty as an American and a friend of Haiti, as a Christian missionary, and by way of an introduction to my first annual report to correct these misunderstandings and, if possible, remove certain prejudices which colored as well as white folks sometimes are afflicted with.

My criticism of the United States Government and the Democratic Administration is not that they intervened in Haiti when they landed marine Admiral Caperton, neither to the treaty our Government negotiated with the Haitian Republic, which guaranteed the Negro republic's protection, the liberties of the Haitians, and undertook to develop Haiti nationally and industrially by constitutional means and civilized and humane methods. My criticism and personal protest has been that the United States Government, either through its responsible departments at Washington or American occupation in Haiti, or both, and under the late administration closed the Haiti Senate and House of Representatives through United States armed force, and as if this was not sufficient, again by threats, military force, and "fraud," "raped" the Haiti constitution in absolute violation of the treaty, and, as stated in my memorandum presented to President Wilson, exact repudiation of our own treaty obligations.

This latter and most fraudulent act clinched the nail in the coffin of our American reputation and influence in the Black Republic and among the Haitian people, as well as aroused and embittered the feeling of intelligent loyal Negroes, and even white Americans, throughout the country against American occupation.

According to Haiti's request, as expressed through Laconte and others, under the generous terms of our treaty, we assumed a friendly mandate and undertook to act the big brother.

Senator POMERENE. That is, they wanted us to be the guardian of the Republic; that is?

Mr. EVANS. No; something more than mere protection of life and property, important as that is. They expected, and as stipulated in our treaty, that we should have the full benefit of the United States money, the best American brains, as well as that of our experience in civilized government, if we were to have steady and strong Christian statesmanship; but our conduct in Haiti, as I have described, has largely verified German predictions concerning us, namely:

"The moment the American Government puts its foot down in Haiti, under the plea of having land at Mole St. Nicholas for a coaling station, and the pretense of an invasion by its marines at Port-au-Prince, to save ruthlessness during a revolution, and in spite of any treaty they may negotiate, their one purpose is to conquer Haiti, take away the island, and bring them back to slavery."

Haitians have no means of judging motives, only by methods, and the purpose of the United States Government and the American people is to oppress or 95 per cent illiterate Negroes of Haiti—judging by the slamming of senate and chamber's doors, the putting out by military force their political leaders, the rape of their constitution, and robbing and driving of their husbands, and brothers to prisons and marched about as slaves, and then down and shot without due process of law—absolutely believed to be what the Germans and others had told them. We can not help believe that by our official representatives whom we send to the Black Republic we are there where.

To correct this impression and expose and refute the base falsehoods of American policy, I have for years carried an old copy of the New York Times with me all over Haiti, containing an article by late ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, beloved and now mourned in Haiti, on the United States policy in Haiti, explaining it in English, French, and patois, and pointed to the Cuban Revolution as verification of Mr. Roosevelt's reassuring message to Haiti and Latin America.

The following declaration of ex-President Wilson to Congress on our intervention in the World War on the side of the Allies I had also hanging in my study place in my study, and read and explained repeatedly to leading Haitians, who bitterly complained, and even wept, saying, "We have lost our Republic."

sionary," when I counseled them to be patient and wait until we brought the facts before the responsible United States Government and they were known to the great American people. It is as follows:

"WE HAVE NO SELFISH ENDS TO SERVE, WE DESIRE NO CONQUEST, NO DOMINION.

"We are, let me say again, the sincere friends of the German people, and shall desire nothing so much as the early reestablishment of intimate relations of mutual advantage between us, however hard it may be for them for the time being to believe that this is spoken from our hearts.

"We have borne with their present Government through all these bitter months, because of their friendship, that friendship exercising a patience and forbearance which would otherwise have been impossible. We shall happily still have an opportunity to prove that friendship in our daily attitude and action toward the millions of men and women of German birth, and native sympathy, who live among us and share our life, and we shall be proud to prove toward all who are in fact loyal to their neighbors and to the Government in the hour of test.

"It is a distressing thing and an oppressive duty, gentlemen of the Congress, which I have performed in thus addressing you. There are it may be many months of fiery trial and sacrifice ahead of us. It is a fearful thing to lead this great, peaceful people into war—into the most terrible and disastrous of all wars—civilization itself seeming to be in the balance.

"But the right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own government, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free." (United States Congress on Apr. 2, 1917.)

From my reading and study of the treaty we entered Haiti solemnly pledged to help place her and her people eventually on such a civilized basis as to enable her to enter the circle of surrounding civilized and progressive nations, and nothing should be permitted to cause us to deviate from this purpose and play into the hands of Haiti's foes if not also the enemies of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Evans, I do not believe the committee can go so far afield. We have got to hold to the facts you observed there, and not to the expression of opinion or the history of your efforts in defense of the United States.

Mr. EVANS. The purpose of our Government going to Haiti is one thing while the violation of the treaty and the conduct of the American marines and gendarmes in the island is another. These should not be confused, so I felt justified in explaining this in the report to my missionary board.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand this part of your report to your board has been given for the record. Now, let us come back to what you saw on your return to the island.

Senator POMERENE. At what time?

The CHAIRMAN. In 1917 and thereafter. For example, if you care to speak of the amendment to the constitution; the dissolution of the Parliament or the corvée, any one of them, the committee will be glad to hear you.

Mr. EVANS. I will say that the corvée business was brought to my attention not long after I returned. It was an old custom in Haiti, but never I think a law. It is customary in backward countries for farmers, or those who have their small habitations or small holdings in Haiti, once or twice a year to devote two or three days or so to help repair roads opposite their own farms.

The occupation in Haiti, however, intentionally or ignorantly put a new and altogether an erroneous meaning to it by actually turning it into an instrument for oppressing and torturing the Haitian people, and exciting their passions, and apparently some times for no other purpose than to provide them with an excuse to beat, if not shoot them down. Excitable gendarmes in the United States marines' employ and often, under influence of liquor, when arresting, roving, then driving along roads, and mountains as gangs of African slaves rather than as citizens of the Haiti Republic, whom the great American Government by a sacred treaty, had officially pledged to protect, were very often roughly and brutally handled, for no native could be expected to voluntarily submit to such humiliation. From what I have seen and heard I verily believe that more have met their deaths through the corvée thus illegally practiced, willfully or ignorantly, by marines and gendarmes and accused by those in supreme command and at Washington than were killed in conflict with Cacos, if it was not indeed the chief cause and mainstay of the occupation.

Senator KING. Who did this?

Mr. EVANS. The American occupation.

Senator KING. Who?

Mr. EVANS. There was a captain or lieutenant at every town throughout Haiti in official charge of these gendarmes (Negro soldiers) and chosen by these white marines of the American occupation. Many of the marines, and probably most of the gendarmes, were fond of drink. Under official orders of the marines would catch, arrest, and rope up and drive them to prison, and from prison to work on the roads. Under such conditions often cruelly deal with them.

The last Sunday of June, 1918, going on Sunday afternoon from Gonaïves toward Jacmel, in the far southeastern part of the Republic, I saw several gangs, altogether perhaps 60 or 80 or more, and in charge of white officers who rode along side and well armed. On inquiry from the officers, I was informed that these were paid 1 gourde or, in American money, 20 cents a week; without any food. It is therefore to imagine how the unpaid, ill-fed native driven to work like these, many miles away from home and families as there were, become uneasy, irritated, and even rebellious invariably means death.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you give specific instances of ill treatment of the natives that you saw yourself?

Mr. EVANS. I have repeatedly seen ill treatment. Both in and around St. Marc, perhaps 2 or 3 miles on the way to Gonaïves, I have seen it at work men, for merely turning the head and without the slightest provocation as far as I could see struck until actually stunned. Prisoners of St. Marc working around the gendarme barracks, almost opposite where I have seen on week days and on Sunday unmercifully striking the prisoners and I have walked on and intervened at times on my way to church.

The CHAIRMAN. Struck by whom?

Mr. EVANS. By gendarmes, and at times a boss, the marine officer appointed as overseer over the natives, who would be a robust Negro.

The CHAIRMAN. Who dealt the blow, a marine or a gendarme?

Mr. EVANS. By the gendarme or the native boss. The marine officer would seldom be seen with the corvée gangs. The marine captain or lieutenant would generally be at his headquarters. The marine chief at St. Marc would be either Capt. Kenny or Capt. Brown. They have several of these gangs in two, three, or more places along the roads in the charge of armed gendarmes.

The CHAIRMAN. The man who dealt the blow was a member of the gendarmerie organized by the marines; is that right?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; exactly so. He would be under him and receive orders from him as chief of the occupation for that district.

Senator POMERENE. But a black?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; they would be natives.

Senator POMERENE. You do not mean to say that our marines use violence?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; though I myself never actually saw this. One would not expect our marines and white officers of the American occupation to use any violence in my presence or that of any other Christian. They give the orders and see they are carried out. They supervise the reports, and are responsible. It is quite possible that gendarmes, unless deterred from utter fear of being shot, do certain things on their own initiative.

Senator KING. Mr. Evans, we will devote our attention to fixing responsibility, and if you will limit yourself to that and answer the question will get along.

Mr. EVANS. I have already stated that marines are seldom with corvée gangs and would not personally if they were guilty of violence in the presence of a missionary. They mostly are at headquarters and give orders. I am here to assist the committee to ascertain real facts.

Senator POMERENE. You said these workmen would get 20 cents a week for American money?

Mr. EVANS. No; but that the natives received an equivalent to our money. They would be paid in Haitian money, which would be then Senator POMERENE. Paid by whom?

Mr. EVANS. By the United States general receiver, through the American occupation's marine officers.

Senator POMERENE. Well, I know, but did that money come from the Haiti Government, or from the United States forces?

Mr. EVANS. I understand that all moneys in Haiti come through the hands of the United States general receiver, who pays everybody through the occupation, or the American marine officers, and even the Catholic archbishop, bishops, priests, etc.

Senator POMERENE. Well, it was stated here yesterday that most of these men were called in for a few days, and stayed voluntarily because of the good food they got.

Mr. EVANS. That is absolutely wrong, speaking generally. This might be so with a very few who act as bosses, or overseers under the gendarmes on the roads, or in gaol, but false as to the majority of corvée men and roped gangs referred to.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you a further question, because we do not want any misunderstanding as to the facts. Is the committee to understand that the money which was paid these men for their work was money raised by the Haitian Government by taxation?

Mr. EVANS. I can only reply that I understand that every dollar in Haiti, whether American loans, imports, or local taxes, come directly through the hands of America's general receiver.

Senator POMERENE. But they were Haitian funds, were they, raised by the Haitian taxpayers or by the Haitian importers?

Mr. EVANS. I do not think this is so. Referring to the food question, I saw while in the prison at St. Marc these men, working under the corvée, lined up in front of my cell and driven out about 6 o'clock in the morning, often with nothing but a little coffee, marched under armed guard to work miles away, then brought back to prison, carefully searched, and compelled to wait from about 4 until nearly 6 without being fed; a few times when the captain was said to have gone drinking, with keys, if not money, there was not a scrap for any.

The CHAIRMAN. Was this at St. Marc?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; at St. Marc. I have seen these men here struck with such force by the gendarme officer, and for the merest trifle, until they would fall like logs. Many for want of food fainting and at times falling their full length on the hard floor of the prison yard. Whether once members of the corvée gang or not I can not say, but I have actually seen dead bodies covered with vermin exposed and naked for days—one would be obliged to pass, with men and women, and some of latter with babies—lying around.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you, because I want to get the facts just as they are, and I have no interest in this matter at all. You speak of these men being struck, and you said they were struck by Haitian gendarmes.

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Are we to understand that this method of discipline was encouraged or fostered or directed by the American marines, or was that a general method of attempting to enforce discipline?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly, I am sorry to say. It was owing to the low type of gendarmes so often employed by the marines, and again through the want of proper discipline, if not in some cases the immoral and drunken habits, inexperience, and ignorance of the native language by the American captain or lieutenant in charge, though probably there are improvements since the various inquiries recently made and publicity and exposure through the press.

Senator POMERENE. Well, can we infer from what you say that the marines, or the American occupation, has been in any wise responsible for this condition?

Mr. EVANS. Positively. There has been a sad neglect, even recklessness, in the choice of these gendarmes by marine officers, in view of the great authority and power of "life and death" given them in various sections of Haiti; and again there has been a criminal laxity on the part of the general and chief of gendarmerie d'Haiti at Port au Prince and his subordinate officer at Cap-Haïtien in not demanding regular reports of all activities and strictly supervising same. Where there has been care taken, proper discipline exercised by an intelligent, experienced, right-living marine officer, there has been no trouble with gendarmes and no friction between these native officers and the people. Whisky (taffia) and women have been large factors in the demoralization of many marines, but most so of the type of gendarmerie marines employed.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Evans, we all agree that such a condition to exist, but suppose the marines were withdrawn now; if gendarmes were using these brutal methods with our marines likely would happen if there were no marines there in the way of these workmen?

Mr. EVANS. I think my statement at the opening and in my message to President Wilson in October, 1918, and how I came to Washington to ask the United States Government to assume a friendly mandate over Haiti is a proof that I am not in agreement with the witnesses from Haiti and some of our own American people, that should be taken out and our Government be prepared to withdraw from the Black Republic. This would be an admission of failure to carry out a treaty and a certainty that it would not be to the real interest of Haiti for years to come. My firm belief is, now that there is no danger to Haiti, and as one of the results of this Senate committee inquiry that the marines should be reduced to about 220 and their personnel of other departments, a civil occupation replace the military occupation, which the marines and a higher type and best natives as gendarmes under its strict supervision.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Evans, that does not directly answer my question. I am trying to get your idea as to what would happen.

Mr. EVANS. I do not exactly know—

Senator POMERENE. In the treatment of these men—

Mr. EVANS. I can only express an opinion—

Senator POMERENE. By the Haitian gendarmes, in the event that the marines were not there.

Mr. EVANS. I can only express an opinion; and my opinion is that it is under responsible Haitian authority, who would exercise fairly good control in the choice of their gendarmes, supervise their conduct, and their language, that it could not, indeed, be much worse than what I have seen in some cases under many American marines.

Senator POMERENE. Now, let me ask you another question. How do the circumstances of this brutal treatment have you seen?

Mr. EVANS. In the discharge of my work as superintendent mission, I was visiting our mission church on Gros Morne and on the way to the southeast of the Republic in company with our native pastor and other ant preachers Sunday morning the last of June, 1918, I saw, a group of women decently dressed on their way to the Baptist mission church (a Protestant church near by in that section) actually stopped at the entrance of the native gendarmes. Immediately after and going the opposite way, I saw two groups of natives, and including native members and natives who had been caught, roped tightly and cruelly together, and driven toward the same calabash. Then I saw our native missionary tending them, and galloping toward me, shouting, "Missionary, missionary, come here!"

I at once hastened to see what was the matter, that he and other natives were excited, and at once liberated the women, who came along to church. I was told by the native (excited, if not intoxicated) corporal they had committed no crime and there was no charge brought against them, I determined they should be freed and permitted to come back with us to the Houffoules. This he sternly refused to do and forcibly drove them along like cattle. How they were put and what became of them, I do not know.

From the common talk of these mountain people, and what I believe that many are caught, arrested, and roped thus on Sunday and during the week, not merely for the "corvee," but for the sake of extortion of money, when some would be let free again on paying 3 gourdes.

As soon as we reached Jacmel, about perhaps 40 miles or so away, I made a visit of inspection to see the prison and hospital, with our American doctor, the chief officer and white doctor (of the occupation). I was standing by two or more prisoners with their arms like jelly or raw beef and being tended by our American doctor.

As he was putting the salve on their arms, while I stood watching, the captain by my side, and unable to understand what this meant, finding what I saw the previous Sunday on Gros Morne, I turned around and said, "Why, Captain, have you some kind of an epidemic here in Jacmel?"

no," answered the captain, "it is the roping business connected with the corvée." While walking with the said doctor to see the new hospital, I asked, "How often do these cases occur such as you treated just now at the prison?" "They constantly occur," replied American marine doctor, adding, "I am heartily ashamed of them. It is a disgrace to the United States, and to us all as American people." Such was the appreciation of these poor, suffering natives, and the comfort and ease ministered by this sympathetic, humane, medical officer, that they were ready to drop on their knees and actually kiss the feet of the doctor.

I mentioned to the marine captain of gendarmes at Jacmel what Rev. Nosirel Lherisson, the native missionary, and myself witnessed the previous Sunday on going to our mission church on Gros Morne.

Senator KING. Who was the captain?

Mr. EVANS. It was something like Capt. Williams, or Williamson, if I remember well. A well-built officer, genial, and, I should take, a high type of a marine officer, and well spoken of by the Baptist native pastor and others. The captain voluntarily informed me, though a nominal Catholic in the States, he regularly attended the Protestant church, and much enjoyed the preaching of this native Haitian, whom he praised as a good man, doing excellent Christian and educational work in that town and section, only somewhat hampered for lack of proper means adding that he became so interested in his efforts that he had written requesting the Government to present its unused plot of land for Rev. Lherisson to build and enlarge his boys' school.

In reply to my question, "Gros Morne is in the Leogane district, and not that of Jacmel, so you should see Lieut. Kulp, who when he gets the facts will no doubt take steps to remedy the matter." I thanked him for this information and after a few more days busily inspecting our rural public schools for the native children in the far interior many miles from Jacmel, I returned to Port Au Prince, on my way back to St. Marc.

Meantime, however, Sunday came, while still at Jacmel (first Sunday of July, 1918), when as an ex-pastor and missionary I presided with this native whom I had ordained some 25 years before. As the result of the faithful work done, and growth of church, and missions all around, something like 700 and even more attend the communion service the first Lord's day each month. These come the Saturday for Saturday evening conference, 20, 30, 40, and even from 50 miles away, report converts, candidates for baptism, sickness, death, or any misconduct among members, which are all carefully attended to before they partake of the sacred rite of Lord's Supper the following Sunday.

The native pastor pointed out the fewness of the men present, less than one-half the usual number, and when I asked the reason why, "Oh, the 'corvée' of our American marines," was the answer, as he shook his head. "Missionary," he added, "it grieves me to see the present condition of my country under the occupation." These men, husbands, fathers, and brothers are mortally afraid to leave their little homes, even on Sundays, to attend their church. For if seen, they are in peril of being caught, arrested, roped, roughly handled, and driven as described like slaves to prison, to work many miles from home, and for two and three weeks and more without their families knowing anything about them, whether dead or living.

I saw a number of letters written on old scraps of paper in the native patois, asking their pastor to excuse them, and telling him their distress and why compelled to hide from the gendarmes as if they were ravaging wolves or a pack of blood-thirsty bloodhounds haunting every hill and valley, chosen by and in the employ and officered by American marines of my own United States Government, solemnly pledged by treaty to protect the liberty, limb, and life of the natives of Haiti.

I insert in the record a copy of one of these notes to the Jacmel missionary pastor, penned, no doubt, with a trembling hand and in native-made ink by this negro assistant preacher, and so faint that it can not all be deciphered, hence an only quote a part, expressing sadness of being thus deprived of the means of grace and begging dear pastor to pray that this reign of terror and death may soon come to an end:

"LA VALLEE DE JACMEL.

Le cher Pasteur P. N. LHERISSON.

"MON CHER PASTEUR: Je vous prie votre bonte s'il y'a possible en vous de me dire trouve un permil entre les mains les autorites. Car je trouve des miserables gens le travo," etc.; here it becomes too indistinct to continue.

While in Haiti I expect the committee's permission to call Pastor with some of these native preachers, as well as those from Gros Morne, to testify in reference to the groups roped and driven as slaves, and this committee asks our President to issue a proclamation, to be in English and French, in the Monitor and all other Haitian papers inviting the natives to testify freely before this committee investigating in the Black Republic, and guaranteeing ample protection of the United States Government to same, with heavy penalty for intimidation and threats, prisals, whether made by American occupation corporation or private Roman Catholic Church (in pay of American marines).

The CHAIRMAN. Give us what other matters you may have to record. Is there anything more you would like to say?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; I wish to add that crossing rivers and high mountains (Gros Morne), and as directed by the marine captain of Jacmel, I came to the town of Leogane, on the plain, to see Lieut. Kulp, and stayed that night at the partook of this genial marine's hospitality. On being informed of the conduct of his Gros Morne gendarmes, and names of our witnesses, he promised to immediately attend to this serious matter.

I am prepared, however, to show this committee that Gen. Alexandre, chief of the whole gendarmerie of Haiti (and said marine officer Kulp's command), deliberately interfered and prevented the lieutenant of the district from discharging his official duty of investigating these criminal charges brought against the Gros Morne gendarmes, who should be demanded to appear before you gentlemen.

Not finding Gen. Williams at the headquarters of Gendarmerie at Port-au-Prince after my leaving Leogane next day, I returned by train to St. Marc, after my missionary tour of inspection of church, mission schools throughout the southeast section of Haiti and, owing to a preference in reference to a national normal and industrial college I was going to be held at the Haiti bureau of public instruction, with our superintendent of public instruction, the Haitian inspector, to which I was accompanied by Col. Russell (in supreme command of United States marines, etc.), Mr. Williams, Dr. Maclean, Dr. Laroche (Haiti National Council), Dr. (United States consul), Cape Haiti, etc., and my planning to leave Haiti and children on a visit to see my missionary committee in the States, as seek an interview with President Wilson and Secretary Lansing in London, I wrote the following letter to Gen. Williams:

ST. MARC, HAITI, July

Gen. WILLIAMS,
Chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

DEAR GENERAL: I have already called the special attention of Lieut. Kulp, of Leogane, to what must be termed not only an undue interference with the rights of the Haitian people, and especially the quiet and order of our Baptist Mission Church on Gros Morne, while on their way to worship and to particularly attend holy communion service, but the cruel and brutal if not savage conduct of his gendarmes (in the Gros Morne as witnessed by myself, our missionary pastor, Rev. Nosirel Lherisson, and many others on the Sunday morning of June 30, ultimo).

For fear, therefore, that Lieut. Kulp has not been able to see to it and act in a definite way with a view to at least the dismissal of the gendarmes as totally unfit to serve "our occupation" in any capacity whose conduct actually and naturally filled the Haitians generally with dread, and righteously inflamed them and engendered hatred against the gendarmes themselves, and moreover against our American occupation of Haiti and even indeed against our United States Government, which must not be permitted to go on.

What I personally saw this early morning, not only the stopping of the brethren and two quietly and decently dressed native sisters at the hands of the gendarmes' corporal, while going to the house of God, but the dragging, arresting, and roping in a cruel manner, if not barbaric, groups of people who were made to march like a pack of slaves, brigands, or murderers (whom were some of our native preachers), and whose arms I have found loaded with cartridges (and under treatment of our own white medical men of the United States a whole mass of jelly, etc., which reminded me of brutal slavery and the treatment practiced by unfortunate Belgium a few years ago in Africa).

And this, forsooth, though we are in Haiti, and where to-day these people are supposed to be under the civilized, humane, if not Christian Government of the United States and the protection of our American flag.

It is generally believed and openly said by the inhabitants of Gros Morne and Jacmel sections that many of these drinking and lowest type of gendarmes of our occupation continually arrest, rope brutally, and treat these poor innocent people for the sake of dishonestly extorting money from them, who when they pay 2 or 3 gourds may be set free.

I made a careful inquiry on Gros Morne this Sunday morning (June 30) and, so as to make sure as to whether the so-called prisoners had committed any crime or there were serious charges of wrongdoing brought against them, and being assured by the native corporal there was absolutely nothing, I dismounted from my horse and demanded they should be set free and allowed to accompany me and Lherisson to our mission church that morning. This was peremptorily refused by this excited and apparently intoxicated corporal, though his fellow gendarme tried to persuade him to do so.

For this reason, therefore, may I ask you to see if Lieut. Kulp has been able to take any action, and if not will you call his attention to it and dismiss them, especially the corporal (right away) as irresponsible savages, unworthy and unfit for their important positions.

* * * * *

It is believed and stated that the gendarmes of the sections mentioned are heavy taffia drinkers (native liquor), most immoral, ruffians, etc. From their conduct that day, and more especially that of the corporal (Desselus), his wild gestures, excitement, etc., from influence of alcohol or other evil spirits, I am personally confirmed of the truth of all they say.

On my return to the States (if possible within a few weeks) in order to report the religious, moral, and social conditions to my missionary Baptist boards, practically representing 3,000,000 Negroes, morally backed by 5,000,000 more white Baptists of the North and South land of the United States, and particularly interested in our Haiti mission just now, I shall therefore be indeed glad to be assured by you as chief of our gendarmerie that Lieut. Kulp, on whom I called last week, and who faithfully promised, has acted, and that these men have been dismissed even as unworthy of such important positions and authority under our marines.

As chief of gendarmerie over Haiti (knowing of the sufferings caused by gendarmes through drink and abuse of power), I shall be glad if you impress upon these gendarmes through your marine officers that on no account they should deliberately inflame these poor people and prejudice them against our occupation, and at this time create hatred and wrath toward our United States Government.

No doubt our (American) folks there celebrated the Fourth in a manner worthy of our noble traditions and the flag, which to-day flies over our brave boys fighting at this moment in the trenches of Europe with British, French, etc., for the sanctity of treaties, liberties, and rights of small nations like Belgium, Servia, and even this little Black Republic of Haiti.

Yours, very sincerely,

L. TON EVANS,
Baptist Missionary Superintendent.

Returning to Haiti on the 18th or 19th of December, 1918, after said visit to the United States and Washington, when I presented the memorandum to President Wilson, Secretary of State Lansing, and Chairman Hitchcock, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, setting forth conditions in Haiti, and praying for a special commission of inquiry, and found my Negro missionary committee intimidated if not threatened by certain officials of State Department, in collusion with Marine officers in Haiti, who intercepted if not confiscated my private and official letters, demanding, it seems, my immediate recall on account of my Christian and educational activities in behalf of these poor Haitians, I called that very day at our American occupation's headquarters to say my respects to Brig. Gen. Catlin, who had succeeded Col. John H. Russell as the United States Government's chief in supreme command of all marine and land forces in the Black Republic, giving him a copy of said memorandum, showing him Hon. A. A. Ade's official reply in behalf of the President and Secretary of State, assuring me after the strict investigation the Government was supposed to be then carrying on (through Gen. Catlin, Gen. Williams, Maj. Welles, etc.) in the Black Republic, Mr. Adey would immediately communicate with me.

At the close of this interview with Chief Catlin, a very amiable gentleman who thanked me for calling, and information and explanation given, he told me that Gen. Williams (who was seated with Brig. Gen. Catlin when I was in the office that morning) wished to see me at gendarmerie headquarters. I left for St. Marc.

The following letters to Gen. Williams and Brig. Gen. Catlin refer to the interview, the Gros Mornne scandal, and Gen. Williams's special intervention activities through Haitian courts to uphold and vindicate a drunken Marine officer who had been disciplined by Col. Russell and in the interest of military discipline and United States occupation efficiency in Haiti.

BUREAU OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION
Port au Prince, Haiti, December 2

Gen. WILLIAMS,
Chief of Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

DEAR SIR: Referring to yesterday's conversation (at your request through Brig. Gen. Catlin), I herein inclose quotation from letter I wrote Judge Obas, Cape Haiti, on July 19:

"I received mandate requesting me to appear to be questioned about something purported to have been uttered by me about somebody. I shall be glad to give for definite information as to person and specific (exact) nature of my remarks or alleged remarks.

"As United States citizen, and general secretary of American Board of Education in Haiti, I am entitled to this definite information from you and your staff. I must say, however, that as I plan to leave with my wife and family in a steamer on the Panama boat the end of this month on official business with the President and interview our President at Washington, it will be impossible for me to appear at the cape the time you mention."

(Here is reference to proposed Dillard's conference with superintendent of public instruction, etc.)

"After this definite information requested has been received, I may be able to say what steps to take, and when I return, sometime in October this year, you can expect me at the cape."

(The Cape Haiti and court are in the north under direct control of Maj. Welles, marine officer next in command to Gen. Williams, under whose command a drunken marine disciplined by the colonel was still employed by the occupation and which major is officially held for insubordination and directly responsible for the wholesale murders in the north and perpetuation of corvée, etc.)

Having therefore learned for the first time through you yesterday, as requested in July from Judge Obas, in my letter, that the supposed corvée officer is the late occupation's marine officer at St. Raphael, and seeing (as I stated to you at your office) that Col. John H. Russell, supreme commander of United States Marine Corps and land forces ashore in Haiti, has left the United States, my own judgment is that in the absence of said Col. Russell that the matter can not be properly and legally entered into at the present time.

Again, inasmuch as Col. Russell and myself alone were present at the personal and private official interview, and therefore the only two persons who can testify as to what exactly passed and was thereat said, entirely in the interest of the United States service in Haiti, as well as in the interest of the welfare of the said officer of St. Raphael, himself, for which the colonel is responsible, and with all respect for you and Judge Obas (Cape), it is still my own and firm judgment that this matter does not come within the jurisdiction of our Haitian court.

Of course, if you yourself (personally and officially) wish to insist on the said judge to take up the matter in spite of the facts pointed out, and under protest, I shall go cheerfully and submit to attending the court order to arrange for my witnesses from St. Raphael, Dondon, Grand Trou, and may be from the Cape, and so as to prove beyond a doubt, given date, etc., said officer was under the influence of liquor, and justify an American citizen and a Christian missionary laboring in the social, moral, and religious welfare of both white and native, together the course I felt it my duty to take in my personal and private interview with the supreme head of our American occupation in Haiti at the time, and my view to save both our United States service as well as the said marine himself, if possible (thus vindicating Col. Russell's action and subsequent sending forth the proclamation prohibiting all liquors to be sold marines and gendarmes of the United States Government), hence must ask Judge Obas and the court to grant reasonable time, with name and definite complaint given in meantime, say until the middle of February, if not the last week of that month (being expected the arrival of Dr. Dillard by any boat).

I am responsible only for what transpired between me and the colonel, for which service he thanked me. Though as a Christian missionary I advised moral suasion, I know not the military method Col. Russell (who naturally knew more about his marine officers, and may be their drinking habits than anyone else) felt compelled to take in this particular case or the military discipline he imposed. It would be presumption on the part of a Christian missionary therefore to criticize him.

This drinking habit among marines and gendarmes is well known in Haiti, and so increased as to jeopardize in fact the work of the occupation and become such a menace to the United States service in Haiti that Col. Russell himself on the 16th day of July, 1918 (exactly three days after my writing Judge Obas), felt it necessary as officer in supreme command of all marines and land forces operating in the black Republic to issue a proclamation absolutely forbidding the sale of intoxicants to all men in uniform, under a very heavy penalty.

On seeing this proclamation, I wrote to immediately thank the colonel, and praying in the interest of all he would extend the same to include both white and native civilians throughout Haiti.

Under these significant and serious circumstances, therefore. I can hardly believe that such an important officer of our United States Government, as the chief of the whole gendarmerie of Haiti, through personal forcing and display of official activities of such matter as upholding and actually vindicating the drinking and drunken habits of a marine officer under you and Maj. Welles of the Cape, thus permitting yourself to go on record as sympathizing with those whose conduct is termed by said proclamation as directly inimical to the interests of the United States, thus in so doing contradict, oppose, and condemn Col. Russell's discipline, and officially do what you can to defeat the efforts of four superior officers and in supreme command, as well as Secretary Daniels of the United States Navy, to save the morale of the boys and secure military efficiency of the American occupation.

You have no doubt received word from Mr. Stabler (Latin American department of our Government) as to presentation of recent petition (of which inclosed memorandum is copy). I may add that the State Department has replied not only of receipt of same but that the United States Government, through a department interested in Haiti, are seriously considering matters set forth therein. An official request may soon be made for leading Haitians to visit Washington, therefore, and previous to appointment of commission.

Dr. Dillard of the Rockefeller Foundation is expected in January or beginning of February to survey Haiti and confer with Haitian leaders and our Government officers refounding of an industrial school, such as referred to in memorandum.

I deeply regret the attitude you thought fit to assume yesterday toward the very serious affair on Gros Morne last June, brought to your attention and marine officer Kulp. When informed that my presence is required at Cape, and as American citizen will claim the presence at court of our United States consul, Dr. Livingston, to whom I have an official letter from Secretary of State Robert Lansing, etc.

Yours,

L. TON EVANS.

A copy of above, with following explanatory note, was also sent Brig. Gen. Catlin:

BUREAU OF SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, Port au Prince, Haiti, December 20, 1918.

Gen. CATLIN,

Chief of the American Occupation in Haiti.

DEAR GENERAL: As officer in supreme command of our United States Marines and military forces and successor of Col. John H. Russell, I feel that I ought to send you inclosed copy of my letter to Gen. Alexander E. Williams, whose attitude, of course, and language as an officer of our occupation when I called Thursday at your request entirely took me by surprise.

I naturally put this down to some grave misunderstanding on his my own standing, and long and close relation with Haiti, our United States Government, as well as to our own occupation, but unfortunately that this should happen in a person holding such responsible and honorable a function.

The inclosed letter makes reference to your worthy predecessor, and explains itself, and again calls attention to the arresting and ro native members, etc., on morning of last Sunday, June, this year. I called the attention of Lieut. Kulp and the general to this. Unless into and given the satisfaction demanded, it may have to be investigated by another committee or commission and when witnesses shall have a opportunity to testify.

I sincerely thank you for the interview Thursday morning and in and earnestly hope that such a gallant officer, who has seen dis service at the front and helped in bringing about the glorious v sanctity of treaties, liberties, and rights of small nations like Haiti be spared many years to serve our flag with same ability and r loyalty in the trying climate of this black republic.

For Christ, Haiti, and humanity.

L. To

---

PROCLAMATION ISSUED BY COL. JOHN H. RUSSELL.

The sale of intoxicants to persons of military and naval forces of States in uniform is forbidden throughout the Republic of Haiti, after July 20, 1918. A violation of this order will be considered i the interests of the United States, and the offenders will be liab before a United States military tribunal.

Done at Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, this 16th day of July, 1918.

JOHN H. RUSSELL,

Colonel, United States Marine Co

Commanding United States Forces ashore

Senator POMERENE. Is he in charge of the marines there?

Mr. EVANS. No; Gen. Alexander Williams was the chief of the wh merie of Haiti (the native armed police), seeing the great authority placed in the hands of the gendarmes all over the Republic, this was of the very most responsible positions in Haiti, hence he is rightly l the low, drunken, and ferocious type of gendarmes under his Mar all over Haiti, and for the lack of discipline, brutality, resulting in t both of prisoners and Cacos in the calabash (jail) and in the bu officers as Maj. Welles (Cape), Capt. Brown (St. Marc), Capt. Ke sade), Lieut. Haug (St. Raphael), etc., were under him, if not ap him, and chief of the American occupation would in most cases be act through this Gen. Williams in the event of punishing drunk officers.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you just one question. You can generally, I think. You said you have been there for many years.

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Twenty-eight years, did you say?

Mr. EVANS. Altogether; laboring in and for Haiti.

Senator POMERENE. And, of course, you were there for many years American marines entered?

Mr. EVANS. Exactly so.

Senator POMERENE. And you had the opportunity of observing the of the Haitians by their Haitian officers, superiors, etc.?

Mr. EVANS. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Just as you had the opportunity of observing ment since 1917 in the way that you have described here. Now, people treated more cruelly while we were there than they were b there any difference in their treatment? What have you to say tively?

Mr. EVANS. I readily admit that a certain type of Haitians, unless watched and cautioned, when elevated to certain position, may authority, and in many cases overzeal and devotion for his white suffers somewhat from a swollen head, and overrides his duty and g his authority, and especially this is done when they think it pleases the white man.

This is a special reason for a higher type of Marine officers, sober, intelligent, sympathetic, yet firm, strong in moral fiber, with knowledge of men and faith in the black race, and his ability and readiness to respond when treated "with a little of the milk of human kindness." During all the years spent in Haiti, and with all my traveling and mingling with these folks, I have seen little of real barbarity and cruelty among them and have never seen women actually fighting or two men stripped and pounding one another. There has often been yelling and wild demonstrations and terrible threats.

Marines have told me through Haiti that when properly treated and firm discipline exercised, and they come to understand the language of the natives and, moreover, show them a little of the higher educational and Christian civilization of the United States, and true American homes—there is seldom if ever a friction. We need more of our Marine officers—generals and colonels—sent to Haiti, imbued with a true missionary spirit and a real Christian optimism.

Senator POMERENE. Well, am I right in drawing this inference from your statement here, that your thought is that the American marines should stay there and control the situation, but they should have men in control who would use more humane methods in controlling these men; is that your idea?

Mr. EVANS. No; not exactly. It is that our United States Government should stay in Haiti, but not the marines as such. My demand is for a civil occupation composed of some of the most intelligent, broadminded, experienced jurists and Christian statesmen we have in the United States, in cooperation with and supervision of the Haiti Government, can freely function; and something like 200 of high type marines, and a gendarmerie composed of the most intelligent, cleanest, and best Haitians, subject to the civil authority, will suffice for protection.

Senator POMERENE. Well, I used the expression "United States marines" inadvertently; I meant really the United States Government or its representatives. Is that your idea?

Mr. EVANS. Emphatically so. For instance, President Laconte and President SIMMONS (who immediately preceded him), and for reasons already given this committee the latter and his government were ruthlessly overthrown; and the former, after only being in office a year, with brightest prospects and just started most important reforms, when behold he is fatally struck down by the hidden hand assassin (soon after my own return in 1912), as well as such intelligent, educated natives, if not Christian statesmen, as Gen. Firmin (who wrote a French life of late President Theodore Roosevelt, much admired and greatly mourned in Haiti); ex-Senator Dutreville Lamour, ex-attorney general of the Republic; Voltaire Dommond; ex-deputy Dr. Nerva (Ghouse, Hon. J. N. Leger, for years in Haiti legation at Washington (author of Haiti, Her History, Her Traducers), as well as leaders, if not rank and file, of Haiti to-day, sick and tired and even heartily ashamed of these political disturbances and devastating revolutions, moreover have for years sincerely felt (because of these insidious and powerful influences and political and profiteering intrigues invariably operating through the financial and officially allied (with the Haiti Government) Roman Catholic Church and her European French-speaking priests as agency and shield) that their only hope was in a close alliance and real union with the United States, and that their political, industrial, educational, as well indeed as their spiritual, salvation can only be realized through their strong government's protection and their generous Christian philanthropists' practical support and efficient leadership for many years to come.

This conviction was universally and most sincerely and enthusiastically expressed in their following prayer and petition to the Rockefeller, Carnegie, and other believers in and lovers of the race in America early in the year 1911, and reads thus in French:

NECESSITÉ URGENTE D'UN COLLEGE NORMAL ET INDUSTRIAL A HAITI. APPEL DIRECT DES PRINCIPAUX HAITIENS, AUX PHILANTHROPES, AUX AMIS DE LA RACE NOIRE, ET A TOUS CEUX QUI, EN AMERIQUE, CROIENT A SON DEVELOPPEMENT INTELLECTUEL, MORAL, ET INDUSTRIEL.

Nous soussignes, natifs d'Haiti, sans distinction de croyances religieuses ou de partis politiques, en vue de considerations patriotiques les plus elevees et dans le but d'assurer l'avancement moral et religieux ainsi le progress industriels et sociaux de notre chere patrie.

Par ces presentes nous invitons et sollicitons respectueusement les ceres et genereux de l'instruction et de notre race, tels que l'honorable Rockefeller, l'honorable Andrew Carnegie et autres—soit separement jointement—d'etablir dans cette ile un college normale et industriel dans l'Institut de Tuskegee aux Etats-Unis, preside par le distingue ami de la race—Dr. Booker T. Washington.

Nous sommes convaincus que si Haiti, doit s'elever parmi les Republiques du Nouveau-Monde et remplir dignement sa destinee, ce sera par le moyen de nobles institutions telles que le college normal, et industriel donnee a nous jeunes et intelligents compatriotes une education saine et effective que leur permettra de remplir avec distinction les plus hautes fonctions que confere le droit de citoyen de cette Republique.

Ce sera nonseulement un des plus puissants facteurs dans le developpement de la race—le garanti d'une paix durable, et d'une prosperite permanente, mais comme nous le souhaitons ardemment, ce sera aussi la mise en pratique de la theorie, la realisation du haut ideal de l'immortel empereur Touissant l'Ouverture, le George Washington de la Republique noire.

Nous, donnons l'assurance formelle aux donateurs ci-dessus designes qu'a tous ceux repondront au coeu des petitionnaires en etendant leur bienfaisance a Haiti, qui ce serait grand honneur pour notre gouvernement (Pouvoirs publics) d'avoir le privilege d'accorder une portion de terrain precieusement, au centre de l'ile, pour l'etablissement du college, comme un monument de notre appreciation des efforts, faits pour l'education des fils et de l'avenir d'Haiti.

L'etablissement d'une telle institution dans notre pays placera notre nation dans une eternelle obligation envers ses bienfaiteurs, mais nous attachera beaucoup plus par les liens de sympathie et de bonne amitie notre soeur-la grantee republique etoilee.

Cette petition en faveur de notre pays, dont nous voulons servir les interets, est fait par l'intermediare du Rev. L. Ton Evans, missionnaire de la religion des Etats-Unis, actuellement au milieu de nous, qui pendant son sejour a montre un reel et profound interet dans le developpement et le progres de la republique et qui a beaucoup voyage sur terre et sur mer plaidant pour la cause religieuse de ce pays parmi plusieurs nations.

18 Janvier, 1911, et 108 eme de l'Independance Cap-Haitien, Haiti.

The English rendering of above petition and prayer of nearly 3,000 natives or practically the leaders of the whole little black republic (as one voice) presented to trustees of Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations and the International Peace, in New York, and at Washington by the United Baptist missionary in 1911.

TRANSLATION.

Haiti's urgent need of a normal and industrial college. A national appeal by native leaders to America's philanthropists and friends of the Negro, and believers in his intellectual, moral, as well as industrial development.

We, the undersigned natives of Haiti, irrespective of religious or political parties, and simply from the highest patriotic consideration for the interest of the mental, moral, and religious improvement of our men and the industrial and social progress of our beloved island home, invite and respectfully solicit the generous and sincere friends of the Negro race, such as Hon. John D. Rockefeller and Hon. Andrew Carnegie and others, either separately or jointly, to establish in our land a normal and industrial school something on the line of Tuskegee Institute in the United States, presided over by our distinguished friend and member of the race, Dr. Booker T. Washington.

If Haiti is to rise among the Republics of the West and to fulfill its destiny in a manner, each and all of us whose names are below are convinced that this can only be achieved through such noble institutions as a normal and industrial school which shall give a sound, practical, and efficient training to our youth, and hands, as well as of heart, to our most promising young men and women, so as to prepare them for the noble and responsible functions of citizenship and Christian citizenship in this Republic.

This will prove a most potent agency in the development of our nation, and materially help in securing a lasting peace, which must precede which we most devoutly desire at this moment,<sup>1</sup> and thus enable us some day o fulfill in practice and by deeds the splendid theories and noble and inspiring deals of Haiti's immortal emancipator, Touissant L'ouverture, the George Washington of the Black Republic.

We furthermore assure the generous donors herein named, or whosoever hall respond to this sincere prayer of the petitioners and extend their beneactions to Haiti, that our Government will deem it the greatest honor to be privileged to make an adequate grant of suitable land in the most central part of the island for the express purpose of such an industrial school and as a practical proof of our profound appreciation of the efforts of Americans and rue friends of our race for the uplift of our own sons and daughters.

The establishment of such an institution in Haiti will place this small, a once heroic little nation, under a lasting obligation to the benefactors, actually ink us together in a close bond of unity, sympathy, and good will to our rich, strong, big sister Republic of America more than anything else could.

This sincere request and the petition of practically our whole little nation, which we seek to serve in various capacities, is made through and brought to the United States in our behalf by our friend the Rev. L. Ton Evans, Evangelical Baptist missionary of the United States, laboring here in our midst, and who for years has shown deep and profound interest in the welfare of our Republic and people and has traveled much over sea and land pleading the religious and educational claims of this country in different lands and among different surrounding Christian nations.

The original and copper plate like petition was written (French) at Dondon n extreme north by a young native craving for education. It was started at he cape, and following official letter, with official seal, and written and signed n behalf of council by the mayor of that little town of Saint Raphael (all three n the so-called north Haiti-Cacos district), and a specimen of such official ndorsement from practically all the towns and mayors through Haiti, expressing delight at the step taken, and sincerely praying for the success of the noble project and safety of missionary voyage and speedy return to them:

Liberte, Egalite, fraternite. Republique d'Haiti.

Saint-Raphael, le 8 Avril. 1911 an 108me de l'Independance. No. 69 Saint Pierre Millien Jn. Francois. (Magistrat Communal de cette commune.)

Rev. L. TON EVANS,

Missionnaire Evangelique des Etats-Unis, en Ville.

MONSIEUR LE MISSIONNAIRE: Votre petition que j'ai lue avec beaucoup d'attention, et que j'ai fait lire par tous mes administrés, a produit un reel effet sur l'esprit des uns et des autres se sont empresses de la signer avec moi.

L'idee de fonder une ecole normale, industrielle a l'instant de l'institution de Booker Washington en Haiti, est de plus louables etant donne que cette institution fera un bien immense au triple developpement—moral, industriel et intellectuel d'Haiti, et de la race noire.

Combien cher missionnaire serions-nous heureux si cette idee pourrait etre applandie par le Rockefeller, et Carnegie philanthropes qui alment tant le race noire.

A ces deux grands hommes, nous vous prions de presenter nos respectueuse hommages.

Puisse dieu benir vos efforts et faire reussir votre vaste et philanthropique project.

Puisse dieu vous accompagner dans votre route et vous ramener en bien aux Etats-Unis. Bon voyage cher missionnaire, et recevez je vous en prie.

Mes respectueuses salutations,

LeMagistrat Communal,

S. P. M. JN. FRANCOIS.-

NOTE.—Strange this man to-day, if alive, was termed a rabid so-called Cacos, brutally treated by marines and cast without trial into Cape Prison.

Letters of hearty indorsement from American minister, United States consul, and white European employee of Haitian native labor in the Black Republic ive years before American occupation, etc.:

<sup>1</sup>At the time this petition was written, carried around all over the Republic, mostly on horseback, wading through rivers, and mud saddle deep, climbing rocky mountains, and lescending deep ravines (a most daring adventure), while poor Haiti was plunged into the bloody revolution (through Germans) of 1910 and 1911.

AMERICAN LEGATION
Port au Prince, Haiti, April 2.

Rev. L. TON EVANS,
General Missionary in Haiti.

MY DEAR REV. EVANS: I am indeed very pleased to learn that your American Baptist missionary are endeavoring to establish a normal and industrial college, a long felt want I can assure you, in Haiti.

I have carefully looked over all your documents and am agreeably to note the apparent interest so generally, if not enthusiastically, manifested toward your plan by leading Haitian officials. I sincerely trust your efforts will succeed.

Yours, truly,

H. W. FURNISS,
American Missionary

AMERICAN CONSULAR SERVICE,
Cape Haitien, Haiti, May

The undersigned has great pleasure in heartily commending the work being undertaken by Pastor L. Ton Evans for the establishment of an industrial school in the Republic of Haiti. There is probably no place in the country where such an establishment would be of greater utility or where it could produce greater results.

The extraordinary energy and indefatigability of Mr. Ton Evans, and his good faith and philanthropic abnegation, eminently qualify him to lead in such an enterprise.

C. M. WASHINGTON,
American Missionary

COMPAGNIE HAITIENNE
Port de Paix, Haiti, February 1.

Rev. L. TON EVANS,
General Secretary of Haiti Missions, Port de Paix.

DEAR MR. TON EVANS: As directors of the Compagnie Haitienne we, as employer of a large number of Haitians on our railroad and in the logging business since many years, allow me to express my very deep interest in the normal and industrial college you seek to establish in the island.

From my intimate knowledge of this country, I believe that the school you propose is a most excellent one, and can not but produce the best results in the social and industrial development of both country and people.

Such an institution will further help materially to change the present social and unsatisfactory social conditions and insure real permanent progress and good will throughout Haiti.

I therefore most sincerely, Mr. Evans, wish you every success in this effort of yours in the uplift of Haiti.

Yours, very truly,

J.

A Haitian graduate of a theological seminary at Newton, Mass., who was a member of the Baptist World Alliance at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1911, with his superior missionary, and interviewed at the time by a Pennsylvania paper, as follows to the benefits of an industrial school, effects of such on race and cacaoism, and eagerness of native young people for training, and to "What do you know about Superintendent Ton Evans in Haiti, and what the natives look upon his proposal of a normal and industrial school?"

"We look at him as Haiti's best friend, and no man ever was more esteemed and enjoyed the confidence of the people than Missionary Evans. In fact, we look at his coming as God's answer to our prayers. The more we heard of his project of a normal and industrial school to teach my countrymen the value and dignity of honest labor, and divert the Haitian mind away from revolutions and politics to the cultivation of their rich soil, we at once fell in love with the idea, and though in the midst of a terrible revolution few others inspired by his undaunted courage and incessant efforts at self-improvement ourselves with him and gave him what support we could.

"Yes, I am certain that a large number of the best young men are all over the Republic now eager for an education and practical training as given at an institution of this kind would immediately enter. In addition to the benefit to us in the way of training for useful vocations in life, and in our industries, a gift of such an institution by the United States ment, or the Messrs. Rockefeller and Carnegie trustees, would be a standing reminder to us of your Christian generosity and practical good will and cement Haiti forever to the United States Government and people, and for these reasons Haiti is praying for brother Ton Evans' success in this undertaking."

This pastor and professor who has taught young men successfully for years at the Cape is one of those whose appropriations has been withheld by the American occupation nearly three years ago.

[Pittsburgh Dispatch Apr. 1, 1913.]

HAITIANS ASK SCHOOL FROM FUND.

REV. L. TON EVANS PRESENTS PETITION TO CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR PEACE—HIS GRAPHIC RECITAL—SPENT YEARS AMONG DEVIL WORSHIPPERS AND BELIEVES IN THEIR FUTURE.

Rev. L. Ton Evans, pastor of the Welsh Baptist Church in Chatham Street, has just returned from Washington, D. C., where he presented to the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace a petition signed by 3,000 natives of the black Republic of Haiti, urging the great advantages which would accrue by founding at Port au Prince a normal and industrial college, modeled somewhat after the famous Booker T. Washington Institute at Tuskegee, Ala.

The money involved in realizing such a project is about $3,000,000, and the direct result announced by its promoters would be the stoppage of the interminable series of revolutions by diverting the native mind from the military system of government and intrigue into industrial grooves. It is argued that Haiti is the richest field for development of the republican ideas in the world. Though occupying only one-half as much of the island as Dominica, its population is twice as great. The natives own their own soil, have most fertile fields for sugar and cotton production, and the fiscal affairs and State debt are solely demoralized by chronic grafting of military officials taught in a long, persistent military system, and for which German propaganda, aided by other influences, were largely and directly responsible.

BELIEVES IN HIS PLAN.

Comparatively a modicum of Pittsburgh people know of the notably energetic work of Rev. Mr. L. Ton Evans here in recent months since his return from Haiti, though he is known internationally among Baptist organizations. His absorbing enthusiasm, his nervous and unflagging recital of the situation there, his thorough conviction of the feasibility of his plan and his elucidation of it by speech and tireless gesture, hold the listener like the ancient mariner did the wedding guest, but with no tale of the Flying Dutchman and the albatross. He is now 50 years old, born in Barry, Wales. His folk were rich brewery people, but he gave up his large patrimony to become a Baptist missionary. He first went to Haiti as a field secretary 18 years ago. Then he came to Wilkes-Barre and was pastor of a Welsh church at Edwardsville near by. There six years ago the Negro Baptist Missionary Society found him and sent him back to Haiti.

Seldom is one encountered more ebullient with his theme and scheme. In his sacred calling he is a promoter unrivaled, but his facts and experiences leave no suggestion of doubt. At Washington he saw Alva A. Adee, the real diplomat of the State Department, and outlined to him his plan of transforming Haiti from a Republic of turmoil into a stable government. When nearly the whole of Port-au-Prince en masse turned out to pay honor to the highest official of the United States Government—next only to their President—his official speech and encouraging words, with his special visit, removed much of the deep-seated prejudice against Americans, the result of the United States traders and this Government's seeming aloofness from these people. He has fears of President Wilson changing for the worse the attitude toward the American Republics to the south. He asserts that the system of conducting Dominican finances has been a great success and something like it should be proposed to the Haitian officials, but not with any notion of coercion or territorial aggrandizement.

SEND CIVILIAN TO HAITI.

Talking on this latter branch in his rapid-fire style, he unfolded striking thought of this Government sending some civilian to Haiti for a time and to convince the authorities and the people that the U. has no ulterior aims against it, that the concessionaires, who obtain there and stir up trouble, are not the American Government. Rev. belongs to that amiable class who would fight for peace. During years he labored all over Haiti he learned the perversion of the natives by the military control. He alluded to the expenditure of thousands by the natives to give Secretary Knox only a two days' entertainment vouched for the vast benefit accomplished by that brief visit some months.

It was through this so-called purchase, but really a gift, said the missionary, that the United States previously with only 800,000 square miles of territory, without an outlet to the Pacific Slope, and Pacific emerged from comparative obscurity right into the forefront of the world, or, in the words of our own United States Minister, Livy, Paris, immediately after closing this astonishing deal (the black man compelled Napoleon to make for fear Britain might sweep down through and immediately annex it) written to President Thomas Jefferson: "The day the United States becomes a first-class power, and this without a gun and the clashing of swords. There will be no tears and sorrow of happiness to countless human beings."

The donation, therefore, of this normal and industrial school to the great wealthy American Government as a recognition of what L'Overture in the providence of God did to more than double our stroke of the pen is urged by Rev. Evans as a matter of honor and duty at this time to poor Haiti.

He says the Haitians are the kindest people in the world. About half have some book education, largely in the classics through the French. But "education," as its derivation implies, is the bringing out from useless and inserting the practical. Nearly all the people are illiterate and speak a French patois. The State religion is Catholic, but the utmost is permitted to other sects. But underneath the outward pretension of Christianity or some faith higher than savagery is the proneness to deicide. Therein lay his own chief physical danger, for the natives were full of superstitions and often could be incited to waylay him in his journey.

LIVE SACRIFICES MADE.

He told many instances where only his self-reliance saved him. But all this wild dancing and sacrificing, even of a little child to an angry devil god, is now giving way to the longing of the people for the of the Christian faith. Teaching the gospel was the dire necessity. They called him "negre blanc," the black white man, and revered him as a bodyguard of pompously uniformed generals. The vineyard cultivation.

Rev. Mr. Evans some years ago took back with him to Wales a little girl and had her with him as he talked about the Haiti mission. He finds the United States more sympathetic and its people fuller of sympathy for a girl and another one he has now in a school in Washington City being for missionaries. Her name is Christine Francois, and she is a former President.

As Rev. Mr. Evans chatted at his home, 3202 Craft Place, yesterday a volume and velocity that astonished for its not ending in fatigue. He mentioned the historical fact of the debt owed by the United States to France was the defeat of Napoleon by Toussaint L'Overture and his black army at the end of the eighteenth century and their securing escape from slavery that compelled the emperor to sell to Thomas Jefferson the square miles he held in the United States for about 2 cents an acre.

In his native land Mr. Evans knew well Lloyd-George, the British Minister of the exchequer, and like him he has always been an insurgent. He thought that if the Haitians could be made to believe that the United States without designs upon them, and is willing to aid wherever it can, would stop and peace and prosperity succeed the constant internecine war. He knew the recent Presidents well, and said that La Conte was a good character, but too highly cultured to become a leader of the people.

o any use of the "big stick," but he does not want this Government to absolutely withdraw all its guardian interests. The president of the Carnegie Endowment is Senator Elihu Root, who himself has visited the tropical Americas and is a noted advocate of more amicable relations with them.

JOURNEYING THROUGH HAITI.

It is intensely interesting to hear Rev. Mr. Evans describe his journeys all through the interior of Haiti on horseback, eight relays having been used. His native band of missionary assistants are proving successful in the work of evangelization. On one Sunday afternoon he had the privilege of carrying out all the instruments, such as tom-toms, troughs in which the soup is served to the demon god, rattles, and other voodoo utensils, and reducing the pile to ashes, and later he assisted in tearing down the altar or houndfort of the devil god. Once he held services near where a devil dance was progressing, with the natives foaming at the mouth from the liquor they distil from the sugar cane. The papaloi or priest of the voodoo cult brandished a big stick, but the rest realized that all their incantations were without avail on the Christians. The signers to the petition are among the best citizens of the Republic—senators, judges, etc.

After 10 years of interviews and a busy correspondence on the subject of a national, normal, and industrial school, the sincere prayer of Haiti has not been answered, otherwise probably our Government would not have entered the Black Republic, and many thousands of Haitian lives saved. There are indications, however, that even the blood of these Negroes has not been shed in vain, and that soon through the present competent Senate committee investigation either the United States Government itself, or aided by the Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations will come to the rescue. The following letters will show sympathy and will be of interest:

CARNEGIE FOUNDATION, FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF TEACHING,
New York City, August 28, 1911.

MY DEAR MR. EVANS: I acknowledge the interesting letter of August 26, with its copies of your petition, as well as letters of Messrs. Abegg, Furniss, and Livingston. I shall be glad to see that your letter is brought to the attention of President Pritchett when he returns to the city. I shall be glad to see also, that your letter to Mr. Carnegie is sent to his secretary.

I return herewith your letter of introduction from Dr. MacArthur, president of the World's Baptist Alliance, and suggest that it would be helpful for you to communicate your plans also, if not already done so, to the General Education Board, 17 Battery Place, New York City. This is one of Mr. Rockefeller's foundations which has given such aid as you hope for.

Very truly, yours,

CLYDE DAVIES. Secretary.

L. TON EVANS, Esq.,
Edwardsville, Pa.

[The constitutional convention of the State of New York, Albany, 1915.]

CLINTON, N. Y., September 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 1, addressed to me as president of the Carnegie Endowment of Peace, in reference to the establishment of a national normal and industrial school in Haiti, and I have been glad to lay it before the executive committee of the endowment for consideration at its next meeting. I would suggest that you correspond with Dr. James Brown Scott, secretary of the endowment, 2 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C., regarding the petition which you wish to present in this connection.

Very truly, yours,

ELIHU ROOT.

Rev. L. TON EVANS,
First Baptist Church, Lansford, Pa.

Senator KING. Was the situation when the American troops went there such, in your opinion, as to justify our intervention?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly; as I have before stated. But to wait for this blood conflict and regrettable revolution, and the manner the situation was handled by those at Port au Prince, and State and Navy Departments at Washington, by a stealthy landing of American marines during the cover of night before the city, etc., made it appear more like the invasion of Haiti (to most Haitians) by a foreign and alien power, looking for a mere excuse for annexing the island, than a friendly intervention. It was a deplorable blunder in diplomacy, and in my opinion and on this very account justified the bitter resentment shown, and in spite of Admiral Caperton's disavowal of any other intention but to "protect Americans, Europeans, and even the lives, and property of the Haitians"—the criminal additional blunders if not more than blunders, which have been shown to this investigating committee, before we are through, of opening their Senate and Chamber doors in the Haitians' face, raping the constitution, and resurrecting the corvée, with oppressive if not murderous exactions—by the American occupation, officially backed up by Washington, which has defied this bitterness, and at last convinced the Haitians, that what Admiral Caperton said—and possibly he sincerely meant—was a mere cloak to do violence to Haiti, crush their national spirit, if not lead them back to slavery.

To avoid all this, I specially wrote offering my services to President Lorrain in Haiti, and as much for our American Chief's guidance as for the protection and securing the confidence and hearty cooperation of the Haitians with our Government's real purpose in the Black Republic, to protect the people and otherwise help Haiti.

Senator KING. For the preservation of life and for protection of property.

Mr. EVANS. Yes. But the methods adopted then and subsequently, and indeed, ever since, have been most incompatible with this motive of preserving life and protecting property and liberties of the people, which made me give up my church to go back immediately to Haiti, knowing the serious nature of the situation.

Senator KING. I wish you would not make explanations, but answer my questions. I want to get through as soon as I can, and get the facts. I recall, there was revolution, assassination and bloodshed, which was very extensive in the island at the time we intervened?

Mr. EVANS. I am as anxious as the Senator is to get through, but I think that this committee is appointed to thoroughly investigate not only the conditions of entering Haiti and present conditions under American administration, but with a view of better understanding these, what actually led up to them, though it does take a little time, and to suggest a real remedy. Yes; I have seen in the American press the description of the deplorable and heart-breaking conditions you mention when we intervened.

Senator KING. But when you returned you verified that?

Mr. EVANS. Yes. The British consul general as well as several other worthy officials and Haitians told me the whole sad story, which they told me I read the account in papers here, and ever since in my opinion amply justified our intervention. My criticism is, that we did not go to the rescue of Haiti 20 years ago, assume a friendly mandate and act the big brother to this Republic and help these people irrespective of any apparent offenses of Germany and other minor European countries at the time; and in view of our befriending Haiti, and the Haitian people (as I wrote President Roosevelt in 1902), Great Britain, and France would have gladly supported us, and our consul generals after serious consultation at this time and in view of the affair referred to especially urged the United States to send their administrative marines at once to Port au Prince, which at last they did, and for which I thanked God.

Senator KING. Have the marines, since they have been in power, made any improvements in the island in the way of sanitary improvements, the building of roads, etc.?

Mr. EVANS. I have made special reference to this important phase of our work in my missionary report and shown my profound appreciation of the cleaning up so much needed, and did this with a view of removing, as far as possible, the prejudice against our American occupation among colored brethren and others in the southland and on my own missionary committee, for instance.

Senator KING. Did you ever see any of the marines themselves do any of these acts of brutality of which you have been speaking, or were they committed by the blacks who were in charge of the corvée system?

Mr. EVANS. You mean personally committed by the white marine?

Senator KING. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. I think I have answered this question before to Senator Pomerehne. It is not likely that marine officers will actually beat or kill a native in the presence of an American, and a Christian missionary like myself, more than the average gendarme would. The marines who officer these gendarmes give the orders, which probably most of them receive from Maj. Welles (in north) or the major at Port au Prince, and these two from the chief of the Haiti gendarmerie, Gen. Williams at headquarters, who is directly responsible not to the Haiti President but to Col. John H. Russell, who is the United States Government's chief of Navy marine and land forces operating in Haiti and the official head of the American occupation.

I have repeatedly seen marines and officers drinking and drunk at Port au Prince, Cape, and St. Marc; have heard them boastfully speak of their killing, or, as they termed it, bagging cacos on shooting expeditions to the north; have seen in prison (day I left) a Haitian carried and laid on his stomach with his back one mass of jelly, attended by a native doctor's assistant and another, who informed me that it was done by the United States marine captain in another drunken craze of his. I have heard two marine officers of the United States Government, apparently intoxicated, and in the presence of Christian natives and others in a mad rage, cursing religion, preachers, and missionaries, and damning myself for my efforts in giving the Gospel, seeking to educate and morally and industrially uplift "damned niggers of Haiti," with their fists clinched, and again aiming to take their revolvers and shoot me, stating they opened and intercepted my letters and taking an oath they would crush me, and then hurried me off to prison.

A St. Marc captain was court-martialed while I was there for kicking and brutally treating (it was alleged) his British Negro housekeeper, while another captain at St. Marc was alleged while I was there to have taken three Haitians from prison and without due process of law made them cut their graves and then had them shot, the bodies rolling into these holes. The people were horror-stricken. A member (in mourning) at our church in the Cape informed me (confirmed by pastor and others) that her two brothers, by order of Maj. Welles in command, after being tortured by water cure in prison, were taken out at night and without process of law also made to dig their own graves and shot into them, and neither this sister nor her aged Christian mother were informed as to spot. I hardly, however, believe all said about either marines or gendarmes and the diabolical butchering of natives attributed to them, and sincerely believed all over Haiti, by those driven almost hysterical by methods and brutality of marines and gendarmes of the occupation itself very largely.

Senator KING. I asked you if you had ever seen any marines commit any of these acts of brutality as to which you have just testified.

Mr. EVANS. Yes; those that I have here specifically mentioned, and the others personally informed can be verified by credible witnesses in Haiti. Marine officers as a rule give the orders; gendarmes have to obey their commands.

Senator KING. When I was in Haiti over a year ago I talked with a good many men that were working on the road—natives—and they told me that they sought employment because they got better wages working for the Government on the roads than they did from the natives, and they got better wages, low as they were, than they ever got before.

Mr. EVANS. This was more than a year after I had left, and through my own efforts, writing Secretary Daniels, of the United States Navy, and that of others as to the corvée curse, relaxing conditions of labor, if not advancing pay especially around Port-au-Prince, where Senators, Congressmen, and American leaders dropped in on way to and from Panama—what you say may be true; but certainly it was not so in 1918 and beginning of 1919. I quite understand that the impoverished natives were not able to compete with the United States Government either in amount of labor or in pay.

Natives would work for food rather than starve. All bread, etc., was in the hands of American occupation and their Marines, and woefully mismanaged with us at St. Marc, and probably somewhat similar in other parts, unless they were fortunate to have sympathetic, businesslike, efficient Marine officers who knew how to properly distribute American flour so as to keep the folks contented rather than leave it spoil at the customs. We ourselves went months without seeing a morsel of bread, without knowing conditions of World War, and no efforts whatever at informing the Haitians through Washington or any other United States Government publicity bureau, as I complained at Washington's headquarters. The people of St. Marc, if not the masses through Haiti this withholding of breadstuff and other vital articles of food, no ship in from Germany and other European countries, was a part of the States program to subject, if not to crush, Haitians; hence laid all the the American occupation.

Senator KING. What was the fact as to whether they got better wages the Government than in private employment?

Mr. EVANS. My reply to the previous question largely answers the relaxing of conditions of labor on roads at Port-au-Prince, possibly a little pay in 1920; and the fact that German merchants who formerly had of Haiti business had been interned, with piles of logwood lying at wharves everywhere in Haiti, hence scarcely any employment for natives partly account for this.

Senator KING. Is it a fact that they did get better wages than the private employment?

Mr. EVANS. No; it was simply 20 cents (American money) a week without food, as the gendarmé officers and others informed me at Port-au-Prince in June of 1918, and around St. Marc that year and beginning of 1919 absolutely false unless a distinction was made in favor of Port-au-Prince for reason stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Evans, distinguish in your replies between the end of the corvée, which terminated in 1918, I think, and the period which followed after abolishment of the corvée, when the laborers on the roads were paid.

Mr. EVANS. If the following special recommendation of mine in the memorandum which I presented President Wilson and Secretary Lansing in June of 1918, was carried out and explained and emphasized on my return to Port-au-Prince to Brig. Gen. Catlin, December of that year, and a copy of the memorandum handed each of you this morning (see p. 4, and sec. —):

"Now that Haiti has declared war, the Germans at last interned, our States Government shall grant us our full share of all necessities by making food at the lowest price; make generous loans to enable our occupation to proceed with its constructive program, and give all Haitian laborers more than a gourde and a half (30 American cents) a day. All forced labor except in case of prisoners and known criminals to be at once abolished. The quiet and peace-loving people, was faithfully carried out by our United States Government through brigadier general during 1919 (not 1918), when Senator Evans visited Port au Prince. Very likely what you say is true, and what you say is the fact; and if so, I am glad the memorandum helped to at last force, in fact slave, labor of our Government at this time, at least at Port au Prince and further increase wage.

"I understand, however, from Gen. Barnett's report to Secretary Daniels that it was through his own imperative command to Brig. Gen. Catlin that he abolished the corvée October of 1919, or 5 months after the occupation of Haiti and 12 months (nearly) after specifically pointing out to the States Government at Washington, and to Gen. Catlin at Port au Prince, Haiti, this grave injustice. And that even then throughout the whole of the north under Maj. Welles, as in some other sections, it was defiantly in and Haitians promiscuously killed as the result of these revolting methods and insubordinate conduct of Marine officers of the United States Government filling some of the most responsible positions under the American occupation in Haiti. I beg to insert the following in record in reference to the Cacoism and conduct of Maj. Welles and his marines:

CORROBORATION OF MEMORANDUM STATEMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT AND SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS DIRECT FROM HAITI, AND THE CAUSE OF CACOISM THROUGHOUT THE NORTH.

Further evidence re the tearing of treaty, the reign of terror, and the bolshevism by white United States officers and their armed natives (gendarmes) under them in Haiti at this moment, which has made our United States Government a by-word and disgraced the Stars and Stripes in the Republic, now aroused with indignation and writhing under present régime.

A Baptist missionary, with 25 years' experience in Haiti, French citizen, white, writing from the northern section of the Republic recently to the Superintendent L. Ton Evans, and after referring to appalling spirit of the people, the lack of laborers, and financial support, adding:

"I most highly estimate your persistent labor and incessant toil and pain in behalf of Haiti and real love for these oppressed people and greatly admire your faith and sincerely pray for your success at this time in this supreme effort of yours to get white Baptists to take hold of this important field.

"As you are now in the United States pleading with the Government at Washington to appoint a commission to make a thorough investigation into the internal affairs of Haiti and cause of present unrest, disturbances, and murders here, it may add to your already strong testimony and as further proof of the absolute necessity of such commission that you be informed that since you left for the States months ago bands of Cacos have appeared again at Hinche and throughout that section, armed with Mauser guns (they say) and making terrible trouble in that part of the island. This new and native uprising it is emphatically stated is directly due to the bad administration and cruelty of American marine officers.

"Though I can not personally prove it (as eyewitness), yet judging by the general situation (and as no one knows better than yourself) I certainly believe that this is the real reason back of these present troubles. Some say that this movement is a part of the German intrigues against the United States. This may be true to some extent, but the real truth is that if the American officers themselves, with those immediately under them, adopted a different method, showed more wisdom and humanity in their administrative policy, and endeavored to conciliate the Haitians and gain the love and confidence of these Negroes so as to make them feel that the United States is their protector and the "American occupation" with its officers are their true friends, the Haitians themselves would never turn against and oppose them, even if our Negroes in Haiti were supplied with all the money and all the guns that Germans could furnish them.

"You can use this argument not only for the appointment of the proposed commission, but for a complete change of the present régime in Haiti (that is the establishment of a civil occupation), but do not give my name. There is absolutely no fear on my part, but it is somewhat difficult to personally and positively prove some of these things. We can not, however, count on the Haitian people themselves (unless amply protected by United States Government) to declare the truth as regard, the great injustice and cruel sufferings they have to endure under the American occupation, for fear and dread on their part that the moment they do so they will have to suffer even more prosecutions, imprisonment, hard labor, if not something worse, as soon as the Senate committee is gone and these officers of the occupation remain in Haiti."

"This is perfectly true, for when the commission (even) of investigation is gone the American officers in Haiti will immediately persecute, illtreat, and brutally abuse all those who have dared to testify or denounce them. My own case is precisely the same as theirs. Apart from all this our missionaries, as well as our work here, will be looked upon—that is, Protestants and protestantism or evangelicalism—as the American occupation's worst enemies. We shall be compelled as the result to endure greater sufferings and oppressions than ever, and every possible obstacle will be placed in our way by American officers. The Roman Catholic Church and her priests (now financially sustained and supported through the American occupation, therefore its servants and slaves) will be more in favor than ever with them.

"However, as you yourself are a true American citizen, white and with many years of experience in Haiti, and expert knowledge of its people before as well as after the coming of the American occupation, you have more liberty and a better right both to speak and to act than any of us here, and who are already looked upon with strong suspicion, if not indeed counted as enemies, and simply for the reason that we preach the Gospel, and of course show disapproval of every injustice and tyranny, and even condemn the spirit and often unbearable prejudice that some white people (especially from America) persistently show toward these natives. I really believe that this terrible prejudice and abominable hatred of certain unconverted, dominating, if not intemperate and immoral, Americans have a great deal to do with the actual bad situation throughout Haiti. In writing thus to you, dear brother Evans, and supporting your plea at Washington by furnishing present information as to moral, social, and political reformation absolutely needed in this neglected and suffering Black Republic, you must not therefore think that I am quite converted to your opinion that the political, educational, and trial and economic reforms your own President and United States Government may bring about in Haiti, and according to that splendid treaty you so much importance to and feel so proud of, can really regenerate Haiti its people apart from the Gospel of the blessed God, and through Haiti which we both believe and preach, etc."

This white and experienced brother, laboring 29 years solidly in Haiti and the center of so-called cacoism, will testify if called at the Senator KING. Then the evils of which you speak were confined with months, or confined to a limited period?

Mr. EVANS. I had two years and five months of the corvee, which was practiced all over Haiti, causing serious frictions, indescribable brutality, where, and arousing a strong feeling and bitter hatred against the occupying marines, and United States throughout the whole Republic; until this passion and unchecked recklessness and ruthlessness of our marine officers in Haitian prisons, and the shooting of prisoners dragged out of their night, without pretence of trial, and killing of cacos by the thousands no longer be smothered, and official reports held back and absolutely suppressed and falsified—the marine scandal in Haiti and the atrocities perpetrated and by the American occupation in the Black Republic was exposed shocked the whole Nation, if not the civilized world.

The CHAIRMAN. It is set down in the report of the Navy Department violation of the orders of the commanding officer the corvee in the remotest of Haiti was continued. I think, therefore, before we conclude this we ought to ask Mr. Evans about the framing of the new constitution objections to it. I think that will be interesting.

Mr. EVANS. May I hand the following for the record from the report of the missionary committee of Negroes in North Carolina who had, like American officials at Washington and of the occupation in Haiti, become deflected from their original plan and purpose and had become more interested only if not financially, in the sugar corporation (which has grabbed some 200,000 acres of the best land of the Haitians) than in the salvation of souls and education of their own Negro people, and therefore never placing instead an elaborated and illustrated American sugar corporation "prospectus" on the table, while pushing aside the official report of the mission, account of work done under exceptional difficulties, and paying no attention to the crying spiritual needs of oppressed, imprisoned, and murdered Haitians. The part of the report dealing with the new constitution is as follows:

ANNUAL REPORT SUBMITTED TO LOTT CAREY HAITI MISSIONARY COMMITTEE WASHINGTON, D. C., FOR YEAR 1918.

[By L. Ton Evans, Baptist missionary superintendent of the Lott Carey Colony, St. Marc, Haiti.]

SUDDEN CHANGE AND REVERSION OF NATIVE FEELING IN HAITI, AND REASONS THEREFOR.

Through the feeling of gratitude to God, our President, and United States Government and American people for restoration of complete order and establishment of real peace throughout the whole Republic, great sanitary and special improvements, was both genuine and general and shared by all alike, including the most loyal and patriotic Haitians, who naturally love their own little country and flag as we Americans love the Stars and Stripes.

It was indeed a pity, yea worse, a political calamity if not a moral one, that just at the moment when our leaders and people here were recovering from the shock of an apparent invasion by American armed marines under the cover of night, and beginning to seriously question the truth of German meanness, filibusterers, and exploiters, whom through various channels have for years resisted in poisoning these natives and Negro mind against the United States and everything American. That Uncle Sam's desire for Mole St. Marc was only a guise, for the purpose of a foothold on Haitian soil, to annex the Republic with its rich land and lead them back eventually to slavery and horrors, in spite of their heroic struggles and bloody sacrifices under the immortal L'Overture for their freedom and independence some 115 years ago.

To our astonishment and consternation, however, and with the suddenness of an earthquake violent jolt, or as if a German airplane passing over Haiti actually dropped a bomb from the clear blue sky right down upon a village hidden powder magazine at Port au Prince, not merely changing, but completely reversing and actually revolutionizing everything over night as it were.

Behold, one great but subdued cry from one end of the Republic to the other, even the most remote—American deceit! American treachery!!—the occupation is going to forcibly change our constitution so as to give our richest and best lands to American corporations and white wealthy profiteers, and force us again as slaves to work, exactly as we were warned by our German friends, they would do the moment they put their feet on Haitian territory.

Personally finding out therefore what your superintendent at first thought a stupendous blunder in diplomacy by an amateur politician, or a raw inexperienced official around the State and Latin-American departments, or some one close to the President at Washington, totally ignorant of the sacredness of treaty obligations and the seriousness of meddling with a nation's constitution, was but a clever scheme and deeply-laid plot of certain newly-formed corporations of the United States, boasting of unlimited wealth, with stockholders within the administration who had followed the American occupation to the Black Republic in the twentieth century, much like the Spaniards and pirates came in the wake of Columbus in the fifteenth; and unless their grab for land and greed for gold is speedily checked, it will result in same barbarous and disastrous end, when poor colored Carib Indians were robbed and perished at the hands of stronger white Europeans.

On thus seeing our treaty, pledging protection to the Negro Republic, people's liberties, and rights, undertaking to agriculturally, minerally, if not educationally cultivate the soil and develop the Negroes, for Negroes, and by Negroes—ruthlessly ignored and openly repudiated, and that hundreds of thousands of acres of the best lands were already taken or being negotiated by two of these corporations by the aid of, if not through the American occupation, caused this bitter reversion and serious opposition to, and anger against, and hatred toward, the United States.

And more especially that this betrayal of Haiti and cruel rape of their constitution as now proposed, coming so soon after American Marines had disarmed Haiti soldiers, disbanded their army and the Republic's senate and house of representatives had been slammed in their face, as the Russian Duma was by the late Czar, against the Russians, and that these politically and financially bankrupt Negroes felt utterly helpless, daring not to openly discuss these vital matters, much less to publicly protest for fear of imprisonment as suspects, or being instantly shot as rebels against authority and enemies of the United States.

Your superintendent therefore felt it his personal and imperative duty as an American citizen and a Christian missionary and representative of the millions of white and colored Baptists of the United States, to step into the breach, and under these conditions and as mediator, to at once hasten to Port au Prince so as to have a quiet talk and special interview with Col. Russell, the able and genial military chief of our occupation.

Failing to obtain an American official English copy of the proposed new constitution, with change of the vital clauses re land, etc., from either our American legation, or the colonel at the occupation headquarters, I respectfully suggested to the military chief (who pleaded ignorance as to its origin) and asserted that I had certain knowledge as to the real interests back of the present propaganda, and averred that neither President Wilson, at Washington, nor our Negro President Dartiguenave of Haiti, had absolutely anything to do with this new constitution movement;<sup>2</sup> and after pointing out the very serious change already come over Haiti, and arousing, and embittering of the Haitians, how the mere announcement of the intention of the occupation to force this, had stirred the wrath of this little nation, I earnestly appealed, therefore, to the colonel (rather than seemingly put coals on already kindled fire) to postpone the so-called voting until we could send to, and hear from President Wilson.

<sup>2</sup> President Dartiguenave of Haiti, practically elected by the United States President, and paid through the hands of the United States' general-receiver in Haiti his salary, was made forcibly and under his own name the instrument for proclaiming the said fake election and the issuing of the French copy of the new constitution for publication in Le Moniteur Wednesday, May 8, 1918, and since transpired rewritten at the office of the United States Navy Department, Washington, D. C., and a fact that must have been within the personal knowledge of both Col. Russell and United States Minister Blanchard, who were conniving together by this method to deceive the Haitians, blind the American people, and to shield the United States Navy officials and those back of them.

This, Col. Russell said, either he could or would not do, where superintendent asked permission for him to cable directly to Washington to defer indefinitely the fake voting and ask that a small commission to be at once sent as I had possession of facts the United States Government and United States people should, and would know.

When the colonel declined also this, stating he would proceed with the mission, so called, the following week, and, as announced by President L. G. Duval, I expressed profound regret to him that it should be thus made known to these Haitians that our American occupation—whose mission was plainly set forth in the treaty to tranquilize the natives, strengthen amity existing with a view to create implicit confidence between the United States and not to stir up opposition and strife—was, after all, an instrument of American financial interests now operating in the Black Republic. The colonel and marines were determined to serve these financial interests at the expense of ignoring, openly and ruthlessly violating the United States Government's solemn and sacred covenant obligations to these Negroes by taking a mean advantage of their utter helplessness in the hands of the American occupation.

Under these peculiar and most painful and treacherous conditions of my imperative duty, as a Christian missionary and an American with more than 25 years' experience in and working for the moral, social, and political as well as religious welfare of Haiti, and one who had endeavored to protect their individual and national liberties and legitimate rights when they were being robbed and exploited by the American occupation and under the Stars and Stripes, solemnly pledged by treaty to protect the integrity of the Negro Republic and defend the rights and liberties of every Haitian.

As a true American, therefore, who scorns official treachery and fraud upon a black and helpless little nation, your superintendent, after leaving the colonel and chief of our United States marines at Port-au-Prince, respectfully assured him that this whole matter would be brought before President Wilson, in spite of obstructing and profiteering officials, and that probably both of them would meet face to face at Washington before a commission of investigation when this proposed voting on the new constitution would be declared a military farce and a political fraud.

In taking this stand, I added, if absolutely necessary, I would bring the case before the nearly 8,000,000 white and colored Baptists of the United States, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the American Federation of Labor, and, finally, to the great American people so as to remove this foul blot from off the folds of our hitherto stainless flag.

Your superintendent, however, assured the chief of occupation that he would strictly refrain from any kind of agitation in the Black Republic and would personally submit to the colonel there and, moreover, use his influence and that of their native preachers and Christians, to do as far as possible and proper for missionaries to do so, to maintain the order and add to the authority and efficiency of American occupation. He faithfully attempted to discharge their duty to the United States Government to the Haitian people according to the spirit and letter of the signed treaty.

The day of so-called voting (sic) arrived, and passed off quietly on the 12th of June, 1918; and when thousands, of course, through the Black Republic (considered, nevertheless, but a very small fraction of the real power of Haiti), and nearly all of whom were in the official and paid, and in some way or another employed by the American occupation, were weekly receiving their salaries or wages through the hands of the United States official receiver in Haiti.

This is true from Haiti's present figurehead Negro President, ex-President Legitime, chairman and members of national council (and illegal constitutional substitute of the American occupation, created so as to perform the functions of the Negro Republic's senate and chambers), judges, magistrates, commissaires (mayors), clerks of customs, post-office servants, government school inspectors and teachers, employees of castor-seed, sugar, and other corporations, etc., employed around courts and prisons, to the remainder who received pay and was under control of American armed forces in Haiti, with one exception; that is, the European Roman Catholic bishops, priests, freres, and nuns in Haiti and professors and faculty of the Haiti Roman Catholic college for training of white European priests, though on poor bankrupt Haiti pay roll through American general against the stipulation of the treaty, were rounded up, carefully and presumably cast at least one ballot.

masses of voters (sic) few literate, with 95 per cent illiterates, and of corporations in whose sole interest the occupation was acting that enabled funerals as to their silence and solemnity if not in their character, all over the Republic, and as they passed along like broken hearts, into Haiti's courts of justice—but transformed that through the whole country and by the American occupation into slaughterer to slay both the Negro constitution and the treaty of President and the United States Government.

inter (sic) was watched with an eagle eye, and guarded by the poor and armed (Negro police) who were everywhere in evidence, and officered by American marines of the occupation for this special occasion consisted of American generals, colonels, majors, captains, and others, not to mention American-paid Catholic archbishops, bishops, and other civilians, who were around and presence and influence used, for no risk must be taken.

possibly might still linger in the mind of a poor black Haitian enough trampled and all but crushed, a spark of true patriotism, which, remembrance of the immortal Touissant L'Overture, might chance kindle a flame and cause another conflagration. Thus, each court had a white marine officer in supreme command, but for the sake of perfect order, there were Haitian dummies sitting handing out the slips at which received it, and a dummy Haiti commissaire sat alongside of an American marine officer.

During the court a small white paper, stamped with police administrative date June 11, 1918, and with the French word oui (yes), was in the trembling hands of the native, who was signed (no word spoken) for anything else, to the box directly under and in front of white marine and dummy native assistant, who sat on a dais.

A pile of pink slips with the French non (no), curious enough and mostly showing the fraudulent nature of this whole scandalous business, on the other side of the table tied together, the poor native in charge, so-called voters, knowing these packets were meant for mere show; but cut lose their terror-stricken brother Haitians dared not refuse, they asked for the non (no) at the risk of being imprisoned and shot by any of the occupation and foe of the United States Government.

Terrified and helpless to resist, these people sorrowfully were made to and tremblingly submit, as brought in from small country villages on all sides, guarded and closely watched every step and turn by armed marines, under strict supervision of marine officers.

Mediocrity, or rather rape and indeed tragedy, is best described by the innumerable natives (nearly all of whom except those mentioned above of being blacklisted, imprisonment, etc.), as follows:

They are compelled to-day by the United States Government to take a dagger forced by the military occupation to plunge it into the very heart of the Negro Republic; and so that, like Pilate of old, they might wash their hands and say hereafter that Haitians themselves actually did the slaugh-

June 12, 1918, will be remembered in Haitian history as the day their Republic was not merely raped (as President Harding described it) but assassinated and buried through the heartless betrayal of the United States Government, under the Democratic administration, with its Christian Woodrow Wilson, to the everlasting humiliation and shame of every Haitian and accomplished by a method surpassing the most cowardly, degrading and diabolic conceived and practiced by the worst Hun in the World.

of the disarming of the Haitian soldiers, the disbanding of the Negro National Guard, the closing of their Senate and House of Representatives twice, and at this moment under lock and key (and what no other little nation has ever slavishly submitted to and tolerated on the part of our own United States Government), these Haitians patiently endured this national humiliation of the treaty, with a flickering hope that such would soon end, and that there would be a turn in the tide, and a change for the better until April of

When the rumor suddenly was heard, that rapidly spread like wildfire, that the American military force, to rob

Haiti of her constitution, so as to give our lands to foreigners, speculate corporations of the United States! Hence the sudden change and reversion of feeling which followed, as described in my report to the committee, which I expected to take prompt action at Washington with President Wilson and State Department, until I found they also had been captured by Haiti corporations and made even an attempt to expropriate missionary superintendents also.

I felt the disappointment and humiliation all the more in having done all in my power to foster a friendly feeling toward the United States over 20 years; urged our Government in Roosevelt, Taft, and before Wilson's administrations to assume a friendly mandate over Haiti as a big brother toward these people; and therefore, being personally responsible for the fact of our Government's coming to Haiti, though not responsible for the time nor the manner of the seeming invasion of the Black Republic by the armed American military marines.

I therefore feel convinced that this committee, in its thorough inquiry into Haiti affairs, as I urged upon the so-called "Haitian navy court" matter to Hon. Josephus Daniels, anxious to get the whole truth, make mention into the following to get back of marine scandal and occupation.

1. Into the nature and extent of the alliance between marine officers of the United States at Washington, as well as in Haiti, with American corporations which followed the "occupation" to the Black Republic and the European delegate of the Pope (a foreign potentate who dictates the appointments of Haiti ministers in Jamaica, Washington, etc.) sent to Haiti during the American occupation; with the archbishop, bishops, priests, friars, and members of Roman Catholic Church, and all of whom are paid their salaries by American marines and the native gendarmes—only the marines receive theirs in American gold, and not like Haitians, in American dollars from American loans to the little Black Republic and directly through the United States, financial receiver; and

2. Further, must determine what influence and power such allied corporations and close relation of the Catholic Church with the Haitian Government and the American occupation of the United States Government now existed—from the time we entered—in the Black Republic of Haiti, which have been responsible for the appointments of American marine officers and removals from Haiti—under guise of promotions, etc.—under the pretext of discipline; for the demoralization (through constant interference, etc.) of the States marines from their usual high standard of military discipline and efficiency; and for the deflection also of the administration at Washington of officers of the Navy Department, as well as the American occupation of the island, from the high purpose of the United States Government's special mission in Haiti, according to specific terms of our treaty, to apparently serve the interests and sectarian ends by withholding all appropriations from day schools, change of constitution, etc.

As I wrote to my Negro missionary committee (in that report) I have sized "That unless (rape of constitution already described) this tormented an American submarine of a small and friendly Negro Republic could not evenly undertake to protect, succor, and help) unexpectedly, in Haiti, and without warning, and absolutely without provocation, for it had a gun forehead or aft for either defensive or offensive purposes (having previously and forcibly dismantled) and the United States President a moment immediately 'disavow' and 'repudiate' such action, and declare the piratical and the work of irresponsible hyphenated Americans, restoration (with senate and chambers) thus remove the blotch from our American flag, then in words of the Hon. D. Lloyd George, British Minister, at the great Queen's Hall, London, and had Britain and the British Empire not gone immediately to the defense of Belgium and and honorably filled their treaty obligations with that small nation in case of Haiti, disgrace and dishonor will cling to our United States Government and the great American people down the everlasting ages.

A man named Davies, chief of one of the American corporations, has done a great deal in Haiti and with our occupation demanded this change of Haiti constitution, and had already written articles in the National Geographic Magazine and other journals months before declaring (in the international corporation, etc.) that Haiti's ancient constitution must be rewritten especially the clause re lands.

Moreover, in an interview I had with him at the Cape April, 1918 (during among the native churches), when he seemed to unfold his plans, add his corporation had unlimited capital, his own salary more than President Wilson, with stockholders if not directors from within the States Government, thus the occupation was practically at his and his son's command; that they had the right of way in Haiti; and that he was contemplating taking over the mail from the Haitian Government, this was said in presence of an educated native missionary.

The announcement in the Moniteur, Haiti so-called government, but official paper of the American occupation, and under the name of President, at once brought to my mind the Cape Haiti interview and the interests behind the American occupation, and working through either the Navy and State Departments of the United States Government at Port-au-Prince, compelling Col. John H. Russell to change the Haiti constitution to suit its vital and protecting proviso, and so arouse and further embitter the feelings of Haitians whom he describes in his report to Gen. George W. Goethals, major general commandant United States Marine Corps, at Washington, D. C., as a very hysterical people; like children, they believe every rumor and easily lose their heads, and in consequence are very hard to quiet."

or POMERENE. Who is this Davies?

ANS. He professes to be the financial head, if not also the brains, of an American corporation which has already secured—aided by Haitian courts and under complete domination of American marines—many thousands of acres of the choicest lands in Haiti, mainly for the purpose and advantage of the Republic of raising castor seed and supplying the United States Government's airplane fleet with oil, etc.

CHAIRMAN. I heard that he resigned the presidency of the corporation to become a Congressman.

ANS. I submit for record a digest of my notes made of interview with H. P. Davies, and brief quotations from his articles, which I hope will be illuminating to the Senate committee of inquiry as they were to me as to the aims and corporation's intentions in Haiti, which he affirmed with a view to making money, irrespective of the treaty or welfare of the Haitians, and emphasized emphatically that neither himself or his corporation had the least aim or philanthropic purpose such as to assist in educating industrially the Haitians. This Davies, if in Congress, and in this country, should be summoned to appear before this committee.

Summary of interview with H. P. Davies, official head of castorseed corporation in Haiti, with certain quotations cited re constitution, and comments of the United States treaty with Haiti.)

Reading of articles written by Davies, with the interview Saturday afternoon April 20, 1918, taken with me to my apartments and ponder fills me with dismay as regarding Haiti and the future of these poor Negroes, in spite of the splendid treaty, if the American occupation in the Black Republic, and in Latin America, Navy or State Department, are to be exploited by other corporations. I felt determined to watch the future development not merely for sake of Haiti and Haitians, but chiefly the integrity and the United States Government and that of the whole American people, for honesty and veracity in just going into the World War with the Allies, and of the Kaiser's tearing of the treaty with little Belgium. I shall spare no pains, I said, to prevent the repetition of Germany's crime against Belgium and the United States Government and people (through these unscrupulous agents and with the aid of United States Marine officers) against weak, poor Haiti, whom we are pledged before the world and God by a sacred treaty to protect and assist.

Moreover, in a letter of April 27, that year, when writing my board on conscription, spiritual degradation, illiteracy, friction, and cruelty often culminated in deaths, I referred to impending attack upon the constitution, urging and jointly with northern and southern Baptist leaders—to immediately demand of the President to absolutely prevent this disgrace and shame. I wrote: "I have seen sad cases of immorality and drunkenness here among members of the officers of Marine Corps. Through lack of restrictions, either as to intoxicants, the demoralization and even the fatal effects of alcohol in the tropical climate in Haiti, worse among whites than blacks, is somewhat alarming. Why is it you make no efforts there to secure for our marines a Christian A. branch and give me the necessary authorization to do Christian, and temperance work among them?"

Again: "Many marines feel that everything is so quiet in Haiti, and are tired of walking about doing nothing but carry the gun all day long they start a scrap among themselves—and so leave to go to France. marines should be exchanged every six months. It's cruel to keep these raw lads, some two and three years in this tropical climate and with appalling temptations and degrading surrounding influences."

Further, "Though we have some excellent officers and others, and good has been done on the roads, sanitation, etc., that are much appreciated, this is sadly hampered here by the lack of "loans" and the perverting influence of the Roman Catholic Church fastened to the Haiti Government, and, of course, our occupation, making honesty, not to say efficiency, impossible. These wealthy corporation boasting of stockholders within the Government Government at Washington and controlling influence over our occupation—his deflecting methods—and motives, must eventually, if not doing so now, finally defeat our very purpose as United States Government in Haiti."

Says H. P. D., the official head of the castorseed corporation, in utter defiance of the plain English of the treaty:

"This article 6 of the constitution of Haiti, which specifies that no foreigner may own lands, must be repealed or amended." Yet he admits that this was introduced when Haiti gained its independence, and continues that the years to be the one definite thing in the constitution which appears every Haitian, and, above all, was understood by all the people.

As showing the complete domination of courts, judges, magistrates, etc., specially meant as compliment to young, inexperienced, often raw American marines, and their gendarmes, H. P. D. writes in March number of Pan American Magazine (1917):

"It is fortunate for Haiti and Santo Domingo and for the United States that the solution of these problems, or at least the practical administration of the affairs of both of the island's Republics, has been placed in the hands of our overworked and little appreciated Marine Corps. Soldier and sailor does not begin to express it. I have seen marines in Haiti and Santo Domingo switching from soldier to anything—from a blacksmith to a superior judge, etc.

Fearing that your superintendent had taken a too rosy view of the treaty interpreted its language too generously, and that it did not actually mean what the United States Government, after all, were by its good offices aid the Haitian Government in the proper and efficient development of its (Haiti) agricultural, mineral, and commercial resources, and in the establishment of the financial basis of Haiti on a firm and solid basis for the sake of Haiti and Haiti people through American corporations with persons like H. P. D. at the head of the United States Government officers as directors and stockholders, and absent in the financial interests of white Americans, were in the minds of both President Wilson and United States Senate, as well as Haitian Government, negotiating and ratifying and signing above treaty. Hence I quote what the leading Americans, in two of the first-class American magazines, and the Christian missionaries or corporations promotionists say at the very time the treaty was made:

The New York Outlook for March 15, 1916, thus comments on treaty between United States and Haiti, as follows:

"The treaty as a whole represents the furthest extreme (in liberal generosity) which we have yet gone in—the big brother attitude, with respect to the small neighboring Latin-American nations.

"Of course, the success of financial and constabulary arrangements in Haiti will largely depend upon the character of the men our Government will send to fill the various offices."

The Washington, D. C., National Geographical Magazine for August 1916 said thus about the treaty:

"By this treaty the United States practically underwrites a loan of $100,000,000 amount to settle all the legitimate debts of the country and to finance the development of its developments—opening up its mines, putting its agriculture on a basis, and otherwise preparing to make it a region of plenty that nature has equipped it to be.

"This new departure probably will insure peace, quiet, honest administration, and, if it does, Haiti (not American corporations) certainly will be as good as few small countries ever have."

This is why, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I asked Mr. Russell to postpone said so-called voting, allow me to cable President Wilson to investigate matters, as I felt he ought to know what Haiti and around him at Washington; that the Senate should also know.

I explain possibly to you gentlemen who have not read the Senator King say he had not read it—merely by way of explanation will give a little light on what Mr. Ton Evans is saying, which is in the record here—I am not testifying or adding a constitution had a prohibition clause in it against the entry of any alien. Only Haitian citizens (colored or white) are entitled, for instance, the same as here in the District of Columbia. States citizens alone are entitled.

Now, so called, however, as stated in the memorandum to the Navy Department, and appearing on page 7 of the record, the new constitution, which was amended by order of Congress, provided specifically in Article V that the right to vote should be open to any person, corporation, citizens or not of the new constitution is about.

I submitted respectfully to the colonel, adding how deeply I regretted to postpone this so-called voting and allow me to cable to the military matters. I added, I took off my hat to him for his position, but in constitutional matters, question of honest and fair dealing, of treaty, and our moral and legal obligations as a great American people, to live up to the spirit and letter of the treaty; or the right of military occupation, to tamper with the treaty, as they were tearing up the treaty—with my educational experience I respectfully declined to submit to any military authority.

I spoke of the colonel, saying we should meet before a committee either in Washington or Haiti, when not only the influence reflecting the motives of our American occupation, but the real purpose of their coming and staying in Haiti, would be made plain, Senate, Chambers, and constitution restored to them; and the American marines' work and methods condemned.

At the headquarters of the American occupation I turned into an office where boarding my train to St. Marc, and convinced the colonel had told me concerning our United States Government occupation in Haiti was only too true, and sent a regiment to Woodrow Wilson, setting forth the facts, with an appeal to Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, with a copy of my reasons why it was inclosed to Oyster Bay.

My letter was intercepted by Mr. Tumulty, or in either of Navy Department. Ex-President Roosevelt replied, and sent me other which took place June 12, 1918, precisely as announced. I have inserted length from missionary report, inserted herein.

June, 1920?

Editor; June 12, 1918, and 8 or 10 days after my visit to St. Russell.

Who was conducting that election?

The American occupation, though they endeavored to make it appear a Government, which, of course, is absolutely false.

You mean by that these marines?

American marine officers and members of the United States military officers of the occupation, for there is absolutely no doubt, acted as dummies and a mere cover; you could see and sat silent and mummy-like alongside of marine, who

Do I understand from your statement that these native Haitians voted so that they would not vote against the adoption of the new constitution? Is that the fact?

Most emphatically so. They were terror-stricken, or, as he admits in his report to Gen. Barnett, referred to, "They were, and become almost hysterical with fear" of imprisonment to death, or shot down by gendarmes and marines, besides the American occupation—through the Negro President of the so-called voting, the following notices were put up at the courts of justice (sic) and signed by American marine officers—who have power over life and death in the Black Republic American in the United States can possibly realize—and read, as the speaker below :

INTIMIDATION AND THREAT.

REPUBLIC OF HAITI
PORT-DE-PAIX, June 11,

In accordance with the decree of His Excellency, the President of the Republic, published in the Monitor of May 8 last, all the citizens of this country of Port-de-Paix are asked to be present to-morrow at the Hotel Communal to vote on the new constitution, published in the Monitor of the same date. Abstention from such a solemn occasion will be considered an unpatriotic act, is, anti-American occupation—act. Maintenance of order will be assured by the gendarmerie (under chief, Gen. Williams, American marine officer), and the ballots will be distributed by a member of the administration of finance (American marine officer) opposite the voting offices, etc.

HERMAN H. HANNEKIN,
Lieutenant gendarmerie d'Haiti, American marine officer
E. LESCOT,
Government Commissaire, North

At St. Marc and other places, and if after voting and in celebration of the old Haiti constitution safeguarding their Republic hitherto, they were allowed to indulge in all the voodoo dances and orgies they wished that they were by order of the occupation and American marines, as an inducement to vote.

All the pink slips with non (no) as stated in my report were tied up with only the white slips with oui (yes) were loose and handled on the table. Each of those that were driven in, and one of each given to the committee. Out a word spoken by either the Haitian so-called voter (sic) without looking at the word (even though nearly all were too illiterate to know what it was) stood for if he did look, walked directly in fear and dread toward the box, pointed to and disappeared through the back door, glad the painful performance was over.

On my return from the court at St. Marc, and met by my wife, who asked me what things were, I replied, "God forbid that I should ever witness anything of the kind again. Until this shame and disgrace is wiped off by our United States Government we shall never be able to put out our Stars and Stripes at St. Marc, Haiti."

Senator POMERENE. How many polling places were there?

Mr. EVANS. I believe there was a polling place at every little town and village throughout the Republic.

Senator POMERENE. Where was the polling place that you are describing?

Mr. EVANS. St. Marc, where I was stationed.

Senator POMERENE. Was there just one polling place in the city?

Mr. EVANS. That was the only polling place in St. Marc, which was a town of 5,000 or 6,000 people, with some 12,000 to 15,000 or more within a radius of 10 or 12 miles perhaps.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know what the condition was at the other polling places?

Mr. EVANS. I did not make it my special business to go outside of St. Marc to see, for if I did this would have been construed as unpatriotic, or as going against constituted authority and possibly meant death. I felt my duty to be almost safer in Haiti before the occupation came than with a certain class of unscrupulous, drunken, brutal, American marines who seemed half crazy. I made inquiries, however, from others in various towns I visited as superintendent missionary, and from what information I received from most sources—the conditions were exactly like at St. Marc, including the dances and immoral orgies, if not much drinking.

Senator POMERENE. Well, in a general way?

Mr. EVANS. Generally speaking from information given me, yes; the conditions were alike everywhere, but evidence on this and other points was forthcoming in Haiti.

Senator POMERENE. What was the vote at St. Marc; what was the result there?

Mr. EVANS. There was no means of knowing. The natives felt no interest whatever, as it was known from the announcement by the occupation (the Dantigenaue), that whatever the American marines did no one dared to slips were taken to Port Au Prince, and published there. as a mere farce, and lowered the prestige of the United States, who seriously think, and even Europeans, and indeed that the American occupation had gone the limit, and made it look, and looked contemptible. No votes were reckoned to my town, but all taken in charge of American marines to Port

No, no; when the votes were counted what was the result at place?

ere taken to Port Au Prince, and published there, but numbers supposed to be cast at each town, I know not, and he, as I became disgusted, and felt disgraced that such was of the United States, and by anyone who called himself ty-three thousand for, and two hundred or three hundred and—can the Republic, Senator. They might have published the 63,000 there is no one to contradict or to explain for the managed the whole business. I do not believe that any pink Haitians, and that out of shame certain marines cast in a This is the belief in Haiti.

n, and denounce it more still to-day, as the greatest mockery life, and never thought we had Americans and marine look so low before these gendarmes, and poor Haitians, though evidence, and highest admiration should be the aim of every true American who despises anything like hypocrisy, and aud.

What part did these educated Haitians take in this elec-great majority, apart from those who happened as stated—financially connected with the occupation, so-called Haiti and castor-seed corporations, schools, courts, prisons, etc., abstained and kept clear of the voting place, though the risk of being blacklisted, run into prison on slightest tion, etc.

they would have asked for the pink slip with non, which their lot with the occupation. It was a hard and trying were heroic enough to stand the test, whatever has been ce.

and American marines were in the employ of Germany pay from Berlin, they could never have gone about wreck- and ruining the character, and destroying the growing in- States Government, more successfully than by the blunder- ent, and even murderous conduct of marines and gendarmes al discipline, knowledge of human nature, common sense, patriotism of the Washington, Lincoln, and Roosevelt type.

. Under the Haitian law, how many voters would there be e can say positively, for there never perhaps has been a we guess work.

. What portion of the votes was cast?

ay about 63,000?

00.

people of Haiti, small as that number is, believe not the ough seeing how many the occupation had gathered by mes around, and the fact of their being dominated by fear, y they had, and positions held—it may be near the truth.

. We will assume it is so. What portion is embraced in total population?

. No; of the voters?

al population of Haiti, is put down as 2,500,000.

ou can figure the adult males.

. Probably one in five?

wo and a half million, roughly.

. There ought to be in the neighborhood of 400,000 or

Mr. EVANS. I should say something more like 400,000.

Senator POMERENE. That is, if males alone voted.

Senator KING. Most of the people reside out in the hills and in the country. Do they not?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; most of the people are living in the country; a way you can have any idea, is on Saturday their market day, when they are astonished at their number filing in from brush, and narrow lanes ben sible on reaching the market as early as they can, and when business is about 1 or 2 o'clock latest, unless in the very busy cotton or coffee market they quietly hasten back to their husbands, children, and homes, so that the market places are all cleared again in the early afternoons.

Senator KING. I was told when I was there that three-fourths of the population lived out of the cities.

Mr. EVANS. Yes, that is true; at least three-fourths.

Senator POMERENE. How was this amendment proposed? What was the modus operandi down there? Is it proposed by joint resolution of Congress, similar to ours?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; precisely, so I understand, and from the time their constitution was first adopted; but their senate and chambers had been abolished by the American occupation and members forced out and doors locked by armed American marines, and as a substitute for the Haitian Congress the same American occupation created—illegally, of course—what is called a constitutional council, which, with the Haitian President, functions at the direction and direction of the American occupation, through the marines. This is the Haitian courts and Haitian people—quite apart from the fraudulent methods adopted re voting, intimidation and military force—declare the new constitution called new constitution as both illegal and unconstitutional; but most of the judges of said courts were dismissed, if not some imprisoned, for to invalidate any procedure of American marines, whose knowledge, however, of either law, constitution, or treaty in Haiti, if not also respect, has been somewhat negligible quantity and fundamentally lacking.

Senator POMERENE. But was there at that time?

Mr. EVANS. No; not at this time, nor some two years before. Their constitution was closed in April of 1916, whereas the American occupation's official notification or decree—through their Haiti President—announcing the constitution dates May, 1918. On page 25 of the record of hearing before the committee on Haiti, etc., part 1, this paragraph appears, showing the protest made by the Haitian Chambers against this annihilation of the constitution follows:

"The Haitian Chambers protested against this intervention. On the day the Senators were assembling in their provisional quarters when an American (marine) officer, brutally ordered them to leave the place, threatening them with measures to force them to go. At the suggestion of M. Paul Laraudogoitia, President of the Haitian Senate, they met at his house, where they drew up a formal account of the incident." (See Appendix No. 10.)

Senator POMERENE. How was this amendment proposed, by what authority?

Mr. EVANS. It was done by the same functionary that does everything in Haiti, the American occupation, through the marines, but with Haiti President acting—under force—as medium to blind and bluff the Haitian people and deceive the responsible United States Government, and people.

H. P. Davies, official head of castor-seed corporation in Haiti, boasted that a functionary acting behind the American occupation, and last October a responsible official of the United States Navy Department at Washington publicly boasted that he was the functionary who changed the Haitian constitution, so there must be a conspiracy of many functionaries concerned in proposing, and illegal, unconstitutional forcing of the new constitution on the Haitian people as back of the mock voting.

Haitian intelligent and educated leaders and business men all over the Republic saw through all this, and deplored and despised such procedure.

Senator KING. Was there just one article involved in the amendment of the constitution?

Mr. EVANS. While there were minor modifications or adjustments made to meet new conditions, which the Haitians themselves would gradually make in a regular and constitutional way have made with little patience, and American military showed less intolerance and bounce, the main article of the constitution which the American occupation and other corporation functionaries gton (acting together), was that concerning the land, was the very heart and life of their constitution.

words of H. P. Davies, official head of the castor seed his magazine article he gave me to read and study at of 1918, and as showing his emphatic (and that of his the Black Republic when demanding this change:

the constitution of Haiti, which specifies that no foreigner (ite person unless a Haitian citizen) may own lands, must ed."

the vital importance of this one article and the very constitution as follows, he persists in above demand:

was introduced when Haiti gained its independence and years to be the one definite thing in the constitution y Haitian and above all was understood by all the people."

i will just answer without explanation we will get along that was the only point involved in the election.

ready answered that no doubt there were minor points adjusted through the Haitian Senate and Chambers, regularly, but that it was the land part of the new constitution cered, and actually transformed the somewhat friendly position, anger, and hatred against us.

was done?

e already replied to Senator Pomerene and stated before, was the vital point demanded by H. P. Davies and his ling to his imperative demand, and that of the castor-seed

Davies predicted to me would be the case two months pre- n Cape Haiti, the "occupation," on advice from Washing- Haiti President, announced that a new constitution would te of the Haitian people, on June 12, 1918, and in which ion this objectionable article, re lands, would be changed astor-seed if not also the Haiti Sugar Corporation, and arranged, conducted, and guarded under strict super- merican Marines and their gendarmes.

ay that this article originated in the Navy Department?

originated with Davies and his corporation, and if what ere directors and stockholders (in his corporation) mem- tes Government and administration and within the Navy gton, then Col. Russell received his instructions from the e these are the words of Assistant Secretary Franklin ed States Navy, which finally settles not only the com- in of the new constitution with the complete change—in of the old constitution's land clause (Art. VI):

ad something to do with the running of a couple of little re that I wrote Haiti's constitution myself, and if I do ry good constitution."

tenment was wired all over the United States and caused eazement among millions of Americans, but cleared up at e, and in Haiti, as to whom were directly and officially etrayal of confidence and perpetration of such a crime less nation—this admission must have been known to ittee.

any advantages been taken of this provision in the new ans to acquire lands?

d in my judgment a very unfair, unjust, if not mean, or-seed corporation, with its claim of abundant wealth with members of the United States Government at Wash- ors and stockholders, and by contract to furnish oil to ernment's airplane fleet, would have the right of way to f the soil throughout the Republic, and probably amount of this Republic.

poration, 1918, to which my own secretary of my Haiti mittee transferred his interest and affections, now, I the receiver, and boosting this corporation in Lott Carey September, under his own name, and for Negro specu- na, etc., says:

as 130,000 acres of excellent sugar land in the plains of l to be the richest land on the continent with a soil of 20,000-acre tract of 15 miles north of Port au Prince.

"Cheap labor.—While Cuba is paying for labor $2 a day, and more ent, Haitian laborers are only paid 20 cents a day, and in that is inc raise of over 50 per cent over what was accustomed to be given labor f etc."

This negro speculator and booster forgot to add that living had gone per cent since American occupation.

These are the two main corporations, and it is stated that these l got through the special aid of the American occupation, who control the courts and judges, etc.

Senator KING. Were no Americans holding land in Haiti prior to constitutional amendment?

Mr. EVANS. There might have been a few Americans, just as the many foreigners holding individual properties, and even land for the purpose, but no corporations or American on large scale to my kn and it would be somewhat futile for an individual or native Negroes to in Haiti, at least during the last administration, if what Davies alleged that these had United States Government officials as directors and stock

I should have added that under the old constitution and previous American occupation there was no difficulty whatever for individuals in Haiti to own property. The Haiti Government, whose constitution states that Protestant churches are equally free with Roman Catholic have always been only too glad to grant land for schools or colleges to A evangelical and missionary societies to educate and, morally and re develop the Haitian people, as the following from President Leconte I visited at the palace, to his secretary of state, whom I wished to t concerning land for Bible training and industrial seminary and s anticipation of the coming of secretary of Baptist Home Mission Board for the same purpose the map of the island was given:

*"Le President de la Republique d'Haiti, au Hon. J. N. Leger, mon ch
taire d'Etat.*

"J'introduis volontiers aupres de vous le Rev. L. Ton Evans, S General de la Mission Baptiste Evangellique pour Haiti, qui desire contact avec vous et vous entretenir de choses qui concernant sa Missi voyage dans le Pays.

"Sincere compliments.

"CTUS. LE

"PALAIS NATIONAL, 22 Xbre, 1911.

"Au Sre. d'Etat de Rel. Exterieurs."

"Le President de la Republique d'Haiti au Secrétaire de la Instruction d'Haiti.

"Envole au Reverend Ton Evans, la carte de l'île d' Haiti, avec l'e de ses meilleurs voeux pour le plein succes de ses nobles projects et ses de bon voyage.

"Le 29, Decembre, 1911.

"CTUS. LE

Both in his own handwriting, and a few months before he was ruthl assassinated because he refused to be exploited and turn over the custom man and other white speculators and political profiteers.

Senator KING. You have answered that they did; were they American

Mr. EVANS. Yes; some most probably were, though I came, chiefly and through the southern and southeastern part of the Republic, in with English, French, Dutch, and German Europeans. There was n corporation, to my knowledge.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you another question. Mr. Evans, a pr question. When were you last in Haiti?

Mr. EVANS. I left there in April of 1919.

Senator POMERENE. And you have not been there since?

Mr. EVANS. No.

Senator POMERENE. Suppose the question arose and was presente Haitians as to whether or not we should continue our occupation do Government could be completely organized and put in operation, what would be the result of such a vote, in your opinion?

Are Germans, French, and other nationalities other than the Americans in Haiti prior to this amendment?

Do they hold holdings for their own family purposes, or are they merely holding them?

What title do the Americans ask Mr. Evans were these holdings in their own names?

Do you understand that many merchants and others would live in Haiti, perhaps of education and maybe secretly married, and their property would be held?

Was it quite a common practice, was it not, among the Americans who were down there?

Unfortunately, when this was done without a legal marriage, it was a single case of an American living with a Haitian or the exception of some of the captains and lieutenants of the gendarmerie, and most of who in these cases were women from surrounding islands living in Haiti and the American with the native through the French patois, or probably 95 per cent of Haitians speak.

Some marine officers in the gendarmerie live in the Roman Catholic parishes and assist him in the Roman Catholic Church in the parishes giving the idea, which is generally believed by the inhabitants outside of the many thousand professing Protestant adherents, that the United States Government, President, is a Roman Catholic.

At this point may I introduce into the record the articles of the constitution regarding the holding of land, that will give, so far as the record goes, the basis for Mr. Evans's testimony. I will give the stenographic text of Article VI of the constitution of 1889, which was the constitution that was brought forward for adoption, the text is as follows. The original French text is as follows:

"Nul ne peut être propriétaire de biens fonciers en Haïti. Nul ne peut acquérir aucun immeuble."

That a Haitian can be proprietor or can own an interest in real estate, whatever title, nor acquire any real estate."

The new constitution of 1918, concerning which Mr. Evans is testifying and told this committee its origination through the United States Navy Department at Washington as follows:

"Real estate is granted to a foreigner residing in Haiti and (the companies) organized by foreigners for the needs of their cultural, commercial, and industrial enterprises, and of these shall cease at the end of the period of six years after they have ceased to reside in the country, or shall have ceased to exist as such companies" (corporations).

The text of above changed article reads:

"Le droit de propriété immobilière est accordé à l'étranger résident en Haïti, pour des étrangers pour les besoins de leurs demeures, de leurs entreprises culturelles, commerciales, industrielles, ou d'enseignement. Ce droit cesse dans une période de cinq années après que l'étranger a cessé de résider dans le pays ou qu'auront cessé les opérations de ces entreprises."

At this point, Mr. Evans, who is so disappointed, with bitter feelings due not only to betrayal, their chambers, and especially what is dearest to him, and resentment of their betrayal, the brutality and the cruel and cruel working of the corvée, the overwhelming opinion just now, be for the United States to clear right and to deplore, not simply for the sake of Haiti; it is a confession on our part of failure to carry out our duty, which is a most serious matter for the United States Government, about to enter into conference with the civilized nations of the world, treaties, etc. We must not think of shirking our duties to the Haitian people, and can not thus humiliate ourselves before

If this Senate committee results in some cleaning out among our marines in Haiti, change the military into a civil occupation, give guarantees that the treaty will be honestly and honorably carried out by the United States Government through competent, broad-minded, and even Christian statesmen of this country, possessed with faith in the and imbued somewhat with a true missionary spirit, and all this explained to the Haitians, the whole of Haiti would demand us to stay.

Senator POMERENE. Well, am I to infer now that your belief is that the present state of the Haitian mind is that we should get out?

Mr. EVANS. Yes. The Haitians in many respects are children, easily easily aroused and driven into almost hysterics with fear and terror. That many Haitian leaders, as well as the mass of the Negro inhabitants the cruel and criminal, if not insane, blunders of the American officials at the Navy, if not the State Department at Washington, as to chambers, and constitution, not to mention the brutalities and murders, drunken, half crazy marines and gendarmes, which some, ignorant of the situation in Haiti and the real character of the Haitian, seek to defend and un-American persons go so far as to justify, are looked upon not as the of individuals, members of corporations, and conspiring and profiteering but as the fixed policy of the responsible United States Government and can people who never meant from the beginning to live up to their own.

Hence, if the result of this careful and thorough investigation were not merely an honest confession of our criminal blunder at a time we absorbed in the World War, and the indignant repudiation in the name of the United States Government, and the great American people, of all the murders, brutalities, and killings, and a readiness on our part to make an reparation to Haiti, we would be allowed, if not requested, to remain the job we undertook, and once more lift our heads.

Senator POMERENE. Suppose we were out of there now.

Mr. EVANS. It would be an admission of incompetency and absolute on our part as a Government before Haiti and the world, and can not for reason, if nothing else, be supposed for a moment.

Senator POMERENE. Suppose that we were to leave the island now and all foreign influences were eliminated entirely, what would be the result to the people of the island?

Mr. EVANS. In my firm opinion based on a careful study of and experience with white and colored, both in Haiti and elsewhere, knowledge of psychology of the white and black man, Haitians would go back to their former position under the dominating and dominating influence of European merchants, politicians, and Roman Catholic priests; they are utterly incapable at present to resist. If these were entirely eliminated and the Haitians left alone, with merely efficient Bible training for native preachers and teachers, and an industrial school similar to and on a Christian basis, I believe it would soon develop into an independent republic, and astonish America and the world.

Senator POMERENE. Assume that we were to withdraw entirely and no other foreign nation was to step in there, what would be the result to the people from the standpoint of law and order and a civic government? In other words, could they maintain law and order down there and a proper government?

Mr. EVANS. Seeing that Haiti has already had over 100 years of an independent, free Republic, often seriously interrupted, it is true, by political disturbances and even bloody revolutions, in the main fomented and fired by white men; that during the last decade quite a number of young men have had sound, practical education here in the States, and having themselves many experienced, intellectually, morally, and even some strong Protestant and a few Catholic leaders, their prospects would be no less than ever from the standpoint of law, order, and civic government.

If the United States, however, protected the island from foreign interference and political filibustering of white and colored, supervised Haiti economically, and aid in the establishment of normal and industrial colleges without fail would gradually but surely work out her own redemption and quietly take her place among civilized, progressive, peaceful nations. My firm belief is that we should remain in Haiti for some years to render such aid as specified or, better, to carry out our treaty, through a civil occupation.

What do you mean by years to come—3 or 4 years or 25 years, under efficient and sympathetic American protection but not a day longer than we can help it under present circumstances what has transpired.

Clearer to the committee if I again briefly quote from your report. It is the following:

The Black Republic by certain American capitalists was created, much like the Spanish pirates and French slave raiders of Columbus five centuries before, but unless Uncle Sam wakes up, and strictly carries out his treaty and pledge to protect the Haitians' liberties, etc., the result to-day will be the Negroes of the black Republic as to the Carib Indians, when piracy and buccaneering were rife in Hispaniola.

Independent government, or nation sovereth, that also they will receive of God, and the timely warning should be heeded. In his Social Aspects of Foreign Missions, Dr. Faunce, says:

The harm has been done by the sudden influx of the white ideas among the weaker peoples. In Haiti, for instance, a million (about 1,000,000) died out within 40 years because of the brutality of Spanish misgovernment. The atrocities in the Kongo, driving the black to produce rubber, are as it should be to-day to the Belgians. Africa has been drained of its treasures, flesh, and blood, to satisfy European and German politicians and profiteers exploited the Haitian masses, they were wiser than to meddle with senate and congress or attempt such a stupid and mad thing as the rape of the island.

Is Gen. Williams in control there now?

I think he has left at last.

Who has succeeded him?

I know; this has been since my return to the States.

Russell.

Col. Russell?

Yes; Gen. Alexander Williams was the general over the native armed police), and under Col. John H. Russell, the American occupation and chief in supreme command and the gendarmerie of the republic. It is important to keep its quite distinct in mind.

He is there by our appointment, Senator McCormick? Is this Government?

Yes, is at the head of all, as Mr. Evans said.

There must be no confusion between the marine and the gendarmerie—different departments under the American occupation. There are 800, perhaps, in number, most of whom are stationed at Port-au-Prince and one-fourth at Cape Haiti. Very little if any disorder has occurred against these, with the exception of a scrap now and then at Port au Prince. In fact, the marines have bit-tered hardly anything to do, as everything was so quiet.

The native police, are scattered in companies all over the country. Each company has either a white captain or white lieutenants who also are called American marine officers.

There is a great deal of brutality and killings, both in all prisons as well as in the so-called Cacos, are against these marine officers over whom the gendarmes, chosen and commanded by them, all of Gen. Williams. Like the confusion between Navy and State Department, there has been friction and confusion and a great deal of trouble in these two departments and the two sets of marine officers. Lack of definite policy they often overlapped, consequently upon moral as well as military discipline, and seriously the work of the occupation.

When you leave, Mr. Evans, let me ask in reference to your testimony at the beginning of your testimony; in your judgment 'is Haiti?

Mr. EVANS. It is nothing like what it used to be, for instance, when at Jacmel in the south, some 28 years ago. This reform, if not revolution, is due chiefly, within a radius of 40 or 50 miles around Jacmel, in sections throughout the northeast, to faithful work of the native missionary, the native small schools, and the sincerity and consistency of daily life and conduct of the native Christians and converts (croyants) themselves.

President Leconte during his short tenure of the presidential office took some strict measures and made the voodoo dances, orgies, and sacrifices hence helped to put down most. Some of our better-class American officers of gendarmes have also informed me of using their influence in this direction.

Twenty-nine, twenty-five, and twenty years ago, and even fifteen, I could not travel 2 or 3 miles without hearing the tomtom, but of late years, especially is this so in the Gros Morne section and Jacmel, one can travel together without hearing a sound, nor see the effect of tafia. To me, and educational work have produced if not a very high intellectual standard, at least a high moral and spiritual character among these once voodoo devotees, low, superstitious Romanists and witchcraft devotees, gamblers, fighters, and the remarkable stories they have to tell, evidenced by their clean and clean lives has been cheering and inspiring.

I have had the joy of burning tomtoms and the whole paraphernalia by papa and mama lois after conversion, and Lherisson, our excellent missionary at Jacmel, has again and again brought donkey loads of worshiped implements to be publicly burned in town amid great rejoicing of the Christian believers and to the confusion, if not consternation, of the heathen, who unfortunately neither teach nor believe in real regenerating power of the Christian religion.

Senator POMERENE. Are you going back there as a missionary again? Mr. EVANS. Possibly I may; for after 20 years of correspondence, pleadings, and praying our northern Baptist convention home mission society through its religious-education department has just decided to enter Haiti as to establish in the most central position in the republic a Bible school and theological seminary, with an industrial department to efficiently train preachers and Christian workers right on the Haitian soil, and I am now requested, perhaps, to accompany the secretary on his survey tour of the country, and this committee goes to Haiti.

The committee may be interested to have inserted here in the record showing the native's eagerness for education and further religious instruction and assistance by a powerful missionary organization in North America to enable them to devote their time and energy entirely to preach the Gospel and give Christian teaching to fellow Haitians, a copy of the petition I presented to the New York in 1909 to above home mission society; that is, two years ago, we had the honor of bearing the petition and earnest prayer of new Haitians, including President Simon and President Leconte (who followed by Messrs. Rockefeller and Carnegie, re the national normal and college. This petition reads as follows:

Haiti Evangelical Baptist Mission, a cry from Macedonia, or prayer of the brethren of the black Republic:

We, the present missionaries and native assistant preachers, express our great joy at the interest which is being created in this dark and neglected land and evangelization of our own superstitious country, steeped in idolatry, witchcraft, and voodooism (demon worship), through the efforts of our dear brother and brother, L. Ton Evans, who left his church in Pennsylvania to come here and help us to give the Gospel and religious education to the black people. Having no support from any missionary board or society, we are compelled to engage ourselves in some kind of secular occupations to struggle against poverty, which takes most of our time and energies to the hindrance of our educational work, and so as to carry the evangel into dark sections of the country, us clamoring for the light and word of truth.

For the sake of reaching these hundreds of thousands of perishing souls, the social and moral uplift of our dear country, and for Christ, we most earnestly appeal to the American Home Mission Society, through our beloved brother, Ton Evans, field secretary, to undertake this mission, so near your American shores, and yet so far away from your Americanization and your Christian privileges.

ced that our brother's desire to establish in Haiti, in stian mission and Bible school and seminary for train-there should be also a normal and industrial school, ee, which would prove a blessing in the mental, moral, ion of our young people, and give solidity and perma-

LUCIUS HYPOLITE,
Port au Prince.
 P. NOSIREL LHERISSON, Jacomel.
 METELLUS MENARD,
St. Raphael.
 C. JEAN-JACQUES,
Cape Haiti.
 AMBROSE MARS,
St. Raphael.
 T. V. EUSTACHE, Dondon.
 ELIE MARK,
Trou.
 DUMAY PIERRE ALEXIS, Milot.
 DUTREVILLE LAMOUR, Trou.
 NEEVA GHOSSE, Jacmel.
 ORIOUS PAULTRE,
St. Marc.
 SAMUEL BLACK,
St. Marc.
 ALCIUS JOLICOEUR,
Jacmel.
 HERNE GUYOT,
Port de Paix.
 JOACHIM EDOUARD,
Grande Riviere.
 ELIE PHELIX CADET,
Dondon.
 OSIRIS LAMOUR,
Trou.

Who has succeeded you there?

no white man in my place. A good colored brother without any experience in Haiti, or knowledge of either I understand, is acting for the same colored missionary es of Haiti and native government have more confidence ge, and efficient leadership of the white man than in es a colored brother whether from the States, Haiti, or islands, feels somewhat handicapped in working along-white priest, or in reaching Americans whether from the en specially appealed to years ago by a delegation of ed States Episcopal Church as to their appointment at accessor to my old friend, the late Negro Bishop Holly, nd a sympathetic, broad-minded, white clergyman or

 l. Haitians are peculiar people, kind and even affec-ce and esteem are easy to win by sober, moral, symchristian white men, whose leadership they will follow can not go into these philosophic considerations of the resting as it is, at this time.

request of Senator Hitchcock, then chairman of Foreign and Secretary Stabler, of the Latin American department airs of the United States Government, I was asked in es of Haiti and my recommendations, and among those 4 of memorandum and a copy of which I have given littee, is this as first and most vital before there can be any effective and constructive work done by either the Haiti Government or the United States military or civil occupation in the black Republic.

After a very careful observation, frequent consultations with the Haitian people, and leaders both educated and uneducated, Catholics and Protestants, white and black, including officers of our American occupation, to President Dartiguenave at this moment, I have no hesitation in saying that it is essential to the spiritual interests of the Protestant and Roman Catholic and their work in Haiti, and indispensable to honest and efficient stable government in the black Republic, there must be an absolute and an official and financial separation, between them and both the Haitian government, as well as any American occupation there, exactly as we have it in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. How is that the responsibility of the American?

Mr. EVANS. How does it come?

The CHAIRMAN. How is that the responsibility of the American?

Mr. EVANS. In this way. The Government of the United States, in the preamble of the treaty made with backward, and bankrupt Haiti, states very main reasons for our intervention with these people, states that the United States and the Republic of Haiti, desiring to confirm the amity existing between them, by the most cordial cooperation (not only in measures for their common advantage; and the Republic of Haiti to remedy the present conditions of its revenues and finances, to secure the tranquillity of the Republic, to carry out plans for the economic development and prosperity of the Republic and its people."

That is, we have solemnly undertaken to place Haiti financial basis, and to give an honest, and efficient administration to the Haitian people, and thus deliver them from dishonest politicians of their own, and of white profiteering foreigners who have been fattening upon the Haitian Government revenues essential to the working of the Republic, education, among the illiterate inhabitants, and other progress.

My point is, that while Haiti Government, and United States Government pay annually something like $100,000 if not altogether about $200,000, it is impossible to find out the correct amount) from Haiti interest on the revenues, and (before the occupation) Haitian officers, but since the occupation of the United States, become paymasters of archbishop, bishops, etc., of the Roman Catholic Church, not to mention pay added toward the maintenance of the palace of this foreign potentate (another professing sovereign) their presbyteries, and churches, becomes absolutely impossible for these United States Marine officers to serve either our Government, or the best interests of Haiti, and out the main purpose of our going to the black republic as specified most emphatically specified at the beginning of the treaty.

Again—

1. The old Haitian concordat, made between the cabinet (not the government) and the vatican at Rome is something entirely outside of the treaty.

2. This concordat, made about 1860, was for 50 years; has since then been in force for several years and never renewed. Hence if it had no legality in the past it has none to-day.

3. The Haiti Government and framers of the Haiti constitution, in ratifying such an unholy alliance as that of religion with the secular government, and in stipulating that all churches are equally free in Haiti, and that the constitution remains unchanged. Therefore, an official and financially such as the Roman Catholic, is (in the black Republic) incompatible with, and alien to the spirit of, and illegal with the Haitian constitution.

4. Moreover, and in the present financial condition of Haiti and the occupation of either the native government, or the American occupation, after six years on the island to make any provision for the education of the children but withhold appropriations from excellent Protestant schools, the Republic on the ground of lack of money, demands that this cease.

Furthermore, Article V of treaty says:

"All sums collected by the general receiver (of United States) shall be applied—

"First. To the payment of the salaries and allowances of the Haitian officials, his assistants and employees, and expenses of the receivership."

the financial advisor, which salaries will be determined rest and sinking fund of Haiti; and tenance of the constabulary (gendarmérie) referred to er to the Haitian Government for purposes of current ally submit that this committee is authorized and ex-vestigation to find out the causes which have contributed of American forces in their operations in Haiti in the why no effort has been made to encourage education by system of public instruction.

, Mr. Evans, that has nothing to do with the occupation let me ask one other question. Are women as a class d more vigorous than the men?

many if not most are. The home life, generally speak-the educated Haitians and the Christian natives in the ns, have little or no home attractions but their little for a woman. This being so, women and young girls, their habitations (little holdings) and they mainly carry they are the buyers and sellers, and seem to be natur-om early childhood.

hat does not exactly answer my question. I am speak-now.

physical exercise in the open fresh air would naturally feel healthy. They are the children of nature and nd their habits of life, which are most primitive, and generally speaking, they appear to be healthier and and even more active.

hen you agree with the statement that was made here men are more vigorous physically and healthier than the e physical strength?

obably in most cases they are, though we have seen in men of a very fine physique.

ow about the men? Are they, as a class weaker than do as a rule the heaviest work on their little holdings nd children, while the women are attending to selling ily.

to encourage the men either in towns or country. They at is, about government affairs, and feel interest and he better. I mean the better educated and thinking to gambling, such as cockfighting and card playing port, diversion, and excitement in them than really for or anything like robbery, or taking mean advantage of fighting and the gambling like voodooism and witchcraft ring and dying out as the Gospel and education are ugh no country has ever been more neglected and Haiti and its people by the Protestant and evangelical ian education boards and societies of Europe and the l any real contact with the United States until now has been no opening for markets, and encouragement ct is that without outside capital and outside influence revert to a condition of almost barbarism, would it not?

uld not say that. I have seen more real barbarism e of stabbing, lynching, and murder in Great Britain and n I have ever seen or known in Haiti. And also of ng the natives of the Black Republic with all their capi-culture.

tian education and industrial teaching and sympathetic Haiti, in my opinion would soon advance, and ere long There are thrifty people there, kind hearted and most n find anywhere among colored or white.

Haitian laborers in various parts of Haiti have spoken eir thriftiness and reliability when kindly treated.

Many of our own American marines have testified to me to the same moment they changed their harsh and brutal methods, came to understand the natives, treat them humanely, and trust them they are ferently and became reliable and devoted to their work and officers.

Senator KING. Well I went out into the island and I saw little sugar perhaps a quarter of an acre—well I will not say cultivated, but with fruit growing, and a woman gathering it and putting it in baskets and it 20, 30, or 40 miles on her head to the town, and selling for a very in-able sum, and her husband or man she is living with would take the earnings, or part of them, and engage in cockfights and spend most of the time in idleness and indolence.

Mr. EVANS. There has been a great deal of cockfighting, and even gambling with other undesirable things in Haiti in the past as stated by the Protestant and Evangelical churches of America, and the United States Government for this, and hold them responsible for withholding these Negroes all the Christian, educational, and civilizing means which ourselves enjoyed for over 100 years, and which have made us the Nation people we are to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will recess until 2.30, when we may meet a little while, and let Mr. Evans conclude.

(Mr. Angell thereupon offered for the record the following conventional agreements between the United States, and the Republic of Haiti):

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI

PREAMBLE.

The United States and the Republic of Haiti, desiring to continue and strengthen the amity existing between them by the most cordial cooperation in measures for their common advantage, and the Republic of Haiti desiring to remedy the present condition of its revenues and finances, to maintain the tranquillity of the Republic, to carry out plans for the economic development and prosperity of the Republic and its people, and the United States desiring to show full sympathy with all of these aims and objects and desiring to contribute by all proper ways to their accomplishment;

The United States and the Republic of Haiti have resolved to conclude this convention with these objects in view, and have appointed for that purpose plenipotentiaries:

The President of the Republic of Haiti, Mr. Louis Borno, secretary of foreign affairs and public instruction;

The President of the United States, Mr. Robert Beale Davis, jr., secretary of affairs of the United States of America;

Who, having exhibited to each other their respective powers, which are in full in good and true form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The Government of the United States will, by its good offices, air the Government in the proper and efficient development of its agricultural, industrial, and commercial resources, and in the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a firm and solid basis.

ARTICLE II.

The President of Haiti shall appoint, upon nomination by the President of the United States, a general receiver, and such aids and employees as may be necessary, who shall collect, receive, and apply all customs duties on imports and exports accruing at the several customhouses and ports of the Republic of Haiti.

The President of Haiti shall appoint, upon nomination by the President of the United States, financial adviser, who shall be an officer attached to the ministry of finance, to give effect to whose proposals and labors the United States will lend efficient aid. The financial adviser shall devise an adequate system of public accounting, aid in increasing the revenues and adjusting the expenses, inquire into the validity of the debts of the Republic, enlighten the Governments with reference to all eventual debts, recommend improvements of collecting and applying the revenues, and make such other recommendations.

of finance as may be deemed necessary for the welfare of the Republic.

ARTICLE III.

The Republic of Haiti will provide by law or appropriate decree all of all customs duties to the general receiver, and will furnish to the financial adviser all needed aid and full execution of the powers conferred and duties imposed herein; and on its part will extend like aid and protection.

ARTICLE IV.

The financial adviser, the Government of the Republic, in cooperation with the financial adviser, shall collate, classify, and make a statement of all the debts of the Republic, the amounts, the conditions thereof, and the interest accruing, and the means to their final discharge.

ARTICLE V.

The salaries and allowances of the general receiver shall be applied, first, to the salaries and allowances of the general receiver, his assistants, and expenses of the receivership, including the salary of the financial adviser, which salaries will be determined by law; second, to the interest and sinking fund of the public debt of Haiti; and, third, to the maintenance of the constabulary of Haiti, and then the remainder to the Haitian Government for current expenses.

When the general receiver will proceed to pay salaries and expenses as they arise, and on the first of each month set aside in a separate fund the quantum of the collection of the previous month.

ARTICLE VI.

The receivership, including salaries and allowance of the general receiver, assistants, and employees, and the salary and expenses of the financial adviser, shall not exceed five per centum of the collection and receipts of the receivership, unless by agreement by the two Governments.

ARTICLE VII.

The financial adviser shall make monthly reports of all collections, receipts, and disbursements, to the appropriate officers of the Republic of Haiti and to the appropriate officers of the United States, which reports shall be open to inspection at all times by the appropriate authorities of each of the two Governments.

ARTICLE VIII.

The Republic of Haiti shall not increase its public debt except by previous agreement with the President of the United States, and shall not contract any new financial obligation unless the ordinary revenues of the Republic are sufficient for that purpose, after defraying the expenses of the Government, to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for such debt.

ARTICLE IX.

The Republic of Haiti will not, without a previous agreement with the President of the United States, modify the customs duties in a manner to reduce the revenues of the Republic in order that the revenues of the Republic may be sufficient to pay the public debt and the expenses of the Government, to promote material prosperity, the Republic of Haiti will follow the Financial Adviser in his recommendations for methods of collecting and disbursing the revenues and for the income.

ARTICLE X.

The Haitian Government obligates itself, for the preservation of peace, the security of individual rights, and the full observance of the provisions of this treaty, to create without delay an efficient constabulary, urban and rural, composed of native Haitians. This constabulary shall be organized and officered by Americans appointed by the President of Haiti, upon nomination by the President of the United States. The Haitian Government shall clothe these officers with the proper and necessary authority and uphold them in the performance of their functions. These officers will be replaced by Haitians by examination conducted under direction of a board to be selected by the senior American officer of this constabulary, in the presence of a representative of the Haitian Government, are found to be qualified to assume such duties. The constabulary herein provided for, shall, under the direction of the senior American officer, have supervision and control of arms and ammunition, supplies and traffic therein, throughout the country. The high contracting parties agree that the stipulations in this article are necessary to prevent strife and disturbances.

ARTICLE XI.

The Government of Haiti agrees not to surrender any of the territory of the Republic of Haiti by sale, lease or otherwise, or jurisdiction over such territory to any foreign Government or power, nor to enter into any treaty or agreement with any foreign power or powers that will impair or tend to impair the independence of Haiti.

ARTICLE XII.

The Haitian Government agrees to execute with the United States all claims for the settlement, by arbitration or otherwise, of all pending pecuniary claims of foreign corporations, companies, citizens, or subjects against Haiti.

ARTICLE XIII.

The Republic of Haiti, being desirous to further the development of its natural resources, agrees to undertake and execute such measures as may be in the opinion of the high contracting parties, may be necessary for the sanitation and public improvement of the Republic, under the supervision and control of an engineer or engineers, to be appointed by the President of Haiti, upon nomination of the President of the United States, and authorized for that purpose by the Government of Haiti.

ARTICLE XIV.

The high contracting parties shall have authority to take such steps as may be necessary to insure the complete attainment of any of the objects herein provided for in this treaty; and, should the necessity occur, the United States shall lend an efficient aid for the preservation of Haitian independence and the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty.

ARTICLE XV.

The present treaty shall be approved and ratified by the high contracting parties in conformity with their respective laws, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the city of Washington as soon as may be possible.

ARTICLE XVI.

The present treaty shall remain in full force and virtue for the term of ten years, to be counted from the day of exchange of ratifications, and for another term of ten years if, for specific reasons presented by either of the high contracting parties, the purpose of this treaty has not been accomplished.

In faith whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the convention in duplicate, in the English and French languages, and have thereto affixed their seals.

ce (Haiti) the sixteenth day of September, in the year and nine hundred and fifteen.

ROBERT BEALE DAVIS, Jr.,

Charge d'Affaires of the United States.

LOUIS BORN,

Secrétaire d'Etat des Relations Extérieures et de l'Instruction Publique.

ARTICLE REGARDING TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

ly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, n, management, and maintenance of the telegraphs and public of Haiti shall be under the control and direction lineers to be appointed by the President of Haiti upon sident of the United States and authorized for that purt of Haiti in accordance with Article XIII of the treaty at officers of the gendarmerie shall be better able to er the treaty, the unrestricted service of the telegraphs by assured to them, and in order to provide for the f messages of the gendarmerie the officers thereof will protection to the lines.

the undersigned have hereunto signed their names and aplicate.

D. C., this twenty-fourth day of August, nineteen hun-

ROBERT LANSING.

OLON MENOS.

lock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

embled at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of presiding.

egin with, Mr. Evans, I would like to ask you what can occupation to foster education and self-government? een nothing done to foster education but rather to dis- the schools have been actually closed up. The appro- the Protestant schools (some of a very high grade and iti Government before the American occupation came) ur American occupation, and consequently some had to le I was at St. Marc that the American marines were ns, so afraid to see any improvement and signs of men- ent in the natives tending to qualify them for anything at they also closed some of the Government day schools, sh the Haitian College and medical school at Port au uld have done but for the strong protest of President ne.

at any warrant and marched under a heavy armed guard St. Marc to the gendarmerie of Haiti headquarters, the me, spluttered out amid vile oaths of a wild, intoxicated can marine officer, Capt. Brown, who alternately aimed olver to shoot me in the presence of the Negro armed that I sought by my preaching and efforts to establish damned niggers a normal and industrial school so as to lly and morally develop these low damned niggers, whom ame experience, with closed fists, wild gestures, oaths, command never to preach in his section and through xicated American marine, Lieut. Haug, who raved like e, and before native Christians at the St. Michel head- endarmerie, and an officer whom Gen. Williams had reinstated into official position under himself, and Maj. Welles, after severely disciplined for drunkenness and misconduct by Col. Russell.

President Dartiguenave thus bitterly complains against the American occupation to the correspondents of the New York Tribune and Chicago Tribune. He visited Haiti last November, and so that they might publish the facts of the United States:

"The strangest phase of the situation, from the Haiti Government point, is not only have the American officials done nothing for the improvement and economic development of people and prosperity of the country, but they actually opposed the little the Haiti Government tries to do in that direction. They resist every project we make to deal with the education of our people, etc."

I wish, with consent of committee, to put in the record just here a certain correspondence between myself and Dr. Maclean, the chief of the bureau de l'ingenieur charge du service d'hygiene of the United States occupation, in which I referred to a conference on the question of education. Dr. Maclean had invited him, Col. Russell, etc., with President Dartiguenave to meet me at the bureau of public instruction, at Port au Prince, which appointment he had not kept. This shows the exact attitude unfavourably taken by the American occupation in this fundamental development of the generation of Haiti; also shows why the failure of the United States occupation, through the present American occupation (and type of leading American officials there, out of all sympathy with the terms of the treaty), cannot fulfill its noble mission in the Black Republic, and its 2,500,000 Negroes and objected to my Christian and educational "activities," and, with the aid of Washington officials, tried to have the little board to recall me, and this got them to stop my small salary. The two letters follow. Dr. Maclean's reply:

ST. MARC, HAITI, WEST INDIES, July 20, 1915.

DR. MACLEAN,

Chief of Hygiene Department of American Occupation, Haiti.

DEAR DR. MACLEAN: Mrs. Evans and myself take quite an interest in the little St. Marc Hospital, as we do in our local prison, and often go there to visit the poor and sick patients in the one and visit and conduct service in the other.

We can not but notice the transformation that has already taken place in the striking contrast between things now and a few years ago at our little St. Marc. This is still more so, if possible, at our hospitals, due, of course, to the aid of the expert chief of our occupation's hygiene department.

During my recent visit as general superintendent of the Haiti field station and the south, with all of which I was most intimately acquainted years ago, and on visiting both prison and beautifully situated new hospital there, I noticed the change and contrast most marked.

These reforms alone in the interest of health and humanity, altogether apart from other drastic changes, not to mention what we further contemplate for Haiti at last has declared "war"), prove what a godsend our Government, through the "occupation," has already been to this little Black Republic.

May I ask whether you contemplate changing the name of all the hitherto termed hospices (almshouses, but more of pest houses in the past) into the more modern city and general hospital, and so as to make them more accessible and agreeable to both Protestant and Catholic alike, especially of course, that they are now entirely maintained by our Government occupation, aided by gifts of the local general public.

If you are not already planning this, I would respectfully suggest a separate apartment somewhere near the hospital (for the present) be set aside for the mentally affected, now left roaming about the towns, sleeping in the streets at night, and in company—both men and women—together under porticoes. These unfortunates and wrecks of poor Negro humanity, whether men or women, should be cared for, and under such restrictions as not to be permitted to propagate their kind.

Have you at present, either connected with our hospitals or directly with the Government at Port au Prince, some system of outdoor relief for the genuinely but respectable poor, and so as to give 1½ to 2 gourdes a week to those who are perfectly satisfied with the worthiness of the case?

I am planning before going to the States at end of present month or early next, to visit my missionary boards with a view to cooperating work, to have a brief conference there at Port au Prince superintendent of public instruction, etc., in reference to and normal industrial college for Haiti, and founded basis (interdenominational), exactly like Hampton and with us in the States.

presented to Mr. Burgeois, United States Government super-public instruction, that we should invite Col. Russell, president—and members of the national council, when I line as to what has been already attempted in this direction seven years ago to Washington, signed by nearly Haitians; and the first name inscribed on this unique such a noble institution and urgent necessity, as they friend—broad minded, if not somewhat cultured and resident Cincinnatus Leconte.

including educationalists, as well as at our Government's ment, at Washington last October, before my return to understand that if this petition is now presented to our the hearty and cordial support of our United States official at the present time—as, for instance, my first petition of enthusiastic support of Dr. Furniss and Dr. Livingstone, and consul in Haiti during 1911—this project would go it either jointly or separately, but backed by our United our great Christian philanthropists, educationalists, and America will finance it.

very glad to have you with us, if possible, as soon as Mr.
arrange this.

ours, and for Christ and Haiti.

L. TON EVANS.

REPUBLIQUE D'HAITI,
DE L'INGENIEUR CHARGE DU SERVICE D'HYGIENE.
Port au Prince, July 25, 1918.

Haiti.

your letter of July 20, I regret that from my observations during the past few months I do not feel it advisable to any matter whatsoever.

S,

N. M. LEAN,
Sanitary Engineer of Haiti.

missions of the North American Baptist Convention for September, Haiti (Central America), after careful investigation by Drs.
secretary and superintendent of education of the A. B. H. M. S.).
Haiti is to be entered at present (by way of cooperation with board) the best thing for the Home Mission Society to do is for the special training of native ministers and other Christian in connection with it a model church. The project calls for $10,000 a year upkeep.]

ST. MARC, HAITI, WEST INDIES, July 27, 1918.

, Port au Prince.

the 25th ultimo to hand, and reference to alleged but "of mine, I presume as Christian minister and missionary, preventing you from conference, as suggested in my note, which, of course, I regret.

and profound respect and genuine admiration for Dr.
profession he has the honor to represent, as well as for "management" of such, and holding high office under our own
It has not yet occurred to me, however, as a Christian missionary, with over 30 years' experience and more than 25 of such with Haiti, its leaders of all shades of religious and should in Haiti, more than in the States, really consult missionary profession as such as to nature, limitations, or extent "in Haiti for God, country, and humanity.

I am willing, yes, anxious, and feel it my duty as far as to use my personal influence with our Christian workers

(white and native) at all times to honor and heartily support, both and medical, as well as all other departmental, authorities in the discharge of governmental functions, and carrying out in spirit and the "splendid treaty" entered into by our President and United States ment with the Government and people (Negroes) of Haiti.

This "treaty," as I regretfully and respectfully informed Col. Rus whom I have very great respect), was grossly infringed in the matte "so-called voting on the new constitution," but, as stated to our col as Christian minister as well as a true American, I assured him that take no step whatever in Haiti as regards this matter, but defer m until I reached the States, and even there bring the whole affair, fir to the President's personal notice.

I stand, of course, unalterably by this "treaty" and am sure our l does, and that our Government will strictly abide by that "sacred do as constantly emphasized by President Wilson, and which principles al fied us in entering the "war" and in continuing in it until the "sa treaty" such as that between Germany and Belgium, or the States a is recognized by every civilized government, and the liberties and small as well as big nations are equally safeguarded, and furtherm everything of the nature of "secret plotting, political scheming," e be utterly abolished and a new diplomacy, open and frank and above adopted by nations.

The only sense and spirit therefore of the "treaty" between the St Haiti as well as between other nations must be understood, must preted and carried out as to the liberties and rights of the Negro p Haiti as well as the liberties and rights of other nations—safeguarde light and along the line given and laid down in the last and final addr by President Woodrow Wilson on July Fourth (last month) at the Washington, and neither military, medical, or diplomatic representati President and Government in Haiti or elsewhere have any official right a different interpretation.

As a good American it may do no harm to mention the points of o dent's latest address here, and for fear Dr. McLean has had no time this memorable speech, they are as follows:

"These are the ends for which the associated peoples of the world ing and which must be conceded them before there can be peace:

"(a) The destruction of every arbitrary power anywhere that can s and secretly * * * disturb the peace, etc.

"(b) The settlement of every question, whether territory, sovereignt nomic arrangement of political relationship upon the basis of free acce that settlement by the people immediately concerned (after due explan without intimidation, etc.) and not upon the basis of the material in advantage of any other nation or people (nor group of speculators, etc.

"(c) The consent of all nations to be governed in their conduct tow other by the same principles of honor and of respect for the common civilized society, etc., to the end that all promises and covenants m credly observed, no private plots or conspiracies hatched, no selfish wrought with impunity, etc.

"(d) These great objects can be put into a single sentence: What is the reign of law based upon the consent of the governed and suste the organized opinion," etc.

As the missionary and Christian minister is supposed to practice himself preaches, surely a doctor should not at all object to take his o cine more than our own President Wilson.

Inasmuch as I have the honor of representing in Haiti something lik over 3,000,000 colored American Baptists, and practically the 5,000,0 Baptists of the States, who morally back the above, and expected to so cially cooperate in our Haiti mission work, these matters will be natu cussed by them, and action taken to bring the matter direct to the l himself for adjustment, etc., and not to any official either at the Whi or of the Government.

As being yourself therefore, an official representative of our Unite Government and its chief of the Haiti hygiene service, and though differ greatly as to the interpretation of the said "treaty" as it affe or, indeed, as to the "nature and extent of the activities of a Chri stler and a Baptist missionary representing as I do the colored Ba the States, etc., in Haiti, and that you may not see your way to be pre conference to support, as stated, a national and normal college for international basis exactly like Haiti and Tonga. instance—for the real uplift of Haiti, of its own and of training their young Negro national and Negro religious, educational, industrial, commercial as well as ship—in the real black republic. I can hardly believe you would decline to give me the information which I you the Port au Prince hospitals and our Haitian poor.

fect: already planning it. I respectfully suggest to you that possibly for the present, somewhere near the hospital mentally affected, now left roaming about our towns at times in company with mad under porches, etc. and mates and wrecks of poor Negro humanity, whether be so restricted as not to be able to propagate their with information on this point, or if it does not come in department kindly let me know where to write. present, either connected with the hospital or directly with at Port au Prince, any real system of out-door relief me but respect the poor, and seek to give one or one and s per week to such, and when perfectly satisfied of the of the recipient?"

u, as chief of our Haiti hospitals, for copy of the provision these aged and really poor, or should they come under nt. Please let me know where I may write. we have a woman and her child, of about 9, from Isle Saturday. She is a member of our mission there and came in to our hospital at St. Marc. I gave her a note, about being examined, saying the local doctor wished to to see Dr. Audin yesterday, and he explained that being e she would belong to communal Port au Prince. The permit from the magistrate here would be sufficient so ouring St. Marc and that she might be received, and so examine her this morning.

s up but returned again, saying Dr. Audin could not he native sister is not only suffering but also much dis- that she is here it would be somewhat cruel for to send t in the same condition about Saturday or Sunday to Isle after several days of further waiting and suspense take and spend probably a day and night in that sailing for stances will you kindly send word to Dr. Audin advising h examination, and if he thinks it necessary to have her t the hospital, and that you will see there about the com- nt.

shall be glad to look after the young child and feed her, etc. uch ignorance, and indeed prejudice re hospice, and which remove, please send me any rules you may have in French with admission of sick and aged.

l in mind when suggesting in my letter of 20th ultimo the rom hospices to that of city or general hospitals, as with and so as to remove the fears re Christian and Catholic ure you, sir, that knowing, as the board and myself do, the ask our President and United States Government have under- igh has been so long criminally neglected, and whose over- ple have been for years exploited by the stronger race, white, sters and unscrupulous, if not mean and murderous, politi- power and selfish greed, and the many and often serious diffi- confront our "American occupation" in carrying out its political, economical, educational, industrial, and sanitary tual regeneration, it is the sincere wish of the board, as well tly to work in perfect harmony but by every possible and o loyally support our Government and our "occupation" in their onerous duties to Haiti, the United States, and to civili- ty, and if we can make it all the easier for them.

There always has been and, there will always continue, the closest relation between the spiritual, religious, and moral with the political, educational, industrial, not to say social, life of the people in Haiti as in the State of any other country, and neither our Haitian Government and "American occupation" though acting separately and apart—and should be officially and financially free from each other for benefit and real efficiency of both—can ignore the Christian church and ministers and missionaries and their work, more than the latter, indeed, can the former, without misunderstandings, frictions, and serious weakening and injury on both sides.

Though we thus labor in two different departments—in fact, different even—there is absolutely no reason why we should not be actuated in the faithful service rendered to God, country, and humanity by the same humanitarian motives and inspired by the same ennobling and soul-lifting ideals.

I still remain, yours, very sincerely, for Christ and Haiti,

L. T. EVANS

Dr. McLean never replied, and the poor, sickly native woman was to wait several days for an open boat, then discouraged, and almost broke down and in great pain to return to her small island home on Ile Gonave, and finally was never able to proceed again by boat to Port au Prince. Dr. McLean, the clever native doctor, dared not, without special permit from Dr. McLean, take this sick woman to the hospice, maintained by occupation with Catholic sisters in charge, and where there was plenty of room; neither would he personally examine her, as he privately told me, at the risk of his job, or his life. This is the arbitrary way those poor, suffering Negroes are dealt with.

In contrast with the attitude shown by the American occupation is the attitude fundamentally opposed to the treaty of the United States Government, the real mission in Haiti, namely, as put by the chairman—to foster education and self-government—I shall place a few letters which passed between me and the natives themselves in reference to intellectual improvement, moral, and social as well as religious development, with a view to Haitian self-government. Dr. McLean and so many of the leading American marine officers, who dread or, in the words of the Haitian President, discourage and deter every means to resist:

HAITI NATIONAL COUNCIL, PORT AU PRINCE, HAITI.
December 3, 1914

M. L. TON EVANS,

General Superintendent Baptist Mission, St. Marc.

DEAR SIR: I am favored with your letter of the 21st instant and thank you very much for the information you give me about your endeavoring to rid of all her superstitions by true Christian basis and efficient civilization.

I should really feel greatly honored to meet with M. Dr. James H. D. of the Rockefeller Foundation of Learning in the United States, on his mission in Haiti, and to personally present him to the Haitian leaders and our people who are only too glad and ready to help him in all his inquiries about our hearted people.

As I intend to go to Cape Haiti through St. Marc next month, I will be glad to call on you.

Believe me to remain, yours, sincerely, and for Christ and Haiti.

Dr. L. T. EVANS

(This letter reached St. Marc when I was pining for breath of air on the floor of the narrow, dark cell of the old St. Marc slave prison amid the groans of poor native prisoners cruelly beaten and brutally pounded, and expecting every moment at the command of the American marine gendarmes to be dragged before a "firing squad" like the British Edouard. Hence did not see Laroche nor his letter until on in the following New Year.

My own communication sent my old friend a few days before was thus:

BAPTIST STUDY, ST. MARC, HAITI.
December 2, 1914

HON. DR. LAROCHE,

Ex-Senator of the Haiti Republic and Member of National Council, Port au Prince.

DEAR DOCTOR: I share the very deep and profound interest you and my late President Leconte, Hon. Leger, Hon. Johnny Laroche, with other of politics and creed, showed in signing that petition addressed to Messrs. Rockefeller and Carnegie, etc., in relation and believers in the development of the race, and the Government for such a noble project as the normal you will be sure to rejoice in reading inclosed memorandum and find on bottom of page 4 that the petition was to Carnegie International Peace Endowment.

ing very fast, and either next month or February Dr. [unclear] name you will see with that of Maj. Moton, in the initiative of the Rockefeller Foundation General Education visit Haiti.

cial conference with our American, as well as, of course, and Haiti President.

out more convinced than ever that this institution is vital industrial, as well as intellectual, regeneration of Haiti and nt and Haiti,

L. TON EVANS.

other letters to, and from Legation De La Republique P. C.; Dr. Francois Delacour, Port au Prince; Dr. Booker Jesse Jones (Slater Foundation) Government Bureau James H. Dillard, James Brown Scott, Esq., Secretary of International Peace, Washington; and from ex-Senator of same, all along the same line, and showing efforts and education, and Christianization will be inserted for this committee at close of present testimony.)

t [closing of schools] because of a lack of revenue.

their excuse. They can not get any money from Washington to the United States Government, yet strange to say, about $100,000 or more a year—probably $150,000—to mean dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church, college (France), annually for this illegal, anti-constitutional, and as well as misappropriation of Haitian funds. These supported by the State?

either by the customs, or the United States Government given for the improvement and development of Haiti, and and boosting of any sect in Haiti, and thus directly placed Catholic religion, with its archbishop, bishops, priests, ncial, political, and religious authority, and power over all 1 evangelical Christian bodies, and their educational col- (the benefit of Haitians) as seen in present withholding from protestant schools, and closing of same, while Roman theirs and thus keeping them open thereby.

Haiti constitution plainly and emphatically says:

hip are equally free. Every one has the right to profess perform his worship, provided he does not disturb the olic Church is financially and officially tied to the State, ose on Gros Morne, the last Sunday of June, 1918, are to Baptist mission church, roped and driven like slaves American occupation, whose infringement, and brutal viola- tion constitution, is upheld by Lieut. Kulp (Leogane) and ams, chief of Haiti gendarmerie, and with the official n. Catlin, official head of the United States Government. r the jurisdiction of the State?

; under the direct jurisdiction of the State, as every- pletely so, and every dollar handled by our American

I mean is this, that in some places the Catholics main- tain schools, which are supported by the priests of the arch itself.

not so in Haiti for the last 60 years, unfortunately for funds and Haiti Government's stability and efficiency. c schools and the Roman Catholic church in Haiti, like the Protestant and Evangelical churches in the black Republic and the United States, maintained their own schools and paid the salaries of archbishop, bishops, and priests there would be no objection and no protest.

Our strong objection and protest is to the financial and official alliance and therefore inevitable official recognition by the Haiti and United States Governments, and arising from which is the greatest injustice done to other churches, that are independent of State, and claim equality of treatment which has shown by the withholding of school appropriations from Protestants while allowing for Catholic schools and maintenance of Roman Catholicism and whose expensive régime is unfair and unjust and in contravention of the constitution and our American treaty with Haiti.

Dr. Burgeois, the United States Government superintendent of public instruction in Haiti, very kindly furnished me with an official list of Protestant colleges and schools from which appropriations were withheld, which was then was a preparatory step to their introduction of a scheme of public instruction, popular and compulsory, and free for the whole Republic.

This was more than three years ago and must have been resisted by the American occupation, and one of the things referred to by Dartigue, President, in his complaints last year to the New York correspondents.

Senator ODDIE. I would like to ask you if there was an act of censorship by mail and telegraph during your stay there from 1917 to 1919?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Was there an active censorship?

Mr. EVANS. I should say so; very active; extremely so, as, for instance, letters to and from the States, and which were admitted by a marine officer, were opened, if not confiscated, in some cases, and we really thought that checks by way of my small salary from the missionary board, which were delayed through the European war, were actually stolen.

Senator ODDIE. Was that controlled by the United States Marines?

Mr. EVANS. The American occupation, through the United States Government marine—who did not appear to be accountable to anybody—were in control and dominated everything.

Senator ODDIE. Did the Haitian Government have anything to do with it?

Mr. EVANS. No; nothing whatsoever. Dartiguenave is merely looked upon by the Haitian people as a figurehead, just as he is by the American marine. He knows himself—completely stripped of every authority and the Haitian pity.

Haiti members of the so-called Haitian Government then, who in every branch and department, such as post office, telegraph, etc., have an American officer over them, and who explicitly obey their American marine master, are compelled to ignore their own Haitian President, in spite of treaty, and refers to cooperation of the Haiti Government, etc.

The Haiti Government is powerless and does not exist as such. The United States Postmaster General assures me, also the State and Latin American Departments and Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, of the Navy Department, that on this side there is absolutely no censorship on letters that go to and come from Haiti and still it goes on.

I have even sent letters with copies of Postmaster General and Assistant Secretary of Navy down to Haiti and asked the recipients to show same to post-office authorities at Port au Prince, St. Marc, Cape, and Jacmel, but however, is their fear and dread of American marines that they would not do even this. Their confidence in our occupation is completely gone, and they feel they must slavishly submit or face something worse.

Senator KING. Was it during the war that they had the censorship?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; I believe around November or December, 1917, it commenced. The American marine officer came on board the same ship as we did from New York, November of 1917, to take charge of the censorship at Panama. I believe he informed me that this was to cover Haiti as well.

Dealing further with the question of education, with your permission, I would like to place copies of additional correspondence, showing some further steps to provide for Haiti and develop these people, kept under so long.

Senator ODDIE. Yes; if there is no objection, that will be all right, Mr. Evans. You can hand those to the stenographer afterwards.

(The correspondence referred to is here printed in full, and covering the years, as follows:)

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH,
Lansford, Pa., September 1, 1915.

Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

500,000 officials, political leaders, citizens, etc., of the tly praying for a national normal and industrial college Christian basis in the new protectorate.)

wing as I do of your personal and profound interest in ions the blessed boon of peace long before you became the f the Carnegie endowment, etc., I therefore at this mo-story of poor Haiti, torn for years by cruel and barbaric ecine wars, and now that the long-looked and earnestly day has dawned and an American protectorate (for that ally established in Haiti, and so as to assist the present of our United States Government in gaining the real faith of the rank and file of the Haitians throughout nd at the very outset) as to the purity of our motives ns as an American Government in taking such a step, and al and permanent peace, I respectfully ask you just now trusted to me and containing close on to 3,000 names of l leaders, irrespective of politics and religious creeds, shment in their Republic of a long-felt need, that of a ustrial college, and on Christian basis, like our Hampton of personally initiating this idea after, however, consult-a large number of the ablest, best, and most influential ears of study and close observation as to Haiti's real d even months of hard traveling on horseback during throughout the interior, as well as towns and cities along explain this idea at the extreme peril to life and limb, assistance of a few most courageous Haitians) the matter and approached President Simon in the midst of the bloody revolution and surrounded with some 8,000 or ment troops at Cape Haiti, and generals and others ght happen at any moment as he sought to crush the ly by German money and German propaganda against uently at his palace, senate chambers, superior and all councils of Republic, schools, plantations, and rice fields, the heartiest welcome and enthusiasm, as the object was ly explained in French and patois.

would work to divert the thought and energies of the away from politics and revolutions and militarism into e, and peaceful pursuits of life in Haiti, such as thrift, etc., show to them the real dignity of labor, the tears yn their swarthy faces and hope for them and their be seen brightening and glistening in their countenances.
housands of names I have official letters of nearly every t Haiti, where the petition was presented and discussed rest, indeed breaking out into shouts of joy as they upport it, ordering their commissaire or mayor to draw own name, and officially seal it and send me.

permitted to present this petition personally so as to be ns or explain any matter connected with this request of a whole little nation, sick and tired of revolutions ars, but with no power to resist against the white and and filibusters whose interest has been to keep Haiti the years, etc.

ndowment come to Haiti's help at this epochal stage y and grant this industrial school which will be backed nt, which has promised some 200 acres of land for such most effectively in cooperation with the United States on work and activities mean the real regeneration of Haiti in a few years, the establishment of peace, without which there is no progress, etc.

In behalf of Christ and Haiti.

Respectfully and sincerely, yours,

L. TON

CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE
Washington, D. C., November

Rev. L. TON EVANS,
First Baptist Church, Lansford, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo, with to your petition for assistance from the endowment in the establish-a national normal and industrial college in Haiti.

In reply, I regret to inform you that it will not be possible to con-your request for a personal hearing before the executive committee u-petition. My own time is so taken up during the next few weeks th-be unable to grant you a personal interview. If you care to call, how-of the assistant secretaries of the endowment will be glad to see what you may have to say will be presented in proper form to the committee when it considers your petition.

In accordance with your request, I am returning the original of m-letter to you of September 27.

I am, very truly, yours,

JAMES BROWN SCOTT, Sec.

HAITI BAPTIST MISSION, JACMEL, D'HAINAUT
West Indies, February

DEAR DR. BOOKER T. WASHINGTON: In view of your important c-this year at Tuskegee, and the deep and profound interest you have your people, as evinced in the noble and extensive and successful spite of ignorance, prejudice, and opposition in the past, to educate in-morally, yea, and religiously members of the race, thus giving an objto the whole world of what the African can and will do if only h-encouraged along the right lines. Is it not really possible for your either alone or in conjunction with Hampton, to arrange to send a com-each with the indorsement of your trustees, and so as to visit Haiti, joint official report, and furnish reliable data that will enable you t-to the establishment for the Black Republic a similar institute t-Tuskegee and Hampton, and if you think proper, a kind of extension

I have in my possession a petition, signed by over 2,500 of th-Haitians, from my friend His Excellency Cincinnatus Leconte (p-Hon. Jonny Laroche (minister of public works), Hon. Legèr (minister affairs), etc., and including senators, deputies, judges, generals, e-political parties, and religious creeds, earnestly praying for this and every encouragement from the Government, even to the granting of lan-purpose.

Though the said petition is directed through me to Messrs. the H-Rockefeller and Andrew Carnegie, and other true friends of the Nit contains a reference to Tuskegee and mentions your own name, whiway, is most highly honored here, not only by the leading Haitian exception, but to my great astonishment by small cultivators and eve-throughout the 28 cities, towns, and villages it was my privilege to v-the coast and in the far interior of Haiti during last year, and the citing time perhaps we have had.

America has no idea, neither, in fact, over 90 per cent of our owpeople themselves, as to the magnitude of the present change, yea transformation which has recently taken place by the incoming of Government, and that in a most unexpected way. It represents th-telligence and energy of the Republic. There is to be found in p-cabinet to-day not only a high type of civilization, but in fact an at-of refinement, which if now wisely directed and strongly backed u-sympathetic but real support of our own United States Government, the blessing of God, must soon effect a most beneficent change also t-this long neglected country, with its nearly 3,000,000 priest-ridden stricken, yet most kind and interesting people.

civic government Haiti has ever had. The next few moments in the history of this country of Toussaint, a psychological moment has at last come, and which some have said to and earnestly prayed for the last 10, 15, and 20 years.

Now, we act in this matter and come to our help and which means, in fact, the real uplift of the whole Negro race and capacity of the African is, after all, to be mainly in the hands of the members of the race in the States, much less by those outside, but by what the black man is in his own Republic of Haiti.

This petition from me and personally present it to Mr. [Name], or both, or (b) you may arrange for a special committee and introduce me and personally support my plea in Haiti, but much misunderstood nation, or (c) even as appointing commissioners.

From Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, president of the Baptist Convention of the United States Government at Washington, D. C. Also I have written to Dr. Pritchett, United States consul at Cape Haiti, etc. In an interview, then I would suggest also with us that we have, Dr. C. E. Morris, Arkansas, and Dr. B. D. [Name], Secretary of Southern Baptist Home Mission Board. The result is so as to take up the whole island as their mission.

Already I have been in correspondence with Mr. Starr, of the Rockefeller Foundation, and the Government of Washington, D. C. Also I have written to Dr. Pritchett, an interesting interview with the esteemed secretary of the [Name], New York. While all deeply sympathized with poor Haiti, claims upon America's help now that our interrelation for every year, yet not one of these foundations as at present to consider objects outside of the States, however they be, and more especially anything in the nature of the must have in Haiti, first of all, an efficient normal and high school, no doubt if Haiti will now advance as we hope and very long, no doubt, the Republic would require also a university for the efficient training in the higher branches on the same basis as we have in the States.

The catalogues of your school, as parents are constantly inquiring. Do you teach French?

Finally,

L. TON EVANS.

THE TUSKEGEE NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE,
Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, May 24, 1909.

Pa.

Acknowledge receipt of your letter in regard to the young woman. The inclosed circular gives information which students are accepted here.

Whom you refer can meet the requirements in full for admission, we shall be glad to admit her to that department. The day school are required to be fully 14 years of age, healthy, well grown for their age, and able to at least pass an examination for the B preparatory class.

The cost is $8.50 per month, but students are given an opportunity of this amount. The entrance fee to be paid in installments to be paid once each year at the time of entering.

If she decide to enter here in August, it will be all right for her to have her bring letters of recommendation as to her moral character from persons in your community. We may expect her to enter.

BOOKER T. WASHINGTON, Principal.

(Referring to one of the Haiti girls the missionary brought to the United States, who, with boys longing for education and anxious to come to America and learn English, he also placed in American Christian schools to be trained for service in Haiti.)

AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY
Philadelphia, March 1

Rev. L. TON EVANS,
First Baptist Church, Brinsford, Pa.

DEAR BROTHER EVANS: Answering your inquiry concerning Haiti, in my understanding that the home mission delegation to the West Indies include Haiti in their itinerary. I think I am right in this because earlier preparations I was invited to be a member of this delegation told at the time that one of the main objects of the trip was to inspect especially conditions in Haiti, with a view to seeing whether or not Baptists ought to undertake work there, if funds for the same could be obtained. I have not heard of any change in the original plan.

Very sincerely, yours,

GILBERT N. BRIDGES
General Secretary

BWTHYN, WYOMING, U.S.A.
October

Dr. HOVEY,
Superintendent of Education, American Baptist Home Mission Society,
New York

DEAR DR. HOVEY: This is intended, through you, the education superintendent as an introduction for Secretary Detweiler, of the Home Missions Latin America department, to Revs. Elie Mark, Nosirel Lherisson, Lucius Hypolite Hector Paultre, who, with all the other brethren and churches of Haiti, heartily rejoice and feel greatly heartened at your coming to the time and, after our years of hopeful waiting and earnest praying, to the official survey of the Haiti field, and with the purpose of establishing a normal and industrial missionary school and with the view of laying a solid broad foundation for the successful development of the Baptist mission in Haiti, and probably the whole island, providing Brother Detweiler's report is favorable and our mission society thinks fit.

I can certainly bespeak for the Baptist mission's Latin America society the most cordial and real Haitian welcome, not only from our Baptist churches and own churches, but also from my old friends, the Revs. Turnbull and principal of College Bird, Port au Prince; De Feu, superintendent of the London Wesleyan Mission, Cape Haiti; and churches and pastors of other denominations, as well as from leaders of the Haiti Government and people.

Am heartily delighted with dear Brother Detweiler's impending departure, and both Mrs. Evans and myself shall pray for the success of his mission and his safe return with a report of the inspiring type—of that of Caleb and of the tribe of Judah—urging our home mission committee "To go and possess it."

With a bon voyage and God bless you, the brethren and churches and our affectionate regards to late Judge Orius Paultre's family, who are at St. Marc, and missions on Isle Gonave.

Fraternally and for Christ and Haiti.

L. TON EVANS

Please make inquiries of Dr. Hector as to the safety of our packages and things left at St. Marc.

THE AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY
New York, October

Rev. L. TON EVANS,
Wyoming, Pa.

DEAR BROTHER: Your letter of October 3, with inclosures, concerning the mission, have been received. I am passing them at once to Dr. Hovey, superintendent of Baptist religious education, with the suggestion that he return them to you after they have served his purpose.

and yours are well these days and that great spiritual Haiti. With all best wishes.

C. L. WHITE, Executive Secretary.

KINGSTON, PA., April 17, 1919.

of Latin American Committee on Cooperation.

In reply to Mr. Colton's letter to me in Haiti, notifying me that I have been officially appointed to visit the island, and more personal interview on the occasion he visited Wilkes-Barre, Pa., to express my great pleasure that the Latin America Committee has shown its deep interest in the black republic but ask me to run down?

Before you go, now that I have returned, with at least a certainty of our being able to go back, solemnly as I am a Christian, Baptists, etc., as well as Haiti leaders and religious creeds, never, if possible, after so many years of religious, educational, and social, and industrial development of the republic and its 2,000,000 Negroes, at the present moment, and very important epoch in Haiti's and to and written leading Christian brethren there as well as expected to have the pleasure of seeing you before you go around; however, if possible, would like to see you go, even should I not be able to see my way to come this time.

Kingston early next week, and may arrange to come from Kingston early following week to New York, so, if this will do, of Dr. Jesse Jones, United States Education Bureau, fraternal regards, heartily yours.

L. TON EVANS.

DECEMBER 21, 1918.

Kingston, Haiti, Cape Haitien.

Mr. Colton: I have never forgotten the real and valuable assistance of the late Prince; late President Laconte; Dr. Holly; and, of course, Condillac Jean Jacques rendered me in regard to that wonderful for the industrial college like Hampton and Tuskegee and nearly 3,000 leading Haitians, irrespective of religious politics of certain classes.

And you and Dr. Holly and Pastor Condillac indeed suffer over eight years of incessant toil and amid mourning looks now as if that unanimous and earnest prayer of the people of Haiti is about to be answered.

And not later than February, my friend Dr. James H. Drexler, representative of the great Rockefeller Foundation, general secretary, will visit Haiti, where I hope to have a conference both with our United States as well as our Haitian and see he goes to the Cape as well as the South.

Last Sunday on the Panama, and this Thursday morning on the Catlin, our new chief of American occupation, who is not but, I believe, a Christian statesman, that will prove

Did you know that I was an intimate friend of the President, whom our President has gone to meet and greet in person. Ex-President Roosevelt is also interested in this in our efforts just now.

And to you, Holly, Jacques, and friends there, for Christ,

L. TON EVANS.

ADOPTION OF MISSIONARY FOR HAITI.

Whereas the Women's Home and Foreign Mission Convention of North Carolina, assembled at White Rock Baptist Church, Durham, last year, in an earnest desire in their report to employ a missionary of their own for the foreign field; and

Whereas our newly appointed field secretary and superintendent of missions in Haiti, the Rev. L. Ton Evans, has brought before our convention this year at Goldsboro the appalling need as well as the bright prospects of our new Haiti mission field generally, and especially the prospects among our own sisters of the black Republic; and

Whereas Mrs. L. Ton Evans has been already in the employ of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, shown a profound interest in doing efficient and valuable work for our own young women at the Missionary Training School, at Washington, D. C., where Miss Alice and Miss Christine Frances, brought from Haiti by Dr. Evans, were from Africa, etc., were trained; and also

Whereas our white sisters of the Welsh and Wyoming Association of northeast Pennsylvania have manifested their deep and practical interest in the evangelization of Haiti, as well as their personal interest in Mrs. L. Ton Evans and her life and work while in their midst: Be it, therefore, resolved

Resolved by the Women's Home and Foreign Mission Convention of North Carolina and auxiliary of the Lott Carey Baptist Convention, in session at Goldsboro, N. C., October 3-7, 1917, That we set apart the sum of $300 for the employment of Mrs. Evans, and that we further appeal to our sisters of the above Welsh and Wyoming Baptist Associations to contribute a similar amount of $300 annually, making a total of $600, all of which shall be paid by us through the Women's American Baptist Home Mission for the employment of Mrs. L. Ton Evans, with a view of her becoming the founder and proprietor of a Bible and industrial missionary training school for the young women of Haiti and leader in missionary and educational efforts generally for the benefit of our long-neglected womanhood of the black Republic.

MRS. P. G. SHEPHERD

President

MRS. B. H. BRANDON

Secretary

At the official women's board meeting above it was passed that Mrs. P. G. Shepherd, president of the North Carolina Women's Home and Foreign Missions, be delegated to attend in behalf of this convention and as a member of the Lott Carey Foreign Board the missionary "send off" which the Welsh and Wyoming Associations may plan for Mrs. L. Ton Evans, leaving this country with her husband for Haiti.

LEGATION DE LA REPUBLIQUE D'HAÏTI
Washington, D. C., April 2, 1918.

Pastor L. TON EVANS, Kingston, Pa.

MY DEAR PASTOR TON EVANS: I was very glad to receive your letter of the 25th day, in which you inform me of your present and continued effort to make Haiti secure for the establishment of an industrial school, such as we have on real Christian basis, but your special plea just now with the Baptist brethren of the United States, to undertake the evangelizing of our dear people.

I profoundly appreciate your self-sacrificing work and the deep interest you have shown in my country the last 25 years; that I have the privilege of knowing you, and sincerely thank you for the splendid encouragement and support you have rendered Haitian missionaries and brought some of them to be educated in these States.

Your deep interest and untiring activities in the religious, moral and social development of our Republic have won the entire sympathy and confidence of the Haitian people.

With the personal knowledge you have of my country and dear people, should the Southern Baptist Board enter the Haiti field and thus support your efforts, I am sure that with the blessing of God you must succeed in your enterprise of saving Haiti.

or,
aly,

T. CH. MORAVIA.

HAITI FOR CHRIST.

...but behold obscurity; for brightness, but walk in darkness.)

arous conduct of the slave owners, after a long period of ight upon them at last its own punishment, for the Negroes, insults, injury, and injustice any longer, engaged in a ur, under the leadership of Toussaint L'Ouverture, thus of the past and ridding themselves forever of slavery.
 ever, 80,000 blacks and whites were killed by the sword among the slain were 20,000 soldiers, the flower of the y Napoleon to aid the slave owners, defend and perpetuate a time he himself was fighting for greater liberty to the e!

1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492, 2493, 2494, 2495, 2496, 2497, 2498, 2499, 2500, 2501, 2502, 2503, 2504, 2505, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2512, 2513, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2525, 2526, 2527, 2528, 2529, 2530, 2531, 2532, 2533, 2534, 2535, 2536, 2537, 2538, 2539, 2540, 2541, 2542, 2543, 2544, 2545, 2546, 2547, 2548, 2549, 2550, 2551, 2552, 2553, 2554, 2555, 2556, 2557, 2558, 2559, 2560, 2561, 2562, 2563, 2564, 2565, 2566, 2567, 2568, 2569, 2570, 2571, 2572, 2573, 2574, 2575, 2576, 2577, 2578, 2579, 2580, 2581, 2582, 2583, 2584, 2585, 2586, 2587, 2588, 2589, 2590, 2591, 2592, 2593, 2594, 2595, 2596, 2597, 2598, 2599, 2600, 2601, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2610, 2611, 2612, 2613, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, 2618, 2619, 2620, 2621, 2622, 2623, 2624, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, 2632, 2633, 2634, 2635, 2636, 2637, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2642, 2643, 2644, 2645, 2646, 2647, 2648, 2649, 2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 2674, 2675, 2676, 2677, 2678, 2679, 26

1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492, 2493, 2494, 2495, 2496, 2497, 2498, 2499, 2500, 2501, 2502, 2503, 2504, 2505, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2512, 2513, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2525, 2526, 2527, 2528, 2529, 2530, 2531, 2532, 2533, 2534, 2535, 2536, 2537, 2538, 2539, 2540, 2541, 2542, 2543, 2544, 2545, 2546, 2547, 2548, 2549, 2550, 2551, 2552, 2553, 2554, 2555, 2556, 2557, 2558, 2559, 2560, 2561, 2562, 2563, 2564, 2565, 2566, 2567, 2568, 2569, 2570, 2571, 2572, 2573, 2574, 2575, 2576, 2577, 2578, 2579, 2580, 2581, 2582, 2583, 2584, 2585, 2586, 2587, 2588, 2589, 2590, 2591, 2592, 2593, 2594, 2595, 2596, 2597, 2598, 2599, 2600, 2601, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2610, 2611, 2612, 2613, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, 2618, 2619, 2620, 2621, 2622, 2623, 2624, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, 2632, 2633, 2634, 2635, 2636, 2637, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2642, 2643, 2644, 2645, 2646, 2647, 2648, 2649, 2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 2674, 26

1. Chlorophyll a (Chl a) so as to mold the policy of the new Republic and direct the government been instrumental in founding—Haiti undoubtedly to-day would have been a model Republic, worthy of America or England, instead of a poor, superstitious, degraded, and devil-worshipping country; it is unpitied and sometimes sneered at by those with centuries of civilization to their back. In 1804 the Government ignorantly and mistakenly signed a concordat with the Pope, recognizing Romanism as the island religion. By so doing they signed their own death warrant, for the brand of Romanism in this island, as very truly described by the Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M. A.—an expresident of the United Kingdom of Great Britain—simply means “the most superstitious and degenerate form, well nigh as dense as the darkness of heathenism.” This, therefore, is voodooism—devil worship—the real religion of 95 per cent of the island. It has enslaved them mentally and morally, checked the national aspirations, literally crushed the spirit of the race, and this, forsooth, after securing themselves political freedom 50 years earlier at such a tremendous sacrifice!

Though Haiti—called the Queen Island—is richest as regards soil and minerals in the Caribbean Sea, the people themselves—materially and socially—are in a most wretched and deplorable state. Destitution is seen everywhere. In connection with the voodoo worship, to which they are summoned by the sound of tom-tom from hill and vale, bush and grove, the devil devotees throw themselves into a frenzy, very much like devil possession. During the ceremonies, which are most immoral and revolting, fowls are killed, and sometimes the blood and lives of innocent children offered, to slake the thirst and pacify the anger of the demon god, whom they in their ignorance have been taught for centuries to fear and dread. That such should be the case at the dawn of the twentieth century is almost incredible, particularly so in an island like Haiti, and situated as it is between Jamaica and Porto Rico, both of which belong to England and America, the wealthiest and most humane, not to mention Christian, countries of the world!

Baptist beginnings.—Early in the last century Haiti became a safe refuge for members of the race suffering from surrounding islands. As George Burdett and Moses Baker—two American Negroes—were the first Baptist missionaries in Jamaica 12 years previous to the English Baptist Missionary Society being formed, so colored brethren from the States—probably runaway slaves—Onesimus of old, referred to by Paul—were also the Protestant pioneers in Haiti 25 years later. The Rev. Monroe and Rev. Hill—latter an African Methodist Episcopal, afterwards baptized—are the first regular preachers—both of whom we have any certainty. This was prior to the year 1835. The first white brother to come from America was the Rev. W. Mead Jones, of New England descent, and a Baptist, who is supposed to have labored here under the auspices of the Slavery Society of those days. Owing to his changed views he was expelled about 1846, when another by the name of Judd took his place. The latter left Port au Prince in a short time for Samana, San Domingo, where it was said he soon died. The first missionary, however, to work among the Haitians was the Rev. E. J. Frances, who came to the island from Lucea, Jamaica. He and others confined their services chiefly to the English-speaking colored population, who came to the island. It was through the special pleading of the islanders that William Knibb that Frances was sent by the English Baptist Society to work in Haiti. This brother, with one Flanders, Miss Harris, and Miss Clark, and later in Jacmel Christmas, 1845. Though the missionaries at once settled down and rapidly acquired the language, and gave special promise of excellent work to be done—the leader unfortunately was struck down in a few months—before the end of July, following year, Frances succumbed to the dread yellow fever. On account of the frequent revolutions, constant change of government, with the consequent hardships, destruction of property and life, etc., the missionary efforts became very protracted, and with the exception of the Rev. W. H. Webley—who labored alone for years—brethren continually came and went after short intervals, which told disastrously against the mission. Jamaica's proximity to Haiti, the very flourishing financial condition of the island, the Baptist churches there at one time, as evidenced not only by their having come self-supporting but also the pleasing fact that they raised £3,000 for the purpose of evangelization in their own islands as well as for other islands outside, the committee in London thought it advisable to transfer this to the above missionary board, though for years after they continued to interest and made certain contributions. Jamaica—for several years—has been obliged to give up this, as well as other important fields in which the missionaries were engaged simply for the lack of funds. Through the failure of the su-blind and blundering policy persisted in by succeeding in allowing and assisting thousands of East Indians—colonies of the west in the shape of indentured labor—of slavery—the island suffers great financial depression, driving away from Jamaica and their island home in livelihood a very large number of the more thrifty, but the people, discourages the natives, and impoverishes, if the churches in their laudable efforts to uplift the Negro. Slavery as these Negroes suffer would not be tolerated in the last few years, and practically since the termination of America and Spain, great changes have taken place. The island, in close proximity to Porto Rico, is also now on the great fact of the United States warships plowing Haitian waters. The island as it were, is a guaranty there shall be no war, neither any serious rising from within, allowed and which have proved so destructive. This will give the United States and enable the Governments to encourage industry. A railroad (first in Haiti) is just now being constructed, and improvements in the future. There is to-day a better understanding between America and Haiti than perhaps ever before, with a growing interest in Romanism, among the more intelligent and thoughtful events in France is almost certain to emphasize. Haiti has never been brighter and more promising than at present. As soon as the native missionaries on the field can be provided with two well-qualified workers (if possible) added to them, the whole of their time and energy to work the mission centered Christians are gathered together again and organized for worship, etc., we will immediately start a normal and industrial school for the people like the Haitians, free, owning their own soil. The climatic conditions are enervating, and where nature is so bountiful, if not indeed extravagant, yet degraded by slavery, are not likely to be permanently benefited, unless we are dealing with the whole of the man.

Haiti must therefore be gradually led to see the dignity of its own capacity and skill. While the direct aim of the mission is the education of the heart, that of the normal and industrial school is the hand and head of the Negro. The latter we expect to see in Tuskegee, Ala., United States of America, of which Dr. Booker T. Washington is president. In 1902 this great American educator writes to our institute I could heartily recommend to you any young man, not only as efficient for the work intended but possessing, also, the missionary spirit." The proposed school is a normal, open to suitable young Negroes (male and female) supported by friends of the Negro both in America and Europe, and in the funds of the mission board.

for help?—(a) Because the national convention foreign missions is undertaking to evangelize Haiti, though the largest body of Negro Christians in the world, is certainly also the poorest. When freed by Lincoln's proclamation January 1, 1863, America numbered 4,500,000; to-day they are nearly 10,000,000, only in the black belt, and one-fourth of which belong to the South. Though only 44 years since emerged from slavery, they are, when thrown penniless upon the world, and in spite of the progress made, as poverty, prejudice, and oppression, their progress has been phenomenal. With the Christlike sympathy, and the American Baptist Home Mission Society and their self-denial, they have built schools, colleges, and churches for more than half of whom were born in slavery, when it was the duty to read the Bible! They also operate missions in West Africa, British West Indies, and South America, which is carried to the utmost limit. Yet, for reasons given already, we have designated Haiti as a special department to their work.

In giving the Gospel to Haiti, and establishing the institution to help themselves), we are furthering the highest mission of America and the world that the African, under favorable conditions, is quite capable of self-government, thus securing respect and justice due to the race.

(c) Because the present is most opportune, as already pointed out, in view of the influence to future developments, etc. If the mission is well founded, and the various efforts put forth the next four or five years, the field will be occupied by one important section of the Evangelical Christian Church, which means greater efficiency, a great saving in energy and money, with the advantages enjoyed on a mission field, where there is no denominational or sectarian overlapping.

(d) Because money contributed to and labor bestowed on evangelizing and education of the Negro is an excellent investment and bound to pay for itself as they do, the highest results for man and God.

Dr. H. L. Morehouse, the respected secretary of American Baptist Foreign Missions Society and a shrewd student of missions, recently wrote in the Standard:

"Our expenditure of $4,000,000 as a society among the colored people during these 40 years has been one of the best investments in the world. Indeed, are yet degraded; but are not many white even in the old Anglo-Saxon civilization? The Hebrews got out of Egypt in one day, and took more than 40 years to get Egypt out of them. Who expects to overtake the Caucasian with a start of a thousand years? But the colored people are coming on. Out of the depths up from slavery to noble Christian manhood and womanhood many have risen. In 26 years of service for the social uplift of the seen poor, coarse Negro boys and girls develop into cultured, able, and noble characters, consecrated to the service of Christ."

---

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION
Washington, July 1, 1892.

Dr. L. TON EVANS,
23 West Berth Street, Lansford, Pa.

DEAR DR. EVANS: I was very glad to receive your letter of July 1st. I know that you are still working for Haiti. I hope that your ambitious desires will be realized in this respect. As you know, I am much interested in the problems of that island. Thus far, however, I have not succeeded in convincing the trustees of the Phelps-Stokes fund that the conditions permit them to appropriate money for Haiti. In view of this I fear the fund will not now be able to give you the assistance which you desire. There may be other sources of revenue that we can influence. When you find them made I shall be glad to know of them. I have heard of the good work you are doing through Miss Burroughs. I know that Mrs. Evans is fully prepared to work in Haiti.

I fear that I shall not be in the city during the first week in August. I shall be here on the 30th and 31st of August and will be glad to be here the last week of that month. On the days mentioned above the bureau will hold an important conference on Negro education. This is a small but important meeting, to which few people are invited. Should you be in the city at that time, be pleased to have you there. You will be glad to know that our work is being done. I shall order a copy sent to you if it has not already reached you.

With regard to passports to Haiti, I am quite certain that you will find it comparatively little difficulty in obtaining the permission of the State Department to leave the country.

With very kind regards, I am,
Very sincerely, yours,

THOMAS JESSE JONES, Secretary.

---

ST. MARC, WEST INDIES
March 1, 1893.

DEAR FRIEND DELACOUR: Am sending a note to say that I am hoping to reach Port au Prince soon on my way again to the States, and shall be glad to meet you if you can manage as one of the patriotic sons of Haiti, who by every means constitutional, educational, and even Christian means seek to gradually raise Haiti and people to a higher standard of thinking and living, and so secure has intended for your race in Haiti, as of course He has the white nation in the States, as well as all other nationalities. We are indeed glad for you to see Pouget, Sincereg, Meyer, and our real patriots with high and pure motives like yourself, when at Washington the last fall to have a special Haitian (the interest of the natives here) formed in connection with the press executive.

much connected with our colored brethren in the States at present often inspired by ignorance, prejudice, etc., which you and others in Haiti would be as stoutly opposed to as myself, and to encourage here, and absolutely detrimental to all development of the Negro people.

ers, however, such as late Dr. Booker T. Washington (my brother Moton (whose name you see in memorandum), that the people become acquainted with, if real, steady, mental, moral, is to be made here, that must prove a permanent success. We will be no gerry building upon superstitions, ignorance, and education must not be confined to the head, but be of a real our chief of occupation (Gen. Catlin) not to give any memorandum (at present), please keep the one you had. If more convenient, we can meet at your place or at the sure to leave about end of next week. Believe me to remain, and for Christ, Haiti, and humanity,

ST. MARC, HAITI, WEST INDIES,
February 10, 1919.

, Esq.,

Formateur Haitien, Port au Prince.

MILMENAY: Inasmuch that during my personal interview with the chief of our American occupation, both the marine and the civil, I pledged my word of honor on the next day, Thursday, being you on the way from the depot, and as there might be some in some quarters, if not some advantage taken by the enemy, may be bitterly opposed to our American Government's occupation, owing to statements made at Washington and myself and now officially being investigated here, I promised you a copy of this "memorandum," and containing serious matters are prepared to prove before the commission sought and appointed by our own responsible United States Government, and that, of course, of Haiti and its people; I have requested you not to use the copy I gave you on the day preceding either at the station or on my way to my hotel, when I return.

I comply with my personal request, and that you, as well as mine, including Dr. Laroche, Dr. Francois Delacour, Dr. Holly, Revs. Turnbull, Mark, De Feu, Lherisson, Consul Livingston, American Vice Consul Vital, etc., in the social, educational, industrial, and shall I also mention the generation of long neglected and politically and financially poor over 2,000,000 suffering and oppressed people, and God and through our own Government and other American and philanthropic agencies, essential to the uplift of the black (or white), are as anxious as myself not to place absolute in the way of our "American occupation," but in every way their influence and authority, and, if possible, moral to carry out the intention of the American Government sent instruments and as set forth in the excellent treaty between the two countries.

However, there would be any objection from the genial occupation if you referred to the proposed industrial colony a prominent place and prove a most important, if not in any future scheme of developing the black republic.

as set forth, indeed, in my "memorandum," and recommendation to the President, and through him our United States Government, who, though it is directly brought before him, and whether or not actually supporting officialism and certain grades of politicians, will positively go through.

The fact of the names of Maj. Moton, president of Tuskegee, Dr. Thomas Jones, and Dr. James H. Dillard, of the Jeanes, and the Rockefeller Foundation, of general education boards, of the United States, mentioned as members of that commission, is a guaranty in itself, of any person who really knows President Wilson, ex-President Taft, late ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, and our Government, and great Christian leaders, that all this will—as soon as matters can be arranged—be already an accomplished fact.

I state this so as to encourage you to "patience, real faith, in the Government, perseverance in all that is good and uplifting, and meantime, as well as support for the present instrumentalities as possible, court, and essential under present conditions, and for which undoubtedly intelligent and thoroughly patriotic Haitian must thank God, imperfections are, but which will in the natural development of things and time be gradually changed and so adapted as to produce the changes mentioned in the "memorandum."

Probably you and others who widely read and take such deep interest in the struggles and grand victory just achieved in Europe for liberty and in which our own American Government has so distinguished itself, our soldiers, both white and colored, have, shoulder to shoulder, so fought under that courageous and indomitable Christian, Gen. Pershing, like President Wilson, Lloyd-George, Secretary of our Navy, Daniel, an enemy of liquor and alcohol, and to-day, because of his high and noble character is loved all over the States, and would by acclamation be made President if he but consented, know also that Maj. Moton and Dr. Jones, my personal friend, have been to France and, with our President, look to the interest of our colored American soldiers there, and even some Haitian young men in American colleges who volunteered to the front, the son of Dr. Ghousse, our Baptist deacon, and local native preacher, Jacmel, etc.

You may call attention in your paper to this and the fact that Dr. Jones, white, but real friend of race, both in States and here, pledged me to do so, and again, and the day I left him at the Rockefeller headquarters, general education board, in Broadway, New York, to visit Haiti, either in the very month, so as to investigate conditions, looking to the establishment of what was called in 1911 by Cincinnatus Leconte, Legère, and even President Simon (when I took that petition around Haiti), "the noblest of an industrial college, founded on Christian basis, like Hampton and here among us in Haiti.

Your paper will certainly serve a most useful purpose in informing, and thus preparing gradually our leaders in Haiti for this and showing indispensable, with all that our own American Government can do in occupation, etc., that the Haitians themselves must not only be converted, educated but become actual tillers of their own rich soil and learn to do honest labor not as a species of slavery and something forced and degrading but elevating and, indeed, divine—essential, too, in their development, you are to become free, independent, and a progressive people in the terms of these terms.

If you saw account of my lecture along these lines at the Cape Town, ago, you may copy same in L'Informateur, and I shall send some notionally from our Government educational and labor department, which are sent me here to St. Marc.

With Christian regards, best wishes for new year, believe me to remain, Yours, and for Christ and Haiti,

I. L. TON

AN URGENT APPEAL IN BEHALF OF HAITI, WEST INDIES.

"So then faith cometh by hearing and hearing the word of God"—shall they hear without a preacher? (Romans x, 14, 17.)

"But I can see though dimly through the mystery, His hand above."

Haiti, the black republic, as it is called, has on the whole island some 2,000,000 inhabitants, all of whom are Africans. Although a brave people as per h their forefathers fought and won their freedom from 90 years ago, under that noble Negro chieftain, Toussaint y they are in the most pitiable condition materially, politognized island religion is the lowest type of Romanism, nerally, if not entirely, are blind devotees of Voodooism, mmoral orgies, frenzical dances, and other disgusting and nected with devil worship, at times sacrifice human life. ocent babes, to slake the thirst of their demon god, whom t for centuries, both in Africa and Haiti, by the papa lois ar and dread.

twentieth century, and though in close proximity to Ameri- i lies between Cuba and Porto Rico, on the present direct Canal, and within a few hurs' run of Jamaica—it is almost ould be at th's moment an island five times the size of ver three times its population in such a benighted and de- ithout any organized efforts whatever by our great mis- vangelize its heathen.

o Baptist Convention, however, before whom the writer was ause of poor Haiti at Birmingham, Ala., September, 1902 usky delegates attended from distances varying 500, n 2,000 miles away), have now faithfully undertaken to 904, providing some of the Lord's stewards are willing to as their funds are altogether inadequate for the m'ssion e foreign fields now operated.

a fund of $200,000 be placed to the credit of the foreig n the same would put at least eight brethren immediately on ointment also of an energetic agent to visit the churches ntend the field, could in a few years through the careful ment of native resources, augmented by outside subscrip- e annual income. This amount under the supervision of board would be entirely devoted to the direct evangeliza- Bible lines.

presenting these facts is to enlist sympathy and prayer, above amount required, to enable the national convention ons without further delay among the neglected poverty- n, and devil-worshipping people of this otherwise queen an Sea, that at last it may be said of them as the divinely of the land of Zebulun and Nephthaliim, viz: "The people saw great light, and to them which sat in the region and is sprung up." (Matthew iv, 16.)

en's gate is closed to him who comes alone;
thou a soul and it shall save thine own."

ti,
v.

L. TON EVANS.

RCH, arddale, Pa.

FOREIGN MISSION OF NATIONAL BAPTIST CONVENTION.

Louisville, Ky., September 2, 1903.

EVANS: AS I see now our brethren would be exceedingly ossible, to take up work for Haiti. At our annual meeting matter comes before the full board, and I am sure that it. The following is part of the board's report for the ndicapped this year with poor help, which has hampered o do.

sit the convention if you can. Thanks for the pledge.
Name,

L. G. JORDON,
Corresponding Secretary.

annual report of Brother L. G. Jordan, D. D., to National eptember 18, 1903, and representing 2,100,000 Baptists:

"Haiti, almost a next door neighbor, needs our immediate attention. The want of money hinders us from sending missionaries there.

"We recommend, should we find friends of the Master, who will commence work there in 1904.

"We highly commend the earnest efforts of Rev. L. Ton Evans, of Edinboro, Pa. (late of Wales and ex-missioner from Haiti), in behalf of the field, and pray that he might find a way to go there again as a missionary labor among the people who lay so heavily upon his heart, and otherwise as a board to take up the work there without unnecessary delay."

The appalling and urgent need of Haiti is also personally and indorsed by Revs. S. MacArthur, D. D., Calvary Baptist Church, New York; George E. Henderson, M. A.; Phillip Williams (ex-president and secretary respectively, of Jamaica Baptist Union, West Indies); Dr. Booker T. Washington, the great Negro educator; and F. B. Meyer, B. A. (London); Prof. T. Davies, B. A., Ph. D., Baptist and University Colleges, North Wales; with John Cory, Esq., J. P., D. L.; ex-Alderman R. Cory, J. P.; and Thomas, Esq., Christian philanthropists in South Wales, who have promised conditional and generous support to this much needed mission enterprise.

Dr. Booker T. Washington has kindly offered to train at his excellent Normal and Industrial Institute, Tuskegee, Ala., some of the most promising youths; and Rev. Dr. Bullinger, secretary of the Trinitarian Bible Society (London), will donate uncorrupted and pure translations of Scriptures in French and Spanish, which will be a valuable help to the mission.

Rev. Russell H. Conwell, D. D., president of Temple College, Philadelphia, who, through his private secretary, September 16, 1903, wrote:

Rev. L. Ton Evans,
Edinboro, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Russell H. Conwell received your letter of 14th instant, and I am glad to say that he has confidence in you, and would like to be of some use in such a missionary work as that you propose to do in Haiti. While he is anxious to help the cause, yet regrets he has no time nor thought to give to the enterprise now, as he is so crowded with duties which he could not omit.

---

[By the London (England) committee of the Baptist Missionary Society, showing the successful efforts in 1903 and 1907 of the pioneer missionary in behalf of Haiti, and educational uplift.]

RECOGNITION OF THE NEW HAITIAN MISSION.

To the Baptist churches and friends of the Negro:

We, whose names are attached hereunto, rejoice to state that the committee of our Baptist Missionary Society meeting in London January 16, 1904, has considered over by the late Charles Williams, Accrington, and after due consideration of the petition and purpose of the foreign board of the American Baptist churches, the great importance of Haiti as a field, the wretched condition of its superstitious and devil-worshipping inhabitants, unanimously decided to recognize the much-needed mission and express its hearty sympathy and well as extend its moral support, to the praiseworthy efforts now being made to evangelize the benighted people of this island. (Both brethren, Charles Williams and the late J. Jenkyn Brown, congratulated us on the support given to Haiti. These two veterans very deeply sympathized with our mission.)

In addition to the special claims of the field itself set before the committee by the general secretary and superintendent of the work in Haiti, supported by the strong plea of members of the society in Wales, the committee is also takes cognizance of the sympathy and interest of the churches of Wales (Welsh and English) in this mission of their colored brethren, which sympathy and interest found expression in resolutions forwarded to the churches and associations to the Rev. C. E. Wilson, B. A., secretary of the B. M. S., as well as Rev. W. Morris, D. D., F. R. G. S., chairman of the missionary council for Wales.

Our society rejoices that the foreign board of the National Baptist Convention of America has undertaken to operate a mission in this sadly benighted island, and further expresses its pleasure that our Negro brethren in the United States have been so fortunate as to secure such an earnest, efficient ther as Rev. L. Ton Evans, late of Wales and Edwards-represent them in this important Christian enterprise.

have already been informed, the English Baptist Missionary Society authorized its secretaries in London to receive collections in churches and others in Wales and elsewhere (given and forwarded the same to them.

distributed, whether by collection or subscription, will be appear in the Welsh and English annual reports of the Society, as those now given to the Zenana work.

Therefore, that all the churches and friends of the once-freed Negroes of America anxious to give the pure gospel on along strictly evangelical and scriptural lines among the people of the demon god in the Black Republic will appreciate this arrangement made and send their collections and Mission House in London, marked "for Haiti."

and very heartily indorse also the proposal to establish a Institute on the island concurrent with, though separate from, and so as to train the head and hand of the Negro population of the rich soil and development of his country.
enlightened native Christians and furnish capable schoolteachers for the missionaries from among the dark-skinned that the fact of the Negro Baptist foreign mission board of brother and fellow countryman, the Rev. L. Ton Evans) for the money raised for the mission is not only in harmonious policy as Baptists, can not but give great and general and should, indeed, prove a strong incentive to churches to support the new undertaking in Haiti, West Indies.

Every effort be especially blessed of the Lord.

from God.

for God.

Treorchy (Chairman of the Missionary Council of
H. Cernyw Williams, Corwen; Charles Davies, Cardiff; Morris, Aberystwyth; J. W. Maurice, Dinas Cross (Presbyterian Baptist Union of Wales), Members of the Committee of the Baptist Missionary Society.

Following secretaries of associations which have already reported the mission:

	Members.
Glamm. Association-----	27, 896
Card. Carm. (Eng.) Association-----	20, 463
Card. and Card. Association-----	19, 835
Card. Association-----	19, 442
Card. Association-----	12, 378
Card. and Meirion Association-----	9, 152
Card. Association-----	2, 861
<hr/>	<hr/>
Total-----	112, 027

Partnership was divided, young men and women appointed in at 1 penny per month (an average of 1 shilling per year), which could be realized for Haiti and that without international efforts for the church and worthy objects at present would enable us as a Baptist denomination to take over the management of Haiti.

Church to inform the secretary of its association of the Haiti, so that it may appear in the annual report of the Board's, and the fulness thereof."

Churches of Wales which have been visited up to date, and collect in aid of our mission, are the following:

Zion (Llanelly); Bethesda and Hill Park (H. West); Nebo (Pembroke Dock); Bethania (Cardigan); Nebo
s, Whitland, Bethel, and Hebron (Holyhead); Jerusalem a (Aberdare); Amlwch, Bangor, Zion, and Tabernacle (Ton, Ystrad); Tabernacle (Pontypridd); Hebron, etc.
Moriah, etc. (Llanelly); Carnarvon, Pembrey, Bethania
, Lliwynhendy, Aberdare (Eng.); Nebo (Ebbw Vale); etc.

Received already either in subscriptions or promises to be given in support of the mission.

	£.	s.
Mr. Richard Cory, J. P.-----	50	0	Dr. Ivor Davies-----
Libanus, Treherbert (Dr. Har- ries)-----	20	0	Dr. Lewis Lewis-----
Trecynon, Aberdare (Rev. W. Cynog Williams)-----	20	0	Mr. Richards (Pentre)-----
Bethlehem, Pwll (Rev. Richard Owen)-----	10	0	Mr. W. C. Short-----
A friend of Christ and the Ne- gro-----	10	0	Mr. Thos. Williams-----
Mr. Sydney Rees-----	5	0	Mr. B. Rees, J. P.-----
Mrs. D. Rees-----	5	0	Mrs. Cynog Williams-----
Mr. W. Warren Kinsey (for fam- ily of 5)-----	5	0	Rev. Cynog Williams-----
Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins-----	3	0	Rev. W. Rhys Jones-----
Ald. W. H. David-----	2	2	Rev. E. W. Davies (Ton)-----
Mrs. C. Edmunds-----	2	0	Rev. J. R. Evans-----
Mrs. D. Francis-----	2	0	Rev. W. Trevor Jones-----
Mr. Thomas Evans-----	2	0	Rev. Rowe Williams-----
Mr. Williams (Ton Ystrad)-----	2	0	Rev. Tallesyn Williams-----
Mrs. Lewis (Hengoed)-----	1	10	Rev. W. R. Lewis-----
			Rev. O. D. Campbell, M. A.-----
			Rev. J. J. Richards-----
			Rev. Morgan Jones, B. A.-----
			Prof. T. Witton Davies, B. Ph. D.-----

APRIL 20, 1907.

Senator KING. Mr. Evans, during the war there were a number of men in Haiti, were there not, and at the outbreak of the war?

Mr. EVANS. Quite a number.

Senator KING. And some were interned during the war?

Mr. EVANS. Quite so.

Senator KING. And some deported from the island?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; I suggested that all this should have been done at the time we as a Government entered the war, being that we had to do with Haiti, and responsible for protecting Haiti, and feeding these people.

Senator KING. If there was a censorship during the war, it grew out of the occupation of the island?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; but the Germans were allowed full sway for a time, and the Haiti people and ourselves suffered in consequence.

Senator KING. By the Germans?

Mr. EVANS. No doubt.

Senator KING. And Europeans belonging to the Central Powers?

Mr. EVANS. Yes, sir; there was a strong feeling here among not only the people, but the priests and whole European Catholics, practically with the Central Powers and against the Allies and United States.

Senator KING. It was a real military necessity?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; essentially so, but it was not explained as it should have been to the Haitians, and it should have resulted in a greater benefit to Haiti really was by way of distribution of food, etc., after we declared war.

I complained at Washington for lack of suitable publicity for explaining the whole situation, and how it affected Haiti, and work of the occupation, but nothing really was done; it was of course all Europe.

Senator KING. The Germans did have control of the wharves and the banks?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; they were the leading merchants and exporters of logwood, cotton, etc., and had a regular system through their native agents getting around, and they had studied the Haitian characteristics. The French and patois, having been there so many years, had grown over the island, and with all other Europeans in Haiti, including the Germans. They abused Haitian confidence, of course, in political propaganda and the customs.

Senator KING. And they therefore had the business activities of the whole island?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; and I fear that our occupation and United States failed to really understand this, if not most of our American Mar-their guard, and even ignored it by their close associations and other social relations.

Haiti was used as a sort of base for the dissemination in the Caribbean Sea, and in the South American Republics?

tedly during the beginning of the war, and for many British and anti-American propagandas.

was necessary that there should be some sort of censorship, and during the war?

was justified, but I am a great believer in publicity through the situation, and explaining to these people, who are under our control, and we were pledged to protect and assist, against misrepresentations and falsehood spread by where any oppression used in the authority exercised by ward to the Germans; no, not to my knowledge.

regard to the censorship?

exception of what I referred to my own letters in Haiti, my impression is that they were too lax, before Haiti some time after, as in allowing Germans too much free-ventured bitter feelings that the United States had entered the Allies, and I fear that several of the American marines either, thinking we had really gone in for Great Britain anything else.

make any complaint, then, because of the censorship?

atsoever in war time and when there are enemies around; ought to have a little judgment to differentiate a loyal American, for instance, from a German, an Austrian, or a ow, do you make any complaint of the fact of there being a complaint merely they were too lax?

at my position was quite clear. During the war and the Haiti, with so many Germans, I believe it tended to be easy to use the censorship on Haitians and American loyal conditions in Haiti reaching the responsible United States whose honor and national character are at stake, is most unjustifiable. They do this, as I understand, without to-day from our Government, and an inquiry should be opened in Haiti?

u mean to say if I should write a letter to any person in Haiti?

not believe they would be quite so daring with a Senator after what has happened. They discriminate against individuals somehow to convey a correct idea of conditions in the occupation, at least very many of the marines and of Haitians under present régime there.

then chairman of Foreign Relations) three years ago I believe my statements re the occupation, closing up then this "rape of the constitution," and refused to appoint such as this committee to make inquiry; so the United States Navy officer which the United States Secretary to send to Haiti, on account of officials withholding the truth.

ock expressed surprise that there was no other witness of my own, I replied that others were in the pay of the Government and dared not come or speak.

Government protection to Haitian witnesses and have the Haiti President, to come here before the Foreign Relations. In fact he did not wish to know. It is a sad condition and totally forfeit its confidence.

I was there, more than a year ago, I found no evidence that the people were communicating as they pleased; at least not regularly, and there was not the slightest effort, so far as I know, to accept, or scrutinize communications.

Mr. EVANS. This might be so, as possibly some change has taken place, instance, all my periodicals are returned from Haiti the last two years more, but not a single letter has come through. The real reason why, I will have to wait and the mystery will some day be cleared up.

Senator KING. I have received letters from Haiti, and I have not slightest evidence of any censorship?

Mr. EVANS. As stated, this might be so, and things somewhat improved the scandal was made known and so many investigations as to the conduct of these marines referred to and the flashlight thrown on them at last.

Senator KING. You are speaking in reference to conditions when the war is there?

Mr. EVANS. No; I had in mind chiefly since my return and long after the war is ended.

Senator KING. Do you charge that letters written by you to people have not been delivered or have been opened prior to delivery?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; I am of opinion that they have not been delivered; they have also been opened; several of these were to missionaries and a United States consul, whom I recently heard has been fired by the Haitian government or may be through Maj. Wells, who has escaped from Haiti, or by Gen. Williams, once chief of Haiti gendarmerie.

Senator KING. The Haitians are the postmasters there, are they not?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; and with whom I was always on the best of terms as all other leading officials of the Haiti Government. They have no department, however, an American marine officer over them, and they do anything should be done which he is not heartily in accord with; and though he may not know it, in their overcautiousness (at times) fail to perform plain duty. This might be so in my case, as they all know my own attitude toward education and the reverse attitude of the occupation.

Mr. ANGELL. There is a special agreement covering that to have the direction in the hands of our United States nominee.

Mr. EVANS. For instance, just to give you some idea of the nervous condition of the people, through outburst of abuse of authority, if not killed, the local editor had a paragraph merely stating that a high officer of the Haitian government had been relieved or recalled. He had his paper immediately canceled and he himself put in prison.

Senator ODDIE. That fact is in the record?

Mr. EVANS. This is to scare and terrorize these poor people, who are so scared and terrified enough. An able Haitian and a strong intellectual while I was at Port au Prince was scheduled as chief consul for Jamaica, but something he had said or done was construed to be unfavourable to the Roman Catholic régime in Haiti, and his nomination was canceled.

Senator KING. It seems that the local priests, apparently, were the cause of his undoing?

Mr. EVANS. Exactly. The Roman Catholic Church in Haiti and European priests—I have never seen a colored or native priest there—these priests have native preachers, are the cause of undoing everything looking forward to the mental, moral, and industrial development of Haiti and equip them for self-government of a progressive and prosperous Haiti. They have to be intellectual slaves. The devious ways the Roman Catholic influence and power works in Haiti is not easily discovered, but the perfect machinery, which works smoothly but effectively, from the Haitian priests up to bishop, archbishop, if not the late Cardinal Gibbons at the White House, through late private secretary, who are, it is said in Haiti, the only possible for most of changes in occupation's efficient officers.

Senator KING. You mean by that, as I understand you, that able Americans who had gone there for service were recalled because of opposition by the priests against them to the American officials or Haitian officials?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; or charges sent from here—made by priests or by special Pope's delegate, who has been some years at Port au Prince—London, and that through Tumulty the State or Navy Department would arrive he must clear out, however efficient as American marine officer he may be, simply at the caprice and dictation of the Roman Catholic apostate so-called church. Lack of whole-hearted sympathy with the Catholicism in Haiti and an unwillingness to subordinate the interest of Haiti to the occupation, and that of the United States Government by an able, and patriotic American would suffice to remove that real criticism there is that the Catholic Church in the duties of persons who were sent to Haiti from the so; deflects and demoralizes the personnel of the American United States Government, some of whose ablest, bravest, and most experienced and efficient in the country, as department service, to-day are Protestants.

There has been spread abroad, which, without any investigation as correct by the late administration and largely dominating really the interest of the occupation's mission a Catholic régime—it is that all Haitians are Roman

Knapp, in his official report to Secretary Daniels from 11, 1920, under "Haiti—Reports and inquiries regarding conduct of marines" (Appendix C, p. 223), and in section VII of the Constitution, where it says "all forms of religion," etc., at last, and very properly, courageously, and without myth, as follows:

Considerable number of priests (including the bishop at the Port au Prince) in the aggregate, and practically all spread all through the country, and there are several of the Catholic Church represented in Haiti engaged in its ever, if the real unmixed doctrines of the Roman Catholicism may but a very negligible minority; with most of the doctrines of the Roman Catholic faith is more or less mixed; elements brought from the jungles of Africa Voodooism is where one goes from the coast into the interior the more is practiced. Consecrated wafers of the Roman Catholicism and the blood of sacrifices by Voodoo priests at the Voodoo something like $1,000,000 of American money has been financially sustain during the last six years a church of a kind and a semibarbarous institution (more or less mixed that the work of the occupation responded to the desires of the Roman Catholic Church in Haiti?

use a stronger word than respond; it actually deviated American marine officers from their mission in the Black subordinated the interests of the United States Government to carry out their treaty—to the Roman Catholic Church interest. I know it is a delicate matter, but it has to be frankly faced; and this unholy alliance and American con- in German propagandas, must be permitted to interfere—defeat—as they have so far done—our purpose in Haiti. For of the United States Government and the American only before Latin American Republics but before the and so our influence and integrity in negotiating treaties of the League of Nations.

not that indicate that the desire seemed to be to have administration would be in harmony with the wishes of the people?

ive of avoiding unnecessary friction, and especially religious body is most commendable, and applies, accordingly to the Protestant and Evangelical churches equally as to the Catholic Church. As Admiral Knapp states in his report, the in Haiti has no right to claim the majority of the population, as he says, a negligible minority, but owing to its alliance with Haiti and the United States Governments it eat majority of the people are Catholics, are they not? According to the report given Secretary Daniels of the United States, ago they are not, and this has been my position right the Catholic Church in Haiti is a bastard production of voodoo-ism, witchcraft, and other African heathenish cults, with a gloss of Catholicism—just as described by the American marine officer.

And again, these white priests of Europe who smoke and drink the etc., have little in common with Haitians and do not understand nor sympathize with a republican form of government and equal rights for all churches.

On my first arrival in Jacmel, southern Haiti, in 1893, I was attacked by a European white priest for holding a gospel service in the open air, and a warrant—both my assistant, Nosirel Lherison, and myself—to appear the following Wednesday morning at the chief court, presided over by a fine Haitian, a nominal Catholic.

The judge said, "The priest has failed to turn up; and if he did, I would have nothing to interfere with you. Continue to preach," he said; "this is a public place, and the constitution gives equal rights to all churches," and I was told the Haitian soldiers to protect me in the street or elsewhere and made arrangements that I should visit the old prison every Sunday and any other day.

Senator KING. Your criticism is that the priests, then, did not always represent the will of the majority of the people?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; they are actually opposed to the intellectual if not industrial, and especially the Christian development of Haitians, and I am not surprised that they are not back of this occupation's resistance to education in general of Haitian children and young people.

Senator KING. And that the priests of the Catholic Church have interfered with the legitimate and proper plans of the occupation?

Mr. EVANS. Exactly so, only instead of saying priests (with whom I have no quarrel and they have as much right to preach and as much as they believe the Roman Catholic dogmas, as Protestants and Evangelists) will put it the Roman Catholic Apostolique Church, so called, and the interference in the interest of this Roman Catholic Church have interfered with the legitimate and proper plans of the occupation.

American marine officers themselves have again told me how they have failed off to wait on bishop and assist archbishop with their Government, and many, with the great majority of the thinking Haitians, and the Republic, would hail the breaking of this alliance.

And this done expressly for the spiritual good of both Protestant and Catholic Church and an honest and efficient Haiti and United States Governments' (latter through occupation) administration in the black republic.

Church and State have their distinct missions, and they can best perform these distinct missions by being entirely separate, and not the one encroaching upon the other's realm and infringing upon the rights of one another, such as the American marine paying and acting the Catholic priest and the Catholic priest performing the function of an American marine officer. You thoroughly understand what I mean.

Senator KING. I exactly comprehend your meaning.

Mr. EVANS. With your consent, I insert here for record an official letter from the Haiti Government, which means as stated the occupation and really the United States Government, and how it seeks to calm the fears of the distinguished visitor of the Pope recognized in Haiti by both the Haitian Government and American marine officers not as a mere religious head but a prince regent in Haiti an independent and foreign sovereign, but expenses and salaries paid by Admiral Caperton (and afterwards by the American occupation) the continuance of financing the great Roman Catholic régime in Haiti. Intelligent Haitians in increasing numbers oppose, stating the conclusion long expired. My copy is in French and taken from the L'Essor for 1918, and is as follows:

LA RELIGION CATHOLIQUE EN HAÏTI.

Nos lectures liront avec plaisir la lettre ci-dessus qui est un soulagement à la foi catholique du pays:

REPUBLIQUE D'HAÏTI
Port au Prince, le 31 Mars 1918.

SECRETAIRE DES RELATIONS EXTERIEURES.

MONSIEUR: J'ai eu l'honneur de recevoir la lettre du 20 de ce mois, laquelle, étant donné que la religion catholique est celle de la majorité du peuple Haïtien et qu'elle a toujours eu en conséquence une place privilégiée dans le pays.

SEIGNEUR CHERUBINI,
Intervenant Apostolique Port au Prince.

est sent me an official list of all the schools belonging to names and total amount of appropriations hitherto given Government—but now stopped by the American occupation—requested an official list from the Government's minister of Protestant churches that received Government financial help to schools, and the amount given each. These names and amounts are shown, and following is my letter of thanks, with a kind request for a complete list of total or itemized grants, and actual cost of maintaining the Roman Catholic Apostolique régime in Haiti. My answer came, and this broad-minded Catholic, but real friend of public instruction, who had prepared a scheme for the black Republic over two years ago and anxious to have been fired by either the Catholic Church direct or by the State at the bidding of that church.

Following follow:

*de l'Instruction Publique,
Port au Prince.*

REGNOIS: Many thanks for the official statement as to the s given monthly by the Haiti Government; and also the tions again given to the Roman Catholic schools in your received this week.

rough you, the minister of cult, to be kind enough to give me monthly or yearly salaries given the archbishop, bishops, etc., and all other minor officers of the Roman Catholic Church, the extra subventions monthly or yearly given out of the treasury to maintain these Roman Catholic chapels, archbishop's palace, etc., of said Roman Catholic priests?

isible, in this list what is given to all freres and soeurs their Roman Catholic schools, as well as those engaged in nt hospices through this Republic, and other useful inforo this and coming under above heading.

ter that I should have a correct and, if possible, a come Protestant and Roman Catholic subventions than one to guess on such important matters, and this can only be

I through you and the minister of cult whether the actual it was meant for 50 years, and when did it really start?
grateful for this reliable and official information, to what urnished me with already, and for which I heartily thank boat leaving for New York from Port au Prince at end of August, we are hoping to leave for States, so personally with our Haiti minister of public instruction, and at reference suggested.

, I would very much like to have also present, say, Col. Gen. Williams, with the President and ex-President Legitime, if not the members of the national council itself, with our American minister; and if you thought fit, and seeing their deep interest in Haiti, the consul general and the French minister, though if better, in your judgment can furnish their indorsements by way of a separate letter.

At this informal gathering I shall briefly give an outline of the project," as they termed it through Haiti seven years ago, and what has already been taken in the matter. I shall allude to the petition bearing 3,000 names of all leading Haitians, irrespective of religious creeds or politics. I had the privilege of presenting at the Carnegie Bureau of International Peace, in Washington, and which had inscribed upon it as the name of my old friend—distinguished, able, cultured, and progressive (wards)—the late President Leconte, who was also the real friend of the American Government.

I believe that I mentioned to you, and as showing the widespread enthusiasm at the time referred to, official letters in my possession to civic councils, St. Marc, Gonaïves, Port de Paix, Grande Rivière,太子港, Liberte, Dondon, St. Michael, Enery, Cape Haiti, etc., sincerely thanking me personally for getting this up and carrying through the Republic, with success of my mission in their behalf in the States, and sincerely praising the great Christian and educationist philanthropists of the States—Rockefeller and Carnegie, for instance, to provide this blessed boon to this urgent necessity, a national normal and industrial school for the Haiti and its sons and daughters and by way of training their young manhood and Negro womanhood for future religious, educational, and commercial, as well as judicial and civic leadership in their own Black Republic.

Our representatives at the Latin-American department of our Government and other educationists at Washington last October, and just before I left to Haiti thought that if this petition was now presented, and the Government it would most likely go right through, as it would be in accordance with the spirit, and, indeed, letter, of our generous treaty; thus enabled to be carried out with greater effect by our United States Government, and its occupation and the Haitian administration, though the financial burden would be furnished by our generous American philanthropists, backed by the United States Government.

While we shall be glad, of course, of suggestions at this proposed conference it will be wise not to enter into matters of detail until the proposed normal and industrial school has been sanctioned and indorsed at Washington.

I am sincerely hoping, however, that this normal and industrial school made fit into the new scheme of public instruction for the long-neglected children of Haiti you intend soon to launch; that in time it will provide and efficient teachers for same, as well as professors in agriculture. The United States Government to develop scientific cultivation of our soil through small Negro farmers and native cultivators, and therefore the reason will suggest when the time comes that trustees and managing leading American citizens in the States (representing white and colored) will work in close conjunction with, or, if not, through, our American minister and as an essential part of Haiti's public-school instruction system.

I wrote our Pastor Lherisson at Jacmel concerning that Government's urgently needed for a high-class school for boys.

With sincere regards to you and your colleague, and for Christ and

L. TON

RÉPUBLIQUE D'HAÏTI, BUREAU DU SUPERINTENDANT DE L'INSTRUCTION PUBLIQUE
Port au Prince, 13 juillet 1904.

Monsieur L. TON EVANS, Saint Marc.

MONSIEUR LE PASTEUR: Vous trouverez sous ce couvert la liste générale des subventions que le Département de l'Instruction Publique paye mensuellement.

Recevez, Monsieur le Pasteur, l'assurance de ma parfaite considération.

M. LAURENT

Le Suprntendant de l'Instruction Publique

Subvention.

	Gourdes.
s appliquées.....	1,200 or 150
.....	100
.....	257
.....	200
.....	100
.....	1,857 or 150
p Haitien :
ale de Milot.....	70
ale de Quartier Morin.....	70
ale Plaine du Nord.....	70
ale Acul du Nord.....	100
.....	560
e Riv. du Nord :
ale de Ranquitte.....	50
ale de Dondon.....	100
.....	150
mbre Plaisance :
ale de Limbé.....	150
ale de Plaisance.....	100
.....	250
ou, ecole presbytérale du Trou.....	50
liere, ecole presbytérale de Vallière.....	50
ache, ecole presbytérale de Hinche.....	100
essalines, ecole presbytérale de la Petite.....	50
.....	3,067 or 150

REPUBLIC D'HAITI,
DU DU SUPERINTENDANT DE L'INSTRUCTION PUBLIQUE,
Port au Prince, 3 juillet, 1918.
L'INSTRUCTION PUBLIQUE.

TON EVANS,
de la Mission Baptiste, en Haïti.

elon votre demand, je vous transmets sous ce couvert, la accordees par le Gouvernement aux divere Cultes, etablis

L. J. BURGEOIS,
Supt. de l'Instruction Publique.

accordees par le Gouvernement aux divers cultes Protest-Protestant religions) etablis dans le pays.

Catholique G. Apostolique d'Haiti.....	192. 50 copalians.)
epublique.....	187. 50
u Dondon.....	50. 00
u Cap.....	40. 00
s every Baptist church in Haiti, and rent of room tists of Cape worship since church burnt down.— ues.)
a Republique.....	120. 00
ependeante.....	50. 00
Methodists of England and the Port au Prince nich has broken away and become independent.)

Savoir—Continued.

St. Paul

(Native Episcopal, whose pastor is clerk at American late.)

Societe Biblique et des Livres, Religieuse d'Haiti

(This is native Bible and religious books society of Ha

Certifie Sincere,

H
Le Comptab

PORT AU PRINCE, le 2 juillet, 1918.

NOTE.—Not being able to ascertain from the native pastors exact sum each received from the Government, which has been whole to Baptist churches and natives, not to say vitally of and Baptist teaching, I made an appeal to the Government d information and courteously received above response.

I also applied for official information as to the total subvent American occupation to archbishops, bishops, priests, nuns, fr the total monthly or annually, to maintain the whole Catholic Haiti College in France for training of white Catholic priest course, was never furnished me.

While the estimate is that from $100,000 to $125,000 a year fr Haiti Republic actually paid the latter (R. C.) something like a year was paid to Protestant churches and to aid Protestant schools have been cut off for years from list of subventions, a closed by the American occupation.

(L.

Senator ODDIE. Now, I want to ask you this: In your opinion dence that is asked by this committee be offered freely by t Haiti; and if not, why?

Mr. EVANS. No. This committee will in the present tempe tians, I may say terror-stricken and almost hysteric mental co confidence of any kind in the American people, through the fu understanding of them by and the cruel conduct of the Ameri I very sincerely believe will find itself much like the Navy co beforehand predicted to Maj. Dyer, it would be by myself at our in Washington. He thought he knew better.

The occupation is still there, and with the priests, their p gendarmes they will know every native that attempts to give they will probably intimidate, though this is not needed; they and are almost horrified at the thought of being pounced upon prisal the moment the Senate committee has left the island, a court to appeal to nor a single soul to protect them, hence they

If account of present proceedings of the committee could lished in English and French at present in Haitian papers, this kind of preparation and something to calm their minds and fidence, otherwise I fear that you will be sadly disappointed u dent comes and talks to the committee as he talked, for ins New York correspondents. This might encourage others, possib

It is a sad condition, and I feel almost heartbroken for th arrived there in 1917, and before the rape of constitution, and t rection, enforcement, with barbaric roping connected and deve corvee, they seemed so happy and free.

I seriously advise the committee right away to request o send a proclamation to be published in French and English in t all the papers and in all the public places in every town and v inviting the citizens and others who have reliable evidence to the present Senate committee or commission now making an ex into conduct of United States forces in Haiti, assuring them o tion of the United States Government and the severe punishme bers of occupation, priest, or members of corporations, etc., who to intimidate by threats, reprisals, or any other method.

State the places the commission of the United States Govern approximate date of sittings. As a proof of the real and ge the part of our Government to calm all fears and create imp of the people, so as to secure their cooperation, our Presiden all political suspects and prisoners against whom no crime proper process of law be liberated the day of the arrival Port au Prince.

with protection, is essential, and the liberation of all such would have an immense moral and most favorable to be treated as children and somewhat humored.

a number of Senators were there over a year ago some quite freely among the people—at least I did. I was in the region outside.

in March or April of 1919?

in 1920. Just a year ago, or a little more, and the people and I am sure they did to other Senators likewise—professional men, and the people on the streets women that produce on their heads.

with 200 in the island during the two or three days that no one that hesitated to speak, no one that seemed to hesitate in explaining their views, and many of them expressed satisfaction with the conditions.

the situation seemed to be that there was a divided authority. Which of the three chief officials was the one having authority to confusion, but, generally speaking, there was very little by those with whom I spoke about the conditions there about 100, and those with whom I talked were poor people, on the streets. Some were working as stevedores and some in the hills. They talked perfectly free about the revolution, and there was some criticism, I remember, about the revolution great; but the point I am trying to make is that no one had the slightest feeling of terror at all.

to perceive this anywhere among the classes of people, on the hills. Nowhere was there the slightest evidence of terror existing under a state of terror. I do not know what the situation was when you were there.

these inquiries going on about the time you were there; the administration of Secretary Daniels?

could be near that time.

was in April and May, 1920.

was something going on by way of investigations—either by the government; some of these were around there?

what was afterwards.

these investigations produced some moral effect, as some of the officers like Maj. Wells, for instance, cleared out, was in communication at this time with Secretary Daniels, and Lejune and others he sent down to bring him the latest. (the this) who sent Barnett to Port au Prince, and things were somewhat as they saw the red light.

whether who left, is he not?

not know.

he left months before your visit. I came up by a ship in 1919. Several Senators and Congressman came up to Port au Prince and witnessed a riot between the two sides—if not saw one or two killed. I met one of the Senators who was hurt.

the strain through jealousy between these two bodies which lack of discipline.

the committee will immediately consider and act soon on we will consider that. We will take that up.

to impress the importance of such a step on the committee not be handicapped in Haiti.

on as it is before them again, they will consider it.

what factors, in your opinion, contributed to the renewed disorders?

and at the end of 1918 when I was there I saw a great effect and its effect. On landing in December of 1918 at Port au Prince, as seen in this record, I called on Brig. Gen. Catlin, a strict command that the corvée must be stopped, I understand, but still in existence at St. Marc and other places in the Artibonite and Port au Prince, and south as well as all through the northern section.

After receiving official assurance from State Department at Washington the corvée curse and other cruel and sad conditions were being investigated and seriously considered by all the departments interested at Washington. I made it my business not only to go and pay my respects to Brig. Gen. Catlin, the new chief of American occupation, as soon as I arrived at Port au Prince, but inquired from him personally whether he had heard from Mr. Kulp and was there anything being actually done?

I gave him, in addition to the typewritten copy of it received from the State or Navy Department, the printed memorandum, and went over carefully re corvée, and the insidious influences at work interfering with the occupation and its purpose in Haiti. The memorandum, dated December, 1916. If he gave orders in October to stop the corvée, the orders were not carried out, and to my knowledge, and after bringing to the direct attention, he permitted Gen. Williams, chief of gendarmerie, to direct Lieut. Kulp from investigating the brutal and barbarous conduct of the gendarmes on Gros Morne.

Gen. Barnett, in October, 1919, writing Col. Russell, who succeeded Gen. Catlin, after expressing himself as shocked at conditions of brutality and miscellaneous murder by gendarmes and marines, added:

"I can not too strongly urge you the necessity of going personally into these matters and see to it that nothing is allowed to continue the corvée system; let it be known throughout Haiti; it will not be hereafter."

There should be no need of this urge and imperative command from Gen. Barnett or Knapp or Lejeune if these chiefs did their duty, and from the evidence that the corvée existed other than in the north, and no hope was made to actually stop it or ameliorate the brutal sufferings of the natives under it.

Cacoism was mainly the product of the corvée, and the sufferings of the natives became more acute, and the marines and gendarmes conducted a brutal and barbarous and murderous in their defiance of law, and the sad neglect and criminal laxity of American occupation, and gendarmes and cacoism increased threefold and tenfold, and the serious attack made on Port au Prince, though, it was not a revolution, nor even a rebellion, but a popular uprising, and the natural protest against the inhumanity, if not inhumanity, of American marines and their methods.

From a document sent me from Haiti, the headquarters of this cacoism, and by a Christian missionary whose valuable services, as testified by Gen. Cole, was scouted by the notorious Maj. Wells, which I am sure in your service in the record, I quote here a paragraph or so to dispel the prevailing statements about these people:

"Some say that this revival and powerful renewal of cacoism is a plot or intrigue against the United States. There may be a semblance of truth in this, but the real fact (and no one knows better than yourself) that this uprising is directly due to the terribly bad administration.

"If different methods were adopted, more wisdom and humanity less prejudice and hatred by some of the American marines toward the natives, and a conciliatory spirit shown, they would so gain these Negroes' respect and loyalty and love that all the money of Berlin and guns manufactured in Germany, if furnished them, would never turn these natives against the American marines and the United States Government."

This French citizen, and missionary for over 28 years in this country, one of my witnesses to testify before this committee if I can get to Haiti, President's proclamation is made as requested.

Senator KING. Were you there when the cacos came into Port au Prince and attacked the sugar factory and others?

Mr. EVANS. Do you remember that date?

Senator KING. No; I do not.

Mr. ANGELL. There was an earlier one, in October, 1919.

Mr. EVANS. That was after I left.

Senator KING. I am referring to the one in 1920, when they came in a thousand strong, and created a great state of terror, and they were the gendarmes, and several score of the cacos killed. You

I have seen the account. It was the accumulation of the through these oppressions and cruelties of Marine and upation, I trow not. If what a white American and this sugar plant told me boastingly at the Port au Prince his brutality toward those who worked under him, and through the occupation the whole thing was squashed, uprisings and attacks, I am not surprised therefore at effect.

familiar with the history there, given by both classes, ould be perhaps no greater than mine, unless you read nowledge of Haiti and the Haitian people is not the result years of my life in living and carefully observing them came, and since.

existing between Marines and the gendarmes and their ual control as you put it, and confusion and military uence, and the cruel way Haitians are handled account ave heard Marines repeatedly say things are so quiet, ap among themselves. or gendarmes or so-called cacos, go back to the States, or ask to be transferred to France, hting doing.

s told by a number of Haitians, some of them holding he revolution in 1920, if that was the date, was very culmination not of the evils of which you speak, but city of a number of revolutionary leaders who had been and had been disturbing factors, and participated in he occupation, and that they took part in the assassina- ch resulted in assassination of one or more Presidents, one or more Presidents; and that their avowed purpose hites, particularly Americans, and to put the government e revolutionary Negroes. That was told me by Haitians. not be at all surprised if this were true, and that even advantage of the bitter resentment of Haitians at the treated, and the strong reversion of feeling produced and Americans, as I have repeatedly said. It was fre- I was in Haiti that Germany was winning in the war, and matter of a short time before they came to Haiti and merican marines. Those with the Central Powers (and Catholic Church were) and Pope with Germany and stories, and I saw little or nothing to convince them not a fact that there had been revolutionary movements ould result in the frequent deposition from authority of Chief Executives of the island, and that there were in- ill parts of the island going on at all times?

mentioned this morning, this was partly due to the dissatis- tians with island conditions, readiness to be therefore e man's influence and money to try and better the state tes and in Britain, where people are educated and en- as are as a rule blamed on the Government, and a change s done by elections. Haitian agitators, however, are ned revolutionists, and in a sense every reformer, of have been nearly 100 Presidents there, have there not? exactly how many, but this is somewhat exaggerated, I limited number of years?

s is true.

they would be driven from power by revolution?

ing without money, and failing to secure the friendly aid they would be too weak to resist the powerful influence l German money?

number have been killed?

at Simon was driven from office and President Laconte n United States Government failed though requested to come to their assistance, and their Government's aid against these ins powerful invisible agencies working against every attempt at re progress in the black Republic.

STANFORD LIBRARIES

During last 100 years we have had many elections, and some able meaning Presidents have been hurled out of the executive office changes brought about.

Senator KING. I am speaking about conditions in Haiti. Is it not true there are revolutions for 100 years almost constantly, if not in all parts of the island, and incipient revolts and movements which overthrow of one political party which had triumphed, in the interim other political party?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; perfectly true, but more or less and chiefly owing to the influences I have already mentioned and repeated. There are smart, and energetic people among the Haitians. Political parties are all the year round are preparing and agitating whether their party will have power or not.

Senator KING. Is it not a fact that when Americans came there the cipient revolutions in many parts of the island, and that they were

Mr. EVANS. Yes; that is a fact, but my impression is that these were confined to the north, and Port au Prince, or south. There is no communication between north and south of the Republic of Haiti, just as there is no communication between the northern and southern States, not always. Haiti has had before now a President at Port au Prince for the north had Christoph as their king, for instance.

Senator KING. So that even when, as you said this morning, as I you, the Americans came, and were welcomed by a large number down

Mr. EVANS. Yes; this is quite so, and if they had continued the purpose of pacifying, instead of arousing the feeling, causing bitter hatred through the corvée, change of constitution, etc., they would still welcomed by practically every Haitian.

Senator KING. Yes; by the majority; there were a large number opposing—

Mr. EVANS. Quite a number who misunderstood our intentions, and when we landed our marines; yes.

Senator KING. The occupation; or would have opposed the contemptible majority of the Haitian people themselves?

Mr. EVANS. There is a difference in being controlled by a foreign by a majority party of your own. As emphasized this morning your questions indicate that you have forgotten some of my replies, these you refer to, as well as Haitians in general have for years been against America and Americans and told by German and other European gandas to beware of us; that all we wanted was a foothold, to take their rich island and reduce them to the position of forced laborers and slaves; and when we entered some were honestly doubting our intention to-day the majority have been convinced that the Germans were able Senator KING. What I am trying to develop, if it be a fact, is, has in that country for many years an element that should not be satisfied with the kind of government, even the best government, that their own people have?

Mr. EVANS. I hardly like to say that, and if it is true as you have the same situation in the States and other countries. Haiti, whether white or black, is very much alike in these things. Haiti deal of energy and much time also on their hands, and there has fortunately not much under any government in Haiti that can satisfy and intellectual and Christian progressive people among this nation.

Senator KING. Have there been revolutions there?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly there have.

Senator KING. And a great many men deposed from executive aut

Mr. EVANS. They term almost everything in Haiti a revolution, political activity.

Senator KING. Answer the question. Have there not been a large number of executives deposed?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Senator KING. And some killed?

Mr. EVANS. And some few killed.

would not call the government which they have—— think, and two or so, the last 10 or 12 years.
the past 50 years?

There have been others killed I believe during the last 50 would not call the government which they had in Haiti during the American occupation a stable government, would not, and I have been trying to point out the reasons I have been for 20 years urging upon our Government at a friendly mandate and act the big brother toward these at them in laying down a firm foundation for a permaintellectually and industrially help to train and develop them to understand the secret of a stable, peaceful, and in Haiti, but which the occupation has failed to do, of their mission in the Republic, according to the treaty.

have been fewer revolutions, and there has been less since the American occupation than before, have there have been no revolutions, but I have heard more about in Haiti since our American occupation, as well as heard of before during nearly 25 years, but of course the connected with those periodical revolutions referred to.

had their arms, and the Haiti Government her army, a revolution to-day, I fear, that would have made it their senate and chambers and change their constitution.
were the revolutions before this that resulted in the am?

ere the periodical revolutionists, which have simply the ernment in view. If the President, however, uses very own the revolutionists, and in desperation instead of quit-government resorts to wholesale executions, as I under-certain element goes raving mad and swear vengeance, a backward countries and among illiterate and quick-cacos were revolutionists, were they not?

n the sense it is used in Haiti; they would be called ban-Haiti, and referred by you as attacking Port au Prince, ed in very large numbers by those driven into desperation s and brutalities and probably had escaped from the ng on roads, etc.

would you call those who have deposed the multitude been deposed?

h is proverbially known as the starting place of revoluose at the Cape and in the northern section are stronger certainly they are apparently more active and energetic.
at an important reason is that it is more accessible to ic and can be easily reached, should something happen, le on horseback. It has been easier to land ammunition sible for the Government to get up from Port au Prince.
be certain cacos that would join and follow the revolu-forward march on Port au Prince, and as these rebels ould be useful in doing some looting very likely. They nhabitants, with Haiti politicians at the head, and in-ghites.

at to know what the fact is as to the revolutionary con-fore the American occupation, for the 50 or 75 years pre-going there?

ave been many revolutions during the nearly 30 years I d some of the oldest people have told me about the real e past 50, 60, and 80 years ago. Unfortunately, there e men on the lookout to foment and exploit small, weak re merged in or cared for, protected, and otherwise re-leadership of a stronger, wealthier, and more developed.
lead up to our landing in Haiti would probably be more bloodshedding and devastating consequences, as those in

Senator KING. Well, 50 or 75 years ago there could be no German in

Mr. EVANS. This has been true for the last 25 years, and other nations as England and France, have had their filibusters and political pirates Senator KING. Without attempting to determine the cause, there have been frequent revolutions there?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; very many.

Senator KING. And public peace and order constantly disturbed?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; most seriously; and formerly there would be a swarm of Haitian exiles at Kingston, Jamaica, who were induced by whites, money and ammunition and small ships, to go back, land at night, and stir up political upheaval. There was another class who really sought to go into the government, but unaided, too weak. So I have often looked upon the birth pangs of this small nation, which seeks not only an independent life but even a larger life of greater and larger usefulness, but too weak to secure special assistance and protection.

Senator KING. I am not attempting to excuse, palliate, or condemn. I am trying to find out what the fact is. I do not want the impression to go from your testimony, unless you so want it, that whatever trouble has occurred on the island in the shape of revolution or disorder has occurred since the cacos went there.

The fact is, as I understand, that there have been trouble and revolutions for many years.

Mr. EVANS. Yes; this fact is well known in America and through all the world.

Senator KING. Inherent—I was about to say indigenous—to the island and the people?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; under present and past peculiar conditions, and all the intellectual people have been long sick and tired of it, as shown by the enthusiasm in reference to a normal and industrial school and the President Simon re concessions of railroads and banana plantations, etc.

Senator KING. And the Germans before and after the outbreak of the war fomented strife?

Mr. EVANS. Quite so.

Senator KING. And used the island as a base for German propaganda?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; they were for many years entrenched through the banks, etc., in and throughout Haiti.

Senator ODDIE. I just want to ask you what the cacos had to do with the adoption of the new constitution?

Mr. EVANS. The cacos?

Senator ODDIE. Yes; do you think they had any influence or anything to do with it?

Mr. EVANS. There was not much talk about the cacos previous to June 1919, and, for instance, when I traveled through the north in April I found little evidence of their existence, which I attribute to the wise and humane policy of Maj. Cole, who sought counsel with our French missionary and used him as an intermediary more than once, but which when suggested to them in January of 1919, when they had so increased in number and power, was tabooed with a sneer and took as an offense, saying he could handle them without the aid of a missionary or Gen. Catlin and his marines.

The arousing of the Haitians and creation of bitterness and hatred against the occupation and Americans confirmed, I should think, whatever cause they were in the north at this time; that the destruction of their Negro communities so as to give away lands all over Haiti to the white foreigners, confirmed in their previous belief that Americans were taking away their country from them, and therefore they were justified in their strong opposition. It has added large numbers to them, as well as create other bands around the outskirts of Port au Prince.

Senator ODDIE. What have the cacos had to do with this corvee system?

Mr. EVANS. Well, while the cacos have had absolutely nothing to do with the corvee system, but stoutly oppose it and denounce the occupation and Americans, the corvee system has much to do with cacoism. The forced labor on the roads, and catching, roping, brutal treatment, and killing, who tried to escape, not merely doubled, trebled, and multiplied many times the number and strength of the cacos by way of recruits, but it was, in the end, the clenching nail and proof positive at last not simply that Americans were taking their lands but had come there to bring them all back to slavery and horrors.

I want to ask you another question with regard to the men who were chosen by the marines?

Marines are chosen by the marine officers, I understand. The officer is strict, firm, yet sympathetic, as a rule he has a good name, with better behavior, and quite humane because of his position as a marine officer. Where, however, the marine officer is prejudiced against the colored, and curses and brutal. He is inferior and copy their white American captain or sergeant goes beyond him, especially when he finds that this is the officer.

Marine officers have confessed to me that when they were inexperienced, somewhat prejudiced, ignorant of the language (in the kind of interpreter), they often misunderstood them, and then.

Because of the language and the Haiti Negro's characteristic excellent results.

The chief of occupation see that not only their marine officers were of the highest American type, and should hold them responsible for the character and accountable for the conduct of the occupation—scandal—and providing the corvée was merely used in the occupation. Men were paid 25 or 30 American cents a day—this was the case.

The trouble is that when you are asked to explain one matter after another about our occupation.

Is it right here? I was told by Haitians and by American residents there that whereas Haitians are kindhearted, they are with regard to brutal treatment that would seem to be their other sympathetic characteristics; that they were tolerant of each other and did not seem to appreciate that the treatment of their animals, brutal in their treatment of their animals, and seemed to have no sensitiveness when the killing of animals was involved. What is the fact about the fact that in many cases, and arising from the lack of training and being deprived of the civilizing and Christianizing influence, criminally neglected by us as Americans and Christians

They are not responsible for this. The Negro fiery feeling would have much to do also with this.

What Americans and America would be like if Christians were of church, schools, and in the homes were withdrawn. Simply, in my judgment, shows what care should be taken by competent marine officers, and after the special training for these important positions of authority they are dealing with you, but I am now trying to get the characterising a great deal of truth about that, but, as stated, if a man is given any position of authority without explaining the responsibility of such, they will abuse their trust and soon lapse into doing this. They are, on the other hand, not only kind, but scrupulously honest, generally speaking, and would not bring Christian lands to shame. Seeing how these folks are vilified, the following from the New York Times for interesting, and may modify somewhat certain views as to the facts:

AMERICANS IN HAITI.

28.

Some time ago I was in Haiti on a riding trip in the interior of the country. I saw the French priests, who were our hosts, all testified to the peacefulness of the people, and I recall in particular the French priests, who said that you could drive a donkey laden with goods from one end of the island to the other in perfect safety.

It is interesting to learn why so many bandits have developed in Haiti under the present occupation. Is it possible that the term bandit has become a nationalistic?

ELSIE CLEWS PARSONS,
Harrison, N. Y.

Senator KING. This was given me as an explanation for the alleged treatment of other Haitians by some of the gendarmes. They said they did not regard it as brutal treatment to strike some one; they did not think it was anything serious at all.

Mr. EVANS. The day before I called on our American marine officer at Riviere, who stated (and by the way lived in the Roman Catholic prison with the European priest) that the day before his gendarme had shot a prisoner. The prisoner had merely attempted to strike the gendarme in his brutal handling of him.

This shows the poor native who receives the blow is not insensitive to the brutal treatment he gets. Prisoners and corvée workers all over Haiti have been shot on showing resentment to the cruel way they are dealt with. The number during the last five years would run up into thousands and would double Gen. Barnett's figures.

Senator KING. To illustrate what I mean, I remember seeing a number of animals being brought in, those little burros heavily laden with wood, and of them, as it was approaching Port au Prince, fell from exhaustion because of the burden it carried—

Mr. EVANS. Yes; I have seen many of them.

Senator KING. There were several in the caravan, and as I remember and a woman came up, and instead of lifting the load they beat the poor animal and the interpreter; and they were very much annoyed and continued to beat the poor animal; and the interpreter insisted that they remove the load and permit the animal to rise, and very reluctantly they did it, and he said that the Haitians were very brutal to animals and, indeed, to each other. They seemed to be insensible to suffering and to the infliction of pain, either to each other or upon animals.

Mr. EVANS. Well, their moral sensibility has not been developed. These finer senses take a long time to develop. What you saw I have seen, but they were somewhat rare cases, I am glad to say. It is the other way with their nature I have most frequently witnessed. These donkeys, and mules, are somewhat tricky and often go down quietly, load, mother, and fall in a stream or river, and but with little weight. I have had this experience myself, in both water and mud.

Roads in Haiti have been wretched and impassable, and it is cruel to drive donkeys heavily loaded over them. The whole country, as you see, people, are in a very backward condition in spite of some very excellent work mentioned. It is a field with splendid opportunity for Christian statesmen as well as teachers and missionaries.

Senator ODDIE. Were you in St. Marc's prison in 1918?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; I spent the closing days of year 1918 and the opening of 1919 in the slave cell of St. Marc's old prison, strictly confined, and alone, not even members or officers of church, daring to come and see me.

Senator ODDIE. Did you see any acts of cruelty and ill treatment in the prison?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; while night after night, as well as during the day, I was always gasping for a breath of air, and expecting every moment at the door of the white, intoxicated, and raging, cursing American marine to be dragged like others before a "firing squad." I could hear the yelling and groans of native prisoners, as well as their being cruelly beaten and pounded by the gendarmes.

Many a time these yells and groans would suddenly cease, and then I would hear whispering, and the sound like if they were carrying out a dead body.

Through the small cross-barred window of my dark cell I could see more lined up about 6 in the morning to have coffee, at times without coffee to eat, and without the least provocation struck a terrible blow with anything the gendarme might have in his hand, until the prisoner was dead. I have seen them fall like logs in the prison yard from pure exhaustion, and the lack of nourishment.

After the coffee and under armed guard of gendarmes I have seen the prisoners marched for corvée work on roads several miles from the town of St. Marc. Between 2 and 3 I have seen them brought back to prison, roughly searched, and whatever they had taken from them; whether these had any pay for their work I don't exactly know, though I think not.

Often they would have to wait two and three hours without a bite of food. On occasions there were no food at all, the American captain having gone out with the keys or drinking.

I saw again and passed by under armed guard of the gendarmes dead men, if not bodies, in the farthest yard perfectly nude and covered with vermin.

prisoners and corvée workers stood and sat around. I saw their heads held under spigots by gendarmes and other. One day I was taken out under gendarme guard, after being hurt, and said American marine officer immediately commy imprisonment condemned as illegal and court decreed etc., for torture and agony suffered, a man just brought attached attended to by the native assistant local doctor. A Haitian had his back beaten into a kind of jelly and inquiring how it happened, was told that this American, Capt. is drunken rages had pounded this man.

Marc, at the home of the family of the late Judge Orius, made testimony that two or three prisoners had been taken from the command of the American captain a mile or so from their own graves, and shot into them. This, with my own experience several times under guard through streets, almost drove

St. Marc in the end of March or beginning of April of 1919, to church service, saw great excitement and persons running, backshacks, closing doors and shutters—as in revolutionary times, a fear, and was told that the gendarmes had just killed a man and toward our church and saw a dead body almost nude and other others, and swayed from one side to the other, limbs in a gruesome sight I ever witnessed, with an armed gendarme on their side.

When I was captured, I felt, to drive the already terror-stricken natives very crazy.

What captain a marine?

Are captains and lieutenants over gendarmes are American captains of our marines?

It was Capt. Fitzgerald Brown in full and complete charge of the marines; the one conspiring with Gen. Williams, Port au Prince captain, and lieutenant Hang (St. Michel) had me arrested, etc.

Do you know of any other cases where the marine officers were very cruel?

It was Capt. Brown's own lieutenant boasted in the train before me at Port au Prince around February or March of 1919, to me and some natives, that he had just come back from hunting and had bagged several, and that as soon as he returned I believe he said—he was going back to bag some more. He spoke as if shooting game and without any apparent com-

He seriously talked to him of a humane method of dealing with the natives, which he admitted to be the right, and he believed to be the only way. He admitted that he was sick and disgusted with the life in Haiti and was quitting to go back to the farm in the Middle West for ever with this kind of life.

In court during the hearing of my case before the Negro court, the same evening he quietly came to the door of my cell. He said, "You are an 'insane fool,' or words to that effect; 'you will

In January of 1918 one of our members, in deep mourning, with me, informed me of her two brothers dragged out from the Cape Haitien for cruel torture, and somewhere had to dig their own graves and were buried by the American marine officers—Maj. Wells or his subordinates for years a deacon and local preacher with us at the Ignoring of and defiance to Haiti court by the American captain (Brown) on being ordered by court to set me immediate adequate protection to life and mission work with military force, compelled me to go at midnight—that is, out from my cell—to go alone in an open boat to sea on the north to face another court there, under the notorious Maj. Wells. When the St. Marc high court declared emphatically in my case, and so-called mandates of Judge Obas issued at the instigation of Maj. Wells and other American marine officers—St. Marc were not valid. (Illegal).

Senator ODDIE. Alone?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; only the Negro judge advocate employed by St. Marc to defend me, without my knowing, at the high court came with me for during the sea voyage, and intending to come all the way to the Cape.

Senator ODDIE. How many miles?

Mr. EVANS. Over 100 miles, probably, altogether, through the interior after a sleepless voyage we both landed the following afternoon at St. Marc. To my astonishment, if not amazement, as soon as Gonaives was reached the judge refused to come a step farther and accompany me through the interior and by land.

The wild and weird stories we heard here about how American marines and their gendarmes were cutting out the tongues of natives, taking them from their sockets, cutting their throats, etc., this educated and intelligent man not only got excited but became hysterical, and with tears he and other Christian natives of Gonaives begged of me not to venture; that I was a dead man. He therefore went back to St. Marc, leaving me alone to face the north and what now seemed positive death in the most barbaric and unchristian method, according to what these natives honestly believed.

On reaching St. Michael on Sunday morning our native members failed to recognize me with a prison-grown beard. When I explained they wept. I went to the gendarmerie headquarters here, when denounced by the apparently educated American marine officer (Lieut. Hange) whom 18 months before Russell had disciplined for drunkenness and other unworthy conduct. Lieut. Gen. Williams and Maj. Wells had reinstated.

With the wildest gestures, clinched fists, and terrible oaths this young-born American officer denounced me, walking and raving like a maniac, with fists up to my face, then turning around to grasp his revolver to curse God and religion and all missionaries, and warned me at the threat of imprisonment, if not death, to preach in the north, and all this in spite of an official letter of Mr. Lansing and the note I bore from Capt. Gilchrist, an American marine officer and chief of the St. Michel lieutenant, stationed at Gonaives, a gentleman and a young, educated and efficient American.

When at last, amid all the threats, I reached the cape and got my bearings, who would testify to the drunkenness of the lieutenant, whom Colonel Wells had reinstated in the interest of military morale and marine efficiency in Haiti? Disciplined, I found that on learning of the action of St. Marc high court (Negro judge) and that I had reached the cape with my witnesses, the conspiracy of the American marine officers alleged of drunkenness and other conduct was reversed to the occupation and United States mission and work in Haiti, and I had fallen and collapsed.

Maj. Wells was indignant that I refused to allow them to withdraw and insisted upon the Negro court therefore to receive my testimony, which I did and signed by myself under oath and witnessed by Rev. De Feu (white) superintendent of the London Wesleyan Missionary Society (British) and also Rev. Elie Marc, Baptist Missionary (white) and French superintendent.

This judge admitted there was no case, and that he was forced to act by American marine officers, as the judge of St. Marc petty court had compelled to condemn me at the instance of Capt. Brown.

Senator ODDIE. Did any of the United States marines at any time take part in the killings of natives?

Mr. EVANS. The lieutenant of St. Marc and the lieutenant of Petit Anse, already referred to. It was, however, common knowledge and spoken of generally among the natives as well as the whites throughout the whole of Haiti.

Capt. Kenny, stationed at St. Marc for some time, and at one time having a terrible reputation for brutality and the killing of natives, appeared at St. Marc to have reformed and greatly changed for the better. He was, however, by his inexperience, his lack of really knowing the true Haitian character, his reasons and excuses, but admitted his error, and now praised the natives as reliable and honorable if properly handled and trusted. Before he was sent to St. Marc, many more, to depend upon interpreters, and all these were aliens from the side of Haiti, with a great deal of jealousy toward Haitians.

Though a Roman Catholic in the States, he showed great appreciation for our mission work at St. Marc and voluntarily gave me the following permit, permitting Mrs. Evans and myself to regularly conduct service in the prison, with some 170 or 200 present and the greatest decorum.

also showed a growing and intelligent interest and as to the Bible and teaching. This was only a few was made captain and succeeded Kenny as chief American e of St. Marc company and my own arrest, etc.

FROM WASHINGTON AND TAKEN FROM L. TON EVANS BY CAPT. BROWN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE;
Washington, October 8, 1917.

PHILANDER C. KNOX,
United States Senate.

I received your letter of October 3, 1917, requesting a letter of L. Ton Evans, of Lansford, Pa., to the diplomatic and United States of America in Haiti. I am in compliance with your request after Rev. Mr. Evans' request, for which purpose I inclose blank forms of application and support rules. In transmitting his application for a passport, Rev. Mr. Evans should refer to this letter. I have the honor of your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 22, 1917.

Consular officers of the United States of America in Haiti.

In the instance of Hon. Philander C. Knox, a Senator of the State of Pennsylvania, I take pleasure in introducing to you L. Ton Evans, of Lansford, Pa., who is about to proceed to Haiti to assist in the Baptist missions.

For Rev. Mr. Evans such courtesies and assistance which you may desire, consistently with your official duties.

I am, your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

COPY OF FEW REFERENCES QUOTED.

From Lloyd-George, British prime minister, written at the time of his leaving Wales for the United States March, 1909, in support of the Baptist Union of Wales:

"I only wish I could comply with request to be at your meetings, as I am trying to keep down my meetings, to reserve all my time for the House of Commons. Here where the real battle will be fought. (This was against Tory Government's sectarianism, which was utterly defeated as far as Wales is concerned under the present and daring championship.) I am, yourself and friend Williams.

D. LLOYD-GEORGE.

From me would be of use in the United States or Canada and I am glad to give it you.

Wales.

Arthur, president of World's Baptist Alliance and late of

Rev. L. Ton Evans, of the Haiti Baptist Mission, is well known as a man of wide experience and varied ability and noble character; his unique work in the black Republic, and no other man in the West Indies with whom he is in helpful touch. He deserves the support of all lovers of humanity and disciples of the Christian

R. S. MACARTHUR.

Secretary of Baptist World (Ky.) and American secretary of the same, writing from Louisville, Ky., in 1909, urging this field

This morning our Louisville pastors' conference heard with deep interest (Theological Seminary) Rev. L. Ton Evans, field secretary of Haiti mission. He unanimously passed resolution urging southern Baptists to take up this close island. Brother Ton Evans is now at dinner with me, and I am touched by his thrilling stories regarding his work. Though a Welshman, he is a true American, full of life and on fire for the Christian cause. He will write to you.

Yours,

J. N. PRE

4. Dr. Cynonfardd Edwards, pastor of largest Welsh and Cong Church in United States, and internationally known and most highly on both sides of Atlantic:

I have known Rev. L. Ton Evans for more than 18 years while in as pastor of First Baptist Church of Edwardsville, and some years in neighbor. He is a born missionary, and wherever he may be, whether land or in Christian country he will find work to do for his Master been a most faithful servant of the Lord in this whole community, and behind him evidences of an active and consecrated life. He is the bravest, and most consecrated Christian advocate of temperance refo ever seen in this State. He has had a very wide experience and has p self equal to every emergency.

Sincerely, yours,

T. C. E.

3. From Dr. F. B. Meyer, secretary of National Federation of Free Council, Christ Church, Westminster, and ex-president of Baptist Great Britain and Ireland:

LONDON, January.

DEAR MR. EVANS: I have read your letter and reviewed the acco-private documents with profound interest and sympathy in all that suffered. I am glad to see that the new Government is likely to special commission to go thoroughly into the whole matter, and w President as Mr. Harding you can almost certainly reckon on a fa
No one is more suited than yourself to conduct the case for the Haiti.

Cordially, yours,

F. B.

4. Hon. T. Ch. Moravia, legation de la Republique d'Haiti at Washington, D. C., under date April 28, 1919, wrote:

I am very glad of your letter and to find you still continue your efforts to secure for Haiti an educational institution and industrial school on a Christian basis and your present endeavor to have the Baptist denomination here to undertake the evangelization of my people.

We profoundly appreciate your interest in and sacrifice for our country. Over the last 25 years that I have been personally privileged to know you, your leadership, your splendid encouragement and support you have rendered Haitian students, and the way you have brought some of our young people and placed them in American schools to be taught.

These years of deep interest and untiring activities for the religious and industrial development of our Republic have won for you, dear people, entire sympathy, implicit confidence, and hearty good will of all our people.

With such intimate knowledge as you have of my country and our confidence and good will, should American Baptists enter the Haiti support your efforts you must succeed with God's help in saving Haiti wishes will ever accompany you.

I am, dear pastor,

Yours, very truly,

Т. Сн. М

5. Dr. Reynold Morgan, major in United States Army, who distinguished himself in France with Canadians, then under Gen. Pershing and has once associated in Christian and temperance work in Pennsylvania some clerical work for Haiti mission:

How can I express to you my admiration for the determined stand you have taken in the defense of the poor defenseless Negroes of H you have manifested in working out this great problem in respect of all true Americans. Your great efforts will become manifested throughout the future generations will give you the credit and praise which you now while this work of yours is in progress. I am at any time you are this way and can spare a few minutes to treasure you in my memory as a great pioneer who has conquered the great wilderness alone and as one who has here ere long multitudes will follow.

Ever,
pupil,

DAVID REYNOLDS MORGAN, M. D., Major of United States Army Reserves.

---

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 2, 1919.

Lebanon, Pa.

Re your letter of July 13. The matters complained of are as this department is able to do so.

A. MITCHELL PALMER.

Complaints of were "illegal arrest, and imprisonment with torture in a small, dark, narrow slave cell of a Christian American citizen, bearing an official credential from Robert Lansing (at request of Senator Philander Knox, State, from Pennsylvania), with request to know the responsibility of the United States Government for the marine officers and the American occupation, who were lame? No word was ever received from Mr. Mitchell

---

ST. MARC, HAITI, WEST INDIES, January 22, 1919.

to the State, Washington, D. C.

I will be surprised, perhaps astonished, to learn that a marine officer, of our American occupation, and in spite of being a citizen, ordained minister of the Gospel and general of the colored Baptists of the States, morally supported by Baptists of America, and though bearing an official letter (given at your own request), I was recently and without being arrested in my own study; marched under armed guard, heavy guard through the public streets, searched, and then cast into a small, dark prison cell, where I was kept 10 days and 12 nights, etc., causing untold physical suffering, lack of food, and the mental strain and terrible agony through fear of being at any moment pounced upon or dragged before a "firing squad" as done in many of the cities, and elsewhere in Haiti, by command of American officers, and again marched through public streets of the city. I was exposed to tropical sun (my shade having been roughly torn from me by a black corporal) and as a criminal, robber, or murderer I was taken to two tribunals, questioned, thence marched back under guard (gendarmes) to my small, almost lightless, airless, prison, where prisoners and criminals all around, yelling and groaning the whole night long and often during the day. A sentry was stationed before my barred door.

When I went into the cell, by the Negro guard of a native straw bed and Protestants of casava and other native food at their own lives, my lot would have been intolerable, with me like others (I saw) weakened, fainted, and dropped in a moment struggling for a breath of air, etc.

The following week I was again marched through the public streets armed guard, this time to the chief tribunal of justice, while the rest of the street fled in fear into their houses and shanties; trembled and saw their American missionary friend weak and wan with haggard appearance and by this, a prison-grown beard passing, followed by the American occupation's armed guard, where the white United States marine captain commanded by the high negro court to bring the prisoner for trial in an "extraordinary session."

No sooner seated than a Negro member of the church, and moved by the white pale face and apparent frail body of her pastor, and her mission allowed him through the streets with tearful eyes and at the risk of life to the tribunal, with hot coffee, milk, and sugar so as to refresh and strengthen which met with the strong approval of most present, and so after the judge that he smiled with a nod for the missionary to help himself.

Another expression of the natives' sympathy with the prisoner and of feeling and hatred against the occupation's tyranny was, that with knowledge, they had engaged a Negro judge advocate to help and defend me, but whom dared not visit my strictly watched and closely confined as nearly all are terror stricken, as set forth in the memorandum of Mr. Lansing and our President last October; and copies of which I sent to Chairman Hitchcock with for members of Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate last November and before I left Washington.

It was shown, of course, that there was no case; that it was mere possibility enough of a conspiracy of white American marine officers in Haiti to drink, encouraged and partly inspired in the States; may be, at the best, of all a determined and malicious attempt to drive me from the country, to crush and murder me, thus bringing all my missionary, Christian, educational and temperance work to an abrupt end. The exposure of such purpose and intention of such methods curb and crush my missionary efforts for the moral, and industrial development of Haiti and Haitians at this court probably the most favorable effect with exactly the contrary feeling against the poor Negro corporal and white United States superior marine officer, who wore a pompous appearance, but somewhat dejected at the abrupt adjournment of the court proceedings.

In my address I first asked the court for an official copy of the proceedings and verdict for my United States Government, which request was immediately granted, then went on to describe the exact nature of the duties in behalf of Haiti and Haitian people during the last 25 years. The plea of the judge advocate which followed, "praising my self-sacrificing and for the Black Republic and the Haitians, stating that Haiti constituted equal liberty to Protestants as to Catholics, which priests from Europe and some marine officers from the United States, seem to be either ignorant to ignore, and that President Wilson was a Protestant and a temperance reformer like the missionary, and supported war prohibition measures with the government; hence it could not be a crime in Haiti to-day, even the American occupation, to be either a Protestant or a temperance reformer which a Haitian, much more an American citizen and a Christian man should be arrested in his own private study without a warrant, detained and cursed, after being publicly paraded through the streets of St. Michel by a heavy armed guard, then at the bidding of an American marine officer of the United States Government cast into a dark, narrow cell, so strictly guarded that not one of his members dared see him, robbed of all liberty, food and light, with his own life in jeopardy every moment of the 13 day nights he remained there pining on the bare floor."

This caused almost a sensation, and the court abruptly adjourned the next morning, which they did (I understand) and declared the whole proceeding of the American occupation's captain illegal, demanded immediate reparation from the missionary with ample reparation.

Though this was Wednesday morning, it was not until Thursday morning and under armed Negro gendarme, that I was again paraded once more through the streets to the bureau of the American occupation, and there told (first) by the marine captain that I was free and given back the articles, photographs, including Mr. Ade's official acknowledgment of my memorandum to President Wilson, and our United States Government's assurance that under the conditions, then directly brought to their attention "were actually at that time being seriously considered," etc.—taken from me, on being searched, in the afternoon, December 28, 1918—just before I was thrust into my and the strong iron bar banged heavily behind me at the very own United States Government's white marine captain! The advocate that evening I was informed of the judgment in my favor against the United States marine officer and all conspired with him, declaring arrest and imprisonment unstable, that I am entitled to substantial indemnity calling for release, and commanding the Haiti Government to give me permission work engaged in, ample protection.

However, and in spite of my pleading for one night's rest, and the high court's decree, I was driven under threat of military American marine officer in a small open boat to the wide route for Gonaives and north to face another court (where official marine conspiracy operated), and on a supposed court of St. Marc had emphatically declared the day beyond so forth.

From the interior of the north to the cape, another white American recently disciplined by Col. John H. Russell for drunkenness, as Lieutenant in another town and over an important second found the St. Marc captain and others in collusion, dared missionaries, denounced Christianity, and in his rage, and led, and before a number of our Christian natives, and irritating him Mr. Lansing's letter and a note from his superior (which letter and note he could not read); again and again and attempting to reach his revolver to shoot me, so under such conditions inflaming the minds of the poor natives, and the United States and everything American, obstacles created in my way to return to Pennsylvania and Kingston, my live.

I profoundly appreciate your own personal service as our Senator, as well as an ex-Attorney General of the United States, without the cooperation of Senator Lodge and others in, not only my own safe return unmolested, but also Government and protection to bring three or four leading and re-think me, whose presence may be essential to me in the States and almost unthinkable, I still maintain (though the late at, the great friend of Haiti and much lamented throughout strongly believes to the contrary, with others throughout that somehow the real and vital facts concerning conditions and murderous treatment of natives, etc., are studiously finally withheld by somebody, or somebodies, from Secretary Lansing, and our President, who repeatedly denounce defunct diplomacy.

My memorandum presented to the President, nothing but the special commission—by Mr. Wilson on his immediate return through the influence of the Senate—will convince Haiti of, and honor of the United States, and restore absolute comment and American people's humane, benevolent, and even those according to our treaty.

Knowing this will reach you safely through our "censor" and cable, and if possible by cable.

Fidelity to Government, country, and flag, and still for Christ, mental distress and souls agony in the States can at this from the following quotations from certain letters which censor and reach his friends, etc.:

L. TON EVANS.

That my dear husband was in prison I could have done some-release. Oh, that awful thought! Yes; awful that he, most self-sacrificing friends of Haiti, who has given his public and its suffering people, should be so cruelly and finally I feel I can never again say the word Haiti without anger piercing through my heart.

Added to his imprisonment? How is he now, and where at became of the impending second trial in the north? He letter from me since he has left, and I have written him every week since he left the States. Shameful conduct! What are the laws trying to do to my dear husband and the faithful and tender my two darling little boys (Adoniram Judson and William Carey in the graph taken from him in prison)?

"Won't you tell him (if you dare visit and talk to him, and if he that I have written him regularly? He must know I can never forget him. Had I known about his case, I fear nothing would have from coming right on. Oh, what I could have spared him, had I immediately—of agony and anguish to him, for I would have gone to limit of the law of our United States to obtain his instant release.

"I shall myself go at once to Washington unless a word is received immediately. Am sure our President and responsible officials in the Government do not know the barbarity and treachery carried on in Haiti! What I expect, however, from the low and degraded character of many of the American officers, gendarmes, and corrupt type of representatives of the country there. Tell dear madam and sisters and all the dear ones to beg them to join in prayer for my dear one's life and liberty. Oh, it is so full to bear all this! God alone can lift this terrible burden from my heart, indeed, from your own hearts as well.

"I feel I can never tell my two boys about this horrible and dreadful treatment of their dear papa in Haiti, and at the hands of white marines of my own American Government and under our own Stars and Stripes in the black Republic!

"If you can possibly see my dear husband, tell him not to worry here in Pennsylvania, but let him know that it will certainly be the happiest moment of our lives, when he is safe back with us here again. I think for a moment the Lord would have him to suffer this cruelty, claiming still his promise—

"The angel of the Lord encampeth around about them that fear him, to deliver them." (Psalms 34, 8.)

Let us, therefore, pray, pray, pray, for the Lord can as miraculously deliver His children to-day from prison as he did Paul.

Again, writing two days later, in answer to a note which had been sent so as to reach her home at Kingston, Pa., and thus elude the strict control of Mrs. Evans says:

"DEAR HUSBAND: It seems years, indeed, have passed in the last three months. So much has happened and events have crowded that I can not imagine I am and what I really am. When your letter of January 9 came I was no longer withold my grief from Martha, my sister, for it seemed that it would really break. Oh, how dreadful to think, Dear Papa, that you would to suffer such humiliation and barbarity at the very hands of your own called American countrymen. Then to think you were alone, strictly isolated and receiving no mail from me, and I have written every week since you left.

"The grace of God alone kept you from desperation and death. So I really wish we had been there with you in Haiti at the time, and to avenge that the two little lads and myself could never have stood it. I fear we would have killed us all. But when I think we were so comfortably in the States at that time, and you, Dear Papa, at the St. Marc, little town, being physically and mentally tortured and all but starved—even now force themselves into a convulsive cry."

The missionary's smuggled note in English and Welsh of January 18, which by a circuitous route at last safely reached Kingston, Pa., was received hastily and tremblingly about midnight of the day the high Negro court commanded his immediate release, and the Haiti Government's protection of life and mission work, but which the white captain of the United States marines, still and immediately in defiance of the high Negro court, and threat of military force, compelled to take—at midnight—a small open boat thrust out to the Caribbean open sea, en route for Gonaives, and thence far interior to face another court in the north, and on so-called cleared by St. Marc court as illegal, etc.

Judge Advocate Stucco, engaged without the missionary's knowledge natives to defend him at the St. Marc high court, accompanied the missionary on that lonely voyage, but on reaching Gonaives the afternoon of next day hearing the wild and weird stories of the natives after landing—"indiscriminate killing" and pulling out of eyes, of tongues, and of throats of Haitians by white marine American officers and their soldiers throughout that section of the interior and north—this educated, ining attorneys, absolutely convinced of the truth of what only excited but at the thought of being butchered and a marine officers and the gendarmerie at their bidding, refused, refused to come a step further, and ere he deserted fate to return to the little boat and back to his wife, this judge advocate and others with tearful eyes im- burn with him and not attempt the journey through the

ISONMENT OF REV. L. TON EVANS, GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT
F BAPTIST MISSION, ST. MARC, HAITI.

was illegally arrested without warrant in his own private visit, on Saturday afternoon, December 28, 1918, paraded police through the public streets of the town, and confined prison cell for 13 days and 12 nights, not only so as to liberty and public rights as an ordained minister and well as an American citizen, but further with malicious cal harm, repudiate, crush, if not murder, as repeatedly ened by one Capt. Brown, and a demand for heavy made on Saturday, December 28, 1918, at his private Mme. Orius Paultre and family (widow of Judge Orius Haiti, and while he was engaged at the time in the dis- missionary and pastor, preparing on the typewriter his church and mission stations.

he missionary on thus being suddenly arrested by the (ive police) to show his authority by way of warrant or the cause or causes of such strange procedure on the aid Brown, the white American officer, was not only out afterwards construed by above captain as constituting on against public authority on the part of the Baptist he way and under arrest and proceeding to the head- own, American officer in Haiti, another request of the m it now dawned he might be taken to prison—namely, he key of the private study, which had been locked—and hopes for distribution on Sunday to the officers of the passed, and so as to return it to Mme. Orius, was also further construed by Capt. Brown as a criminal attempt hands of public authority. The same gendarme, who and as if under the influence of Taffia, had amid the native soldiers or police violently taken the umbrella onary, and thus exposed him to the burning tropical sun. the headquarters of this white American captain under these two charges were excitedly read to him by above med under the influence of liquor, then the missionary ed on account of his devotion to Haiti and his efforts to ly, morally, and industriously develop its 2,000,000 Negroes. e would degrade him lower than the lowest "nigger"; and missionary he, captain, would have him repudiated and pointing repeatedly to his revolver excitedly added, "The missionary was dumbfounded, for this officer had eted toward him entirely the reverse.

ary was sent under same armed guard to prison, where he ything taken from him, such as official letters from the Department re official investigation conducted by the ment into alleged misconduct cruelties, and other crimes officers and gendarmes in Haiti. A photograph of the two little boys, as well as that of President Wilson—in vere on the missionary when arrested, were taken from into prison.

re this search was through the missionary was cast into a most lightless and airless, the small door banged and iron dous force as if to say, there he is safe and shall never help these people any more. An armed Negro was kept marching day and night before the door. Thus for 13 days and 12 nights the missionary laid on the bare floor of cement surrounded by some 100 prisoners with their yells and groans day and night when set upon provocation and half killed and sometimes actually murdered by certain of Negro officers, and in fear every moment the light flashed upon his window he heard the tramp of the feet of the armed gendarme, or the drawing back of the iron bar of his prison cell door, that they had come for him before the "firing squad," like the British nurse, Edith Cavell, for whom he was taken by the Germans.

STANFORD LIBRARIES

7. On Tuesday the missionary was led through the public streets, under guard, to court of justice (Negro) and then to the court of public opinion, both of which being under the influence and dominion of American officers, and dreaded white officers of the gendarme in Haiti. He was charged under the two aforesaid charges preferred against him by the white captain in spite of his own evidence to the contrary. The missionary was taken back to his cell, where he would have starved but for the fruit brought to him stealthily by the Negro prison officers (and by Negro Catholics and Protestants) when the American white captain was to be seen about.

8. On the following Tuesday, January 7, 1919, pale, haggard looking, a prison-grown beard, Missionary L. Ton Evans was again paraded through the streets to the high court (Negro), where he was to be tried at a special extraordinary session, the case having created not only such a deep interest but caused a profound sensation. This court went carefully into the charges preferred of rebellion and attempt to escape, which, after all, was an occasion or pretense for this captain and other white American officers in Haiti, who were in some cases Catholics and rum drinkers and conspiring maliciously to destroy the Christian influence and great religious and moral usefulness of the Baptist missionary, and to absolutely crush the influence of the Haiti constitution granting the same equal freedom and rights to Protestants as to Catholics; and that a very strict prohibition had been claimed throughout the Haiti Republic, printed in all the papers in both French and English and posted at every hotel and liquor store, signed by Captain Evans in supreme command of all American forces in Haiti (both marine and gendarmes), and as direct representative of the United States Navy, forbidding, prohibiting under very heavy penalty (though not at present enforced) the sale of liquor to any officer or gendarme in uniform, etc.

9. After a very careful examination of witnesses and a thorough investigation into all charges, and the so-called mandate from the court in Haiti and alleged defamation of a white officer seen drunk on duty, the court found certain officers on this account, and owing to the fact that Col. Evans was compelled as the officer in supreme command to exercise rigid discipline in violation of the spirit and letter of the prohibition order of other officers in the interest of American occupation, efficiency, and to secure respect and influence from United States Government in Haiti, the court in question made therefore the following declaration in their verdict:

- (a) There was absolutely no case. All charges had failed against the missionary.
- (b) That the arrest without mandate was both illegal and unwarranted.
- (c) That the missionary must be at once liberated and given the full freedom of the Republic in life and labor there; and
- (d) Further, he was entitled on demand to the most substantial compensation.

The missionary has been suffering ever since his confinement, lying in bed, and mental agony he has gone through with when exposed to bodily punishment day and night, and taken before a firing squad by a Negro gendarme, and the command of white American Government officer in Haiti.

B.W. THYN, WYOMING, PA., October 1919

DEAR SENATOR HARDING: Accept sincere thanks for self and nearly helpless Negroes of Haiti (who, sad to say, have been worst exploited, brutally butchered under our "American occupation," especially the last few or more years, than ever in time of German filibusters, etc.) for your description, only far too mild.

For over two years I have placed information with President and Secretary of State and Senator Hitchcock, but officials have either withheld or President, Secretary of State, etc., have proved blind, adamant, if man disgraced, exactly as stated in yesterday's Ledger.

United States Government, under our President Wilson, for imprisonment, etc., decreed against United States and by the high Negro court of St. Marc (Haiti), who felt all upon the Haiti Negro Republic that a white American missionary should be pining in a French old slave cell, white officials of United States of America to at once trial, etc.

Daniels in March and again last week, and unless immediate and commission appointed, then am coming to Marion, with full, complete account of the "infamous rape," which, if true that it emanated from Hon. Frank Roosevelt, prospects for any responsible office under our American Vice Presidency.

Washington, D. C., this afternoon. Your letter may find me Sixth and Pennsylvania Avenue.

known until I see what Secretary Daniels does on this Mine is the case of the American Edith Cavell, the from the jaws of death under God by the Negro high ate, illustrious friend, ex-President Theodore Roosevelt come to you and Republican Party immediately I failed, etc., in adjusting Haiti's wrongs.

BWTHYN, WYOMING, PA., November 9, 1920.

ING.

the United States.

cr: Heartiest congratulations, with the millions more unheard of victory in the annals of this great Republic. cor, physically and spiritually sustain and signally blessing of office, as Chief Executive of this mighty Nation.

sent administration after years of incompetency and heartless betrayal of Haiti as well as the honor of this own clarion call—has awakened to the seriousness of the the Black Republic, and have appointed a Navy court, has again demand that I should be asked to accompany attorney, not merely so as to prove the cases I definitely nation's officers to have committed, and those mentioned letter to Judge Advocate Dyer, October 30—but also to y of missionary superintendent, etc., among them for s—to ass't the natives, to place their grievances, produce the judge advocate to the court.

ttled to this assistance and protection, otherwise I fear tion, their brutal treatment, rape of their constitution, by United States marines, and their gendarme officers, tion, fear, and hatred they will not feel free to come nistration's side will be cared for.

sibly be done, then rather than the Haitians, should be Navy court, and present limited and of necessity one-line, not to say either satisfactory to the United States ican people, I respectfully urge, that you—ate statement to this effect, that a congressional commisuplated, and a thorough and complete investigation will of this shall be sent to, and at once be published in EngMonitor and other Haiti papers.

nity to every Haitian, from the President down, to the and Catholics alike, and of all shades of politics to testify States Government will provide an able attorney, assisted ble them to gather reliable evidence all over the Republic, pper order before the congressional commission.

4. That every witness shall be protected, and necessary expense will be incurred on account of distance to where the commission will sit, given and paid by the United States.

5. Also, every Haitian confined in the prisons of the Republic on suspicion shall, on the coming of the said commission, be allowed his freedom. Am sure this will be profoundly appreciated at the present and as coming from the United States President elect, in fact, it will be to them with a new confidence and hope for themselves and the future of the Negro Republic and actually look upon the recent election here as proof, and, indeed, yourself as the savior raised of God at this time to deliver the country.

Am sending the inclosed copy of letters to Major Dyer and Secretary to Senator Lodge, and am sure he (latter) would fall in with something of the lines I am here suggesting. It will be a master stroke as far as peace is concerned.

Your letter to us as ministers re the enforcement of the constitutional benefits of temperance to our American homes, etc., was most thoroughly satisfied the most ardent temperance and Christian male and female, throughout the commonwealth, hence most heartily by all of us as your supporters and admirers.

It is significant that the President of the greatest and most civilized Christian Republic in the world, as well as the prime minister of the most democratic, and progressive Christian empire, should be both so loyal Christians and Baptists at this time in history, and so as to be reconstruction not only of America and Britain but of the world. God the speedy healing of humanity's wounds.

Should you go to Panama from Texas, I sincerely trust you can call, either in going down or on return voyage, in Haiti. Am sure to receive, in spite of all, a royal welcome from these misunderstood and misrepresented but kind-hearted people. In such case, if not there with the mission, I would certainly like to join the party and act as guide, etc.

With best wishes, and hoping you can even bring influence to bear on administration so as to secure through the present court most independence, and by my presence with an attorney prevent tampering for political purposes with some of the leading Haitians.

Fraternally and most heartily, yours, for Christ, Haiti, and humanity.

MISSIONARY ON ISLAND PROTESTED TO WILSON AND LANSING IN 1918—FINDS NO ACTION.

AMERICAN MARINES AND OFFICIALS TREAT NATIVES LIKE DOGS—PREACHER IN JAIL—HIS APPEAL TO AUTHORITIES TO END CRUELTY MEETS WITH NO REPRISAL.

[Special dispatch to the New York Herald.]

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE
Washington, D. C., Oct. 10.

For almost two years the Wilson administration deliberately has withheld full and accurate information of deplorable conditions brought about in the Republic of Haiti by the American occupation.

The evidence shows clearly that the slaughter of 3,250 natives by the U. S. Corps in the last two years, which was admitted officially only after the Harding laid bare the Haitian scandal, is due chiefly to the strong American feeling engendered in the island republic by the methods of the occupation, which has destroyed any vestige of independence there.

These conditions are described by an eye witness who is now in Venezuela, ready and eager to give his testimony, already long in possession of the attention of the Navy and Navy Departments, to the naval court of inquiry named by Secretary Daniels after the attention of the court was brought to the small the little Black Republic by Senator Harding.

This man is the Rev. Dr. L. Ton Evans, a Welshman by birth, with the recommendation of David Lloyd-George and from prominent American circles, including the late Theodore Roosevelt. He is a naturalized American, 25 years had been engaged in Baptist missionary work in Haiti.

FIRST REPORT MADE IN 1918.

and correspondent has in his possession documents which first brought this deplorable state of affairs in Haiti to the Department in the fall of 1918, more than three years since the marines were landed there. Other documents show the neglect of the Navy Department and other branches of the Government there. Absolutely nothing has been done, so as to better these conditions, and a specific request made for an unbiased nonmilitary and nonpolitical commission to investigate the wrongs under American occupation was ignored after the "misuses" to do something about it.

Secretary Daniels and others representing the administration soon as any irregularities in Haiti or any complaints of neglect or attention are disproved. Dr. Evans came to this country in 1918, bringing to the attention of President Wilson and the Government in Washington this state of affairs in the island Republic. These conditions would be permitted to continue if once responsible Government officials in Washington.

LETTER FROM STATE DEPARTMENT.

Letter showing that he laid the facts before the State Department:

WASHINGTON, November 2, 1918.

Dr. Evans, Kingston, Pa.

Dr. Evans has received your memorandum upon conditions in Haiti No. 1, addressed to the President of the United States, and that it is receiving the serious consideration of this department and the various other branches of the Government concerned. We are pleased to communicate with you at a later date after the matter contained in your memorandum is terminated.

Your servant, for the Secretary of State,

ALVEY A. ADEE,
Second Assistant Secretary.

that the "careful study" given to the matters mentioned in the memorandum consisted of pushing it into some already overfull file and forgetting all about it, if, indeed, it was not Department waste basket which is cleaned out by the mentioned by Assistant Secretary Adees letter of November 1, 1918, in person by Dr. Evans to an official of the State Department, then in charge of the Latin-American section of the Department, especially detailed to handle Haitian affairs. The facts were laid before Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska, then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Dr. Evans has endeavored repeatedly, but without success, to recognize the situation in Haiti. He has several times written Secretary Daniels, his last letter being dated as late as October that a mere naval board of inquiry never will be able to get to the bottom of the American people. He said to-day that the American military and the so-called gendarmes—officers in the regular white men from the States, have so overawed the natives that they are afraid of their own shadows in criticism of their white superiors or of any of the in the pay of the white officers. In the state of affairs he told about his own arrest on trumped-up charges of a conspiracy formulated by a white captain of gendarmes, he had made a personal protest in the private office of the commanding officer of the marines, because of the bad treatment of the natives in a certain village by his mode of command. He was brought before the high court it was at once dismissed on a scintilla of evidence, and the officer who made the arrest was put in a vile native jail for thirteen days with the

STANDARD LIBRARY

Negroes, was informed abruptly there was no authority in the first arrest of Dr. Evans. Nevertheless on his release he again was ordered by the same officer under threat of rearrest to go in an open boat a long distance to another point on the island to face again the same officer which again turned out to be groundless in every particular.

It is the first belief of the native population, as the result of the occupation since July 28, 1915, that the United States is trying to re-establish the system of slavery which their forefathers knew. Dr. Evans believes at high time the American people were fully informed of what is being done by their Government in Haiti in order that this helpless little Black Republic should be the sort of civilizing and humanizing it deserves.

Dr. Evans says the amazing number of indiscriminate killings of natives, of which the Marine Corps officials have confessed and which is the subject of the present investigation is but a small part of the case.

More important than anything else, in his opinion, is the terrible blow given to American prestige not only in Haiti but elsewhere in the Western Hemisphere by the American countries, to which stories of the American military men getting abroad, despite every effort on the part of the military overlords, of everything unfavorable to their régime from reaching unfriendly channels.

DOCUMENTS REVEAL SCANDAL.

The New York Herald is able to present herewith extracts of the documents in the possession of various departments laying bare the whole Haitian scandal and which will be brought to the attention of the Daniels inquiry board as submitted by Dr. Evans himself. Dr. Evans is waiting in Washington for the committee to pose and is willing and anxious to appear before this committee or before that may be named and to go with the committee to Haiti. He expects to be able to counsel to assist him in presenting the case in an orderly manner.

Dr. Evans, in a memorandum submitted to the State Department, in consultation with Senator Hitchcock and which bears the date of October 21, 1918, makes it clear there is no animus behind his charges.

At the beginning of this memorandum Dr. Evans assures the President of the State Department of the "genuine gratitude shared by every loyal and patriotic Haitian native, both educated and uneducated alike, because Admiral Sigsbee landed his American marines at Port au Prince, thus rescuing them from the iron grasp and selfish greed of Germans, who for years have financially and murderously exploited them by aid of Berlin money and ammunition."

SUMMARY OF THE CHARGES.

Here briefly is a summary of the charges quoted verbatim from Dr. Evans' memorandum of October 21, 1918, as submitted to the State Department in order to make his statement more impressive these charges were embodied in an affidavit sworn to by Dr. Evans before a notary in Washington, which is in the possession of the New York Herald correspondent:

"1. The forcing of a new constitution upon the people under military occupation of armed gendarmes (native police) of the American occupation of the island of June last, so as to put in a clause in favor of the white man and to accomplish this by methods which have been declared in the United States and all civilized countries to be both illegal and fraudulent. The Haitian people, ignorant and terrified, connected with the Government of American occupation by fear and trembling, were compelled to vote or be dismissed or imprisoned if they refused, very aptly described these humiliating processes as 'the dagger at the very heart of our own Negro Republic.'

"2. The closing on two separate occasions of the senate and chamber of deputies at Port au Prince; the turning out by military forces under the American occupation of the Haitian people's only representative bodies and the closing of the doors again them, just as the late Czar did with the Russian Duma, and while these officials were openly friendly to the United States and favorable to our American occupation, merely, it is said, because they were opposed as illegal and unconstitutional a change of what they considered the vital clause of their constitution—namely, the clause which withholds ownership of land from the white foreigner and the speculator. Haitians who declared this to be illegal are said to have been either driven out of the country or imprisoned or both, in spite of the fact that under the old Haitian or colored, could hold real estate in Haiti by becoming enough force and with much brutality by ignorant, immoral, es in the employment of the American occupation of innoeven native preachers and members of their churches, all habitations or from their work and cruelly roping them arching them as African slave gangs to prison. The writer itnesses on a Sunday morning in June last to the treat-prisoners who had undergone this experience by the occu-s which had gone unhealed for many weeks and months.

 doctors said these cases were very frequent.

natives in large numbers in their homes and on the small m work on new roads under armed gendarmes for merely n cents) a week, without furnishing them with food."

ALL PROTESTS ARE IGNORED.

State Department, Dr. Evans finally turned his attention nt and to Secretary Daniels, the official in control of the who have been acting jointly with the State Department ation. He wrote to Mr. Daniels on March 27, 1920, calling hat he had apprised the State Department in the fall of g on in Haiti without anything being done about it. He teen months before he had suggested to Mr. Adee the biased commission to inquire into the situation and was at the department was "seriously considering the grave n his memorandum. In the same letter he told Secretary had promised to let him know the result of his investi-done so.

ld correspondent quotes the following extracts from this Dr. Evans to Mr. Daniels on March 27 last:
 ve elapsed since the receipt of the above assurance from vord from our United States Government.

however, conditions have been allowed to grow rapidly offering, oppressed, enraged, and terror-stricken people, he riots between the marines and gendarmes, not to say the rring raids by the so-called bandits, or cacos, who are gth and numbers and who are at the same time gaining more and more of the moderate, intelligent, educated, and s, who have lost respect for our American occupation.

e, therefore, on the wane and our prestige and power all ives and integrity as a democratic, civilized, not to say pected and impugned. It is no wonder that a staff cor-w York World, who visited Haiti a little over a month umbered that there are many educated and substantial citie who are no more cacos than Henry Cabot Lodge is a one the less desire a complete change of administration present occupation."

March 27 Dr. Evans has had other correspondence with the subject of Haiti, and up to the last few days he to have faith that a proper inquiry would be made and ed. He sent Mr. Daniels, under date of October 5, 1920, of the whole matter.

LEJEUNE'S INQUIRY BELITTLED.

ans said:

reading of the quotation from the official statement or Lejeune's hurried visit to Haiti, after my letter to you fail even to touch the vital points. I candidly state that cious from the commencement, three years ago, to keep politics in missionary and Haitian matters, and if I had ong criticism and the severe condemnation of the Presiof the Navy, still firmly believed that you both sincerely
 e past and present wrongs of this administration in poor ly, after reading this morning's statement, have immediately given a startling reply to the Associated Press and at once my steps to Marlon and the headquarters of the Republican Party. I was pointedly convinced that further efforts on the part of Haiti and myself were utterly futile and a mere waste of time."

STANFORD LIBRARIES

The New York Herald correspondent has before him a complete and detailed and painstaking statement of Haitian conditions brought up and mailed to Secretary Daniels on October 5, 1920, by Dr. Evans. It contains upward of 6,000 words. It will be undoubtedly placed in evidence on Mr. Daniels's naval board, and if any attempt is made to suppress it will be brought to light before a congressional investigation committee.

In the meantime the New York Herald presents herewith some of the startling passages from it:

"Is it not sad, indeed, to have to state that after nearly five years can occupation in Haiti and under our Democratic administration the little black Republic sincerely and firmly believe that the real United States Government and the American people there is to recognize slavery in their midst once more; to abrogate and annul the work of l'Overture (who is their Washington representative) just exactly nineteenth century Napoleon tried to be the tyrant of France and years the German Kaiser attempted to be the ruler of the world?"

Dr. Evans then described how he hastened to write to President Wilson to his personal friend, ex-President Roosevelt, from Haiti in June, complaining the terrible blow to American prestige in Haiti and throughout America that was resulting from the actions of the American marines. It was as the result of this letter that ex-President Roosevelt stated in his message to Congress in October of the same year in his criticism of Wilson's 14 points that "the Negro Republic of Haiti is nonexistent under the Democratic administration in spite of their treaty."

Dr. Evans here tells an almost unbelievable story, which he is prepared to substantiate in every particular, of how he was arrested on a charge by a drunken white captain of gendarmes employed under the command of the Marine Corps, paraded through the streets, and openly insulted by a white officer. So far as he is able to learn, although he was refused the benefit of the charges against him, the basis of the whole conspiracy was the determination to punish him for pleading in his capacity as white man for the natives and against certain methods and the immoral and brutal behavior of Americans connected with the occupation.

He was confined in a filthy native jail and forced to bathe naked with male and female prisoners by orders of this white captain. He said that the judges and other officials whom he knew personally were eager to condemn him but were prevented under threats of death. He was accused by the white officer with resisting arrest when he asked for a copy of the charges and official summons or any other official authority for the action.

CHARGED WITH ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE.

When he asked permission to give to a native the key to a building used in his missionary work a charge of attempting to escape was made against him by the same white officer. He was finally released by the court and immediately taken by force by the same white captain to the Haitien, in the extreme north, by night in a small boat in the open Sea for another trial.

Dr. Evans said he was released on the statement of the court that there were no charges against him.

The so-called voting by the people of Haiti on the constitution proposed in advance for them and rammed down their throats by the Wilson administration is ridiculed by Dr. Evans. He thus describes it to Secretary Daniels:

"The procession of voters (!) resembled funerals in their silence, and mournful character as these people passed along like sheep into the jaws of justice (?), which were turned that day all through the country into slaughterhouses. Each was especially guarded by the gendarmerie. For the sake of giving a little color to the affair and thus perfecting the farce, a commissaire, or dummy officer, sat in the chair by the side of the white officer."

"When entering the court a small white paper stamped with the word 'Police administration' and bearing date, June 11, 1918, and also the word 'oui' (yes) was placed in the trembling hand of the native. He was then motioned—no word being spoken or question being asked—to the American officer in supreme charge, with a native dummy as a bundle of pink papers bearing the French word 'non' (no) tightly remained tied together on the table. Thus terrorized these people sorrowfully and slavishly submitted, as might be expected in from small villages guarded and closely watched."

REVELATIONS ON HAITI PROMISED.

MOVES TO DELAY EXPOSURES UNTIL AFTER ELECTION——AMERICAN-MADE CONSTITUTION FORCED DOWN THROATS

(Special dispatch to the New York Herald.)

NEW YORK HERALD BUREAU,
Washington, D. C., October 25.

High officials of the Wilson administration to smother true conditions in Haiti under the American occupation failure. Even their immediate efforts to postpone until tomorrow which is sure to follow an unbiased investigation ought.

Inquiry headed by Rear Admiral Mayo, which was apparently Secretary Daniels, after Senator Harding first directed the inquiry to results of the American occupation of Haiti, is want of alacrity in proceeding with the investigation—it will be particularly significant, in view of the fact that it is being put off.

They have evidence in their possession which widens the net beyond the narrow limits to which Secretary Daniels confined. The special province of the Naval Board, by the order creating it, is an investigation of the killing by the hands of 3,250 natives during the last two years, already admitted by the Marine Corps. Terrible as this is in itself, the incident in the forthcoming exposure of the manner in which the administration has destroyed the independence of this country to be its best friend and the protector of small and weak where.

A special committee to-day employed a lawyer who will assist Dr. Evans, who was shown in the New York Herald's dispatches to have tried for nearly two years to induce the Government to set up an unbiased nonmilitary board of these deplorable acts to light. It is the purpose of Dr. Evans and the committee to prevent any further suppression of the facts by any other board which the present administration may attempt to meet the charges of Senator Harding.

RECORD SHOWS RULE OF FORCE.

Today that the acts of the Wilson administration in Haiti, the original cordiality of the natives toward the Americans, are in a large measure, if not wholly, responsible for a situation which may permit the Navy Department after five years of "justification" to offer some semblance of justification for the such large numbers.

Now comes to light that the "indiscriminate killing" of many high officials of the Wilson administration, was merely the inevitable result of the following acts of the American occupation:

the throats of the unwilling natives of a constitution of this country by the Wilson administration and taken by the same methods adopted by the marine officers in charge that the natives had by their own ballots indorsed this constitution, which the natives did not want, because it specifically killed the clause in their own constitution against foreigners purchasing lands from the ignorant natives.

3. The actual voting on the new constitution with American officers at each ballot box with the bundles on the table in front of them, containing ballots marked "Yes" and the other containing ballots marked "No." The officials handed only ballots marked "Yes" to the ignorant natives, the bundles marked "No" remaining unopened on the table.

4. The cruel and inhuman treatment of natives in prisons presided over by white officers.

5. The imprisonment of Dr. L. Ton Evans, a white American minister who had preached to the natives for 25 years, by white officers, on trumped-up charges. Dr. Evans had merely sought to protest in an orderly fashion against the action of other white American officers in command of gendarmes. These officers were setting a bad example to the natives, by openly displaying immoral habits, in various towns and villages throughout the island.

6. The actual expulsion by the American marines of the Senate and the House of Deputies because they objected to the "rape" of their Government by the constitution by the Wilson administration, which professed to represent a civilized country on the globe, headed by the author of the doctrine of "manifest destiny," and the locking of the doors of the House of Parliament on occasions by American officers when the native senators and representatives sought to return and exercise their constitutional functions.

CONSTITUTION WRITTEN IN UNITED STATES.

In the article published in the New York Herald this morning a complete and brief portion of the suppressed evidence which Dr. Evans in the last year has laid before the State and Navy Departments was printed.

It now seems that the so-called constitution that the Wilson administration foisted on the terrorized natives in a manner by which they sought to appear that the Haitians wanted it—when the native efforts at independence, as well as now, showed that they did not want it—was actually written in Washington, probably by Franklin D. Roosevelt, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy and now vice-presidential candidate for the Democratic Party.

Critics of these inhuman and un-American methods of the Wilson administration in Haiti are prepared to produce eyewitnesses to this destruction of Haitian independence. They have not the slightest hesitation in issuing to the New York Herald a challenge to Franklin D. Roosevelt, who was in authority of the Navy Department at the time these political crimes were committed, to deny that this constitution was prepared in Washington and that there was every intention on the part of the Navy Department that natives of Haiti must be "induced" to adopt it. In fact, there is in the possession of the Republican national committee to show that Roosevelt has openly boasted that he wrote it himself.

THE HAITIAN KILLINGS.

SENATOR M'CORMICK SAYS THERE WILL BE A REAL INVESTIGATION.

To the NEW YORK HERALD:

I have just seen in your issue of Monday the Washington dispatch of the 22nd. It will not meet the needs of justice or satisfy the American people to make any other inquiry than that now being conducted by a board of officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy and subject to his orders and to the President, who, with the Secretary, of course, is ultimately responsible for whatever may have been done in Haiti.

A committee of Congress must review all the charges made and a report of evidence to be submitted to the board of inquiry, as it must hear all the charges and any new evidence which may be adduced after it shall have been provided for the appointment of the congressional committee.

MEDILL M'CORMICK

CLEVELAND, OHIO, October 26.

by to President-elect, Warren G. Harding, national Republican chairman Henry Cabot Lodge, of Senate Foreign Relations, as the United States Congress.]

HAITI SCANDAL AND AN EARNEST PLEA FOR A NONPARTISAN THE NEWLY APPOINTED NAVY COURT OF THE PRESENT ADMIN-

is of the opinion that the official number given out by American marines and their gendarmes in the open about one-half actually killed by the American occupable violence, brutality, and murder under the corvee (by American occupation) and taken out from their prison and silence of the night at Port au Prince, St. Marc, Cape Republic, as natives, if given a chance and with proper ent protection, are only too eager to testify.

CENTRAL UNION MISSION,
Washington, D. C., October 30, 1920.

M. C., Court of Inquiry of American Occupation in Haiti.
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

onished and concerned to learn from an article in the yesterday, the 29th instant, of a statement attributed to dated calling me as a witness before the court of inquiry, nal knowledge of the incidents referred to, but had agreed ons in Haiti who had supplied me with information, and persons would be examined.

I have no personal knowledge of unjustifiable acts of ice perpetrated against citizens of Haiti or unjustifiable to their property by marines is, of course, wholly untrue. recall that in the several interviews I have hitherto had dated I was prepared to testify from personal knowledge dable acts of oppression, violence, and assaults to citizens amage and destruction to their property by gendarmes and of United States marines during the American occupasmuch as a number of necessary native witnesses, both corroborate my testimony were known in some instances an names and others only in the localities in which they y should be taken in Haiti, where these crimes and atroci-may be no possible ground of misunderstanding now, I ness to testify in Haiti, to establish from my own personal g specific acts:

uring the last week of June and the first week of July, City of a Baptist missionary and superintendent inspect- is in that section, I saw a number of natives whose arms the flesh reduced to jelly as the result of having been roped is slaves to prisons and for work on the outlying roads.

eing attended by a white doctor of the occupation forces, o I can identify if still in the service, who stated to me y called upon to render treatment of this kind to these and that their condition was an outrage and a shame.

ng my stay at Jacmel that one-half (or so) of the male Church were absent from holy communion and in hiding ain districts in fear and terror of the cruelties of the ed and imprisoned natives, subjecting them to the grossest d to produce as witnesses before the court the pastor of ct and two or more of the officers of that church.

District of Leogane, on the last Sunday of June, 1918, old service at the Baptist mission in company with the aw men and women stopped by gendarmes and turned eir place of divine worship. At this time I further saw 10 natives roped tightly together and marched like slave k recognized members of our mission and our native

I inquired from the corporal in charge what crime these men had committed and he answered nothing, but that he was determined to rope them together and take them away. I later appealed to the white lieutenant of the United States marines, over the gendarmes for that section, and demanded that a hearing be made, the natives be at once released, and the black corporal dismissed. The lieutenant promised to make the investigation, but never did so. I will testify, if given an opportunity, the pastor of this mission, with several officers of the church, to corroborate this statement.

4. During my imprisonment at St. Marc prison, in the Artibonite section, between December 28, 1918, and January 9, 1919, I saw the grossest brutality practiced upon native prisoners and women.

I saw them repeatedly set upon and beaten in the jail yard and by the gendarmes, whose captain and lieutenant were members of the Marine Corps. I have seen a number of them beaten into insensibility, felled like logs on the hard floor; others lying dead in the jail yard, occupied by prisoners, and the bodies remained two and three days, naked and covered with flies and eating vermin. I frequently heard in my own cell, night after night, the groans of native prisoners who were constantly beaten and atrociously treated.

5. During my imprisonment I also saw each morning probably 1000 or more natives, less, ill treated and compelled, under armed gendarmes, to march to the prison, several miles away, often without food other than a little coffee, there to be put under supposed corvée system.

These men would be returned in the afternoon, searched and roughly treated, and made to wait hours in some cases before the first bite of food be given to them. I have seen on many occasions as the result of this a number of prisoners fall to the ground from sheer weakness and exhaustion. On every occasion, the opportunity, I will produce a number of native prisoners (if still living) to corroborate these statements.

6. On January 9, 1919, the day I was discharged from prison and was being taken into the cell in a condition of insensibility, and whose back had been beaten into a jelly. He was attended by a native assistant doctor of the American occupation, who stated that this man had been beaten by the white captain, one of his drunken rages. If given an opportunity, I will produce the doctor (if not shot) and several native witnesses who saw the man in the condition described.

7. That if afforded an opportunity, I will testify also to indignities and cruel treatment accorded me during my imprisonment—and by this captain of the United States marines. I would have starved to death but for the fact that food smuggled into my cell by prisoners and natives on the outside.

8. While I was at St. Marc, about March, 1919, an old native was executed by being ordered or burned to death, with hut destroyed, in Mme. Orius's house. Three natives alleged to be implicated in the crime were arrested and imprisoned. Several nights later these three men were taken out of prison at night, being first compelled to dig their graves, then were shot by the gendarmes in the presence of their white captain, and their dead bodies fell into the hands of the natives they themselves had made. I did not witness the murders myself, as I was in the place in the dead of night, and everybody in a state of fear and trembling. I was staying at the home of Mme. Orius and children and saw the execution and horror produced among the family and in town, and heard details of the graves.

9. On or about the second Sunday of April, 1919, and while on my way from church at noon, I heard commotion and cries in St. Marc streets. The gendarmes (of the United States marines) had shot two men. Immediately on my returning toward the church, I saw a dead man, naked, carried along the public streets on a sack by four natives, with an armed gendarme by their side. The body was rolling from side to side, and was the most ghastly sight I ever witnessed. The purpose of thus carrying this dead body was to further terrify the people, who were already hiding and in dread of their lives.

10. That at St. Raphael, about April, 1918, while as superintendent among our Baptist churches of North Haiti, I found the white lieutenant of the gendarmes in charge of American occupation at that point, a United States marine in a shocking, drunken condition, and was told many stories of the Christian natives and others throughout the village of his intemperate and scandalous conduct. I am prepared to give name of the lieutenant will produce witnesses, both white and native, to corts.

1919, at Cape Haitien (in extreme north of Republic) I per-number of marines in broad daylight engaged in open orgies men in the streets. I saw them enter huts for immoral r services held in the churches of the cape, several of the ne Corps have confessed again and again concerning the inking going on, and awful temptations by-way of immorn boys had to contend with in Haiti.

the American occupation I have witnessed at Port au Prince e Republic drunkenness and dissipation on the part of our
s. If given an opportunity I will corroborate this state-both white and colored.

suggest that the court summon Dr. Samuel Inman, execu-missionary cooperative committee of Latin America, at en visited Haiti last year in behalf of both his own com-Union Home Missions' Council of North America (New vitation, and for the express purpose of a careful survey establishment of religious and educational work in the black refore personal knowledge of the very low moral standard es, and as stated in more detail in his able and informing situation in Haiti in this month's number of the Journal tions, published in New York.

night to my home at Wyoming, Pa., where a telegram or and shall hold myself in readiness to respond to your sum-iti and testify before the court to the foregoing facts.

e, that due arrangements for my transportation to Haiti ranged by you, and that upon arrival there full authority given me so as to locate and produce the witnesses to cory.

her advices,
uly,

L. TON EVANS.

WYOMING, PA., November 2, 1920.

ELS,
Navy, Washington, D. C.

ANIELS: An investigation into Haiti affairs such as you ple of the United States may know as well as yourself as y the whole truth concerning the Haitian activities of the s, everything, the good and bad brought out, the responsiwhole thing cleaned up once for all—is utterly impossible court you have just appointed, though headed by such an officer as Admiral Mayo, unless a careful, searching, as try is made by the said court into the following funda-uses of the present situation in Haiti, resulting in unression, violence, assaults, and killing of Haitian citizens:
enate and chambers (parliament) of the people under the American marine occupation.

what is known as the rape, of the Haiti constitution by the and methods and force used by the United States Marines s to adopt the new constitution, which gives away their d American corporations.

orking of the so-called corvee slave labor by American their gendarmes, whereby, in spite of treaty, citizens of of their rights, robbed of their liberties, oppressed, ass, with the inevitable result that the Negroes of Haiti gen-fierce anger engendered, and bitter hatred against the oc-d States Government, finding expression, now that their titution are gone, in open fighting and defiant rebellion nly believe to be the determined and treacherous effort of through the United States occupation in Haiti, to bring ery, with all its horrors.

al and direct factors in the absolute failure after five n Government, through its marine occupation, to pacify

Haiti, establish peace and good will, not to say secure the natives' co-operation, anticipated by the treaty between America and Haiti, economical, industrial, and social development of the black republic people, the present Navy court should have the right and authority to thorough and searching investigation into the nature and extent of the between marine officers of the United States, at Washington as well as with American corporations which followed the "occupation" to the public, and the European special delegate of the Pope (a foreign priest sent to Haiti during the present American occupation, with the European bishop, bishops, priests, freres, and nuns, etc., of the Roman Catholic Church in Haiti and all of whom are paid their salaries like officers and members of American marines and the native gendarmes from the United States government, money, loans, etc., to the little bankrupt black republic, and through the hands of the United States financial adviser.

5. In such thorough and searching investigation the Navy court should have the right and authority to determine what influence and power such as exist with corporations and close relation of the Catholic Church with the present government and the American occupation of the United States government, as now exists in the Republic of Haiti, has been responsible for the appointments of American marine officers to and removals from Haiti in the present occupation; for the demoralization of the United States marines from their usual high standard of military discipline and moral efficiency; the deflection also of the administration at Washington, or officers of the War Department, as well as the American occupation on the island, from its purpose of the United States Government's special mission in Haiti, and to the terms of the sacred treaty, to apparently serve financial interests and sectarian ends.

In requesting that you should reemphasize the importance of making the present investigation thorough and searching, and to authorize the Navy court to include the foregoing fundamental causes of the present sad situation in Haiti affairs, I hereby quote from the statement and the earnest plea of my personal friend, Dr. Francois Delancour (Port au Prince) in Current Events for the month of December, 1919,:

"All intelligent Haitians know that American statesmen and leaders of opinion are not aware of what is happening in Haiti. The American occupation is too great and too good to tolerate such infractions of political morality which in July, 1918, entered the confraternity of the allied nations by declaring war on Germany, is with the approval of the American officials (occupied in a state of anarchy, anarchy of legislation, anarchy of administration, no parliament (senate and chamber) to discuss the living interests of the people, with no freedom of thought, of speech, of action. Deprived of justice and legality, also undermined by disorganization of labor and by paying that the Haitians are driven out to Cuba to look for work in large numbers or remain to starve."

The inclosed letter to Judge Advocate Dyer, of the Navy court you have appointed to investigate affairs in Haiti, will show that as the person appointed years ago prepared by way of a memorandum and sworn affidavit and definite charges against the American occupation, etc. I have offered myself as a witness to personally testify in Haiti, and so as to establish from my personal knowledge such specific acts as related therein through him in court.

As I have had no reply from Maj. Dyer, I hasten to repeat my offer to the Secretary of the United States Navy, responsible for the creation of the board and, of course, to the Government and American people for a court in Haiti, namely, to hold myself in readiness to respond to your summons to the above Navy court to appear in Haiti and testify to the facts as stated in the letter to Maj. Dyer, judge advocate of said Navy court.

As assumed in that letter, you will see to arrangements for my transportation, authority, and protection given both to myself and witnesses in Haiti, any necessary expense the witnesses may have to incur for attending to the matter in various sections of the Republic, so as to corroborate my testimony.

Very sincerely, yours,

L. TON

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, November 4, 1920.

Sirs: I have your recent letter concerning Haiti. I thank you, and the same has been given to the court investigating

s,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

DOCTEUR HECTOR PAULTRE,
St. Marc, Haiti, 25 novembre, 1918.
Kingston, Pa.

Votre lettre du 25 octobre m'est bien parvenue. Je n'ai pu venir partager le Loupe du Lcycier avec vous scion ce que vous. Il m'a écrit le 5 septembre pour m'annoncer qu le mois passé une école primaire de jeunes filles avec le Directrice: Mme. Hector Poultre; professeurs: Mme. Poultre et Mathilde Gresseare; surveillante: Mme. David maintenant 30 élèves mais nous espérons en avoir beaucoup. Nous faisons tous nos efforts pour ouvrir sans trop tarder les garçons.

Je vous habitiez, j'ai eu de nombreuses difficultés avec Mr. même au recours au Yeige de Paix. Aussi j'ai été obligé de la remettre le 20 septembre en transportant vos effets de Mr. Cambell chez moi. Le garde donc à vos ordres et votre arrivée ici je vous chercherai une maison.

Je vous vout bien y'ai été une seconde fois à la Grande plantation de faire une petite prédiction.

Je vous prie de vos bonnes salutations et implorent pour vous de Crés Haut.

Éla.

HECTOR PAULTRE.

ST. RAPHAEL, June 8, 1911.

of Haiti Baptist Mission.

EVANS: I am profoundly glad that you have brought to the pastor, deacons, and church of St. Raphael last Sunday the consecration to Christian work of our Sister Christine at under God, in addition to what you have already done. I am glad to take her with you to the United States and to place her in college as Alice Pierre, our Haitian daughter, whom I heard of years ago from our midst, and to study so as to serve the people. I have employed Christine some years as my assistant in the Government school for girls here, and, as you know, I can see her deep interest and faithfulness in her work and her especial aptitude as a teacher, even when she was staunch, if not bigoted, in her views. Now since her conversation to the Protestant faith and her residence in Banaha River in October of 1910 her active service in the Sunday school, as well as the part she takes in our open-minded sincerity, quiet, steady, consistent, and loyal Christian life, and her persecution of the priest and even of her own mother. I give the above testimony that in my opinion Christine is specially fitted for work in Haiti, and with the training such as you provide in the national Negro Baptist college for girls in the United States. I believe herself, if life and health are given her, a most efficient worker when among her own people and sex in this morally and materially destitute country.

Give you, my beloved, for your splendid efforts in behalf of Christ,

ELIZA MENARD.

Menard, directress of Government school for children at (see page 269.)

HAITI BAPTIST MISSION—APPALLING NEED OF 3,000,000 PERISHING SOULS GOSPEL.

A MISSIONARY PIONEER AND HIS EFFORTS COMMENDED TO CHRISTIANS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA BY ONE OF JAMAICA'S BEST-KNOWN PASTOR EVANGELISTS—SCHOLARS—YEARS OF MISSIONARY ZEAL AND DEVOTION UNDIMMED AND UNDEMANISHED—ENCOURAGED TO PROCEED "ISAIAH-LIKE ALONE TO A WORK WHICH HE CALLED HIM."

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," etc.—Christ.

Letter from Rev. George E. Henderson, M. A., graduate at Madison University, New York, that years ago conferred the degree of doctor of divinity. Rev. G. E. Henderson is pastor of churches with a membership of 1000. He has been a member of the Jamaica Baptist missionary executive for 34 years and was president of the Jamaica Baptist Union and chairman of mission committee when Rev. L. Ton Evans was under that society as its chief missionary for 18 years ago and previous to his resignation through his late wife's death. Mr. Henderson, who is considered a profound Bible student, promoter of the higher spiritual life, and leader in the island's missionary activity, is well known in the United States among the following Baptist leaders: Dr. H. M. S., Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, Dr. Edward Judson, Dr. Bittin, Dr. Newton Clark (Rochester), Dr. Leighton Williams, Dr. J. A. Francies, Dr. Thomas S. Barbour (A. B. F. M. S.), Dr. Charles Watson, Dr. (Philadelphia), Dr. W. M. Lawrence, Dr. John S. Love, Hon. Mornay (New York), and others.

THE CHAIRMAN.

Browns Town, P. O., Jamaica, West Indies, August 1888.

Rev. L. TON EVANS.

MY DEAR BRO. TON EVANS: Having a keen interest in your desire to preach the gospel in the neighboring island of Haiti, and with the keen knowledge of your plans, your efforts, and discouragements in this great enterprise, with an intimate personal acquaintance with yourself for many years, I thought that a letter from me may be of some use in helping you to overcome the difficulties that are likely to oppose you in the mission to which God has called you for the extension of his Kingdom in a land hitherto neglected.

In saying this I know of the efforts put forth by the Wesleyan Missionary Society many years, and also by the Baptists of England, and after of Jamaica, who have taken my part in all that our society has done in Haiti. * * *

My heart goes out toward you, as I found that zeal and devotion were burned in your heart 18 years ago, when you were the missionary of the Baptist Church to Haiti, is still undimmed and undiminished, but has manifested itself through the intervening years (though much occupied with your own churches in South Wales, and after in Edwardsville, Pa.) in awakening others, both individuals and societies, to take up the evangelization of Haiti.

He who fed the fires through all these years will, I believe, still be alive until your efforts meet that success which we all desire, and Haiti, like her sister islands of Jamaica, Porto Rico, and Cuba, is not only waiting for the gospel, but dotted over with churches from which God's message of salvation to all mankind is proclaimed to "every creature."

I could wish that your efforts to awaken some of the great societies of the Baptist denomination in Great Britain or the United States of America should be more successful, and trust that this will ultimately be brought about.

I say this as it is only natural that left to work alone as a sort of missionary at large you are likely to be misunderstood and misapprehended even by (certain) brethren. * * *

On this account I trust before long you will succeed in securing the sanction of some responsible Baptist society to shoulder the (whole) work of evangelization on to the success that awaits those who are ready to respond to "Whom shall I send, etc.?" This I know is your earnest desire also, and as it is brought about I can only encourage you to go on Isaiah-like alone to a work to which God has called you, and He will lead.

Some misunderstandings have already arisen and some criticisms made, but you have had the advantage of hearing these (and refuting them) from

* * who have misunderstood some of your actions. Our accounts (1) that has recently been made, which is to satisfy some and remove their strongest objection, and from myself to Mr. Wilson (London) will satisfactorily remove the entirely misunderstood, (2) and trust will tend to remove the impression he had formed as to your generalship.

Our visit to Jamaica (1908 and 1909) has tended to revive the Jamaica Missionary Society in Haiti, our first foreign field, (account) already in our taking over the support of Brother Samuel, etc. * * * of my own deep interest in your work and my desire to the extent of my ability, and allow me also to say that I pledge of almost every step you have taken in this great work to the confidence of Christian brethren who may not yet do.

so far, and He will guide you still. I am not unknown to our brethren in the States, having been graduated from New Colgate, in 1875, and if this letter can be of any service in whatever way you wish, and believe me always, your comrade in the gospel,

GEO. E. HENDERSON.

My, but I hope you will be able to decipher what I have who was resting in the country after a very severe illness and has since greatly improved.

From the Rev. George Henderson he says:

He says that your spirit is equal to the changed attitude of the Mr. Wilson broached the matter when he and Mr. Penny was not surprised when I saw the decision in the Herald, there is any ultimate loss in dissolving an arrangement that is contrary and that was likely to bring friction as long as it that God, who opened up India by Carey and China by the societies threw them over, is also equal to open Haiti. He finds ready to be His instrument. 'It is nothing to you or by few,' and when He works by few and by feeble is all the more conspicuously His."

all have been issued, viz, 1,000 in 1908, 1,500 in 1909, and 2,000 (Welsh) in 1910, which were sent at the time to all our friends in Wales, America, and Jamaica, at a cost of our scanty funds, not to mention the labor entailed on addition to his work as organizer, deputation, and mis-

Mr. Henderson feel the injustice and injury inflicted upon our people among contributing churches in Wales, Jamaica, as well as Haiti, that he wrote a strong letter not only to Rev. C. E. Penny, Esq., chairman of West Indian English Committee, and Rev. Leonard Tucker, M. A., of the B. M. Mission, tutors at Calabar Baptist College, in Jamaica, complaining of a brother engaged in the same kind of mission work, who was a healthy religious organization at his back.

Rev. L. Ton Evans has urged the Jamaica Baptist Mission to have this brother, ordained by him in 1894, but through the influence of the churches, etc., they have not been able to do this until personal visits referred to, and the influence of Rev. George two consecrated and certificated teachers from Edwards-ville Baptist Church studying at the Women's Missionary School, preparing for Haiti, and two more, Miss Bailey and Miss (latter from Browns Town, Jamaica, West Indies), who had and taken their B. A. degree in the States, seeking to enter a Baptist missionary school, with the intention of laboring in the public. This is in addition to Miss Alice Pierre Alexis, the one taken by the field secretary to the United States, etc., and for missionary work in her own island, at the National School for Girls, Lincoln Heights, Washington, D. C., and the leadership of Miss Nanule Burroughs.

NEW HAITIAN RAILROAD—RATIFICATION BY SENATE AND PRESIDENT

News has just been received in Kingston, Jamaica, and New York of an important contract between McDonald & Co., and the Haitian Government recently passed by the chamber of deputies has now been adopted by the President and signed by President Simon. This carries with it a Government concession of an interest in the banana trade and other fruit interest and the construction of factories. It will be proceeded with as soon as possible, and opens up new areas of undeveloped, rich land and create new industries. It is said that a large and bitter fight has been waged for this valuable concession between the French, and especially German, firms, opposed to American and Protestant influence. The sum and substance of this is that the present is the most important epoch in the history of Haiti, and hence a special call to the great Baptists to strongly establish themselves in the social, moral, and spiritual life of these long-neglected people.

L. TON

SEPTEMBER 15, 1910.

AN ISLAND SADLY NEGLECTED OF GREAT AND UNIQUE BAPTIST OPPORTUNITIES

BRIGHT PROSPECTS OF A WELL-SUSTAINED AND ORGANIZED CHRISTIAN ENTERTAINMENT PERSONAL TESTIMONY AND HEARTY RECOMMENDATION OF MISSIONARIES MISSION BY A POPULAR AND EMINENT COLORED MINISTER WHO HAS VISITED THE BLACK REPUBLIC ON SEVERAL OCCASIONS.

"And how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?"

"Your visits and touching appeals have awakened renewed interest in Jamaica. But what is one missionary among millions?"

Letter from Rev. Hon. and Rev. W. M. Webb, a member of the Legislature, founder and managing director of Westwood College for the island, pastor of churches with a membership of nearly 1,000, ex-president of Jamaica Baptist Union, member of missionary board for 45 years, special deputation of the denomination to the island of Haiti, and old-time (colored) Baptist minister in Jamaica, West Indies:

WOODLANDS, STEWART TOWN POST OFFICE
Jamaica, September 15, 1910.

Rev. L. TON EVANS.

DEAR BROTHER EVANS: Having visited the island on separate occasions twice as a deputation from the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society, and into the spiritual condition of the people and report on difficulties, and status of the mission work there (many years ago) you will know how interested I am in Haiti and the social, moral, and religious welfare of its inhabitants. I deeply deplore that the efforts of the B. M. S. of London and subsequently those of the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society—were so inefficient, and short lived—and that such a large island, with over a million people who are trying to find out the true system of Government, and hitherto failed for lack of the evangel among them, should be so engaged until now in the cruel bondage of Romanism, witchcraft, etc.

I am, dear brother, greatly interested, therefore, to learn of your successful efforts to give these people the pure gospel, and from my own knowledge of such natives (Christians) as Dutreville Lamour, Hector Lamour, Jaques, Osiris, and Sisters St. Aude, Lamour, Louise Holder, and others there I am sure that any well-sustained efforts put forth in the evangelization of this island and its interesting people and under God's blessing will result in abundant success.

As one of the oldest members of the Jamaica Baptist missionary society I remember well how deep was the regret felt by us when, through my dear wife's illness, we were compelled to accept your resignation of which you had so loyally and enthusiastically filled some 18 years of missionary of our society.

During the intervening years, however (though actively engaged in evangelistic work in Wales and America), I am thankful to learn you have had your heart and kept in personal touch with the natives and given me of your deep sympathy with the evangelization of that dark land.

Your visits also and touching personal appeals have awakened interest among us in Jamaica, and only at our last annual union meeting resumed in a small way (after giving up entirely for a through sheer poverty, etc.) its work in Haiti by the (active) Brother L'Herisson, etc. We recognize this as the labors and answer from God to your faith and prayer. Brother (receiving a salary and devoting the whole of his life) among the perishing priest-ridden and superstitious people? What everyone who loves the kingdom of God and desires that petition, "Thy kingdom come," desires to see for a Christian mission founded upon a strong, sympathetic, and efficient organizer with funds behind him to employ best methods and sympathetic foreign agents (white missionaries) to reach the people now waiting and longing get a chance to hear of the knowledge of the Haitian (character) I am satisfied we have received the gospel * * * they will not only be a happy and prosperous people, but will largely and rapidly respond and assist in giving the (same) gospel to other parts we have much regret that your request made to the Baptist Convention (England) for a grant of £300 ($1,500) a year for five years had been created or the cooperation of a strong organization and to be made good from the collections of Welsh Baptist churches (and resolutions to do this) interested in the Black Republic and its visits and advocacy of the special and imperative needs responded to.

And much more which is urgently needed I must leave to you and your efforts to all who know the grace of God in the Baptist and Protestant churches able and willing to help by their gifts, and prayer.

In contact with you on several occasions, your residence with me at my home, your pulpit ministrations that I and my family have enjoyed, as well as your deep sympathetic spirit with the hopes for their future material, social, and spiritual progress, and the long ago of the high motive and good faith of the evangelization of the Black Republic.

Remember, that knowing Him and His power, in Whom you have placed your trust, do, no misunderstanding of your aim by some and by others will discourage you in what you conceive to be a direct call from God.

And in our northern and southern Baptist brethren in the field, most generous sympathetic helpers, who will not fail to sustain you by their organized gifts, counsel, and noble aim to give poor Haiti the gospel.

For your and missionary worker I highly esteem you and only trust that you will be able to show in a more practical way the results of your efforts.

May the Lord raise up for you generous helpers among Christians in America and America.

Wm. Evans.

W. M. WEBB.

The parentheses are not a part of original letters, but inserted for clarity.

ENDORSED BY NEW YORK MINISTERS.

Accepted by New York Baptist Ministers' Conference (See Examiner.) Revs. S. J. Arthur, Harvey Wood, and E. T. Stanford, special Haiti committee, formed for the delivery of a missionary address by the field secretary, to show the spiritual destitution of Haiti, proximity to America, and the need of Christian aid.

Reported to consider and report on the matter of Baptist aid to Haiti by the committee, and having listened to the report presented by Rev. L. Ton Evans, and confirmed unto us in the field, and the personal testimony of Rev. G. A.

House, who has spent 25 years on the adjacent Island of Jamaica is intimately acquainted with Mr. Ton Evans and his work), having already received the hearty indorsement of the northeast ton, and Huntingdon Associations of Pennsylvania, and the sylvania Welsh and the Turnbull Associations of Ohio, as well as and Louisville Ministers' Conferences. We, the New York Baptist Conference, respectfully and earnestly petition the officers and committee of the Home Mission Society to respond to this call of but awakening Haiti, to the end that these two and a half million doors may enter on the heritage of a New Testament Christian privileges of an enlightened civilization."

Contributions should be sent toward missionaries' salaries, schools, or bells to Councillor W. P. Thomas (chairman of East G. Welsh Baptist Association), Gorphwysfa, Treorkey, South Wales Haiti mission, treasurer in Wales; or Rev. J. E. Daires, M. A. (east Baptist Association of Pennsylvania), Nanticoke, Pa., Un America, treasurer in America. French, Spanish, and English to and periodicals to be sent direct to L. Ton Evans, field secretary Haiti, W. I. All moneys, if forwarded to the latter, must be in reg

[Rev. L. Ton Evans's interview in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Evening News, Aug. 21,

A REMARKABLE CAREER OF A BAPTIST MISSIONARY—TELLS OF STRUGG FIERCELY ATTACKED BY DEVIL WORSHIPPERS—A WHOLE CITY SAVED FROM BURNING AND BUTCHERY BY AMERICAN GUNBOAT—B MAKING GREAT EFFORTS TO BATTLE WITH SOCIAL AND FINANCIAL PROPOSED INDUSTRIAL COLLEGE.

Rev. L. Ton Evans, field secretary of the Haiti mission, is before the Southern and Northern Baptist Conventions, and the World's Baptist Convention in Philadelphia, at which he spoke as the official representative of Rev. L. Ton Evans left the Welsh Baptist Church of Edwardsville years ago to preach the gospel to 3,000,000 spiritually dark and untutored Negroes of Haiti.

Like George Whitfield, the eighteenth century evangelist, he was a saloon in Wales, and on account of family relations and other advantages might have easily been to-day, had he chosen, one of the liquor merchants and brewers in that principality.

His parents having quit the hotel, their youngest son became a seaman and after his conversion, college training, and entrance upon the ministry he eschewed all, gave up entire property so as to devote himself to his sacred calling and consecrate all his energy to the work of

While in the large seaport town of Barry, as a pioneer in Christian work, and where he was the means of forming five Baptist churches, was one of the best known temperance reformers in the whole of Wales, been the recipient in this capacity of many tokens of esteem and honor from leading men, irrespective of religious denominations and political opinions, although he himself is a strong Baptist and a staunch radical or, as we here would term prohibitionist-democrat. He is a free trader in the active part he played while pastor of First Baptist Church of Edwardsville. Temperance reformer will not be soon forgotten when, in one year, his friends closed up about one-half of the saloons and reduced the revenue from that source alone some $4,000. The dastardly dynamite outrage against the Congregational Church is well known to have actually been aimed at Rev. L. Ton Evans's church and people.

Like the reformers of his type he has been bitterly attacked, threatened many times, but all of which simply act as a tonic to strengthen him in what he conceives to be his duty to God and man.

INTERVIEWED AT HOME.

After locating the missionary at his West Side American home, and gone into certain preliminaries, he expressed his willingness to answer any question relative to himself and his special work and the black Republic.

"How long have you been in the island and what is the nature of your work there, Mr. Evans?"

comes in Barry, Wales, to go to Haiti in connection with the same work, 18 years ago. Owing to repeated sickness of my wife, I leave and return in two years' time, but before I left I created native brother, Nosirel L. Herisson, ordained and settled in the church and southern portion of the island, and whom I have known, though until two years ago he had not been in receipt of salary. In 1908, without a society really at my back, I left my home some 60,000 miles over sea and land, and spoken at many associations, conventions, etc., in Wales, Jamaica, West Indies, and States in behalf of Haiti. I have during the same period traveled throughout the Haiti Republic, and part of the Dominican Republic, and months at various cities, towns, and villages of the interior, as field secretary, or general missionary, my special work being to secure some financial aid to college trained natives and to establish stations, has been to visit churches and stations systematically, to marry, ordain native brethren of special ability and character, and so as to arrange for regular preaching in our out-of-the-way places in the interior. In addition to this, I have secured financial help for new church buildings, rent, and other expenses, and financial aid altogether for five missionaries, etc. When I consider the very long distances between these churches and stations; the lack of roads, and that one must go for days and often weeks through deep mud, thick bush, flooded rivers, and on the edge of the coast, sleeping during the nights on the hard ground, I give you some idea of the difficulties and hardships of a missionary in Haiti, and also enable you to understand how the natives appreciated and enjoyed my going and living among them. Every man, white or black, has traveled so much and experienced all classes, and is in a position to really understand the work. I have been openly and personally attacked by the priest and the military, on top of Gros Morne, between Jacmel and Port au Prince, in the city of Jacmel in November of 1908, when about to be executed and cruelly butchered by soldiers and officers of late Alexis, and for not preventing ex-President Simon entering Port au Prince, and for the American gunboat Eagle that sailed with me into the harbor. I have financially supported brethren on the field, and through the efforts of the Baptists of the island of Jamaica, I have succeeded in financially supporting two more, making a total of five. We have 15 Baptist Churches and 17 stations, 5 financially supported preachers, 5 native preachers, 600 members, baptized last year 100. We have 1,200 baptisms, and 1,200 converts in our churches and stations throughout the island. Also a number of day schools in cities, towns, and districts, but the latter for some years and to our great regret for want of funds."

DEFINES PLAN.

you in mind when starting out, and how far have you come to the next asked.

city of Jamaica Baptists, and difficulty with the Baptists of our Negro Baptists in the States, who have helped us with the Baptist Churches of this valley (Wyoming Baptist Association), to do what has been done in the States, do effective work in Haiti and develop the mission, one of our American Baptist missionary societies must take over the work as they do their work elsewhere, with schools and that young men and women could be trained for work in population of 3,000,000, that is, 2,000,000 more people than more than even Cuba, is only 1,000 miles from New York to the coast of Florida. In addition to our proximity to the American interests in the Caribbean Sea, the Baptists of the present operating missions in Porto Rico, Cuba, and Canal Zone. Again, Haiti is a Republic, and so can be better understood by American Baptists than by the more conservative, if not by the English and Jamaica. Our American missionary methods have the great advantage also of being more aggressive and both on the foreign as well as the home field.

"It may not be known the debt which the United States owes to Haiti. The obligation this country is under to the black Republic. It was the debt incurred by Haiti and defeat of Napoleon and France by Toussaint L'Ouverture. It was the debt incurred by black forces in their securing freedom from slavery and independence for Haiti. France at the end of the eighteenth century that compelled Napoleon to give up 1,200,000 square miles France had in North America to our Thomas Jefferson in 1803 for 2 cents an acre. Apart from the Louisiana Purchase, the United States to-day would not have had any Pacific slope, Alaska, Philippines, nor Panama Canal to boast of. Hence, in the providence of God, authentic history attests, Haiti has materially helped to make the United States the leading world power it is. Yes, I am perfectly satisfied, and I put everything into consideration I really feel delighted at the bright prospect of real success so far achieved. I came up from Haiti through Cuba, where I saw the splendid work of our Northern and Southern Baptists, and so as to the convention held at Jacksonville, Fla., this May. After hearing of Haiti's needs, the convention immediately called the attention of the board to this field, with authority to act. The board have planned for the coming year their corresponding secretary, to come down at once to visit the country in accordance with the convention's desire.

"Exactly a month after, namely, in June, our Northern Baptists at Philadelphia also decided to make an appropriation of from $5,000 to $10,000 and to increase of their budget and through their Home Mission Board, and so as to include their work to include Haiti."

SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

"What, in your opinion, are some of the reasons which account for the lawlessness in Haiti and the constant revolutions on this island?"

"Perhaps there is not a people in the whole world misunderstood and misrepresented as a whole more so than the people of this black Republic. I have long experience and intimate knowledge I can safely say that there are more kind-hearted and generous natured people anywhere than the people of Haiti. The immediate cause of discontent which crystallizes into revolutions and upheavals, undoubtedly is the widespread poverty arising through lack of money, and industries in the country. Men and women in sheer want are easily worked upon by certain political factions, and so-called leaders whom themselves again are in penury; and are used by certain white capitalists who have an eye to business, and make great profits to themselves from these revolutions and financial embarrassments of the Government. There is a system of corruption and spoliation carried on often by those around the President, and people in official positions, especially at the administration of the treasury and finances. Hence the treasury becomes depleted, soldiers, officers, and others are not paid, often robbed in other ways. The people become discontented and even bitter, and at times driven to desperation.

GOSPEL THE REAL NEED.

"The chief want of Haiti is the Gospel, the religion of the Bible, the Christianity of Jesus and the New Testament.

"When dissatisfied with political and social conditions (and no Christian much less educated, and Christian man should be satisfied with conditions in Haiti) unfortunately instead of having recourse to the ballot and the ballot box, they begin to plan and plot a revolution and appeal to the gun rather than to justice, reason, and common sense. The Gospel is the civilizing factor of any age, and this alone in its wide and far-reaching influence can satisfactorily solve the Haitian problem. When the teaching of the Gospel of God, and principles of Christianity find a lodgement by faith in the heart they change conduct as well as character. There is a new vision of hope, in fact, an altogether new life, finding expression not only in the thrills and spiritual throbs, but in fresh and actual daily activities. The man and drudge becomes something worth while; and one's whole life through the new motive power is lifted entirely from its old ruts. The whole man is brought into harmony, morally, intellectually, physically, and socially with the will and divine purpose of God in Christ. New conception of duty, devotion to wife and family, and community follow as the day follows honest, sober, and thrifty. They want, however, to be taught so as to make the best of these new powers and

SCHOOLS THE BASIS.

day of Sunday and day schools for the young and middle advanced in years, as well as in other ways to accomplish of my being now in this country is to interest our leading Christian philanthropists in the States to establish a college on a large scale; and so that the most promising, many of whom will go out again as teachers to lead example on lands, in homes, etc., and create respect for really build an industrial system of sound and practical make them self-supporting and independent, thus materially on of a complete Christian character."

CARE FOR SMALL NATIONS.

believe that Haiti should be annexed to the United States by political solution of the problem?" "All nations, in my opinion, have a place in the plan and very often, if not always, like Israel and Wales for instant destiny to fulfill. The United States has never yet. Had she helped Haiti as she has helped Cuba, and the Dominican Republic, I am certain America would. The great powers concede that the interests of the amount to the combined interests of all other nations; and that according to the Monroe doctrine and the humanity, that the strong should help the weak—the United could befriend Haiti, not only by restoring order, or against their will and by force, but by establishing permanent confidence. By a little effort on her part to explain the true situation, and the purity and nobility of only Haiti would raise no objection, but really welcome protection, and encouragement to open up industries, etc.

PROMINENT MEN ENLIST.

signatures of senators, deputies, judges of supreme and generals, magistrates, merchants, inspectors, cultivators, on that only 20 per cent of our people can read, and but will see that the petition comprises actually the whole can be got at. When the objects of this school were explained to me by myself in French and patois (the speaking of the natives) as well by many of my helpers in plain young men and women in skilled labor, useful in that it would effect eventually great political, social, moral, that would be far-reaching in its effect upon the island; foodshed, send three out of every four of our starving, to their homes and habitations (small farms) in the confidence in one another, etc., they became deeply enthusiastic at the very idea of such an institution for the and daughters in Haiti with such benign influence. In figures named and support mentioned, I have received words from mayors and councils of the leading cities and officially for my deep interest and real love for their and expressing their sincere hope that the earnest prayer be responded to and answered by educationists and of this country and true friends of the Negro. Though ability of this most important and further great understood. I naturally feel a little proud of being the first white such a mission; and especially that this whole black in character, so opposite in their religious creeds, so ant and opposed in politics, should consider me worthy and a true and genuine friend of Haiti and its

"May I finally ask you the effects of the last disturbances in the will the change of President and cabinet and overthrow of late government by the revolutionists since you left Haïti, in any way interfere with you or change your plans?"

"I think not. In fact, I expect the present new government to give greater help. It may not be known that though Romanism is the State religion according to Haïti constitution, there is liberty for all, and none is persecuted for the Baptists. It is true, however, that certain Roman Catholic priests from time to time caused warrants to be served on me and my nation for preaching on ground claimed by the Catholic Church to have been created by them; and that they have seriously threatened us for publishing in rivers and sea those who once were prominent in the Roman faith. It is only fair and just to state that never has the Haïtian (Negro) been the instigator in these cases. Moreover, in every case we faced or officials asserting our legal as well as moral rights as Baptists, and representatives of Christ, the authorities and Government, strangers have always stood by and supported the radical Baptist missionary."

"The leaders in Haïti are at least beginning to understand that Baptists are for the liberty of the individual to think and to act in all matters of politics and religion. The right to read the Bible and interpret it by the Holy Spirit and without the interference of State, priest, or person of influence, Leconte, and Senator Dr. Laroch, the new minister of public instruction, were the first to sign the petition and are ardent supporters of the Friends of Gen. Firmin are not a bit less in their desire and with Gen. Firmin himself, whom I know as a learned man, and an author of ability and influence, but was absent from the island when the petition was gotten up, with his influence, support everything in the way of education and religion for the real emancipation of his country and people from ignorance, superstition, and slavery."

WILL DRAW HAITI TO UNITED STATES.

"In addition to the advantage of this industrial institution as above, such an excellent college as this established among them in the midst of the petitioners and which petition is written in French—will be a small, but heroic little nation under a lasting obligation to the general factors, and more than all else draw Haïti closer than ever before in to the United States and serve as a means of uniting the two Republics in real sympathy and genuine good will."

Rev. Condillac Jean Jacques, Cape Haïti, a graduate from Newton Theological Seminary, Massachusetts, and also attending the Baptist world's alliance, is also seen and questioned:

"Do you know much about Mr. Ton Evans and his work in Haïti?"

"Most decidedly. We look at him there at Haïti's best friend, and in the esteem, Christian affection and confidence of all classes, and we welcome him coming among us as God's direct answer to our prayers. No white man has traveled more extensively and become personally acquainted with our intellectual and spiritual needs than Mr. Evans himself. Hence he speaks with real authority based on personal knowledge. The moment we saw his project of a normal and industrial college to teach my countrymen the value and dignity of honest labor, we (myself and a number of other leaders) at once fell in love with the idea, and at great risk during the political associations associated ourselves with him and rendered what support we could. It was that Rev. L. Ton Evans, whom we often call, on account of his reputation in Haïti, and esteem for him "Nègrè blanc" (the white black man) who gave support of all the leaders of the Haïti Republic. The success which he has attained through his undaunted courage and incessant efforts which we all in Haïti, has been most marvellous. As stated in the petition to the President and Government and senate and chamber will only be given the necessary aid required, as well as do everything else to encourage this grand project."

APPRECIATE THE MISSIONER'S WORK.

"You then agree with Rev. Ton Evans, that the people would appreciate such an institution, and that as he maintains, it will go to establish peace and concord in your island, and unite the two Republics in sympathy?"

a large number of our best young men and women are here, and prepared to make great sacrifices so as to equip themselves for vocations in life, and I do not see how such a college as successful as Hampton and Tuskegee, with which Mr. [unclear] acquainted. Such a training would enable my people to work as well as our rich soil, and give them a taste for something that would bring contentment to the whole island and help to develop its industries, as well as make in my opinion all the educational work more effective and permanent. I may also add that on the part of educationists and Christian philanthropists such a college would never be forgotten by my people. The college training of young men and women, year after year would be a long proof of your generosity and good will toward us, and toward the United States as nothing else could; remove all obstacles that exist among nations, and especially a small nation like Haiti, to become a large and powerful one. On account of these blessings I am earnestly praying that God may give success to Bro. L. T. [unclear] of the Negro with you here will do what they can make a noble effort to free little Haiti and its people from ignorance by giving an institution that will give them a sound and useful education and shall enable them to take their stand among other nations of the western world eventually."

STATISTICS OF HAITI BAPTIST MISSION (1911).

-----	14
-----	8
Missionaries-----	2
-----	17
-----	5
being built-----	2
built-----	4
not paid-----	4
of Baptist College, unpaid-----	2
Assistant missionaries unpaid-----	25
-----	600
Port-----	100
for baptism-----	105
Churches and stations-----	1,200

Above there are the following day schools languishing for want of money. Country schools among the very poor have had to be given up.

For boys' and girls' grades, conducted by missionary and with Jacmel, six country schools.

(capital), one day school conducted by missionary. Has the Government.

girls' school conducted by aged wife of missionary and converted from Romanism. Received financial support from school conducted by member of Baptist Church. Given help.

school conducted by member of Baptist Church. Given help.

The young men's school conducted by Baptist missionary and into a preparatory school to train native preachers. Government financial help.

HEADQUARTERS NINTH COMPANY, G. D. 'H., District of St. Marc, June 25, 1918.

under, St. Marc.

St. Marc Prison.

Sunday afternoons.

Dr. Evans, has permission to enter the prison at St. Marc for the purpose of holding a service for the prisoners. Services will be held in the mess hall and order will be maintained at all times. Prison cell doors will be opened, and who wish will be allowed to attend services.

CHARLES E. K.
Captain Ninth Company,

Mr. EVANS. May I put in letters from and to Senator Knox, I others pertaining to matters here dealt with, etc.

Senator ODDIE. Yes.

(The letters referred to will be printed in appendix.)

Mr. EVANS. I would be decidedly opposed to any idea of withdrawing from Haiti, but urge through this committee the establishment of a civil government with sufficient high-grade American marines for administration purposes.

That a scheme of popular instruction should be launched as soon as possible with compulsory free education, and both in the English and French language, being that Haiti is so closely allied to the United States as to do away with need of interpreters.

The lands should be preserved for the people and developed under the vision of the United States, but with hearty and active cooperation of the Haitian Government, functioning through its Senate and Chamber of Deputies, its constitution restored.

Senator ODDIE. And you feel sure that in your opinion there are no marines down there who would make very worthy men, and it would be to retain?

Mr. EVANS. Yes; I believe there are some excellent officers there who have degenerated through drink and other forms of vice, so prevalent unfortunately, in such a backward country as Haiti is. These marine officers, however, should have a high-class gendarmerie and less expensive administration through the employment of more qualified Haitians all through the country, and fewer but stronger white American officials who are prejudiced against the colored, and must have faith in the future under proper and favorable conditions.

Senator ODDIE. But the conditions have been trying on many of them. Have they not?

Mr. EVANS. Quite so. They have been neglected both by the United States Government and by the Christian churches of America and the Y. M. C. A. Prohibition should be extended so as to include the manufacturing and sale of all intoxicants, and to the civilian white and colored, as well as the gendarmes. Drink and immorality have been the serious undoing of our young men who have come to me at Cape and also at Port au Prince for their complaints.

If Col. Russell and Gen. Cole and others had a free hand in Haiti, the relations and the Roman Catholic influences there would have been better record to-day. Without separation of Protestant and Catholicism from the Government there can be no spirituality and power in honesty and efficiency in the other. This is absolutely necessary.

If the civil occupation is established and the Haitian Government restored only such minor changes and modifications made to harmonize new conditions, and the treaty is going to be carried out in its educational and industrial phases, the confidence of Haitians will again be restored and under the sympathetic and efficient leadership of capable American officers, yet take her place before many years among the Republics of the world, prove a credit to our own Government, and cemented in the closest friendship and good will with her fostering as well as protecting neighbor, the sister Republic of the United States.

Senator ODDIE. Well, I think that covers everything. We will adjourn until Tuesday at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until Tuesday, October 10, 1915, 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

AGREEMENT REGARDING THE GENDARMERIE.

The undersigned, duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have this day agreed:

1. That the constabulary contemplated by Article X of the treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Haiti, signed at Port au Prince on September 16, 1915, shall be known as the Haitian Gendarmerie.

amounts to be expended for pay, rations, and expenses be as set forth in the following table:

	Per annum.
per month-----	$3,000
at, $200 per month-----	2,400
month-----	9,600
month-----	16,200
master, director, $200 per month-----	2,400
master paymasters, inspectors, $150 per month-----	3,600
0 per month-----	2,400
$150 per month-----	3,600
month-----	32,400
0 per month-----	25,200
pital corps), $100 per month-----	3,600
$60 per month-----	28,080
machine gun), $50 per month-----	4,800
ospital corps), $60 per month-----	4,320
per month-----	5,700
month-----	26,880
month-----	47,160
per month-----	4,800
month-----	252,000
	<hr/> $478,140
men, at 10 cents per diem-----	92,455
per month-----	1,200
dant, $45 per month-----	540
t commandant, $45 per month-----	540
month-----	1,200
month-----	5,940
	<hr/> 9,420
ints-----	40,000
	66,000
target practice-----	15,000
, etc., per month-----	10,000
aps, office supplies, intelligence service, -----	35,000 and repair of barracks, tools, kitchen etc., per month-----	20,000
	<hr/>
	186,000
	<hr/>
forces-----	768,015
	<hr/>
ost of maintenance:
0-----	3,600
$1,200-----	4,800
	1,104
$216-----	864
	4,680
	<hr/>
	15,048
	20,000
	<hr/> 35,048

service shall be established, operated, and maintained as the gendarmerie, under the direction and control of the gendarmerie, and in addition to the annual expenses hereum of P75,000 shall be allotted for the purchase of the vessels for this service. These vessels may be used for troops, Government employees, and the supplies of all secretion of the commandant of the gendarmerie, subject President of Haiti.

Officers of the gendarmerie shall be appointed by the Presidination by the President of the United States, and will be replaced by Haitians when they have shown by examination, as provided in Article X of the treaty, that they are fit for command.

IV. The gendarmerie shall be considered the sole military and police force of the Republic of Haiti, clothed with full power to preserve domestic order, the security of individual rights, and the full observance of the provisions of the treaty. It shall have supervision and control of arms and ammunition, military supplies, and traffic therein throughout the Republic. It shall be subject only to the direction of the President of Haiti; all other officials, except the services of the gendarmerie, shall be required to submit requests for the nearest official of that organization.

The private guard referred to in article 175 of the constitution of Haiti shall be composed of 100 men of the gendarmerie, chosen by the President of Haiti, which men shall wear distinctive insignia while employed on that service.

V. All matters of recruiting, appointment, instruction or training, discipline, examination, discipline, operation, movement of troops, clothing, rationing, and equipment, quarters and administration, shall be under the jurisdiction of the commandant of the gendarmerie.

VI. The gendarmerie shall be organized and officered as provided for in article 175 of the treaty. The clerical force of the gendarmerie shall be Haitian citizens.

VII. Rules and regulations for the administration and discipline of the gendarmerie shall be issued by the commandant, after being approved by the President of Haiti. Infraction of these rules and regulations by members of the gendarmerie may be punished by arrest, imprisonment, suspension from duty, or pay, forfeiture of pay, or dismissal under regulations promulgated by the commandant of the gendarmerie and approved by the President of Haiti.

VIII. Other offenses committed by gendarmes will be investigated by the gendarmerie officers as directed by the commandant of the gendarmerie. If the behavior of a gendarme is unjustified, he may, at the discretion of the commandant of the gendarmerie, be discharged from the gendarmerie, if his guilt is established, be punished in the same manner as other Haitian citizens; or, if not discharged, he will be punished as provided for in Articles VIII and IX of this agreement. Officers and enlisted men of the United States Army and Marine Corps serving with the gendarmerie will continue to be subject to the laws of United States for the government of the Navy.

IX. A tribunal, consisting of five officers of the gendarmerie, is authorized to try the trial of gendarmes charged with conspiracy against the Government of Haiti. This tribunal will be ordered by the commandant of the gendarmerie and in case of conviction is authorized to inflict the punishment or such other punishment as the tribunal may adjudge and deem proper, in accordance with the laws of Haiti. All sentences of this tribunal, after being approved by the commandant of the gendarmerie, must be confirmed by the President of Haiti before being carried into execution.

X. Persons violating the laws governing traffic in arms, ammunition, or military stores shall be punished by a fine not exceeding P. 1,000 United States currency, or imprisonment not exceeding five years, or both.

XI. The Haitian gendarmerie shall be under the control of the President of Haiti, and all orders from him pertaining to the gendarmerie shall be transmitted to the commandant through the minister of the interior. All other citizens desiring protection or the services of the gendarmerie will make application to the senior officer of the gendarmerie in the locality.

XII. The sum of P. 801,063, United States currency, shall be appropriated annually for pay and allowances, equipment, uniforms, transportation, rationing, and other current expenses of the Haitian gendarmerie. All other needs of the gendarmerie shall be made from this sum by the commandant, but the total of such allotments in any month shall not exceed one-twelfth of the total annual appropriation: Provided, however, That not more than one month may be allotted in subsequent months.

XIII. Reports of expenditures shall be made by the commandant of the gendarmerie to the President of Haiti.

XIV. The laws necessary to make effective the above provisions shall be submitted to the legislative body of Haiti.

In witness whereof the undersigned have hereunto signed their names and affixed their seals in duplicate.

Done at Washington, D. C., this 24th day of August, 1916.

SOLON M.
ROBERT L.

SERIES OF ENGINEERS ATTACHED TO DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

by authorized thereto by their respective Governments, that the engineer or engineers to be charged with the direction of the sanitation and public improvement of the country shall be nominated and appointed as stipulated in article 11 of the treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Haiti, signed at Port au Prince on September 16, 1915, shall each receive annual salary not to exceed seventy-five hundred (P. 7,500) dollars United States currency.

pending further arrangement between the high contracting parties, the President of the United States shall appoint such official or officials as may be nominated by the President of Haiti, pursuant to article 13 of the convention hereinbefore mentioned, from the service of the United States and receive compensation from the Government of the United States, the Government of Haiti shall be obligated to remunerate such officer or officers not to exceed one-half of the above-mentioned total annual salary of fifty-five hundred (P. 7,500) dollars.

That should such officer or officers be appointed other than citizens of the United States the total annual emolument of each such officer shall be paid by the Government of Haiti in the following proportions:

P. 4,500 United States currency per annum for salary.

P. 3,000 United States currency per annum for personal expenses.

The undersigned have hereunto signed their names and in duplicate, this 27th day of June, 1916.

ROBERT LANSING.

SPECIAL ADVISER, RECEIVER GENERAL, AND ASSISTANT RECEIVER GENERAL.

by authorized thereto by their respective Governments, that the following officials, to be nominated and appointed pursuant to article 11 of the treaty between the Republic of Haiti and the United States of America, signed at Port au Prince on September 16, 1915, shall each receive annual salary not to exceed seventy-five hundred (P. 7,500) dollars United States currency.

P. 4,500 United States currency per annum for salary and P. 3,000 United States currency per annum for personal expenses.

Customs: $5,500 United States currency per annum for salary and P. 3,000 United States currency per annum for personal expenses.

Port of customs: $4,800 United States currency per annum for salary and P. 3,000 United States currency per annum for personal expenses.

That pending further arrangement between the high contracting parties, the President of the United States shall appoint, upon nomination by the President of Haiti, such official or officials as may be necessary to assist in the collection of customs properly to collect, receive, and apply all customs duties and exports accruing at the several customhouses and in the Republic of Haiti: Provided, That the total salaries and emoluments of such officials and employees herein mentioned shall not exceed one-half of the total annual emolument of each such officer or officers, unless by agreement between the two Governments.

The undersigned have hereunto signed their names and in duplicate, this 27th day of June, 1916.

ROBERT LANSING.

OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, Senator (Chairman) presiding.

McCornick, Oddie, and King.

Ernest Angell and Mr. Horace G. Knowles in their representation hereinbefore indicated; and Maj. Edwin N. McClellan, Corps, representing the Navy Department.

REAR ADMIRAL WILLIAM B. CAPERTON, UNITED STATES NAVY, 714 MONTAUK AVENUE, NEW LONDON,

Admiral, will you give your full name and rank?

Rear Admiral William B. Caperton, United States Navy, in your own way, Admiral, will you tell the committee of the land and the circumstances which attended not only your issue of the orders to land, in Haiti?

I landed several times. I do not know to which particular one I should start with the first and end with the last.

Yes, sir. I did not know what you wanted. I do not wish to repeat verbally my orders?

You will refer to them and give them to the stenographer in brief, that will be sufficient.

Yes, sir. One is not very brief.

What is here printed in full, as follows:)

JANUARY 5, 1915.

Commander in Chief, United States Atlantic Fleet, U. S. S. Washington, Commander in Chief United States Atlantic Fleet.

Orders—Washington.

For as soon thereafter as practicable, proceed with the Santo Domingo City, S. D., stopping at such ports en route as may be convenient and men.

San Domingo City, S. D., communicate with the diplomatic United States and acquaint yourself with the political conditions.

After such stay at San Domingo City as you may deem necessary to proceed, proceed to Port au Prince, Haiti, where you will also communicate with the American minister and acquaint yourself with the political conditions. After such length of stay at Port au Prince as you may deem necessary, proceed to Habana, Cuba, via Guantanamo, for coal and After such stay at Habana, Cuba, communicate with the American minister and ascertain the political conditions existing in Cuba.

After such stay at Habana as you may consider necessary for the purpose, proceed with the Washington to Vera Cruz, via Tampico and Tuxpam, acquainting yourself in each locality with the political conditions of Mexico.

6. The department desires that you conduct a military inspection of the units of your command as the Washington may fall in with from time to time and as opportunity offers.

7. The department will be pleased to receive any suggestions or recommendations you may consider it necessary to make in connection with the protection of West Indian and Mexican waters.

JOSEPHUS

Also the following by radio on January 19, 1915:

Rush. Ten p. m. Tuesday. Department directs you proceed to Cape Haiti, without delay to report conditions. Under what orders direct to-day for Guacanayabo, Gulf of Cuba.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask when did you land first and where?

Admiral CAPERTON. I landed first at Cape Haitien.

The CHAIRMAN. And when? Was it in July, 1915?

Admiral CAPERTON. I was just thinking whether I landed before or after July was in July; yes, sir. I do not think I landed before. I mean I did not land with my forces before.

The CHAIRMAN. The report of the department reads that the American consul at Cape Haitien—

Admiral CAPERTON. That is what I was trying to find.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). Requested that a warship be sent to Cape Haitien in compliance with this request, the U. S. S. Washington arrived at Cape Haitien on January 23, 1915.

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; I arrived at Cape Haitien at 9.30 a. m. on January 23, 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. Had you had any communication with the department at that time relative to the landing or the prospect of landing?

Admiral CAPERTON. My original orders directed me to proceed to Santo Domingo, Haiti, Cuba, and Mexico. I proceeded with the U. S. S. Washington to Portsmouth, N. H., on January 10, 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you reach Haitian waters?

Admiral CAPERTON. On January 19, 1915, I received a radiogram from the commander in chief of the United States Atlantic Fleet directing me to proceed to Cape Haitien without delay and report conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. Where were you when you received the radiogram?

Admiral CAPERTON. At sea.

The CHAIRMAN. En route to where?

Admiral CAPERTON. Well, I was en route first to Santo Domingo. My orders, I may explain—

The CHAIRMAN. Admiral, you need not go into the orders particularly. Just give us a running story. You received a radiogram?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. While you were on board the Washington?

Admiral CAPERTON. I was on board the U. S. S. Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. You proceeded to Cape Haitien, did you?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What transpired after your arrival at Cape Haitien?

Admiral CAPERTON. On the 20th of January, 1915, I received by radio a message from the Department of State, for delivery to the American consul at Cape Haitien, Haiti, which was delivered on arrival there. I have inclosure here, Inclosure C, if you wish it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the code or a translation of it?

Admiral CAPERTON. I do not know whether I have it translated or not. I think, perhaps, that would be the code, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. What is Inclosure C?

Admiral CAPERTON. By reference to my report before me, I see it is the Department's code. I did not translate it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, it is immaterial if you have not got the translation. What transpired when you reached Cape Haitien and met the consul?

Admiral CAPERTON. At 10 a. m., January 23, 1915, the Washington arrived at Picolet Point, Cape Haitien, Haiti. I immediately sent a staff officer to communicate with the American consul. As the weather was very rough, ul's coming off to the ship, but I received a report of the aff officer sent ashore. The consul sent off to me a copy ten to the American minister, Port au Prince, Haiti, out-the 20th of January, 1915.

re you got the letter?

I have, sir. Shall I read it?

It is not very long you may read it at this time.

It is two pages.

Well, read it.

Thereupon read the letter referred to, as follows:)

CAPE HAITIEN, HAITI, January 20, 1915.

BLANCHARD,

Minister, Port au Prince.

rior to report that on last Friday, the 15th instant, Gen.
 n, the delegate of the departments of the north and north-ion of the civil and military officials and many of the Haitien, and exposed to them the situation, stating, as I that the town was threatened by a revolutionary army le for him to resist because the Government had failed to means of resistance; that the only arms and ammunition posal were those sent here to the minister of the interior ed; that in view of this condition of affairs he felt it to e the influential citizens of the town in order that the might be taken to safeguard the general interests. At eminded his hearers that it was generally known, and ad, that he was a candidate for the Presidency.

tion a proces-verbal was drawn up giving the delegate the general good, and this document was signed by all eral senators and deputies and intimate personal friends e proces-verbal, with the names of the signers, was pub-y in the Cable, the local journal, a marked copy of which ng Gen. Metallus, with about 1,000 men and a few pieces town, lined up the whole force in front of the cathedral, t to the temple of worship, made a tourney of the town.

 as those already present, have up to the present time ffect discipline, and I have not heard of a single act of remains in an entirely normal condition, no flags have business pursues its regular course. This is entirely excepary incident.

(the 19th instant) Gen. Metallus fired a salute of 17 guns, med Gen. Vilbrun Guillaume Sam as chef du pouvoir day (the 19th) published an ordre du jour by Gen. Vil-is the name by which he is generally known), dated the sures had been taken to preserve order and asking the

 A marked copy of this paper is also inclosed.

he whole of the Departments of the North, Northwest, and and that Gen. Guillaume has been very generally accepted he presidency.

radelhomme (?), of the Zamor party, and formerly the ex-president, have written him letters accepting his can-heir support. A delegation was sent on Sunday last to occupying Fort Liberte, and Gen. Bertan Codio, who is and it is expected that both will accept, as they have pondence with Gen. Vilbrun. The delegation is expected ephone message came here from Gonaives stating that it t a Haitian warship would be sent there with troops to delegate there, Gen. Misael Codio, has also offered his un.

ng date of the 13th instant was delivered to me yestermediately went to the delegate and made a complaint. He recently given orders not to accept any telegrams without promises to give orders that all my telegrams be accepted. and made up a long telegram to you in code. When I sent it to the office the operator refused to accept it. The young man went to the office of the delegate and made a complaint. The delegate sent his son with him to the telegraph office with the necessary orders. The delegate replied that there was no communication and returned the telegram to the telegraph office the next morning. I have no means of verifying the facts, and, as I am writing the contents of the telegram, I do not deem it necessary to inclose a copy.

Mr. Marsh asked me to beg you to deliver the inclosed note to Mr. B.

As the agents of the French steamer refuse to accept private correspondence and the post office is not sending any mail to Port au Prince, I am taking the liberty of inclosing to your address one important business letter of mine and three left by Mr. Marshand and Mr. Edwards, which I would think it very much to deliver.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

L. W. LIVINGSTON
American Consul

The CHAIRMAN. Admiral, will you tell us, without any unnecessary reference to the record there, how you came into contact with the consul, and what led to your landing, whether it was events, or the suggestion of the consul, or a decision on your own part?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. Well, as I recall it now—this was some time ago—as I recall it now, without looking at my notes here, I am of the opinion that I did not land any force at that time, on my first visit to Cape Haïtien.

The CHAIRMAN. You left without landing any force at that time?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes. I went myself—if you would like a little more detail—it went myself to call upon the consul, and we discussed the conduct of the affairs.

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, has Admiral Caperton already testified to this hearing?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Senator KING. Or has he submitted a full statement of what he did at that time?

The CHAIRMAN. The only statement we have is the department's statement, with which you are familiar, of the history of the occupation of the two Republics.

Senator KING. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You left without landing. When did you return?

Senator KING. May I inquire, is there any controversy as to the department's statement? Does not that embody all that Admiral Caperton would testify to or any other witness?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I would not have called the Admiral if I had thought he might throw some light upon the circumstances under which he landed and upon the orders which led to his landing.

Admiral CAPERTON. I have all those orders, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, tell us, Admiral, when was it that you returned to the land? Was it in conjunction with the arrival of the French ship Du in June?

Admiral CAPERTON. That was several months afterwards. In the meantime I had gone to Port au Prince, and I followed Mr. Gillaume Sam arc on the coast, in order to impress upon him the importance of carrying on the government trying to think of the word for the kind of warfare.

The CHAIRMAN. Moderate warfare or civilized warfare?

Admiral CAPERTON. Civilized warfare. That is the word I was trying to think of.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean he was not carrying on the electoral campaign for the presidency, but a military campaign?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; but you will understand that their method was quite different from those of civilized people.

The CHAIRMAN. That is interesting.

Admiral CAPERTON. I had been informed by the consul that it was the habit, if any man disobeyed, or did anything to displease him—I do not know to what extent—he would order him shot.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean to displease the commanding officer?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; Gen. Vilbrun Gillaume Sam.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is the consul, Livingston?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; Mr. Livingston.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he a white man or a colored man?

Admiral CAPERTON. A colored man.

o Livingston himself, who is a colored man, told you that if a man offended the commanding general he was shot?

v. Yes, sir; words to that effect, and he suggested that I name Sam unofficially, because he did not wish to recognize "chief of the executive power," and after discussing the

Was there another president in Port au Prince at this time?
v. Yes, sir. This was a revolution. He was forming a y usually form them, in Ouanaminthe.

they started in Ouanaminthe as a rule?

. In Ouanaminthe. The cacos live in the vicinity, and the ionists, who afterwards proclaims himself "chief of the ceeds to Ouanaminthe, gathers in the chiefs of the cacos, eir men, and in a short time he has formed a revolutionary

You followed him then, as chief of the executive power,

. Yes, sir.

Where did you head in again, at St. Marc or some place like . Gonaives is the first place I think I touched. Understand, r procedure in this warfare.

they take one place after another?

. Yes, sir; and they take them consecutively along the you make it clear that this Gen. Sam was a revolutionary harge of the army of the recognized de facto and de jure

. I do not think I have yet, sir.

ll, what was he?

Shall I just read a few lines on that, that will explain the ms that shortly after Davilmar Theodore, the then presint at Port au Prince, Gillaume Sam, in view of his strength mandated to be, and had been appointed by Theodore, as a rtment of the north and northeast, and had taken up his e Haitien. About the middle of January a revolutionary men appeared before Cape Haitien. This is the force I ago. And as it eventually turned out, he pretended that the city; in fact, he had nothing to defend the city with, appealed to them to make him the chief of the executive rds, he appointed himself there, the chief of the executive ng with the generals in the north and northeast for this n he betrayed the President?

Yes, sir.

ed the Government, and organized a revolutionary party
elf as the head of it?

Yes, sir.

ed he was well on in his revolutionary movement around

Yes, sir.

ctioneering by force, and attempting in a revolutionary resident of the Government?

Yes, sir; and carrying out the usual routine of taking taken by all revolutionary forces. Strange to say, they s the president able to do anything to preserve order and n the dignity of his office and the Government against this ent?

He was not, to a satisfactory extent.

ere was he during the movement?

He was in Port au Prince, the capital.

no attempt had been made up to this time to oust him;
st him from the capital?

No, sir. They, the Government, carried on the usual procnd waiting for him to come around. The President of the Republic eventually sent troops around to meet him at these different places and as he advanced he took these places, because the forces that the Government had were not sufficient to hold these cities.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let us get, if we can, Admiral, as promptly as possible to the events which led to your first landing. Gen. Vilbrun Gillaumeau on his military electoral campaign and moving toward the capital?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He took the capital, did he, or not?

Admiral CAPERTON. He took these various cities all the way around from Cape Haitien to Port au Prince, via Gonaives, St. Marc, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that.

Admiral CAPERTON. And finally, when a revolutionary general or commander reaches a place called St. Marc, about 60 miles from the city, if he takes that city, the capital falls immediately, and the President then makes arrangements to get out.

The CHAIRMAN. To go to St. Thomas?

Admiral CAPERTON. To go anywhere he can, unless he is murdered in the capital.

The CHAIRMAN. Who took St. Marc?

Admiral CAPERTON. Vilbrun Gillaumeau Sam.

The CHAIRMAN. Then what?

Senator KING. Was there a real battle there?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir; there was no real battle. The force withdrew after a slight battle, when Gillaumeau Sam arrived, and when everybody was his friend. They turned and went to him.

The CHAIRMAN. There are analogies between Haitian and American history after all. However, after he took St. Marc, then what?

Admiral CAPERTON. After he took St. Marc Gillaumeau Sam moved toward Port au Prince. Everything was in great excitement, and at that time, at 9.30 a. m., on Wednesday, January 27, 1915, the U. S. S. Wolverine arrived at Port au Prince.

The CHAIRMAN. You arrived at Port au Prince, and what did you find? You did not land at Port au Prince at that time?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir. I am trying now to follow up this revolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Had Gillaumeau Sam come into Port au Prince when you were there?

Admiral CAPERTON. Not at that time. He arrived much later. I sent headquarters from Cape Haitien, as things quieted there, as his army moved out in the circle of march, and as I saw that my presence was demanded in the capital, I went there with my flagship, leaving the other ships under command to look out for the different cities where I knew there would be trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. What were these ships, gunboats?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; gunboats.

The CHAIRMAN. You left them back in the various ports?

Admiral CAPERTON. I left them in the various ports and gave them orders to meet the general outside of the city and make him again promise that they would not loot or burn down the cities or fire in the cities, because I considered that not humane. The cities were all undefended, and they were poor, generally speaking, and unarmed.

The CHAIRMAN. These were campaign pledges that you were exacting?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. He gave me the first one in Cape Haitien. I was not satisfied with it. I met him at each one, and so he finally let me say to him, "I do not see how you know where I am going. Every time I enter a city I find your representative outside with some question, asking me to behave myself." He promised to do so, and upon the whole he did very well, considering everything. He kept his word very well in that respect.

Senator KING. Were your movements approved by the Government?

Admiral CAPERTON. Every movement, sir; every single movement.

Senator KING. And you were not interfering with the functions of the Government that was in control of the island?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir.

Senator KING. I do not speak of the revolutionary movement.

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir; I understand.

Senator KING. And all that you were trying to do was to exact pledges from the revolutionary commander that he would not sack, burn, rape, despoil, or loot in the towns and cities which he conquered?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. That is what they usually do.

miral, right at this point, did you familiarize yourself antecedent history of the island to justify the statement that they usually do those things in a revolutionary war? Yes, sir.

Why did not have civilized warfare there in those former events?

No, sir; to my knowledge there has never been one, up the history of many and have heard of many and as savage warfare?

Savage warfare; that is, uncivilized warfare.

You know whether in any previous revolutions there were wars, before taking the capital, in which men were injured

Oh, yes, sir; later on, when the next general came around. Detail. I was ashore then, having landed my forces to preserve order."

Was this excursion was taken later by another?

Yes, sir.

On several questions asked me in regard to fighting at they were taken by the revolutionists, also concerning the Haitian Government in regard to the "service of the treasure ships sailing for Port au Prince on the 26th of January, I added the following remarks: I had decided to remain in line after the departure of Guillaume Sam in order to that time; but the commanding officer of the Wheeling, reported that the Theodore government had declared a blockade of northern Haiti, but was unable to enforce the blockade, and no coal; that the American schooner Alice Pendleton, in the harbor alongside the wharf with 600 tons of coal for the Haitian Government. It was known that the Government's treasury was still in a low state and that they had been unable to purchase of this coal. Moody further stated that the Government had made attempts to obtain money from the Haitian bank upon the refusal of the management of this bank to deliver money, and that the Government had made threats to seize the bank. Wheeling further reported that our minister had received threats from French and German Legations for an American man-of-war to protect the protection of foreign interests. The Wheeling also reported relative to landing an armed force to protect the bank, and this threatening attitude on the part of the Haitian Government, the safety not only of the bank property but for American property general at Port au Prince, and especially for the schooner in view of these conditions, and also in view of the appeal of the minister to protect American and foreign interests at St. Pierre, I decided to concentrate what forces I had available and in view of these conditions. In reply to the Wheeling, I informed Commander Moody that the American minister, use discretion relative to property, and also to protect the schooner Alice Pendleton. I informed the Navy and commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet immediately.

On the morning of the 27th of January, 1915, at Port au Prince, I called the minister with my staff, and found that although the Government to seize funds in the bank had not been successful, the situation was far from easy. Previous to my arrival I had learned that officials had again visited the bank and demanded gold, and that the Haitian Government as part of "retrait" the bank director of the bank, refused, and reported to the legation that the same authorities would return and again renew their demand, and that he would again refuse, and was afraid the authorities would take the money by force.

In view of the critical condition of the Theodore Government their urgent needs, the lack of coal for the gunboats, the exposed position of the Alice Pendleton, the approach of the revolutionists, and the general situation at Port au Prince, I decided to keep in constant touch with the minister and watch events. In view of the distance of the Washington from the legation, I mounted a field radio set at the Legation for purposes of communication.

Because of the report that the Government forces were threatening St. Marc if they were forced to retire from that place, our ministers French and German ministers were somewhat worried and requested to send a ship to that port.

On January 28, 1915, I received the following message from the State, via the Navy Department, in reply to my request of January 27 for immediate instructions relative to the protection of bank property at St. Marc:

"State to the Government of Haiti that the Government of the United States of America can not consent to the removal of funds that belong to the bank and getting which funds it is not possible for the bank to comply with contractual obligations it has assumed. You will issue to that Government a warning that any attempt that might be made to remove the funds from the bank will compel you to take into consideration means to prevent violation of foreign stockholders' rights."

Shortly after this I received the following message from the Secretary of the Navy:

"If deemed necessary in cooperation with minister land marines and the Navy I also received from the commanding officer of the Wheeling on the following message describing conditions at St. Marc, Haiti:

"Government force 300. Revolutionists greatly outnumbered are fighting 4 miles from town back of hills. Consular corps in body call. It is stated it is feared Government forces will be defeated again and driven into town and then fear they will burn town to-night unless I call for Government expects reinforcements about 2 p. m., Thursday. Minors and interior now in town and I will have interview this afternoon. Town itself quiet now but practically deserted by population except few on account of fear. More later.

On January 29, 1915, the Theodore Government published the following proclamation changing the depository for customs and tax receipts from the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti to such business houses or places as may designate, etc.:

[Translation.]

PROCLAMATION—JOSEPH DAVILMAR THEODORE, PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI

[See art. 97 of the constitution.]

See that the seals have been fixed to the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti, on a value of 95140 dollars (P or 95140) that by reason of the expiration of the 18th and 23d of December, permitting the running use of certain values for the State.

Considering that it is of moment before the illegal opposition of the State that these definite values should be at the disposition of the Government, considering that the extreme rarity and scarceness of gold renders the payment of taxes in gold, paralyzes the importation and exportation and creates a situation very prejudicial to the public treasurer, that it is to provide against this case with major force of which the gravity is

With reference to the second new paragraph of the first article of the 23d of December, 1914, aiming at the resumption of the secret treasury under the direction of the secretary of state of finance and commerce and the advice of the councils of the secretary of state.

ARTICLE 1. After the publication of the present proclamation all the duties of exportation and the additional 45 per cent tax of gold on imports will be deposited to the credit of the State at Port Jacmel, Cayes, Jermie, Aquin, Miragoane, Petit-Goave, and St. Marc. business houses and at such banks which will be designated by the state of finance, this and the amount of 95,140 dollars will belong to the State actually under the seals at the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti. The value fixed by the two laws of the 18th and 23d of December, 1914, portion of the mortgages deposited designated to the home debt deducted from the moneys received and held at the disposition of the bank by the State of the value of the moneys before defined the reimbursement to the interested accounts by means of the official seal and as fixed by the laws of the 18th and 24th of ations and the surtax of 45 per cent will be deposited one half, one half in treasury bonds, or in the notes of the new bank at the rate of 5 plasters for $1.

That proclamation will be published and executed under the signature of the secretary of state, of finance, and of commerce. Given at Port au Prince, January 27, 1915, and the one hundred and first of the independence.

DAVILMAR THEODORE.

Minister of State of Finance and of Commerce.

I had been in consultation with the American minister at Port au Prince. On Saturday forenoon, January 27, I received from him that the final answer of the Theodore Government had been directed made by the State Department in its telegram had not been received; that he expected such reply in a few days. About 1,000 Government troops had collected at Port au Prince coming from the south.

The American minister informed me that he was assured by the Theodore Government that no attempt would be made to forcibly remove the French bank, and that in all dealings in connection with these funds would be followed exclusively.

February 5 I received a radiogram from the commanding officer, Gen. Defly, who, as stated previously, had gone to Gonaives, that Gen. Defly, with about 1,000 men, had entered Gonaives without opposition that day and had been received with a 21-gun salute.

The commanding officer of the Wheeling urged on Guillaumette necessary measures to avoid injury to life and property at Port au Prince.

In the present phase of the bank situation at Port au Prince relative to the withdrawal of funds Port au Prince had been quiet, in so far as the bank was concerned; there was a suppressed air of uneasiness among all the prominent men were preparing to take refuge in the legalistic rumors of the doings of the revolutionists and Government officials there in the town were constant.

In connection with the minister relative to the situation.

Gen. Monplaisir came to Port au Prince, and there was also at this time Gen. Defly, at one time general of the Arrondissement of Port au Prince. These men were undesirable characters. Defly had an illegitimate son, a general of the Arrondissement, and Monplaisir, while despotic and arbitrary in his methods. Both were consequently not the best Haitians. There was coming to my notice complaints by Defly and Monplaisir for getting control of the situation.

It is possible from information that I had gathered in Port au Prince that Monplaisir or Defly might attempt to force intervention by creating such insufferable conditions in Port au Prince as to land for the protection of foreign life and property.

From what I could learn, thought that if they were in the United States and that if the United States should decide to interfere in view of their high official positions at the time we would probably be kept in office by the United States and would readily pay and support. Further, in connection with the of 10 senators had attempted to approach me with the intention to prevent Guillaume from entering Port au Prince so that he might be elected President, their ideas being that the United States should have a government to be. It is needless to say that I ignored and that I refrained from showing by any word or action in favor of any man or party in Haiti.

A strong man, but feared by the better class of Haitians on account of his methods and crooked tendencies. He had already served a long sentence imposed for falsifying government financial statements.

Large overissue of bonds the proceeds of which he had been using for his own use.

STANFORD LIBRARIES

In view of the conditions in Haiti which I believed were unusual, because of the excessive number of plots and counter plots among the Haitians, the excessive continuation of revolutionary movements and disturbances throughout the country, the rapidly approaching fall of the Theodore government and the consequent chaotic conditions that would occur in Port au Prince on the approach of Vilbrun Guillaume with about fifteen hundred men, of whom were many cacos, the lawless men of the north who were very much feared; in view of the representations made by the United States with reference to the customs and other matters; in view of the possible violation of Haitian neutrality by belligerent ships of European powers; in view of the unsettled condition of the bank question which, although assuredly, had been received that no forcible attempt would be made to remove funds from the bank yet far from settled owing to the breaking of the contract by the Theodore government; the changing of the depository for customs receipts, and the action taken by the directors of the bank in connection therewith; in view of the disturbed conditions in Santo Domingo; and especially in view of my knowledge of the policy of the United States Government, which, without doubt, might demand of me to take prompt action in that vicinity; I decided that an expeditionary regiment of marines be sent to this naval station, to Cienfuegos Bay, Cuba, together with the necessary means of transportation and that both the Marines and the transport be subject to my immediate orders.

On February 18, the commanding officer of the Des Moines reported that St. Marc was in the hands of the revolutionists; that about eight of them had been killed in the town during the night; that casualties were few; and that a number of the Government forces were drowned while trying to get off to the north. On the 19th and that Monplaisir, the Theodore minister of the interior, was reported to have been killed. It was afterwards found out that Monplaisir had been stabbed in the back, presumably by one of his own men in the boat getting off to the north.

In the midst of the foregoing events on February 8 the commander of the Wheeling reported that ex-Minister Bobo was on board the Pacifique and that he had been invited to organize and lead a new revolution.

During this time Port au Prince was becoming more disturbed. Up to this date, February 18, 1915, there had been no outbreaks. On that date, however, several changes were made by Davilmar Theodore in his cabinet, among which was the resignation of Mr. Norno, minister of foreign affairs.

At 7 p. m., Saturday, February 20, the commanding officer of the Moines reported that the Dutch steamer Prins Frederick Hendrik had arrived at St. Marc from Cape Haitien with 70,000 gourdes for Guillaume, and a little; that all was quiet at Cape Haitien and Ouanaminthe; and that the Pacifique had recently been at Puerto Plata.

As I believed that Guillaume had the situation well in hand at St. Marc and would preserve order, and as he now had received considerable money and had paid his troops, and as, therefore, the pressure on the customs at St. Marc was relieved, and as the situation was rapidly approaching a normal condition at Port au Prince, I decided to concentrate all my forces at Port au Prince and accordingly ordered the Des Moines to that place.

The arrival of the Dutch steamer Prins Frederick Hendrik had been expected for a day or so prior to arrival, and it was believed that President Theodore would take passage on her, this being in accordance with the long honored custom of procedure in the abdication of Haitian Presidents who were exiled.

After the departure of President Davilmar Theodore on the Prins Frederick Hendrik, and after the occupation of Port au Prince by the Guillaume government on February 23, a beneficent effect was noticeable. Business was resumed, the Stores, which had been closed for several days, were reopened; the schools were reopened and the country people began bringing produce into the city. The water was turned on in the city again; and excellent order was preserved. It was reported to me by men who have witnessed these revolutionary changes in many years that this change of government in Port au Prince was the first time had been occasioned by the least disturbance of any time for many years.

On February 26 I received a radiogram from the commander in chief of the United States forces, directing that the Tacoma or some other vessel proceed to Santiago de Cuba, meet Gov. Fort and Mr. C. C. Smith, representatives of the State Department, and then convey them from Santiago de Cuba to Port au Prince, Haiti, and stating further that these gentlemen expected to arrive at Santiago de Cuba on the evening of March 8.

4, the Haitian Congress, in a joint session of senators Albrun Guillaume Sam President of Haiti.

March 5, the Tacoma arrived from Santiago de Cuba. Mr. C. C. Smith, commissioners to Haiti from the State at Port au Prince and throughout the Haitian Republic had a constitutional government was established on shore in order and gaining the confidence of the people. The relations between the United States Government and the Government of Haiti were in the hands of the American minister and a special commission. There seemed, therefore, to be no need of a naval force in the vicinity of Port au Prince as I had never, I decided to leave one vessel at Port au Prince to maintain relations and report thereon and to furnish such aid to the mission as it desired.

Washington on March 8. Throughout my operations I had endeavored to ascertain and follow the Government's policy to that island, and in view of its great economic importance to the United States, its vital strategic importance in this our most threatened area, and the complications that arise with foreign powers growing out of its chaotic situation, I attached myself to especial care in all operations in that now, proceed, Admiral, to the events which led to your departure from Haiti, at Cape Haitien.

Then, as I understand, you do not care to hear any further not in detail. Sam took the capital and made himself es, sir.

chairman would not object, I would be very glad to hear what became of the president, very briefly.

es, sir. I have all that written down here, if I can just ry, Washington's birthday, I remember—I would like to know what it takes me so much time to do this—do that.

want to do it, in justice to myself. Every move I made was made by the forces of the Government and the press reported daily, and sometimes twice a day, to the department, so that I have all this down chronologically. It is fresh my memory, as I have about 20 of these volumes.

I have gotten down to when Guillaume Sam arrived. About the 23d of February. I have not looked at these and I have not refreshed my memory because I have not wanted to make it plain that there was fighting at these different times generally, during Guillaume Sam's march from Cape always vanquish the forces of the Government?

es, sir; generally he was successful. He had more money and he managed to get ammunition.

did he get his money and his ammunition?

was said that his uncle, a previous president, gave him money as president. This I have heard discussed in Port au Prince is a fact. He did not have all of this at that time, for instance—I think it was St. Marc or Gonaives—he managed to get some of his friends who were bankers.

foreign or native bankers?

Well, they are very much mixed up, sir; it is hard for me to say now of some native people who loaned him money.

there any German bankers who loaned him money or money?

I think there were in St. Marc. I had quite an experience in all that is all detailed here in my report. It would take some Senator KING. He did not conceal the fact that he was trying to the Government, did he?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir. This was a regularly organized revolution can be termed such. The moment he acclaimed himself "chief of the power" he became the chief revolutionist in the island and the next to-be if he were successful with his revolution.

Senator KING. That was a violation of their constitution—his motion.

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, he got to Port au Prince?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you want to say anything about his actions in the city?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; I would like to make a few remarks to that. During Sunday, February 21, 1915, the three parties of revolution under Hilaire, Zamor, and Guillaume Sam, continued closing in on Port au Prince. These people had joined with Guillaume Sam, one on the east and the other from the south, so that he had, finally, three bodies of troops advancing on Port au Prince. At this time General Vagues was spoken of as the head of one of the parties of revolution. The French consulate or French Legation, having taken refuge when the president went into office, and he had been there for four or five months, not able to get out, during which time he was fed and clothed by the French minister's family, with whom I talked much about this subject on a later date.

At 11.30 o'clock Sunday evening, the minister of war, Vagues, sent to the Wheeling, in Port au Prince, and through him applied for General Vagues on board that vessel the following night, stating he intended to board a Dutch steamer, the Prins Frederick Hendrik, the next morning. It seemed that it was arranged to delay this entry into the city of Port au Prince until this steamer arrived, and it was presumably understood that General Vagues was to leave on this steamer, which it turned out was a fact.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean that just as these revolutions are functioning their progress so also it is customary to allow the outgoing President to leave the country before the arrival and the inauguration of the new one?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; sometimes he is allowed to do so, but unfortunately, like President Guillaume Sam, who was assassinated in the capital.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I understand.

Senator KING. There have been others who have been killed, have they?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

Senator KING. If they did not get out, they were killed?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. They usually took asylum promptly in the French Legation, which was divided from the palace by a large wall. There was a door with a key about that long [indicating], and if they had not rusted between the time the previous President had run to the Dutch steamer, they would make his escape all right, but on this occasion, with Guillaume Sam, they could not unlock the door, and he had trouble getting over the wall. He finally got over; they assisted him over the wall. That I will come to later.

The matter of asylum—I do not suppose you want to know how it was dealt with?

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive the general?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir; we informed him that there were two of his men-of-war in the harbor, two of his own men-of-war, and he could go to the Dutch steamer. This Dutch steamer was expected the next morning at daylight, and she actually arrived on time, and in this instance she did arrive on time, and General Vagues went aboard from his hiding place that night. I did not consider it sufficient danger to grant him an asylum. I knew he had other plans, as stated to him above.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt, Admiral, to ask during all this time you were reporting, as you have said, to the department?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you receive from the department messages during this time?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. They are all in the record here.

Senator KING. I would like to ask, if I may, what did you understand was there for?

Admiral CAPERTON. For the protection of foreigners and foreign property.

ou think that your presence and the presence of the protect lives and property?

Yes, sir; undoubtedly so.

Had not been there, do you think that not only American but other foreigners would have been taken?

I fear so.

Former revolutions resulted in the massacre of foreigners

Generally speaking, no. I think they had not been in danger of foreigners. I think that is a matter of history. But they had no property and the business of the cities, and no one knew the time. I will show you later, when I really landed, the circumstances and things that did take place in the city.

ou have sufficient contact with the people, the Haitians, the Government, and the foreigners, including Americans, to form the belief and the conviction that your presence

Yes, sir.

For the protection of the lives and property of foreigners?

Yes, sir; and especially property, because they always join a revolutionary army, it goes without saying that they steal, loot, or do whatever he likes to the natives, which they fed themselves all the way along, and lived on the ou talk with Americans there?

Yes, sir.

They state to you that their lives were in danger, and

Yes, sir; they insisted upon my landing, and when I landed I will tell you why I landed. I had a conversation with the chargé d'affaires of the English Government, who was then really the secretary of our legation. You in contact with the President of the Government from Yes, sir; I was, in a manner, but we had not recognized him. I had not met him, but my officers talked with some of them a little time, but we had not recognized him, so that I had not called upon any of them officially.

He was de facto as well as de jure President?

Yes, sir; he was de facto President.

Any movements of your war vessel around the island there, or were they not; what is the fact, from what you could

From what I could learn; yes, sir. He knew I was trying to be as civilized in warfare as near as possible.

Protect life and property and to prevent massacre?

Protecting property and protecting lives; and the President went out to beseech the then revolutionary chief not to do his me interrupt there with a specific question that will go with the Admiral.

Cases, of your own knowledge, were there, either in the revolution, or others, of injury to the property of foreigners by foreigners at the hands of the revolutionists? Can there a foreigner was killed by the revolutionary or Government property was destroyed?

I do not believe I can, sir. You must understand that foreigners are not allowed to own property by the constitution.

They are not allowed to own real property?

No, sir.

Do you know of any case where any of them were ever

I do not know that I can recall now, sir.

It is all on that point, Admiral.

On the morning of the 22d of February I sent an officer to the legation to ascertain the news. From this officer I received the report that there had been considerable firing throughout during the night.

I might say that during this time they shut off the water from the revolutionists did—so that the citizens were crying out for water in the street. The French minister made a protest to the officer in control relative to this, and had received assurance that the water would be turned on again as soon as the revolutionists took control.

Furthermore, I was informed that Gen. Prædel and Gen. Polynice were in charge of the city and were making arrangements to turn same over to Gen. Gillaume, and that Davilmar Theodore had been informed by the revolutionists that he would be given until noon to make his departure. This was on the morning of the 22d of February.

I may say that Gen. Polynice and Gen. Prædel and four or five others were in the habit of taking charge when the President was about to leave. They assumed authority to handle the police and the soldiers as best they could, constituting themselves a committee of safety.

The CHAIRMAN. That was their usual function there?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. On many occasions before, and while I was here, with two Presidents, they both had the same position.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they hold office in the intervals between the sessions of this authority?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir; Gen. Prædel, I think, did, but Gen. Polynice was a business man—I do not know his business, because none or few of them had any business. I do not think he was a lawyer, even. Many are professional men, but they are not business men.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, his business was to take charge in the intervals?

Admiral CAPERTON. At that time he always took charge. They always looked to him; they looked to him to take charge.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he save enough during that short time to hold office in the interval?

Admiral CAPERTON. I suppose so. He had a very nice home there and was a very nice man. They always went to him and expected him to bob up, and he came up things quieted down more or less in the city when he took charge. He was the man I went to later when I had to go in myself, as I will explain when I reach that part of my testimony.

At 11.45 a. m. on this same day, January 22, Port Alexander and the water front fired a salute, and Davilmar Theodore, accompanied by a guard, went aboard the Prins Frederik Hendrik, unoccasionally by day of any kind. With him went only two or three of his cabinet.

The CHAIRMAN. Accompanied by whom?

Admiral CAPERTON. Accompanied by the ex-Minister of War Vague, whom I met with my glasses. They made quite an imposing march down the wharf with their long frock coats and silk hats. He was then going aboard the Prins Frederik Hendrik leaving the country. He was accompanied by the Minister of War Vague, as I said before, Locean Baptiste, Mr. Geraud, and two sons. I know it to be a fact that the old man, Mr. Theodore, had hardly a sufficient amount of money to buy his ticket out of the country, as he appealed for money to help him to go where he wished as it turned out he only went to Santo Domingo.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, will you not move on to the events which followed this occupation? I think that is what we want.

Admiral CAPERTON. You wish to know how the President came in? The then President, as I have said before, Mr. Gillaume Sam got in? The then President, as I have said before, Mr. Theodore, left the country in the Dutch steamer.

The CHAIRMAN. In a plug hat, on a Dutch ship?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; leaving the city without any government, and the only people with any authority whatever were those two, Gen. Prædel and Gen. Polynice, who appointed themselves a committee of safety, as they usually called themselves.

The city became more quiet as soon as Theodore left, Gens. Prædel and Polynice being in charge, working until the arrival of Vilbrun Gillaume Sam.

Senator KING. Where were the revolutionary forces then; how near the city? Were they in the city then, some of them?

Admiral CAPERTON. Not yet. About 800 revolutionists arrived in the city the following day.

Senator KING. You said they had been firing.

Well, on the outskirts, a mile or so out, but there was some everybody fires there on an occasion of this kind.

President left, according to custom the Government forces finally turned over and joined forces with the new man commanded to be paid, and they would be paid under this prominent had some forces at this time up in the northeastern bound near Ouanaminthe, where they went after Gillaume on this tour of his.

On the 23d of February about 800 troops of Vilbrun Gillaume entered the city from the north. A committee of administration met on the arrival of Vilbrun Gillaume, and publicly assured peace.

On the 25th of February, Vilbrun Gillaume entered Port au Prince with 600 men on foot and 400 mounted. His entry was occasioned of any kind. It was now estimated that about 5,000 troops were there. These men, or troops, had very few clothes. They were irresponsible, with no education, and simply did what they pleased to a certain extent.

Cacos constituted a large part of the troops, did they?

Yes, sir; they are all cacos; all the revolutionary fellows in the northern hills, and they have chiefs, as I said, and are paid by the new Government. I might say that in the not being on shore at this time I do not know how many days they paid them off a few gourds, 5 or 10 each. Eight gourds were equivalent to our dollar. They pay these troops off with their rifles, and sometimes they pay them a gourd or two. They proceed back to their hills again, waiting for the next unable to get a quorum of the Congress, so that he was not in several days afterwards.

Is that a formality usual under the circumstances?

Yes, sir. I might say there is always a kind of "perpetual session." This committee can meet and call the congress into a special session?

Yes, sir.

And it is usual for a man, when he has come to the end of his term to the capital, to be confirmed in the position of power by the Congress?

Yes, sir. So this committee met and sent out a call for a meeting but they were not able to get the delegates together—they did not—so that Guillaume was not inaugurated until the 7th, of March.

Never mind the date.

The situation at Port au Prince and throughout the country has now become tranquil. A constitutional government was established which was maintaining order and gaining the confidence of the people. I merely mention this to explain my next move. I therefore took the opportunity available for me to withdraw what vessels I had in the vicinity and order them to Guantanamo for target practice, and to take advantage of the lack of opportunity for such work during the year preceded by all vessels of the cruiser squadron.

On the 1st of March, two days after the President was inaugurated, I arrived at Guantanamo. Upon arrival at Guantanamo the commander in chief of the fleet informed me that conditions were not very settled at that time, so that that I would have to order me to that station, so that that I would have to order me to that station, so that that I would have to order me to that station.

In accordance with orders of the Navy Department, stating that I had landed at Cape Haitien, Haiti, and that I was to be received in Washington to thank the French commander and take with me "protect property and preserve order," I arrived with the Albatross at Cape Haitien at 9.30 a. m. on Thursday, July 1, 1915, coming from the north. In order to better estimate the situation at Cape Haitien I went with the general situation in the Haitian Republic. I went to the department to send the Eagle to Port au Prince for the purpose of seeing the situation. At Cape Haitien I found the French cruiser Descartes and exchanged salutes with that vessel. At 10.30 a. m. the commander of the Descartes, Capt. H. Lafrogne, paid an official call on me. The commanding officer of the Descartes stated that he had landed at Cape Haitien, coming from Jamaica via Port au Prince, on the early morning of June 19, at the direction of the French minister at Port au Prince; that time a revolutionary force under Dr. Rosalvo Bobo, minister of interior in former President Davilmar Theodore's cabinet, was in charge of the town and the Government troops entered; and that on that day, for the protection of foreign interests, the Descartes had landed a force of 50 men, mentioning them at the French consulate, the French monastery, and the Commander Lafrogne further stated that he kept these men on shore from June 24, guarding foreign interests and otherwise aiding foreigners. He stated that he had sent some flour ashore for the use of the French citizens.

The French commander further stated that when he arrived in Haiti, he found the French minister at Port au Prince had received an official protest from the Haitian Government against the Descartes remaining in Haiti, on account of the violation of neutrality. He further stated that the French minister in Port au Prince had protested to the same and to the Haitian Government.

Senator KING. All your inquiries supported the statements made to me by the French commander?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

Senator ODDIE. Were there any foreigners or Americans hurt or killed at Cape Haitien at this time?

Admiral CAPERTON. I think not, sir. The French commander stated that he placed himself at my disposal and orders.

The CHAIRMAN. Excuse me. May I ask about what time you are leaving now?

Admiral CAPERTON. July, when I was about to land.

The CHAIRMAN. Your ship is lying off—

Admiral CAPERTON. I had left Vera Cruz under orders, and I had arrived at Haitien waters.

The CHAIRMAN. Where?

Admiral CAPERTON. Cape Haitien, and there I met the Descartes.

The French commander stated that he placed himself at my disposal and orders while at Cape Haitien for the protection of foreign interests. He told me if my instructions interfered with his remaining at Cape Haitien, he would leave him that they did not. He stated that he would probably have to leave for coal.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he tell you that property had been injured or goods landed?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir; but another revolution had started. Government troops had left, or vice versa, I do not know which, and they come in and the other gone out, and when they do that they always sack things, you know, and shoot up the town, and the people were fighting, and asked for French aid, and he landed.

Senator KING. There were foreigners residing there?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes.

Senator KING. Americans as well as French and Germans?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; Americans, French, and Germans.

Senator KING. Many nationalities?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; many nationalities.

Senator KING. The French had done nothing other than protect the interests of foreigners?

Admiral CAPERTON. That is all, sir, and sent some provisions ashore when the people were starving generally.

The CHAIRMAN. You landed then?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir—not just yet, sir. I do not suppose you care to know how the revolutionary forces came in. You understand that Bobo was the minister of interior under Davilmar Theodore, the President, and had just left Haiti. He became dissatisfied, I might say, in the meantime resigned from the cabinet and went north to become President himself.

Senator KING. He started another revolution?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; he did. This was in about two months.

Senator KING. And he had gathered a considerable force, had he, or vagabonds and cacos?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. We will get to that. Even on the 2d of July with a revolutionary force of 500 men under Gen. Bobo, he had arrived feeling and without any desire to appear as a threat, but it is made so that he may know exactly what to expect of him. The admiral is here to protect the lives of foreigners. This he will do if necessary, but he sincerely hopes that he believes that there will not be occasion for him to do anything. The admiral knows that there are armed revolutionists near Cape Haitien, and the possibility of a conflict between these revolutionists and the Government.

"The admiral believes that the lives and property of foreigners residing at Cape Haitien will be threatened and insecure should there be fighting in the city itself or near the city. Therefore the admiral states that there must be fighting in the city or near it, or he will have to take means to protect the lives of foreigners. He therefore suggests that all fighting must take place at a reasonable distance from the city, and that under no circumstances shall foreigners be endangered in life or property."

In reply to this the commander stated as follows:

"I thank you for your kindly sentiments. Express to the admiral my compliments and my appreciation for his message."

Senator KING. That was the representative of the Government?

Admiral CAPERTON. Gen. Blot, the representative of the Government.

Afterwards I wished to confirm this, so I wrote the following letters to Gen. Probus Blot, commanding the Haitian Government troops at Cape Haitien.

The CHAIRMAN. Put them in the record as they are. You do not need to read them.

(The letters referred to are here printed in full, as follows:)

CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,

U. S. S. WASHINGTON, FLAGSHIP,

Off Cape Haitien, Haiti, July 2,

Gen. PROBUS BLOT,

Commanding Haitian Government at Cape Haitien, Haiti.

SIR: In confirmation of the conversation you had with Capt. E. L. Beardsley, chief of staff, this morning; I have the honor to state that the United States naval forces are present at Cape Haitien for the purpose of protecting the lives and property of American and other foreign citizens.

In view of the number of lives and quantity of foreign property in Cape Haitien, it is impossible for fighting to occur in that town without seriously endangering these lives and property. In view of the situation of Cape Haitien, the whole attack and defense of that town can take place well clear of it; and victory to one faction or the other there decided. I must, therefore, insist that no fighting whatever take place in the town of Cape Haitien, so that the contending factions fight their battles well clear of the town, so that bullets will not fall therein.

In furtherance of these ends, and to aid the local authorities in maintaining order and guarding property, if it should become necessary, I am prepared to land United States forces at Cape Haitien.

I have no intention of questioning the sovereignty of the Haitian nation, or of maintaining any but a neutral attitude toward the contending factions.

I trust that, by confining your military operations to the country, well clear of Cape Haitien and by continuing to maintain order in the town, you will make it unnecessary for me to take action.

A letter similar to this has been sent to Gen. Rosalvo Bobo, commanding the revolutionary forces in the vicinity of Cape Haitien. I am,

Respectfully,

W. B. CAPERTON,

Rear Admiral, United States Navy.

Commanding Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet, and United States Forces in the vicinity of Cape Haitien.

Substantially the same letter was sent to Gen. Rosalvo Bobo, commanding the revolutionary forces in the vicinity of Cape Haitien.

Senator KING. Gen. Blot approved of your course, did he?

Admiral CAPERTON. He approved of my course.

Senator KING. And the foreigners approved of it as well, and the Americans?

Admiral CAPERTON. They were satisfied, I think, but I stated further to the gentlemen that if they would fight out on the plains outside of the city I would recognize the man who won, and I would see that he afterwards took possession of the city.

ould so so in an orderly manner. In other words, I did not nting to stop this revolution, or as taking any sides one way ou were just establishing rules like those of the Marquis

Yes, sir.

you learn from the American consul, the French consul, was danger to the lives and property of foreigners, except rench marines, or the maintenance, at least temporarily, essel in the harbor?

Yes, sir. I do not think I can hardly describe the dif-in the city by merely having a few foreign troops there n they came in, these fellows, especially the revolutionists—perhaps more or less revolutionists—the Government had y did as they pleased, ransacked everything, took what the town, and were entirely unruly.
ting and violence?

Yes, sir; no order whatever.

were the lives and property of foreigners jeopardized by movements?

I should think so, sir. They are certainly a very dissent an order to Gen. Bobo?

Yes, sir; the revolutionary general.

ow who he is. Did he respond to your suggestion that if g that it be removed from the town?

I think he did, sir. I have his reply here.

he make any objection to your suggestion to him?

No, sir.

15 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

ssembled at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of ow, Admiral, let me recapitulate. At the moment that our views to Blot and Bobo, the French marines had re-

Yes, sir.

at yours had not been landed?

No, sir.

u did not land forces immediately upon the reembarkation was an interval between?

Yes, sir; an interval there of several days.

nd your forces been landed at the time that you dispatched Bobo and Blot? Were you in occupation of the city or at that time, do you remember?

No, sir; my men had not landed. I landed them first on nk this happened on the 1st of July, the 1st or 2d.

want to be sure whether I have got the date of the com-Bobo. Under what date did you write them?

The letter was written on the 2d of July, about their not the city?

Asking them not to fight in the city; yes, sir.

d you landed on the 3d?

I landed my troops on the 3d, and I give my reasons here on and give them.

This was on July 3. In order to facilitate the communi-merican consulate and the U. S. S. Washington, I estabtation at the railroad station on American property—we nderstand.

And landed a party of 1 officer and 11 marines, and 1 operate the radio set. I informed Gen. Blot of my inten-n, and he made no objection.

On July 3, 1915, I informed the commanding officer of the Descartes Blot of my intention, and on July 5, the ship in full dress, fired a salute in honor of Independence Day, and in order to close this incident up say that on the day I fired the salute I was very much surprised to see Guillaume Sam Government had two ships in the harbor and they fired with us, being also in full dress.

The CHAIRMAN. What date was this—the 4th of July?

Admiral CAPERTON. On the 5th it was done; the 4th was Sunday. That the feeling between the Government at that time and ourselves was

The CHAIRMAN. Very good?

Admiral CAPERTON. Very good; yes, sir.

Bobo's minister was also seen. He stated that the revolutionists did not fight in or near Cape Haitien, and that they were very anxious to avoid foreigners. The minister of war further stated that unless the Government forces came out to fight, the revolutionists would move up to Cape Haitien Wednesday and attack the Government forces.

On July 8 Gen. Blot informed me that he had received orders from Guillaume Sam in Port au Prince to extend to us all courtesies. I expressed my appreciation of this message through an officer and myself.

As an engagement between the Government and the revolutionary forces was not taken place, and as the revolutionary forces were still within 3 miles of Cape Haitien, and as occasional shots were occurring in the vicinity, indicating further fights in the near future, and in view of my announced intention to prevent fighting within the town of Cape Haitien, I decided to take precautionary measures to prevent a sudden rush of both factions into the town, their consequent fighting therein before I could land to prevent such a rush. Washington could not lie closer than 3 miles of the town, and trade with the town was becoming difficult. I learned from residents of the town that on two occasions outside forces had entered the town without warning, and fighting had occurred therein, and my experience of the past winter also indicated that a similar occurrence had occurred at St. Marc.

This is to show why I wished to establish that radio set, so that I could communicate 3 miles distant from Cape Haitien, and, in fact, the city was hidden by the cape from where I had to anchor.

On July 9th, in accordance with my intention to land an outpost detachment of Marines at Cape Haitien, I directed an officer of my general staff to go to Cape Haitien and explain my intentions, and to obtain his assent if possible. The officer visited Gen. Blot, in company with the American consul, and the consul's directions stated to him my wish to land this force of Marines, to guard the railroad property and American and foreign interests, and that I was pleased to have his assent to this landing.

In answer to that Gen. Blot withheld consent for the present. His reason was that in view of the revolutionists' propaganda that foreigners were aiding the government, any landing of a force there would be interpreted by the revolutionists as a movement to aid the government, and that he could see any reason for the landing at that time.

From this date up to July 27 I remained at anchor off Cape Haitien, and closely followed the actions of the revolutionary forces and the government forces in the city and near Cape Haitien.

On the morning of July 27th I received information from the manager of the French cable station at Cape Haitien that the Arrondissement and the town of Port au Prince had on this morning been attacked by a revolutionary force, and that fighting was going on at Port au Prince. I immediately sent an officer ashore to investigate that report. They visited the cable station and received a confirmation of this report. It was also learned that Guillaume Sam and the government had been overthrown, and that the revolutionary faction now controlled the city, and that the government officials, including Guillaume, had taken refuge in the French and Dominican legations, and the leader of the revolution was not yet known.

These reports were confirmed by cable which was received within a few minutes. Officers were at the cable station, and also from private messages from business houses and individuals at Cape Haitien.

I immediately sent a cable to the American legation at Port au Prince directing the American chargé d'affaires to report the situation to me.

In reply to my message I received the following:

"Guillaume in French legation. Revolutionists in entire control of the city. Outgoing government shot 70 political prisoners in their cells, including account of which trouble is feared. Large number of wounded in fighting this morning. Not known at present movement. City quiet, but under circumstances your presence desired.

"DAVIS, Chargé d'Affaires."

at date was that?

That was on July 27th. This was in reply to the message threatened. Forcible entry attempted for the purpose of English Chargé and French Minister have cabled for grave, and presence of warship as soon as possible

"DAVIS."

I withdraw the landing force from Cape Haitien, I im-Port au Prince, leaving only the U. S. S. Eagle to take at Cape Haitien.

Eagle had no force ashore, then?

No, sir; I withdrew all my forces.

while the U. S. S. Washington was en route from Cape Prince, I sent the following message to the Secretary of the Port au Prince reports a revolutionary faction attacked and palace at Port au Prince Tuesday morning, and has the government. Revolutionary faction now controls city.

including Guillaume, have taken refuge in French and Leader of revolution not yet known.

at Port au Prince reports outgoing government shot 70 including ex-President Zamor, and a large number of soldiers in fight. Latest cablegram from American legation just French legation threatened and forcible entry attempted at President. English chargé and French minister have nation very grave.

present quiet but growing uneasy. Gen. Blot received u Prince, stating revolutionists had control of city, and em. This message signed by Delva, Polynice, Delinois, Belencourt, and Zamor.

detachment from shore, and am proceeding with Washing-

Am leaving Eagle to tend situation Cape Haitien. Have pany, naval station, Guantanamo Bay, stand by to embark nary service in Haiti; unless otherwise directed will use force Washington's battalion if situation requires."

Port au Prince at 11.50 a. m. on July 28, 1915, I immediately the situation, and confirmed the report which I had previformed the Secretary of the Navy as follows—

Admiral, what are you reading from?

This is a copy of my dispatches here.

What your dispatch that you are reading now?

I am going to read it now.

Where you say "Rear Admiral Caperton," did you write person?

These are the quoted parts there.

What is that volume?

This is a report that Maj. McClellan has gotten up from it is a copy.

Do you not think you would do better just to tell us the gauge?

Yes; I can tell you a good many things, but I think per-could tell you what I did, but perhaps I would not be authority for acting.

Well, I want you to follow the course which seems good to interested, as you understand, primarily to know the cir-which you landed marines, and the authority upon which

I am endeavoring to give you that.

Right, sir.

This is my message.

STANDARD LIBRARIES

"Dominican legation violated Tuesday: Gen. Oscar, chief of Arrondissement, forcibly removed and killed. At about 10.30 this morning French legion invaded by mob of about 60 Haitians, better class; President Guillaume forcibly removed from upstairs room and killed at legation and body cut in pieces and paraded about town"—

The CHAIRMAN. These were the Haitians of the better class, then, who violated the legation and cut Sam to pieces?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. If you will allow me, in a moment I will just tell you a short story of that. It will take me a few minutes. The cable continues:

"No government or authority in city. Many rival leaders in town. French force in city for purpose preventing further rioting and for protecting foreign lives and property, and to preserve order. Have directed naval force to Guantanamo, Cuba, to send company marines Port au Prince. According to area city, will require regiment of marines from United States for maintaining order and patrolling. Suggest U. S. S. Montana, U. S. S. North or U. S. S. Tennessee as transport.

"CAPERTON."

When I arrived with the Washington at about 10.30 on the morning of the 28th, the circumstances which I have just related in these various reports were reported to me from the city, and while I was listening to these reports I had my glasses in my hand, and as I looked ashore I saw much confusion there. I was about a mile off, and I saw much confusion, people in the streets and apparently there was a procession, as if they were dragging a body through the city, and I afterwards found out from officers when I was ashore that this was the body of President Guillaume Sam, which had been mutilated—the arms cut off, the head cut off and stuck on poles, and the body drawn with ropes through the city.

To go back a little, I learned from what I considered good authorities that President Guillaume Sam had received many notices in regard to the rioting which might break out right under his nose, and it is said in Port au Prince that he gave the order to Gen. Oscar to execute all prisoners at the first opportunity or first shot in the palace grounds. He was to murder or kill all the prisoners which he proceeded to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Chiefly political prisoners?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir; I understood and know, in fact, that these prisoners were the best people of the city.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I mean; they were seized as political prisoners.

Admiral CAPERTON. They were seized, but they were not political prisoners. A good many of them were business people, and were seized, as I have heard discussed there, on reports, without being substantiated at all.

The CHAIRMAN. It is generally believed that these prisoners were seized as hostages and killed by Sam's order.

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; but I would like to state that they were not people of the city, and a great many of them had never interfered or had anything to do with politics.

This report became current at once throughout the city, and people, friends and relatives there rushed to the prison and found the central courtyard filled with bodies lying dead. There were 5 out of about 170 still alive. They saved their lives, as I found out afterwards, by getting under the prison doors, the little cell doors. They just shot and stabbed and mutilated as they went along from one cell to another. There were three or five in each cell. Those who were saved had enough sense, when the firing party came back, to fall over as if dead. One man was under the crowd of one hundred and sixty odd men, and came near smothering them; they got him out. Finally they pulled him out, and he had not been hurt.

During this melee, or this attack on the palace by, it is said, 500 men under Delva—I do not know that it is necessary to give the names; I do not know that list just now, but I know the five or six men who stirred up this attack, headed by these men they ran to the palace, broke open the palace, and began to shoot and kill one another, and do all sorts of outrageous things.

In the meantime the President attempted to leave the palace. He attempted to leave by this large door which is in the wall which separates the French legation from the palace. He could not unlock the door, and I believe was pushed and pushed over the wall, but, anyway, he reached the legation in some way, in doing so he was shot in the leg, so that when he arrived in the legation he was wounded. This was about 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning of the 27th.

noon the soldiers, who I think at that time had all turned the new chief of executive power, attempted to gain entrance some of them, I believe, did get in, and Gen. Zamor seemed was told to me by one of the young ladies in the legation. stairs, where the President had hidden himself in a locker really, she put out her hands to stop him, and plead with on his shoulder, and reminded him that for the past four he was in exile in the legation, she, herself, had fed him and appealed to him in such a manner that he broke the steps and wept. Then he arose and passed out, and as her, "I will take all of this mob, or this crowd of soldiers, on will not be entered again by any soldiers. I will be He left and took the soldiers out, and as far as we know promised. That was on the afternoon of the 27th.

ning, while all the good people of the city were taking metery to bury them, and were in the act of doing this, word that the Washington was coming; that they saw her admiral would be there in a few minutes and would stop everybody must rush to the French Legation and get the as the crowd that went the second time and really got in. They found him upstairs in the bathroom, pulled him n, dragged him through the back of the house, along a driveway about 50 or 100 yards to the gate, and there m over the gate. The gate being iron, with spikes on top, or some manner caught on the top. They succeeded in ay, and when he reached the outside of the legation they ts into him, and found that he was not dead; and, as I xt thing they did was to cut his throat, cut his head off, body, and started off. Then the cry was to stop. Then utate his arms and his legs and his head and stuck them his body around through the streets. And that was the my arrival I sent two officers of my staff to call at the and ascertain the news. There these officers were met by é d'affaires; and after hearing his statement, Mr. Davis ent into the French Legation, where they found the French sh chargé d'affaires.

which legation were they in then?

In the French Legation. The two officers, the American French minister, and the British chargé d'affaires returned I held consultation with me.

ment or authority in the city, but a so-called "committee was stated, was formed by Gen. Polynice and three other no attempt to preserve order, nor did they inform me or of their assumption of authority. Polynice himself per- on the Dominican consulate. As three of his sons had en. Oscar, he went himself to the Dominican Legation, Oscar, and dragged him out to the street and shot him

I ask you here, Admiral, if any Americans were injured or ?

I think not, sir. There were not very many Americans in with the American chargé d'affaires, the French minister, gé d'affaires, I decided to land American forces for the further rioting and for the protection of the lives and and to preserve order.

at 3 o'clock p. m., on July 28, the Acting Secretary of the ng message to me in Port au Prince:

desires that American forces be landed at Port au Prince and foreign interests be protected; that representatives of be informed of this intention—informed that their inter- and that they be requested not to land. In acting on this your knowledge of present conditions in Port au Prince Department has ordered Jason, with marines at Guan- red immediately to Port au Prince. If more forces are wire immediately."

On my way down from Cape Hatien, as usual, I made all preparations for landing our landing force. Under orders of the Navy Department, in cooperation with the State Department, I landed a provisional regiment of United States Marines, under command of Capt. George Van Orden, United States Corps, at Port au Prince on the afternoon of July 28, 1915, and occupied the city.

This operation is described in the following radiogram sent by me to the Secretary of the Navy on July 28, 1915:

"Landing at Port au Prince decided on after consulting with American chargé d'affaires, French minister, and British chargé d'affaires. In Gen. Polynce and three others, who seemed to be leaders ashore, of opinion to land and protect lives and property and preserve order. They agreed to this landing, but said they could not guarantee peaceful entry, but would all they could to explain our intentions to the populace and prevent violence and would cooperate with us. Descartes (French warship) expected tonight. No foreign men-of-war in harbor excepting Washington at Port au Prince. Considered immediate landing necessary. Landing made at Bizoton with two companies of marines and three companies of seamen at 5.30 p. m. U. S. S. Eagle reports conditions Cape Hatien quiet. Eagle has landed 20 marines at Port au Prince to protect French consulate for fear of attack on refugees there. Landing made at request of French consul.

"CAPER

I think that letter explains this.

The CHAIRMAN. It does. It is all very clear and satisfactory.

Admiral CAPERTON. In order to acquaint the chargé d'affaires of my intentions, after deciding to land I wrote the following letter:

"I have the honor to state that it appears that rioting and disorder at Port au Prince have gotten beyond control and the situation to have become so serious as to endanger the lives and property of Americans and other foreigners who are left without protection. As a result of our conference a naval force will be landed and afford such protection. To facilitate this you are respectfully requested to notify all Americans and all foreign diplomats, representatives of consuls, and others who desire protection to keep within doors, to hoist the flag of their nationality, and refrain from all actions which could possibly be interpreted as a hostile demonstration against the naval force.

"CAPER

I think it but fair and just that I make some mention of the intense desire with which the French minister especially and the British chargé d'affaires insisted upon my landing immediately. The French minister's family consisting of a wife and two daughters, and he said, "They are at the legation with no one to protect them. Now, you see what is going on in the city." And he begged that I land as quickly as possible, as did the British chargé d'affaires.

At 11.20 on the 29th of July I sent the following message to the Secretary of the Navy and Commander in Chief:

"Landing force established in city. Slight resistance during early morning hours but advance was being made. This resistance easily overcome by our forces. As there is no government or authority in the city we required assume military control in city. Am proceeding to disarm Haitian soldiers and civilians to-day. Can not see how this can develop any other than absolute military control of city. Regiment of marines sent to Port au Prince, and should be sent at once. Two Haitian gunboats at Port au Prince and most of army in that vicinity. Earnestly recommend U. S. S. Nashville be ordered take charge situation Cape Hatien and that U. S. S. Castine be made available as soon as possible.

"CAPER

From the reports which I received on shore, the majority of the Haitians welcomed the landing of the American forces and were overjoyed at the prospect of relief from revolution and government by terror. The political soldiers naturally were opposed to any action which would prevent them from securing to themselves the results of the overthrow of the government.

On the morning of the 29th I immediately sent the chief of staff, Captain Beach, ashore to confer with the commander of the landing forces and the prominent citizens with reference to disarming the Haitian soldiers and civilians in the town. The chief of staff and the commander of the landing force

, Charles Zamor, Noel, Nau, Samson Monpoint, and Robin, themselves as a revolutionary committee. I might add that city was taken Gen. Robin was in command of the forces. rleying it was agreed that they would undertake to disarm civilians and place the arms in the palace under guard my inspection as to the completeness of the disarming. the right, and exercised it, of placing a guard over these e with the committee of safety was of some length. I intentions relative to the preservation of law and order assuming military control of the city. They assented to ed to cooperate. This committee agreed to meet my representation cooperation. I make these remarks so as to show promises at the time.

his committee included these same gentlemen who acted interregnums?

Some of them; the principal ones, Mr. Delva and Poly- is not in this party at the time.

at the following message on July 30, 1915, to me concerning on of Port au Prince:

appreciates the excellent manner in which disturbance at en handled and directs that you retain military control of ers. Acknowledge.

"DANIELS."

30th I sent the following message:

ate Department instructions, American chargé d'affaires minister of my instructions relative requesting he not land was done previous my consultation with French minister minister naturally feels great humiliation for his country of violation of his legation. While he feels amply pro- gratitude to me and to United States Government through a guard, yet he says not landing French guard at his lega- Haitians that he was deserted by his Government and hereby suffer. French minister will probably insist on ard. Suggest advisability of arrangements being made tment and French Embassy, Washington, D. C., relative cruiser Descartes arrived Port au Prince 2 p. m. Friday.

"CAPERTON."

here that the first thing that was done when the landing inity of the legations was to send guards immediately to protection before our troops bivouacked for the night.

the following message to the Secretary of the Navy: quiet during day, but still unsettled. French minister in- ceived dispatches from Paris, France. Government stating y, Washington, had been directed inform United States nce considered landing legation guard at Port au Prince honor. French minister repeated his conviction that we life and property and assured me his guard would be and that arms of French guard would not be carried by tion. He further stated that he wishes it understood he fering in any way my actions in town. Press dispatches United States indicate State Department evidently thinks exists Port au Prince. No de facto government ex-

All government functions at present undertaken care e citizens acting practically under my direction. Cham- permission elect president, but deferred in compliance for election President not propitious for maintaining S. S. Eagle reports heavy firing outside Cape Haitien; tempt enter Cape Haitien. Blot in full control there at ken Gonaives, Haiti. Army in north menace peace and rince and Cape Haitien. May have to occupy Cape Haitien. ect request for another regiment of marines.

"CAPERTON."

and the first regiment arrived by this time in Port au

No, sir; it had not arrived. I think it was about this came.

I desire to state, in order to make the record clear, that the Zamor killed the ex-President Zamor, Charles Zamor's brother. Charles Zamor was a French consul general who was in the French legation.

I have been asked the question as to whether or not I have ever heard of the killing of a foreigner by Haitians. The records of the Navy Department disclose that our vessels of war have been there at practically every opportunity since at least 1857. I have not gone back beyond that. This, in my opinion, has caused the Haitians to hesitate before killing any Americans. In other words, no one can tell how many foreign lives would have been lost and foreign property destroyed if United States warships had not been continually present to prevent violence. I think the committee would be surprised to see how many vessels it has been necessary to send down to Cape Haitien since 1857, just to stop these things.

The CHAIRMAN. If the department has a record of that sort, it would be interesting to have it presented to the committee at your convenience, Admiral.

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until Wednesday, October 12, 1900, 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

At 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, Senator (chairman) presiding.

McCormick, Oddie, and Knox.

Ernest Angell, Mr. Horace G. Knowles, and Maj. Edwin N. States Marine Corps, in their respective representative capacity indicated.

REAR ADMIRAL WILLIAM B. CAPERTON, UNITED STATES NAVY, RETIRED—Resumed.

Will you take up your testimony, Admiral, at the point at which you stopped yesterday when you were about to speak of the landing at Cap-Haitien?

Yes, sir. At this time, about July 31, 1915, the Army in Haiti, at Cap-Haitien, were menaces to peace and order, and the French Government was anxious that steps be taken to guard French interests in Haiti. For these reasons it seemed that it might be necessary for the French Government to send a regiment of marines to Cap-Haitien, in which event the department might expect a landing.

I sent the following message to the Secretary of the Navy: "The French Government has sent a commission to Cap-Haitien composed of following: President Légitime, Archbishop Bronan, Gen. Polynice, ex-Minister of War, Col. Chevalier. My instructions to commission are to disarm and disband, soldiers to return to their homes, and to return Port au Prince with commission and join commander in Haiti. This commission is formed by my order and authority."

"CAPERTON."

As a result of this commission, they were able to communicate with the French Government and Bourand, the latter in command of the Government forces in the north, and the others prominent officials and citizens of the north.

The following message was sent to me from the commanding general at Cap-Haitien:

"The French Government, some other gentlemen on Nord Alexis, also some French soldiers, have taken charge. Will prevent entering of armed persons. French can take charge. Blot troops from country entered town; some firing. Have now gone back country. At present expect Bobo will try to come in."

(Signed)

"OLMSTEAD."

May I interrupt a moment there?

Yes, sir.

What order of the department would you refer as laying down the law which that landing took place at Cap-Haitien—yourself or the State Department wished you to keep order?

Yes, sir.

About this time, on August 4, the U. S. S. Connecticut arrived in Prince, but after discharging her marines and stores, owing to the conditions in the north at Cape Haitien, she was sent to that point using my best efforts through the joint American-Haitian Committee, a termed, and after inducing as many of the leaders of the ex-Government revolutionary forces to come to Port au Prince, the Jason was ordered to return on the 5th, at which time I received the following message from Coffey, the chairman of this committee:

"Am returning Port au Prince on Jason with commission, Bobo generals, Bourand, La Roche, and 17 nuns. Bobo troops will remain in position as per your desire. Disarmament can not be accomplished except with aid of troops, either our troops go to them or their troops come to us. I expect demonstration when Bobo arrives; parades, and cheering occur at Cape Haitien this morning. Nothing serious. Commission, Bobo, Bourand, La Roche will probably wish to pay respects. Do you wish to see the generals have arms. Will let none land until question disarming them settled."

I think a few words of explanation are due in regard to having those on board. In compliance with the earnest request of the church authorities at Port au Prince, through the chargé d'affaires, and in view of the unsettled conditions at Cape Haitien, I authorized the passage of about 17 sisters of St. Joseph to Cape Haitien to Port de Prince. They represented to me that they were disturbed in their minds, and that they would like to go temporarily to Port au Prince.

On August 5 the following message was sent to the Secretary of the United States: "To-day Haitian Congress published notice it would elect President but has postponed at my request because time is inopportune. Am informed Congress would elect Menos. Haitian minister at Washington, if he were present, would be elected. Menos is informed president of senate, Dartiguenave, elected. From many other sources hear Dartiguenave is man of honor and of patriotism. Has never been connected with any revolutionary movement, good ability, and anxious for Haiti's regeneration, realizes Haiti must accept any terms laid down by United States, professes to believe any terms dictated will be for Haiti's benefit, says he will use all his influence with Haitian Congress to have such terms agreed upon by Haiti. If elected must be secured by American protection. Same condition applies to whoever else is elected. Bobo only other prominent candidate. Bobo said to be man of intelligence, honor, and patriotism. Friends maintain would work solely for Haiti. Bobo could be elected only through fear of Cacos, and if elected would be against him would undoubtedly start unless prevented by United States."

"Great relief expressed by all classes except Cacos at presence of American troops. Americans afford hope of relief from Government by terror. Universally believed that if Americans depart, Government will lapse into anarchy. My opinion is that United States must expect to remain until native Government is self-sustaining and people educated to respect and abide by them. Should president be elected now there would be machinery for all Government functions. With American protection and influence by United States, progress toward good government could be commenced. Haitian people anxious to have president elected, but present no central Government in Haiti except as directed by me. All uneasy, fearing United States may not permit continuance of Haitian independence."

"CAPE"

The CHAIRMAN. That telegram, as far as I have followed the record, is the first forecast of the policy later pursued in Haiti, that with the election of Dartiguenave and the continuance of the American occupation for four years might be laid for the progressive development of civil order and institutions?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; those were my views, obtained by direct observation of the situation and conditions with all prominent men in Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. The initiation of that policy, then, was in Haiti and not in Washington?

Admiral CAPERTON. That I could not say.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, had the Secretary, by verbal messages or otherwise, intimated to you that that was the policy he had in mind prior to the sending of that dispatch?

The following message was sent on August 2, 1915, to the Haitian revolutions, largely due existing professional soldiers organized in bands under lawless, irresponsible chiefs, offering greatest inducement and but nominally recognize the same are feared by all Haitians and practically control politics. Now in Port au Prince, ostensibly disarmed, but retained to have arms and ammunition hidden. They have elected President, and Congress, terrorized by mere demand, but restrained by my request. Present condition noted account fear of Cacos. Believe can control Congress. Cacos outbreak in Port au Prince after arrival regiment of Connecticut. Stable government not possible in Haiti until order and power broken.

Imperative at Port au Prince if United States desires to exercise financial control of Haiti. To accomplish this must have in addition to that on Connecticut. Majority populace well disposed, and will welcome disbanding Cacos and stopping agreement with Haiti be desired, recommend Capt. Beach, single commissioner for United States, with full instructions. He has conducted my negotiations on shore, and I believe fully of Haitians. As future relations between United States depend largely on course of action taken at this time, I am fully informed of policy of United States.

"CAPEERTON."

Would like to ask you a question there, Admiral. What was the action now imperative at Port au Prince if United States treat treaty for financial control of Haiti?"

I do not know why I mentioned or specified "financial control" in my mind now, and I am sure I had then, that if we wished to have Haiti for all purposes, and a treaty like we finally did conclude, the expression "financial control" would be one you referring to the policy adopted with Santo Domingo in wording, "the financial control of Haiti"?

Somewhere in my dispatches here I did mention something similar to the one which we had in Santo Domingo. I have had on the message now to the department, but I am not finding it somewhere in the record.

Another thing, Admiral. In the last part of your telegraphic relations between United States and Haiti dependence taken at this time, earnestly request to be fully informed of United States. Had you been informed of any policy in effect prior to this time?

No definite policy.

When you receive instructions regarding the future policy in Haiti?

I did, sir.

Will ask you to go on and give it.

On August 7 the following message was received from the to fullest extent consistent with maintaining order and discipline, and issue following proclamation: 'Am directed to inform United States of America has no object in view except to help to maintain Haitian independence and the establishment of a firm government by the Haitian people. Every assistance will be rendered to Haitian people in their attempt to secure these ends. It is the policy of the United States forces in Haiti only so long as will be required.' Acknowledge.

"BENSON, Acting."

Were there anything else that occurs to you that would show the department prior to this?

There is a great deal afterwards. At the present time I do not know whether there was anything definite before or not.

Will ask you in regard to that telegram of August 5. You will recommend as the best for President: "He realizes that Haiti must agree to any terms demanded by the United States and he professes to believe that any demands laid down by us will be to the benefit of the people of Haiti."

STANDARD LIBRARIES

Admiral CAPERTON. He must have received this from various sources. I do not remember whether such were published or not, but it was, as I understood, the general impression.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Admiral, as the basis of that general impression was the conversations which your representatives had with him, I suggested that the United States Government was going to propose terms. He originated the idea that under a new President new contractual relations were to be established between the Haitian Government and the American Government which would require the approbation of the new President?

Admiral CAPERTON. I think the answer to that question would be found where in my notes. I can not just put my hand on it now.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the most important phase of this part of the conversation. Are you unable to recall, offhand, whether the State Department, the Navy Department, directly or indirectly, suggested to the naval commander or the diplomatic agents in Haiti that any terms to which Dartigues accede would be proposed to him by our Government?

Admiral CAPERTON. These were my opinions at the time. Just how they were formed at the present I am unable to answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me put it another way then. Is there in the mind of the department have you any recollection, of a statement of policy which indicates that the purpose of the department that American troops should land and stay in order, as already indicated by your testimony, and then withdraw, was at the same time the policy of the department that having land and order, restoration of order, then steps should be taken by treaty to assure the continuance of order?

Admiral CAPERTON. My first orders were as outlined in my testimony to land for the purpose of preserving law and order and the protection of property, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. Your allusion to these other matters was based on the situation current, originating in the negotiations between the State Department and the Haitian Government which had taken place prior to your arrival in Haiti?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir.

On August 6, finding the presence of a large number of Cacos in Port au Prince extremely undesirable, I directed that they be ordered to disperse and return to their homes. All Cacos found in the streets after 11 o'clock were placed under arrest. There was some excitement in the city as the first orders were made, but when the populace realized that the disbursing of the Cacos was for the good of the people of Port au Prince they appeared to welcome the movement. A detachment of marines, which was taking a number of the Cacos to the detention camp, was fired upon from a crowd on the sidewalk near the customhouse.

This is to show the disorder, etc., and what I had to contend with in keeping peace.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish we might know what constituted a Caco. Do they come from one part of the island, or are they like the medieval conde of professional soldiers who travel in each invading candidate's train? They are turbulent fellows, but I would like to know.

Admiral CAPERTON. I am under the impression that I had in my mind described where they lived and something about them.

The CHAIRMAN. Up in the Grand Basin, you said.

Admiral CAPERTON. I have something further here in the way of a description if I can find it. In the absence of a better description, I would like to describe myself as follows: This northern section of Haiti, or more the northern section of Haiti, is the home of the Cacos, and to understand the movement and of a political campaign in Haiti it is essential that one have a knowledge of who and what the Cacos are. The numerous revolutions, in connection with the tribal instinct of their African forbears, have resulted in the formation of numerous bands of men, each band under its own chief, who are the Cacos. They know no law save that of brute force, and obey the orders of their chief only because he has the physical power to enforce them. The minor chiefs usually follow the direction of a head chief, but the organization is very loosely knit, and it is not uncommon for bands who have for on to be on the same side in the next. As a general rule, side of the "outs," and the men who help a President instrumental in driving him out a few months later.

question of the policy of the department, I would like to The activities of the revolutionary committee which had port au Prince for the purpose of assisting me in maintain- ch a nature that it was necessary to direct them to resign good forces in Haiti to restore peace and order.

State advised the American Minister in Haiti concerning he should adopt toward me for the purpose of assisting Assembly to elect a president of the republic on August act that the Navy last night informed Admiral Caperton election for the president whenever the Haitians wish, a which exists here that election may take place Thursday at you confer with the Admiral to the end that in some ed between you the following things be made perfectly ess understand that the Government of the United States ut that it can not recognize action which does not establish affairs, those whose abilities and dispositions give assur- nd to factional disorder.

that no misunderstanding can possibly occur after elec- de perfectly clear to candidates, as soon as possible, and election, that the United States expects to be entrusted ntrol of the customs and such financial control over the ic of Haiti as the United States may deem necessary for on.

of the United States considers it its duty to support a nment. It seems to assist in the establishment of such a port it as long as necessity may require. It has no design territorial integrity of Haiti. On the contrary what has s what will be done, is conceived in an effort to aid the establishing a stable government and maintaining domestic Republic.

"LANSING."

I, I received the following message from the Secretary of president to take place whenever Haitians wish. The election of Dartiguenave. Has no other motive than that and lasting government by Haitian people and to assist times in future to maintain their political independence ty. United States will insist that the Haitian Govern- territorial concessions to any foreign governments. The nited States will take up the question of the cession of er along with the other questions to be submitted to the ent with regard to its relation to the United States.

(Signed.) BENSON, Acting."

th of August and the day of the 11th of August passed rince; but there was considerable uneasiness and some due to the approaching election and the desperate atti- Zamor factions. Seventeen disorderly Cacos were ar-dismissal of the revolutionary committee, the following to them by my order:

AUGUST 11, 1915.

committee, Port au Prince, Haiti:

directed by Rear Admiral W. B. Caperton, commander in forces in Haiti, to direct the revolutionary committee to l the good forces in Haiti to restore peace and order.

F. L. BEACH,

Captain, United States Navy, Chief of Staff, Commander, United States Forces in Haitian Waters.

On August 11, 1915, the following message was sent to the Secretary of the Navy:

"In conjunction with American chargé d'affaires, informed senators and representatives assembled and presidential candidates of intention and policy. United States Government as set forth by Secretary of State in cable message of August 10, midnight. Senators and deputies cordial. Election will be held to-day. To-day passed quietly, Port au Prince, but considerable uneasiness and demonstrations, due approaching election and desperate attitude of Bobo and Zamor factions. Revolutionary committee issued order dissolving to-day, and attempted seal doors chamber deputies; anticipated their sending force to chamber of deputies, and informed committee the without authority. For this reason and account hostile and disturbance of Bobo and Zamor factions, have dissolved revolutionary committee. Have informed them they have no further authority Port au Prince, and considered public enemies of United States if they attempted to give their orders or further menaced United States policy. Have taken extreme caution against disorder during election; have placed Castine and wharf and landed men from them to reinforce landing force. Have control State telegraph office. Petite Goave quiet. Connecticut to-day interference with ex-Bobo forces relative surrendering arms at Cape Haitien."

"CAPTAIN"

? On October 8 I arranged to have a meeting between the prominent candidates for election as President for the purpose of ascertaining, if I could, their views and their feelings toward the United States. I think it but fair to say that I do not believe—and I received no such reports from the various representatives that I had on shore from time to time—that Dartiguenave knew the United States wanted him to be president. I gathered this from what he told me, and I do not know that he actually knew that we wanted him to be president.

According to arrangements, on Sunday, the 8th, I arranged a meeting at the American legation, at which were present Senator Dartiguenave and Cham, Dr. Bobo, John A. Laroche, and my two staff officers—my chief clerk, Capt. E. L. Beach, and Lieut. E. G. Oberlin. Dartiguenave and Bobo were addressed as follows:

"Gentlemen, it seems likely that one of you will be elected President of Haiti. Haiti is in great trouble; she has suffered much. The United States looks to Haiti as a good friend, interested only in Haiti's welfare, in her happiness and in her prosperity. The United States has determined that revolution and order and anarchy must cease in Haiti; that unselfish and devoted patriotism must characterize hereafter the acts of the Haitian Government. Senator Dartiguenave and Dr. Bobo, realizing this momentous crisis in Haitian history, the eyes of Haiti and of the United States upon you, do you promise to be elected President of Haiti you will, in your official acts, be guided by the earnest devotion to Haiti's honor and welfare?"

Senator ODDIE. Let me interrupt a minute. Who was asking this question? Admiral CAPERTON. My representative, Capt. E. L. Beach, my chief clerk, acting under my orders.

"I will so promise," replied Dartiguenave. "I have no other ambition but to be of service to my country."

"I promise," exclaimed Dr. Bobo, rather theatrically. "I would be glad to lay down my life for my beloved country."

"Senator Dartiguenave, in case Dr. Bobo should be elected will you promise that you will exert every influence in your power to assist him for Haiti? That you will join with him heartily and helpfully and loyally?"

"If Dr. Bobo is elected president I will give him the most loyal support in every effort he may make for Haiti's welfare," replied Dartiguenave with simple dignity.

"Dr. Bobo, if Senator Dartiguenave is elected president, will you promise to be loyal and earnestly in his efforts to benefit Haiti?"

"No; I will not!" shouted Bobo. "If Senator Dartiguenave is elected president I will not help him. I will go away and leave Haiti to her fate. I am fit to be president of Haiti; I alone understood Haiti's aspirations. I am fit to be president but me; there is no patriotism in Haiti to be compared with mine; the Haitians love no one as they love me."

While I am upon this subject I might mention another meeting that I had trying to ascertain the feelings and purposes, and what these gentlemen ted president, because I did not know. I felt, as the talk of Dartiguenave, that I desired to know something about it add, was previous to the other meeting. I sent two of them being Lieut. E. G. Oberlin, and the other my chief Beach, to converse with Senator Dartiguenave. They met at the pleasant home of Dr. Furniss, formerly American and at the time a resident of Port au Prince. Present at Senator Dartiguenave, Deputy Cham, Dr. Furniss, and my particular purpose was to gain a personal knowledge of him and of his views and attitude toward Haiti and the idea was that the man most suitable for the Haitian in whom the Haitians had confidence, one whose animating Haiti's welfare, to which purpose he would give unselfish one who combined such qualifications with confidence in who was friendly disposed toward the United States, who and who would listen sympathetically to the intentions of the there was never any bargaining of any kind whatever with as I know. No pressure of any kind was brought to bear elector in Dartiguenave's interest. The Haitians themselves outside influence or pressure or bargaining, made him, later, committee adjourned until Thursday, October 17, 1921, at

OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, Senator Chairman) presiding.
McCormick and Oddie.

Ernest Angell and Mr. Horace G. Knowles, in their representation hereinbefore indicated, and Maj. Edwin N. McClellan, representing the Navy Department.

McClellan, in order that the committee may have in its power available to the admiral and prepared by the department the hands of the committee before the day is over a will present that to you right now; I have anticipated upon presented to the committee the record referred to.)

ADMIRAL WILLIAM B. CAPERTON, UNITED STATES NAVY, RETIRED—Continued.

Admiral, you may proceed.

Mr. Chairman, as there has been much criticism in respect I think it necessary that I explain, in a few words, the reasons at that time.

The people were very anxious that the Haitian Congress meet and elect a president. These requests were always coupled with the idea that there should be no intimidation of those who were to vote at that time. At this time the most being made in favor of Dr. Bobo's candidacy for the office stated that a "free election" be held, which practically meant with caco guns leveled at the head of every Haitian in his ballot.

What do you mean when you say that a "free election"

The Bobo people were impressing me with the idea that "free election," and I was explaining what a "free election" under the revolutionary régime.

What do you mean you inserted the words "free election" in the

Yes, sir. The most extravagant offers were being made by and by his friends, the idea being that the United States with Haiti was actuated only by selfish, interested motives that the United States wanted the cession of St.
Louis. Bobo crowd offered this and anything else I wanted.

You feel that you can, will you not tell us presently who was the chief of the Bobo faction and through whom they were

These offers just referred to were made to my chief of staff, sometimes in the presence of one of my staff officers and him. It was his almost sole duty at this time to look out for this election business on shore. I might add that the so-called revolutionary committee of safety, self-appointed, were in favor of Dr. Bobo.

In the meantime good citizens, whose only animating purpose was to save Haiti from as much misfortune as it was possible, who had no secret kept me informed of the schemes which seethed through Port au Prince.

It was seen by me that if the Bobo crowd were permitted to conduct the election, it would be a sign that the cacos were still capable of directing destinies by rifles, and that fear and not free choice would determine the result.

Some time before this the Haitians began to talk of Senator Surcouf, a man long in public life. At the time he was president of the Chamber of Deputies. He had kept out of political quarrels, belonged to no faction, and was universally esteemed.

Many willing candidates had presented themselves to me, with statements of their claims; their great friendship for the United States, what they could do for the United States if elected President of Haiti, etc. But not one of them had though listened to, received encouragement.

As I have stated before, it was announced that the election would be held on August 12. At this time I gave orders to Col. E. K. Cole, United States Marine Corps, who was then commanding the marines on shore, having been sent from the Connecticut on August 4, to take such steps as were necessary to prevent disorder of any kind on shore. Any Haitian who came within a block of the Chamber of Deputies on August 12 was to be turned back unless he was signed by a senator or deputy or Col. Cole or myself. This effectually prevented the cacos. At the election that occurred on August 12 the galleries of the Chamber of Deputies were thronged by Haitians invited by the senators and deputies and a few marines and marine officers.

Matters seemed to take on a very serious turn about now, so that the committee of safety—that is, the revolutionary committee—rushed to the aid of J. M. Leger, and tried to induce him to be a candidate. He declined, and his name considered. There are a few remarks I would like to put in here. It is a little long, but I would like to have them go in the record at this point.

Mr. Leger was one of the most distinguished Haitians living, a man educated in Paris, a famous traveler, author, and diplomat; former minister in Paris and at Washington; a gentleman at home in any society; a man alert, vivid, and remarkable intuition; in every way a cultured, high-class gentleman. Of him Lord Pauncefoot, at one time British ambassador in Port-au-Prince, once said: "Mr. Leger is the ablest, most accomplished diplomat I have known in all my experience."

All Haiti was proud of Mr. Leger, easily in popular esteem. He was a citizen, and the United States undoubtedly would have been satisfied with his election for the Haitian presidency. But he peremptorily refused to have his name considered. I sent my chief of staff to discuss the matter with him. He replied, "Tell the admiral I will do everything in my power to do my duty, but I must watch and see what the United States will demand of me. I am in a position to defend Haiti's interests in case the demands are unreasonable. At this time I could not possibly accept the presidency for Haiti, not for the United States."

The Haitian minister at Washington, Mr. Enos, was cabled to accept the presidency. He peremptorily declined. Then efforts were made to induce ex-President Legitime, a venerable, universally beloved Haitian, to stand for the presidency. He refused. Any one of these three men would have had the respect and confidence of the good Haitians, and would have received many votes, perhaps a majority, if those cast.

So now at the last moment the Bobo adherents determined to push the election, which clearly meant Dr. Bobo's defeat. So they determined that on August 12 there should burst forth such a scene of disorder, riot, and confusion in Port au Prince that all thoughts of election would be driven from the minds of the people. But law-abiding Haitians learned of this and informed me on the morning of August 11, the day before the election. That afternoon, as I previously stated, I went on shore and informed the committee of safety that they were to exercise any authority whatever in the city. In dismissing the committee of safety, which I related in my previous testimony, I failed to state the fact which I addressed to the committee of safety:

"Further, you are informed that your conspiracy to plunge Port au Prince into riot and bloodshed to-morrow morning is known and will not proceed."

being dismissed, they had made no pretense of denial or innuendo of consternation for fear they might not be able to stop—that is, all except Charles Delva. He simply laughed in any way, and exclaimed, "You have won."

On August 12 to interfere with the election. The Haitian, and 102 deputies met in the Chamber of Deputies. There were galleries. The galleries were packed with Haitians, who had the door, and a few marines were present. My representative, chief of staff, was present on the floor and mixed in with the deputies. All senators and deputies were armed at their own expense taken. Each congressman when his name was called, unhesitatingly, freely announced the name of the man he voted for. That the majority for Senator Dartiguenave would be over the vote was announced as 94 for Dartiguenave, 16 for Bobo, Cauvin, Thegun, and others.

With cheering, triumph, and order, and hope, for Haiti had won. Dartiguenave did not cheer. He sat in his chair overcome with emotion. Tears gushed from his eyes. It was some moments before he could get control. He then took the oath as Haiti's President, swearing to maintain the constitution and laws of Haiti and to administer his high office with impartiality, and solely in the interest of Haitians.

With a deep feeling, he made a noble speech, touching on the deep and painful effect on Haitian reputation, Haitian prosperity, among other things he said, was: "I have been elected without faction, to no political group; I am free from all obligations. I beg earnestly for the support of every Haitian in the name of Haiti's welfare. If I receive this support, Haiti will have the good of things we all long for. If I do not receive it, I know the uncertainty, disorder, and sadness of Haitian life in us will be continued."

From the elevated place from which he spoke, he went directly to his staff, Capt. E. L. Beach, was sitting, and taking him by surprise in an impromptu speech. In words as follows: Admiral Caperton came when Haiti was in complete despair. But two days before the death of Haitians had been murdered in their cells in the jail, and no crime was charged except lack of friendship for the United States. The day Admiral Caperton arrived a mob, frenzied with rage, killed Vilbrun Guillaume. The Government was overturned; everything good in Haiti had burst into nothingness. Despair laid heavy on our hearts, and at this moment we came in and landed troops, only for our protection and the safety of our officers.

That he came to help Haiti; that he came as a sympathetic friend for the cooperation of all Haitians. His troops came not to oppress on our hearts, our bodies, our properties, but only to show us his consideration, his goodness, so apparent in his presence in our hearts. We love our Haiti and our independence, and we are so generously given us by the United States, represented by you. It is with the understanding and knowledge of all that I am to have the support and help of the United States, and to accept office. But also, with the clear understanding of the duty and obligation that I am under to anybody is expressed to defend the constitution and the laws of Haiti, and to be obedient to them.

A procession then occurred, passed through the streets of Port-au-Prince in the carriages, the leading carriage, was the President's, and Capt. E. L. Beach, my chief of staff. They were followed by many carriages. Haitian soldiers, resplendent in uniform, 100 in number, were the immediate guard and escort of the President's idea of this being that it would show to everyone in the United States were together from the beginning of his administration. The President and Capt. Beach went to Deputy Chamberlain's inaugural reception was held. Here the senators, deputies, foreign residents, and Haitians came to pay their respects to the President, and all gave the most cordial greeting to the American President. There was in that reception joy and hope.

Senator ODDIE. Admiral, let me ask you this question: Was that speed down in shorthand?

Admiral CAPERTON. Not in shorthand; no, sir. The speech was not down in shorthand, but Capt. Beach has a wonderful memory. He is a good writer, and immediately after he left there and could get to himself down and wrote this out, and, as you noticed, I did not quote the speech said "in words as follows." I am satisfied that the President said about words, knowing Capt. Beach's memory and his knowledge of the subject. He sat down and wrote out the whole speech. That same coincidence had happened before with me at various conferences.

The election occurred on the 12th. In the meantime, President Dartiguenave was most anxiously awaiting to hear the national salute, which would announce his inauguration, and which had been arranged for. Haitian guns were to fire the guns, loaded and prepared by American sailor men. The salute came. The President grew anxious. So Lieut. Oberlin was dispatched to the fort, Fort Nationale, where the guns were located. After the salute began. There was a painful interval between each shot, but the twenty-first gun was fired. This of itself might not seem to have been important, but it is mentioned here because of the great importance attached to it by President Dartiguenave. He could not feel that he was President until he had received the national salute, which had been customary upon such occasions.

I would like here to recapitulate a little bit and make some remarks in regard to what happened a few days before the election, which took place on the 12th.

On August 7th Port au Prince remained quiet during the day. I received information that a number of bandits had been pillaging plantations in the north of the city, in the vicinity of Croix des Bouquet. A marine detachment was dispatched and succeeded in capturing the bandit chief and 11 men who were engaged in pillaging.

On this day I directed that ex-Minister Bourand, who was one of the cabinet, and Mr. Laroche, another one, be landed from the Jason, and be taken under guard, to Minister Bourand's residence, as I did not know how they would be received, and as he had been in immediate command of the Government troops in the northwest. Mr. Bourand was minister of interior under President Laroche's government. I therefore placed a guard about his residence, directed that he and Mr. Durand be especially guarded during their stay at Port au Prince.

On August 8th, the next day, the Haitian Government's gunboat Nord arrived at Port au Prince with 766 soldiers disarmed at Cape Haitien. These soldiers lived in the vicinity of Port au Prince and in south Haiti. About a hundred and thirty-six of these soldiers were landed and sent to their homes. The remaining 30 were either sick or wounded, and were sent to the hospital on shore.

The CHAIRMAN. By whom had they been disarmed?

Admiral CAPERTON. They had been disarmed—these were Government troops—either voluntarily or by my troops in the north for the purpose of bringing them down to their homes. They had nothing to eat, and they were in a destitute condition. So I sent this Haitian gunboat, the Nord, up there for them and brought them down. Through the committee on the subject this was on the 8th—I paid each soldier 10 gourdes and informed him that he was no longer a soldier, must not appear in uniform, and must return to his home and keep orderly.

"Referring to the destitute condition of these men, they arrived at Port au Prince at 11 a. m., shortly after which I learned that they had nothing to eat and had to speak of during the past 24 or 36 hours. The crew of the U. S. S. Albatross heard of this, whereupon they volunteered to send over their bread, which was about to be served, to these destitute soldiers, which was accepted. These soldiers were paid as I have said before, about 10 gourdes each, and passed over the gangway. The Nord Alexis was at this time along the wharf in the navy yard and it was necessary for the soldiers to pass by the navy yard and in doing so to pass by two or three of our marine sentries. To show the custom of graft which prevailed even among the soldiers, one of these destitute soldiers as he passed a marine sentry, tried to bribe the marine his money which he just received, saying in so many words, 'Take out your share and give me the balance.'" removed from the Haitian gunboat Nord Alexis all the arms on board that vessel and turned them over to the commander for safe-keeping, not knowing what the Nord Alexis might prevailing conditions in the city and harbor.

In addition of Haitian finances at this time, I may say that last year service, by an arbitrary act, was taken from the National treasury—this was done by the Guillaume Sam given to private banking firms, the principal one of which is The Simmond Freres is under no control which will safe-guards. They merely make collections of the revenues and percentage as their fee and turn the rest over to whomsoever exert force or persuasion in the name of a government or of it.

A considerable money is being thus forced from Simmond called revolutionary committees in various towns, and this led to actively support revolutionary activity. I might add that they have also a self-constituted "committee of safety." Military necessity, therefore, I this day, on the 9th, informed Port au Prince, Simmond Freres, and the National Bank of treasury service would be resumed by the National Bank of Haiti under legal and exacting contract for the handling of the affairs of the Haitian Government.

In my previous remarks about the treasury service being restored to the National Bank of Haiti, I sent the following message to the Secretary of the Haitian Government to inform them with regard to the cablegram was as follows:

"In view of the necessity, restored treasury service to National Bank of Haiti. The treasury service taken from this bank; given to Simmond Freres forced from Simmond Freres by so-called revolutionary committees in various towns, constituting menace against order and prolonging the revolutionary situation. A cablegram sent to-day Washington, D. C., by revolutionary committee provisional government caused solely by definite knowledge that the election by Congress. No doubt absolute legality status of the provisional government would be government by uncon- ditioned in effect another revolution in Bobo's favor; would con- siderable conditions for long time and make uncertain and difficult for Haiti. Recommend no consideration be given recom- mended provisional government. Haiti needs freedom from political interference of all settled government. While many prominent Haitians in the provisional government, sentiment in this respect has generally been in favor of practically all Haitians except adherents of Bobo demand the resignation of President.

Dartiguenave and Bobo together in conference. Asked Dartiguenave if Bobo elected, accept Congress choice and give assistance answer, yes. Asked Bobo same question if Dartiguenave would not accept Dartiguenave nor assist his Government.

"CAPERTON."

This is still a recapitulation of the events before the election?

Yes, sir. That cablegram was sent on the 10th.

Remained quiet during the day of August 8, but information that the ex-Bobo troops had looted in the vicinity of Grande Anse, I sent this to show the disturbances in the north at this time. The following message was sent to the commanding officer of the Military control Port au Prince and Cape Haitien; am dis- arming all Haitian troops I can get hold of. Reports here of a small armed force of about 200 men under Gen. Auguste ap- peared to prevent their attacking town and endeavor persuade them to remain in your keeping and disband. Am not yet ready to perma- nently; cooperate with de facto civil authorities. Acknowledge

"CAPERTON."

On the 10th of August the following message was received from the Secretary of the Connecticut:

"On August 2508, proclamation will be published broadcast in French and English issued at outpost to people leaving town. Have received no word yet from revolutionary generals. No troops have presented themselves to surrender arms.

Haitian Archives

"Have opened customhouse for business and made good progress in supplying local government.

"The revolutionary troops interfere with the free ingress of merchandise. There has been no disturbance to-day.

"D

This tells about the first disturbance made by the revolutionary forces, the cacos, in preventing food from coming into the cities.

The CHAIRMAN. What date is this?

Admiral CAPERTON. The 10th of August.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the date on which they elected Dartigue?

Admiral CAPERTON. That was on the 12th, sir.

On August 10 Port au Prince was becoming more uneasy as the Bobo faction, since the cacos had been driven from town and it had thus lost its power to intimidate Congress, was desperate. Threats of assassination had been made against Dartigue and other senators, and Charles Zamor and his faction were doing little to quiet matters.

On August 10 the following message was sent from the commander of the cruiser squadron to the commanding officer of the Connecticut:

"National Bank of Haiti has resumed treasury service. This bank has issued instructions to its representatives at Cape Haitien to pay each soldier armed and dismissed there 10 gourde and each chief 10 gourde. Get the representatives at bank Cape Haitien and make necessary arrangements for disarming these troops. Supervise payment of troops yourself. Information in country that they will be paid if they will disarm and deposit arms at Cape Haitien, may aid you in persuading them to come to Cape Haitien and deposit arms. This applies to any troops who will lay down arms at Cape Haitien and to either government or any other kind.

"CAP

I think I might add here in regard to paying these soldiers for their arms if they would disarm, I had many conferences with the generals and factions in the north in regard to this matter and arrangements were made looking to this disarmament.

The following message was sent from the commander of the cruiser squadron to the Secretary of the Navy on date of August 10:

"Port au Prince quiet during night. Cape Haitien quiet; ex-Bobos causing some disturbance vicinity Grande Riviere; none of these troops arrived Cape Haitien to surrender arms as yet. Ex-government forces 200 under Gen. Auguste attacked St. Marc Saturday, but repulsed and under committee of safety; Auguste and four followers killed. Port au Prince quiet now; am encouraging local authorities preserve order. U. S. S. Albatross arrived Mole St. Nicholas 7.30 p. m. Monday for news.

"CAP

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is sufficient of the preliminary matters that may now proceed to the conditions which followed the election of the President.

Admiral CAPERTON. After the 12th?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. But before you do that let me ask you this question, Admiral. Did Capt. Beach speak French?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; very well.

(Thereupon, at 12.10 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chairman.)

OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, Senator chairman) presiding.

McCormick, Oddie, and King.

Ernest Angell and Mr. Horace G. Knowles in their represents hereinbefore indicated, and Maj. Edwin N. McClellan, Corps, representing the Navy Department.

REAR ADMIRAL WILLIAM B. CAPERTON, UNITED RETIRED, 714 MONTAUK AVE., NEW LONDON,

Admiral Caperton, before you proceed, let me call your attenannual report of the Secretary of the Navy, paragraph ending June 30, 1920. This is paragraph 52 of Gen. Bar-bourports to quote from cables sent by you to the depart-especially to the assertion attributed to you that "In the men, Dariguenave, president of the senate, stated that ed that Haiti must and will accede gladly to any terms
d States, 'including right of intervention when necessary, and cession outright without restriction of St. Nicolas uch of it in order that you may refer directly to the disides, and if you have it, you might read it directly into the swer that later.

On August 7 I sent the following message to the Secretary which are quoted in the chairman's question:

Port au Prince to-day Bobo formally resigned position chief dismissed his cabinet ministers. Has telegraphed all his deposit arms with American forces Cape Haitien. Prom-for good order. Bourand has given similar promises and ons to his troops in north.

power revolutionary committee; it did not keep faith.
aving services committee. Civil officials late Government ute my orders.

ons clamoring for immediate election President. Legal unctionaries and all necessary organization except Presiregular Government now exists. Only two serious candirtiguenave; latter will probably be elected. Have had a president of senate and chamber deputies, with senators, ministers, and many leading Haitiens. President of Senate ence of congressmen, states congressmen are agreed that gladly accede to any terms proposed by United States, ede St. Nicholas Mole outright without restriction, grant right to intervene when necessary, and any other terms.
as possible avoid humiliation. They insist no Government can stand except by United States protection; state without union there would be nothing but anarchy in Haiti. Most Haitian American forces may be withdrawn.

"Extremely desirable reestablish Government immediately. Unwise directed I will permit congress elect President next Thursday."

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you may turn to the period after the election at this time, on August 13 Gen. Polynice informed me of his intention the present Government maintain order. Charles Zamor informed would use all his influence for peace.

On the same date Bobo was living in the British legation. He was overwhelmed in his disappointment. His nerve, pluck, and self-assurance gone. He stated that he no longer had a country, and that he was in France.

Also, on August 13 considerable destitution exists among the lower Port au Prince. On the morning of August 13 a woman and child died in the open market place in the vicinity of Rue de St. Honore Centre, their deaths having been due, without question, to starvation. An intelligent woman, claiming to be a school-teacher, appeared this morning showed what purported to be an acknowledgment of indebtedness to her family as school-teacher for the month of January. She claims that neither she nor her family have had anything to eat for two days.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think we can go into this detail.

Admiral CAPERTON. I do not intend to give you all of it. Other cases to this have been brought to my attention, and some cases where families have been without food for 24 to 48 hours. The starting of public works for the establishment of peace will, without doubt, furnish employment to many who are now without food, but this will not, in all probability, reach the children who have no men to support them.

I requested that this matter be brought to the attention of the Society, with the request that they send representatives and undertake work at Port au Prince.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they do that ultimately?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. I might say they from time to time have been sent $1,000 at one time and $2,000 at another time.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they send you any nurses or physicians?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir. I had doctors from the ships whom I sent to the shore.

The CHAIRMAN. Did any of the missionary societies of the United States undertake to do anything?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir; not outside of the Red Cross. I was unable to employ some missionaries there to take charge of the work.

The CHAIRMAN. But no American Christian organization did anything for you in the relief of the suffering or the destitution of the people?

Admiral CAPERTON. No, sir. I formed all sorts of committees and societies.

The CHAIRMAN. During the first few weeks after Dartigueau's departure, what was the condition of the country in reference to order?

Admiral CAPERTON. The country to the north was very much up to day to day I reported these facts in messages, copies of which I have sent you about the Cacos collecting in various ports and sections of the north.

The CHAIRMAN. If you care to, you may incorporate the messages in your record, but do not take the time to read them now.

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir; I would like to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. There were bands gathering in the north?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. I would like to incorporate in the following messages:

CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP
August 13, 1904

From: Commanding Officer Connecticut.
To: Commander Cruiser Squadron.

Daguesseau Montreuil arrived this morning. He communicated with the revolutionary committee at St. Marc and Gonaives and sent telegram to revolutionary committee here to the effect that Bobo was very strong politically.

large Bobo troops to maintain present stand and not sur-Bobo's absence from north Haiti strengthens new govern-of public safety appointed by Bobo declared itself to be the news of the election. No troops have presented them-arms. There has been no disturbance to-day.

DURELL.

AUGUST 14, 1915.

cruiser Squadron.
er Connecticut.

activity any kind will be tolerated in Haiti and especially my command. It is duty all citizens support present gov-au Montreuil or any other Haitian attempts revolutionary est them at once. Bobo I believe is entirely eliminated he present. He is in British legation now in pitiable con-believe he is insane.

CAPERTON.

Then, at about 4 p. m. on August 14 I received the depart-(interposing). This was two days after the election of Presiwas elected on the 12th?

Yes, sir. I received the department's sigcode radiogram the treaty between the United States and Haiti. The message was completed by 9 a. m. on the 15th of August.
shore to Mr. Davis, the American chargé d'affaires, by Mr. Davis received this message at 9.45 a. m. on the 15th

"U. S. S. Washington, 14 August, 1915.

via cable 3.10 p. m.

D. C.

S. S. Washington, Guantanamo.

American Legation, Port au Prince.

year the Haitian Government has been familiar with the contained in department's instructions of July 1, 1914, with they expressed their agreement regarding the principal part.
assurances have been received that the Haitian authorities does it read "willing" or "unwilling"?

It reads "are willing"; "are willing now to go farther g the cession to the United States of Mole St. Nicholas.
ndly attitude of the Haitian Government, as shown by will please prepare forthwith a draft of treaty as outlined Without delay submit it informally to the President elect the department believes that as a guaranty of sincerity Haitians in orderly and peaceful development of their Haitian Congress will be pleased to pass forthwith a resothe President elect to conclude, without modification, the
you. When officially notified that such a resolution has ress extend to the President elect the formal recognition and simultaneously conclude with the newly elected to the end that it may be forthwith submitted for ratifica-Haitian Congress before its adjournment, a treaty in strict the draft referred to, with the following alterations and

"ALTERATIONS.

> 1 the words 'if he shall deem it necessary and expedient, government shall request,' so that that portion of article pointment of financial adviser, shall read as follows: 'and United States shall designate a financial adviser to the who shall devise an adequate system of public accounting, adding changes throughout the treaty, particularly in articles two words 'of account' at end of article 1.

"In article 2 after the word 'receivership' add 'and to the financial advisor,' change 'its' before 'execute' to 'the.'

"In article 3 substitute 'financial advisor' for 'general receiver' in all instances.

"First paragraph, article 4, will read 'all sums collected and received by the general receiver shall be applied, first, to the payment of the salaries and allowances of the general receiver, his assistants and employees and expenses of the receiver shall include the salaries and expenses of the financial advisor; second, to the interest and sinking fund of the public debt of the Republic of Haiti; and, third, to the maintenance of the constabulary referred to in article 9, and then the remainder to the Haitian Government for the purpose of defraying its expenses."

"Second paragraph of article 4 will end with the words 'previous to the signing of this treaty.'

"Additional after article 8 insert articles as follows:

"ART. 9. The Haitian Government obligates itself, for the preservation of domestic peace, the security of individual rights and the full observance of the provisions of this treaty, to create without delay an efficient constabulary composed of native Haitians. This constabulary shall be organized and maintained by Americans designated by the President of the United States, which the Haitian Government shall appoint and shall clothe with the powers and necessary authority and uphold in the performance of their functions. The constabulary herein provided for shall, under the direction of the President of the Government, have supervision and control of arms and ammunition, supplies, and traffic therein, throughout the country. The stipulations of this article are necessary to prevent factional strife and disturbances.

"ART. 10. The Government of Haiti agrees not to surrender any part of the territory of the Republic of Haiti by sale, lease, or otherwise, or to cede or give over such territory, to any foreign Government or power except to the United States, nor to enter into any treaty or contract with any other foreign Government or powers that will impair or tend to impair the independence of Haiti.

"ART. 11. The Haitian Government agrees to execute with the United States a protocol for the settlement, by arbitration or otherwise, of all pending claims of foreign corporations, companies, citizens, or subjects against the Republic of Haiti.

"ART. 12. The Republic of Haiti being desirous to further the development of its natural resources agrees to undertake and execute such measures as may be recommended in the opinion of the Government of the United States may be necessary for the improvement and public improvements of the Republic, under the supervision and direction of an engineer or engineers, to be designated by the President of the United States and appointed and authorized for that purpose by the Government of Haiti.

"ART. 13. That the United States shall have authority to prevent all interference with the attainment of any of the objects comprehended in this convention as well as the right to intervene for the preservation of the independence and the maintenance of a Government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty.

"ART. 14. The present treaty shall be approved and ratified by the contracting parties in conformity with their respective laws, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged in the city of Washington as soon as possible.

"ART. 15. The present treaty shall remain in full force and virtue for a term of 10 years, to be counted from the day of exchange of ratifications, and further for another term of 10 years at the request of either party.

"In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed this convention in duplicate and have hereunto affixed their seals."

Dr. Bobo left Port au Prince on August 15 on the French steamer Kader, which is bound for Jeremie, south Haiti, and ports in Santo Domingo. Bobo states he is going to San Domingo.

Referring to conditions in the north again, information was received August 15 that ex-Bobo forces under Gen. Morency were marching toward Gonaives. About this time I decided it was time to make some distribution of my ships and forces in the north of Haiti. I therefore issued campaign No. 8, as follows:

CRUISER SQUADRON,
UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP,
Port au Prince, Haiti, August 15, 1915—1.30 p. m.

ment, Capt. E. H. Durell; Connecticut, Nashville, First s Second Battalion and band; (b) main body, Washing-first Brigade marines, less one battalion.

maintain military control of Port au Prince and Cape ations United States and Haiti.

tachment, maintain military control Cape Hatien; (b) tain military control Port au Prince. Troops on shore ontrol Port au Prince and sufficient outing territory to city. Occupy St. Marc, Leogane, and Petionville.

Port au Prince and support main body of troops.
St. Marc to Gonaives, both inclusive. Support troops St.

Leogane to Miragoane, both inclusive. Support troops

erty and preserve order.

anamo Bay. Osceola will carry mail, stores, and providetachments and base. Jason and Solace remain Port au t.

nder on Washington. Make 8 a. m. and 8 p. m. daily ther times as may be necessary to keep squadron comuently informed of situation. Use seventy-fifth meridian

W. B. CAPERTON,
*Rear Admiral, Commander Cruiser Squadron,
Commanding United States Forces in Haitian Waters.*
ns, commander in chief, Washington, Connecticut, Ten- ille, Eagle, commandant Guantanamo.
Jason; commander First Brigade; commander First of instruction as follows:

CRUISER SQUADRON,
UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP,
Port au Prince, Haiti, August 15, 1915.

cruiser squadron, commanding United States forces in 5 of August 3, 1915, issued by commander cruiser squad-

l.

conjunction with the American chargé d'affaires, carry l have charge of the important relations with the Haitian will be carried on by me, either personally or through

W. B. CAPERTON.

CRUISER SQUADRON,
UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP,
Port au Prince, Haiti, August 15, 1915.

ruiser squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet, commanding in Haitian waters.

l, United States Navy.

ructions.

cruiser squadron has assumed military control of the ce and Cape Hatien. A national government has just been formed at Port au Prince with Dartiguenave as President, and the Government is now organizing and assuming control of civil affairs of Haiti. Important negotiations are going on between the United States and Haiti, of which you will be kept informed.

2. It is my intention to support the present Haitian Government and carry on negotiations with it, while maintaining military control of the city of Port au Prince and Cape Haitien.

3. You will maintain military control of the city of Cape Haitien to protect life and property and preserve order.

4. The deployment of forces in Haitian waters will be as given in order No. 8.

5. I will directly, in conjunction with the American chargé d'affaires, carry on the negotiations and have charge of the important relations with the Haitian officials at Port au Prince. These duties will be carried on by me, either personally or through members of my staff.

W. B. CA

W. No. 7644-15.

CRUISER SQUADRON,
UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP,
Port au Prince, Haiti, August 1, 1915.

From: Commander cruiser squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet, commanding United States forces in Haitian waters.

To: Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps.

Subject: Letter of instructions.

1. The commander cruiser squadron has assumed military control of the cities of Port au Prince and Cape Haitien. A national government has been formed at Port au Prince with Dartiguenave as President, and the Government is now organizing and assuming control of civil affairs of Haiti. Important negotiations are going on between the United States and Haiti, of which you will be kept informed.

2. It is my intention to support the present Haitian Government and carry on negotiations with it, while maintaining military control of the city of Port au Prince and Cape Haitien.

3. You will maintain military control of the city of Port au Prince and the outlying territory as may be necessary to insure food supply for the city. You will protect life and property and preserve order.

4. The employment of the forces in Haitian waters will be as given in order No. 8. You personally will have direct charge of the troops in Port au Prince and vicinity. Col. Eli E. Cole will have charge of the troops in the interior of Haiti.

5. I will directly, in conjunction with the American chargé d'affaires, carry on the negotiations and have charge of the important relations with the Haitian officials. These duties will be carried on by me, either personally or through members of my staff.

W. B. CA

X. No. 7667-15.

CRUISER SQUADRON,
UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP,
Port au Prince, Haiti, August 1, 1915.

The AMERICAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES,

American Legation, Port au Prince, Haiti.

SIR: I have the honor to state that Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, has this day relieved Col. Eli K. Cole, United States Marine Corps, of the military duties at Port au Prince.

Col. Waller will be in charge of maintaining the United States military control of the city of Port au Prince and of such outlying territory as may be necessary to insure food supply for the city, and will protect life and property and preserve order.

Col. Cole will be in charge of maintaining military control of the interior of Haiti and of the protection of life and property and the preservation of order in the place.

I will directly, either personally or through members of my staff, in conjunction with you, attend to such civil matters on shore and such matters in the waters of Haiti.

Haitian officials as may from time to time be undertaken by ces.
 to communicate these facts to all foreign diplomatic and
 ves. I am, sir,

W. B. CAPERTON,
Near Admiral, United States Navy, Commanding Cruiser Squadron.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAITI,
August 15, 1915.

OFFICER FRENCH CRUISER "DESCARTES,"
Port au Prince, Haiti.

nor to state that Col. Littleton W. T. Waller, United States his day relieved Col. Eli K. Cole, United States Marine y duties at Port au Prince.

e in charge of maintaining military control of the city of of sufficient outlying territory as may be necessary to in-the city, and of the protection of life and property and n charge of maintaining military control of Cape Hatien of life and property and the preservation of order at that

W. B. CAPERTON,
*Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
 Under Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet, Commanding United States Forces in Haitian Waters.*

s making endeavor to quiet the revolutionary forces in the Leger in Port au Prince and he informed me that Mr.
 Bishop Kerzusan in Cape Hatien are prominent men who with the Cacos. I immediately got in communication with th.

received information, which was fairly reliable, that the Cacos ating at Le Borgne, on the north coast of Haiti, west of Fort Sonde, just east of St. Marc, on the Artebonite River; becoming restless, as they had not received pay for some leaders appeared to fear that they will lose control over their n will be the most difficult one for the United States to these men have long been used to the wandering life of a without work. The Cacos question is a most serious one, not be successfully handled until a reliable constabulary is y comes into the country to provide work for these men.

insert the following report in the record. This is a report officers who was entirely engaged in keeping track of the

"HEADQUARTERS SECOND REGIMENT.
 "UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
 "Port au Prince, Haiti, August 16, 1921.

e Van Orden, Marine Corps.
 First Brigade.

ncerning location and condition of revolutionary forces.

ces have been reported as concentrating at Le Borgne, on of Cape Hatien, and at Point Sonde, just east of St. Marc, ver. The report of their concentration at Point Sonde was from another reliable source, and as it agrees with reports vicinity of St. Marc it can be taken as true. I was also of the organization that the chiefs were having some maintaining discipline because of the delay in paying their em home, which they were told was the intention of the d me that the conditions were getting rapidly more threat-me to urge that steps be taken toward paying off these e and the other chiefs, who had given me their personal r men would make no trouble during negotiations, could continue their contract with me. The above information was not given in a threatening manner, and it was plain to be seen that the agent was concerned and worried over the prospect of his men getting out of hand. He stated that it had been very difficult to convince the lesser chiefs and the men that the American Government would play fair with them, and that it was only because they knew that the Americans were handling this question that they consider it at all. He also informed that if the man named Filogene were appointed a member of a commission that had to do with their organizations, it would certainly cause a serious outbreak, as Filogene is considered by them a traitor and an accomplished scoundrel."

That report is signed by Capt. George Van Orden, United States Marine Corps.

On the 17th of August the American chargé d'affaires, Davis, delivered to the President Dartiguenave the draft of the proposed treaty and a memorandum relative to Congress passing a resolution directing the President to conclude the treaty.

It now became necessary for me to occupy one or two of the cities of the north, Port au Prince, as a further security for that city, and to protect an area furnishing food for Port au Prince. It must be remembered that the revolutionary troops, the Cacos, were prohibiting the entrance of foodstuffs. In fact, all traffic for the cities, so it became a question of supplying food for the people within the cities.

On the 16th of August the American consular agent at Port de Paix was the commanding officer of the Connecticut that Port de Paix was entirely and openly hostile to the Government of President Dartiguenave, which has been recognized at that place yet, and that the population was ready to join the Cacos. This is a city to the eastward of Cape Haitien, on the north coast of Haiti.

Touching upon the point of alleviating the starving poor at Port au Prince, I would like to say that the following committee was named to carry out the work.

Senator ODDIE. Who appointed that committee, Admiral?

Admiral CAPETON. I did, sir. That committee consisted of Admiral Pichon, Rev. Turnbull, United States Vice Consul Battist, Senators Villard, Madame Vue Fils Aime, president, and Madame N. Solaguer, manager of St. Vincent de Paul's Hospital, under direction of Lieut. Oberlin. They were engaged in alleviating the suffering of the starving poor at Port au Prince with funds provided by the American Red Cross Society.

I would like to mention a few of the things this society was doing. They formed milk stations where they assured the poor that they would have milk. At first we sold it for a small amount and afterwards gave it free to the patients. We also formed a station with the aid of some French nuns who were there, where the poor women could leave their children in order that they went out to procure work in the city. Then we had another station where they treated all sorts of diseases as the people would report. Our doctors and also some of the Haitian doctors were very active in this work.

It was on the 18th of August that the Haitian Government published a decree of amnesty to all political factions.

The CHAIRMAN. What date was that?

Admiral CAPETON. That was August 18. In this connection I would also like to refer to the following letter, addressed to the American consul at Port au Prince, Haiti, in which I said: "I have the honor to request that you take the necessary measures to direct the consular representatives at Port au Prince, Aux Cayes, Jacmel, and Jeremie to publish the following proclamation to the people of their districts:

"I am directed by the United States Government to assure the Haitian people that the United States has no object in view except to insure the independence and help to maintain Haitian independence and the establishing of a stable and firm government by the Haitian people.

"Every assistance will be given to the Haitian people in their efforts to secure these ends. It is the intention to retain United States forces in Haiti only so long as will be necessary for this purpose."

It has been shown here that I had agreed, through the President of the United States, to pay these troops from the north certain sums if they would turn over their arms and ammunition, and, incidentally, they were paid a certain amount for this, provided they would lay down their arms and return home.

further publicity to my offer to pay the soldiers upon coming States lines, depositing their arms, and returning to their place, and to each chief 100 gourdes, I directed the commander of the Castine to publish the department's proclamation and Gonaïves. The other commanding officers throughout Haiti publish the same—throughout Haiti or at the several Haitian ports?

. At the ports occupied by the American troops.

. promises—papers signed—to the end that these leaders in carry out this plan of disarming the Cacos. We received hundreds of arms, but the project failed, as will eventually be shown. This sum was paid from the Haitian treasury, I presume?

. Yes; I said with the understanding and permission of time—on August 18—that I informed our Government of and to the President elect of Haiti formal recognition of Government, as directed in the department's radiogram. Otherwise directed, I will fire a national salute of 21 guns with the main if I ascertain that this salute can be returned by the Haitians."

do you mean if they had powder enough?

. Yes, sir.

, I would like to put the following in the record:

"AUGUST 18, 1915.

cruiser squadron.

the Navy, via wire.

chargé d'affaires extends to President elect of Haiti the formal United States Government, as directed in department's radiogram. Otherwise directed, I will fire national salute of 21 guns with the main if this salute can be returned by the Haitian

"CAPERTON."

August I received a radiogram from the Navy Department. The Department desired that I assume charge of the customhouses at Cayes, Jeremie, Miragoane, Petite Goave, Port au Prince, Port de Paix, and Cape Haitien. It further directed that the funds collected be used for the organization and maintenance of an efficient constabulary, for conducting such temporary public works as will afford immediate employment for the starving populace and discharged soldiers for supporting the Dartiguenave government. I was to confer with the American chargé d'affaires for the purpose of the Navy.

Dartiguenave solicit the above action; but whether the action was taken or not, I was directed to carry out the State Department's desire. The Navy Department further directed that the American officials at the customhouses "be furnished with the necessary funds to direct these American officials to collect all the duties, to immediately deposit them with the respective branches of the National Bank of Haiti in separate accounts opened in the name of the United States Government for the purpose mentioned above, and to hold for the time being by the United States Government in the name of Haiti.

, I would like to put the following into the record:

"AUGUST 19, 1915.

cruiser squadron.

It desires you assume charge of following customhouses: Jeremie, Miragoane, Petit Goave, Port au Prince, St. Marc, Port de Paix, Cape Haitien. Funds collected to be used for organization of an efficient constabulary, for conducting such temporary public works as will afford immediate relief through employment for starving discharged soldiers, and finally for supporting Dartiguenave government. I was to confer with the American chargé d'affaires for the purpose of having President Dartiguenave take the above action. Whether President so requests or not, procure Department's desire; supply American officials placed in charge with necessary customs guards. Direct officials collect and export duties to be immediately deposited by them with respective branches of National Bank of Haiti in separate account opened by them. Draw against this account for purposes mentioned above, surplus to be for time being by United States Government in trust for people of Haiti. Acknowledge. 20019.

"D.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask you a question which may be answered some time later, as to the effect of the use of the funds so seized upon the interest of the interest on the foreign debt—that is, the effect of the sequestration of these funds on the payment of the interest on the foreign debt.

Admiral CAPERTON. In view of the more or less delicate situation with reference to American control of customhouses, which has been long opposed by the Haitien people for a number of years and even at the present time; and as there is a treaty under negotiation now in Port au Prince with reference to this customs control matter, I considered it extremely undesirable to change the situation by announcing that we were going to forcibly seize the customhouses immediately. This we are not in a position to do at the present time on account of the lack of my forces, and I therefore believe that the military action of seizing the customhouses be for the present not communicated to the Haitiens. We should, however, immediately assemble the necessary forces so that this way no time will be lost, the treaty will be signed with less opposition, and the matter of military occupation of the customhouses can be arranged without unduly increasing the hostile attitude.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask, Admiral, what was the object in seizing the customhouses at the ports of entry?

Admiral CAPERTON. The funds that were being collected were being used for different ports by revolutionary forces in some instances. There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Had it been the practice in Haiti for a revolution to begin at the beginning of his movement to seize a customhouse as the final step of his movement?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. When he became President; or, if he was not President, he always became President.

The CHAIRMAN. The seizure of a customhouse was the first step in the accomplishment of a successful revolution? When they began a revolution in the north they seized the customhouse, did they, at Cape Haitien?

Admiral CAPERTON. I do not know. They seized—in many instances they did, but not always, I think. When they could, they did. In the north they came around from Cape Haitien to Port au Prince during the revolution and frequently to intervene in the matter and save them from taking power from the Haitian Republic, and also on one or two occasions, I think, to seize the private bank.

On the 18th of August, referring to the matter of customhouses, the department that the United States had not actually accomplished intervention in the affairs of another nation; that hostility exists now and has existed for a number of years against such action; that the contacts have only been avoided by prompt and rapid military action; and given the United States control before resistance has had time to develop, that we now hold the capital of the country and two other important cities; that the total force at my disposal now is one armored cruiser, two gunboats, one converted yacht, and 1,500 marines; and that this force is now at the maximum extension consistent with maintaining control of the territory and prompt concentration for defense. The department that the customhouses in seven other cities be occupied. These customhouses can not be taken charge of unless the cities in which they are located are occupied with sufficient military force to protect our customs officers and the public order. A further extension of my present force is imperative to avoid any delay.

No troops should be without the support and communication facilities of a naval vessel for the present at least. To occupy these seven cities means practically military occupation of the seacoast of Haiti, which is a serious matter. No attempt must be made to accomplish this until there are available sufficient forces and sufficient officers and an organization completed for assumption of the customs service. This will require not less than one more regiment of marines of not less than eight companies, the Artillery battalion of marines, three more gunboats or light cruisers. For the reasons given before, the department that I considered it imperative that these contemplated the present and undertaken only when force is available organized and ready. This secrecy is extremely important in negotiations. While we are powerful enough without anything we desire by force, yet a due respect for the Haitians and a friendly attitude in our operations at this time toward accomplishing what we wish now, and will lay the foundation for relations between the two Governments in the future. In Haiti, and hostile operations, except where they can not be replaced by peaceful methods, consistent with accomplishnot less than one regiment of marines of not less than a battalion of Artillery, and three gunboats be immediately placed at my disposal, and Paymaster Charles Conard and not below the grade of lieutenant be sent immediately to enter the customs service. Paymaster Conard is especially on account of his previous experience at Vera Cruz, Mexico. After being sufficiently organized, our forces may be at the present moment the United States should take no chances of honor and prestige. The Secretary of the Navy in regard to this matter reads

AUGUST 19, 1915.

Cruiser Squadron.

Navy and Commander in Chief, via wire.

Now actually accomplished a military intervention in Haiti. Hostility exists now in Haiti and has existed for some time. Serious hostile contacts have only been made in rapid military action which has given United States forces time to organize. We now hold capital of Haiti and important seaports. Total force at my disposal now, two gunboats, one converted yacht, and 1,500 marines. Deployed at maximum extension consistent with maintaining territory and prompt concentration for defense. Department customhouses in seven other cities be occupied. Customhouse in charge of unless cities in which they are located are not military force to protect our customs officers and prevent extension of present force imperative to avoid. No forces support and communication facilities of naval vessels for Haiti. To occupy these seven additional ports means practically the whole seacoast of Haiti, which is extensive. No attempt must be made until there are available sufficient force and sufficient organization completed for assuming customs service.

not less than one more regiment of marines of not less than a battalion of marines, and three more gunboats. Consider it imperative that these contemplated operations be present secret and undertaken only when force is available and organized and ready. This secrecy extremely important in negotiations. Recommend not less than one regiment of marines than eight companies, the artillery battalion of marines, and immediately ordered Haiti and placed my disposal, and Paymaster Conard and 10 pay officers not below rank lieutenant be sent to organize and administer customs service. Paymaster Conard, due previous experience, Vera Cruz, Mexico. While at Vera Cruz the customhouse is organized, our forces may be withdrawn, yet the United States should take no chance of injury to its dignity would like to ask why that secrecy was suggested.

CAPERTON.

It was my suggestion. The country was in a state of anarchy and of course it has always been known that they violently overthrow their customhouses, and I thought it was not the best policy; and also the fact that, as I had asked for 10 pay officers, Paymaster Conard, it was necessary to get up an organization in charge of these customs.

Just there were approximately 17 shots fired in the vicinity of Port au Prince in the northern part of Port au Prince. One sentry was fired upon by a native; the sentry returned the fire with one shot and the man escaped. I merely mention this to show the great unrest in the country at that time. On the 20th I reported that there had been no disturbance in the country. The country people are still held up outside the town by the military which prevented food from coming in. On the 20th of August the chargé d'affaires was continuing the treaty negotiations. All our efforts were directed toward a speedy conclusion of this work.

STANDARD LIBRARY

Conditions became so unsettled at St. Marc, which is about 50 miles westward of Port au Prince, that I found it necessary to issue the following order to the commanding officer of the Castine:

"Seize and administer customhouse at St. Marc. Collect all import and export duties. Open account in local branch of National Bank of Haiti in my name and deposit customs receipts therein. Acknowledge.

"C.

The CHAIRMAN. When was the President elected?

Admiral CAPERTON. On August 12. On August 21 treaty negotiations were progressing satisfactorily. President Dartiguenave still continues his friendly attitude toward the treaty, but there is a change in the attitude of some members of the cabinet and of the Congress apparent. An unfavorable report has appeared in Congress in the form of inflammatory speeches against the customs control and American occupation in general. This change of attitude has been made in spite of repeated and solemn assurances given by the President and the formation of the present Government. Both the Congress and the Executive of the Government are cowed and intimidated by fear of sentimentality in the country against the American customs control, propagated constantly by the last few years by the faction leaders.

Senator ODDIE. Let me ask you, who gave you these assurances?

Admiral CAPERTON. They were given to my representative by the President and some of the members of his cabinet. We got this information voluntarily.

On the 21st of August, in accordance with the Navy Department's instructions, I directed the commanding officer of the Connecticut at Cape Haitien to collect an account for customs receipts in the local branch of the National Bank of Haiti and otherwise carry out the department's instructions relating to the administration of customs. I have temporarily placed this account under the command of Olmstead's name until I can organize an office in Port au Prince to take care of this business for the coast as a whole in my name. In connection I would like to put into the record the following communication:

AUGUST 21, 1900.

From: Commander Cruiser Squadron.

To: Commanding officer Connecticut.

In accordance orders Navy Department you will keep control of the customs at Cape Haitien, with an American officer as collector of customs. Collect import and export duties. Open account in local branch National Bank of Haiti in name of Commander Olmstead, military governor, and deposit all customs receipts therein daily from now on. Draw against this account for the following purposes: First, for conducting such temporary public works as will afford immediate relief through employment for starving people; second, discharged soldiers, and second, for supporting local military government. The account plus will be held by American military governor in trust for Haiti. Acknowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. This was on the 21st of August. When was the last time the customhouses completed?

Admiral CAPERTON. I think Port au Prince was the last one I took care of. I remember the date.

The CHAIRMAN. I am trying to get a picture of that. You were at Port au Prince how long?

Admiral CAPERTON. For about 18 months.

The CHAIRMAN. You have now covered 2 or 3 months of the 18 months.

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes, sir. Many things happened in that interval with regard to outbreaks. The customhouse at Port au Prince was taken over on September 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Between the 20th of August and the 2d of September the customhouse at Port au Prince was seized, what events of importance took place?

I could not answer that offhand without following my
I am doing now. This happened six or seven years ago, have been busy at other things, and it is hard to answer rring to my official notes made at that time.

y negotiations are still unsatisfactory. The fear of the Congress of the faction leaders and the Cacos apparently . This Government, of course, by its very nature, in men not associated with factions and not supported by supported by the United States. Politics in Haiti has ands of the faction leaders for the last 30 or 40 years, ber of a faction and not a participant in these factional itically strong. This present Government is not getting rious parts of the country, nor has it been able to estab-in other cities to any extent.

é d'affaires received at noon on the 23d of August a note the minister of foreign relations, who stated that should t on any other action than that which the Haitian Govern-willing to perform in the note, the President and cabinet sign. In this note the Haitian Government says, after sire to enter into an arrangement with the United States, the disposition of the United States Government to com-and, further, as it is anxious to avoid all difficulties which o alter the good relations which exist between Haiti and t it would be disposed, since the United States insisted the Congress the passage of a resolution expressing the sident of Haiti conclude a convention with the United cal interests of the two countries. There is apparently question of customs control is practically the great and ining a treaty with these people, and that these pour oubt be directed on the part of the Haitian Government of customs control, or a great modification of it.

from day to day saying that the town of Port du Paix is the Cacos are reported at Le Borgne and are on their way that the town is without a government.

mittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

sembled, pursuant to the taking of recess, at 2.30 o'clock may proceed, Admiral.

On the 24th of August private interviews by the Ameriwith the President and members of the cabinet indicated titude toward the treaty. The President himself is ap-ave the treaty matter settled and states that, with few ffecting the general principles, the treaty would be ust the American chargé d'affaires, in an unofficial and President, received from him what seemed to be a most his desire to conclude the treaty as soon as possible.

hat he believed the treaty could be signed, provided the agree to the change of a few details which in no way ples involved. The American chargé d'affaires told him t authorized to sign any treaty other than the one subject to forwarding to Washington these desired changes, tail nature and not affecting the basic principles.

ponsible political enemies of the Haitian Government are animosities against the Government and the American re, both in the Congress and in the country, among the itators, mostly the faction leaders, who are attempting nt Government and on every pretext to influence opinion eved that the chances for successfully negotiating the ed if we for the moment cease seizing the customhouses r military operations except those necessary for preserv-d for other important military reasons.

that your cablegram?

Those are my notes.

I sent the following message to the Secretary of the Navy on August:

"From: Commander cruiser squadron, August 25, 1915.

"To: Secretary of the Navy via wire and Commander in Chief.

"Referring American chargé d'affaires radiogram of August 25, 1915, better supporting treaty negotiations, unless otherwise directed, we present cease seizing customhouses and will for the present conduct military operations except those necessary for preserving peace and for other important military reasons. In event resignation presented by Government I recommend that military government be established at Port au Prince, Haiti, with American officer as military governor. Present situation is critical time in relations with Haiti, and our decision now will, to some extent, determine future course. If military government is established, we will be bound not to abandon Haitian situation until affairs of country are settled, and predominant interests of United States of America secured. Any action on my part will come if Government resigns, and at that time know wishes of United States of American Government.

The CHAIRMAN. At this point, Admiral, I will put into the record the following from the department's record:

"Under date of September 20, 1914, the Secretary of State informed the Secretary of the Navy that the conditions in Haiti had improved to such an extent that he would admit of the withdrawal battleships New Jersey and Georgia from Haitian waters, but felt that a gunboat should be retained there. Thereafter, on October 2, 1914, the Secretary of the Navy informed the Secretary of State that the gunboat Tacoma would be held at Cape Haitien in accordance with orders. Immediately following this, however, the situation in Haiti grew steadily worse, and under date of October 28, 1914, letters were sent by the Secretary of State to the President and to the Secretary of the Navy as follows:

"DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In view of our conversation this noon of September 20, 1914, Haiti it seemed to me of first importance that the naval force in Haitian waters should be at once increased, not only for the purpose of protecting foreign interests but also as evidence of the earnest intention of the United States Government to settle the unsatisfactory state of affairs which exists. Two vessels now at Cape Haitien and two others are needed on the south coast at Port au Prince and the other at Gonaïves.

"In the absence of Secretary Daniels and Assistant Secretary Daniels, I took up the matter with Admiral Fiske, who thinks one vessel can be sent from Dominican waters, and with him I agree. As to the other vessel, the Admiral suggests that one of the warships now at Vera Cruz be ordered to Haiti. In view of the urgent need of increasing the naval force on the south coast at this time when a renewal of negotiations seems probable, I would please advise me whether or not I can say to Admiral Fiske that I approve of sending a battleship from Vera Cruz to Port au Prince?

"The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

"SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the political situation in Haiti is such as to render necessary the presence of additional United States naval ships in Haitian waters. It is therefore requested, in accordance with the policies of this Government, that two ships be sent to Haiti of sufficient size so that their landing complements will be able to take charge of and preserve order in the cities of Port au Prince and Gonaïves, in the event of a crisis therefor arise. It is hoped that these two ships may arrive in Haiti as soon as practicable.

"To the above letter the Secretary of the Navy replied on October 1, 1914, as follows:

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 28 stating that the diplomatic situation in the Republic of Haiti is such as to render necessary the presence of additional United States naval ships in Haitian waters. It is noted that the Department of State requests, in accordance with the policies of this Government, that two ships be sent to Haiti of sufficient size so that their landing complements will be able to take charge of and preserve order in the cities of Port au Prince and Gonaïves should occasion arise.

to inform you that the U. S. S. Hancock now at Monteau is ordered to proceed immediately to Port au Prince and that the Hancock has on board a regiment of marines, which are to preserve order in the cities of Port au Prince and to require it to be landed.'

Orders were followed by further requests from the State Department on October 30, 1914:

Honor to request that the attached telegraphic instruction be sent at Port au Prince, Haiti, be sent through the radio.

U. S. S. Hancock, as this department understands that the situation at Port au Prince is very uncertain.

That instructions be sent to the senior officer of the United States naval forces to confer with the American minister at Port au Prince and accede to any requests he may make for the movement of men.'

The Navy replied to the above letter on October 30, 1914,

Honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of October 29, 1914, and the telegraphic instructions attached thereto be sent to the senior officer of the United States naval forces at Port au Prince, Haiti, through the radio communication. It is also noted that the Department of State requests that the senior officer of the United States naval forces in Haiti confer with the American minister at Port au Prince and accede to any requests he may make for the movement of ships and landing parties.

to inform you that the telegraphic instructions to the senior officer of the United States naval forces at Port au Prince have been sent as requested. The commander of the Hancock has been directed to confer with the American minister at Port au Prince and to cooperate with him.'

On August 25 I issued instructions relative to the administration of customs and civil affairs. I appointed Paymaster Charles Morry, as "administrator of customs" for the entire customs district under the United States forces. In that connection, Mr. Morry is to put in the record the following communications:

CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
"U. S. S. WASHINGTON, FLAGSHIP,
"Port au Prince, Haiti, August 24, 1915.

Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet.

United States forces in Haitian waters.

Instructions.

Campaign order No. 9.

Instructions will be followed for the purpose of administering such other civil duties as may be assumed by the United States forces in Haitian waters.

"CUSTOMS ADMINISTRATION.

The commander will administer the customs through an 'administrator,' who will be established at Port au Prince. The 'administrator' will have general charge of the collection of customs and the depositing of receipts, in accordance with the instructions of the squadron commander and in accordance with the Haitian laws with these instructions. For the purpose of insuring the proper administration the 'administrator of customs' is authorized to issue to the local commander such detailed instructions as may be necessary for the customs collection, depositing of receipts, keeping of records, and such other administrative matters as comes under the customs administration.

The commanders will appoint from their respective commands such customs are to be collected a commissioned Navy paymaster as 'collector of customs' and 'captain of the port.'

The commanders will exercise general supervision over the administration within the limits of their respective commands, being assisted by the squadron commander acting through the local commanders.

STANTON LIBRARIES

" CIVIL ADMINISTRATION.

"5. Detachment commanders will have charge of such other may be assumed within the limits of their respective commands bursement of funds allotted to them by the squadron commanders incurred thereby.

"6. Disbursements will be made by detachment commanders following appropriations:

" 'Appropriation constabulary;' to be used for the organization of an efficient constabulary. (For use at Port au Prince present.)

" 'Appropriation public works;' to be used for conducting public works as will afford an immediate relief through employment of starving population and discharged soldiers.

" 'Appropriation military and civil government of the United States;' to be used for the maintenance of the customs and port services of the United States government as the United States may establish.

"7. Detachment commanders will submit to the squadron commander a report not later than the 25th of each month, confirmed by ledger covering the funds desired under each appropriation for each town for each calendar month.

"8. Funds will then be allotted by the squadron commander to the detachment commander from the funds on deposit in the local branch of the Bank of Haiti in each town, and these funds so allotted will be credited to the detachment commander in these local banks.

"9. Each detachment commander will render the following report of funds allotted to them by the squadron commander as specified in paragraph 8:

"(a) At the end of each quarter, beginning September 30, 1915, report current with all substantiating vouchers.

"(b) At the end of each calendar month a statement of cash expended.

"10. The commanding officer of the Washington will assume the duties of 'detachment commander,' indicated herein under 'civil administration' at Port au Prince. He will in addition assume the duties of 'captain' at Port au Prince.

" W. B.

" No. 8282-15.

" CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET.

" U. S. S. SHIP WASHINGTON, F.R.

" Port au Prince, Haiti, August 24, 1915.

" From: Commander cruiser squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet, commanding United States forces in Haitian waters.

" To: Paymaster Charles Morris, United States Navy, U. S. S. Washington (commanding officer).

" Subject: Appointment as 'administrator of customs' and 'collector of customs' at Port au Prince.

"1. There is inclosed herewith Navy Department's radiogram directing the seizure of certain customhouses and a letter of instruction relative to the administration of the customs service. Customhouses at Port au Prince and Cape Haitien have already been seized. The customhouse at Port au Prince is administered in exact accordance with department's radiogram. The customhouse at Cape Haitien is administered in the same manner that the account with the local branch of the National Bank has temporarily been placed in the name of Commander P. N. O'Connell. The seizure and administration of the remaining customhouses will be completed as soon as possible.

"2. You are hereby appointed 'administrator of customs' and 'collector of customs' at Port au Prince.

"3. You will establish an office at Port au Prince and administer the customs service in accordance with department's radiogram No. 20 of instructions No. 8186-15, of August 24, 1915, and the Haitian laws. This law is not inconsistent with these instructions.

"4. This is in addition to your present duties.

" W. B.

SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
 "U. S. S. WASHINGTON, FLAGSHIP,
"Port au Prince, Haiti, August 23, 1915.
 Cruiser squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet, commanding in Haitian waters.
 J. S. Morris, United States Navy, U. S. S. Washington (via

as 'fiscal officer' for 'civil administration.' Department's radiogram 20018.

herewith a letter of instructions No. 8186-15 of August
 'civil administration,' assumed by the United States forces appointed the 'fiscal officer' for the squadron commander funds placed to his credit by the various collectors of be disbursed under the following appropriation:

 'stabilizing'; to be used for the organization and maintenance of constabulary.

'public works'; to be used for conducting such temporary work for an immediate relief through employment for the discharged soldiers.

'military and civil government of the United States forces ; maintenance of the customs and port services and such military United States may establish.

'Haitian Government,' to be transferred to the Dartigueuve determined by the squadron commander.

After such disbursements will be left in the admiral's in trust for the people of Haiti.

The necessary accounts and files and the returns rendered by commanders.

Within a month after the receipt of the detachment commanders' reports of those estimates and a synopsis of the allotment necessary for the different detachment commanders for they will submit same to the squadron commander for his approval of these allotments you will make the necessary to the National Bank of Haiti to place the funds so allotted to the detachment commanders.

in to your present duties.

"W. B. CAPERTON."

SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
 "U. S. S. 'WASHINGTON,' FLAGSHIP,
"Port au Prince, Haiti, August 25, 1915.

United States Navy,
 'Port au Prince, Haiti.

Inclosing herewith a draft of campaign order No. 9, issued, but will in the immediate future as soon as the operations are completed at the southern ports. I am sending you so that you may have a general outline of the deployment in Haitian waters. It will be signed by me in a few days and sent to you then. So far as your detachment is concerned no effect now. I am inclosing herewith a letter of instructions effective immediately upon its receipt.

J. S. Morris, United States Navy, has been appointed 'administrator' and will immediately proceed with the administration of the coast of Haiti. You are, of course, the detachment commander in the letter of instructions, and will immediately perform the duties directed therein for your two towns. We are patient for the first month or so, until we begin to get things settled. After that I think matters will run more smoothly.

"Under direction of the Navy Department, the customs receipts placed to my credit in a single account in the National Bank. You will open an account in my name at this bank both at Cape Haiti and Port de Paix. You will proceed to shift the money on hand at Cape Haiti from Commander Olmstead's account to my account, keeping our funds as you may need to cover expenditures for one week in advance. Please advise me when this has been done and how much you have placed to my credit.

"I suggest that you immediately send in for both towns estimates for the month of September of the amounts of money desired, in accordance with the letter of instructions. I will then immediately make an allotment transferring funds to your credit at each place. I intend to have a self-supporting; that is, the customs receipts at each place must support the work at that place. You will for the present use two appropriations: (a) 'Public works' and (b) 'military and civil government of the United States forces.' In these two I think you will have plenty of leeway to cover the expenses of your administration and undertake such sanitary and other work as you wish.

"If you need funds for immediate uses at Port de Paix, take from Commander Olmstead's account at Cape Haiti before transferring to my account and inform me of the amount so taken.

"It is very necessary that the method outlined in the letter of instructions be followed in order to carry on the business uniformly throughout the country. The scheme is roughly to collect the customs, put them in my name, and allot to you what I can out of these funds to pay for your two towns. I leave it entirely to your business and as to how you spend your money. No further action is necessary on my part. The only restriction is that no money be spent only under the two appropriations mentioned. I think this will give you plenty of leeway to give you anything you please.

"With reference to the Nashville controlling Port de Paix and Cape Haiti, I consider it necessary to have the Nashville touch in at Port de Paix frequently, at your discretion, in order to get news, investigate conditions, and as necessary the landing force there and maintain communication with the Nashville. I am not as yet ready to leave any detachments in isolated positions without being in reach of the prompt support of a naval vessel. This matter will be left to Commander Olmstead's present duties as 'military governor of the United States forces at Haiti.' If it does you are authorized to relieve him from that duty. Col. Cole or anyone else you may have available in his place.

"A battery of Artillery will be landed at Cape Haiti in the near future. The force you will then have ashore at Cape Haiti will be the Connecticut's bluejacket battalion, will give you practically all the troops that Col. Cole thought were necessary there. I would suggest that this bluejacket battalion be kept aboard the Connecticut as a reserve, and land at either Port de Paix or Cape Haiti.

"In this connection it is very desirable to have the bluejacket officers, petty officers, and men—given thorough instruction in the duties on shore. The department available has no more troops available to increase the force in Haiti at the present time, and we must therefore use our seamen to reinforce our marines at any threatened point. Prince I have directed Col. Waller to furnish instruction through marine officers to the Washington's seaman battalion. He is running the simple military duties for officers and petty officers under the supervision of the marine captain. I think this is of highest importance.

"With reference to the 2,000 ex-Government troops in the vicinity of Port au Prince, I don't presume that the orders issued by the President that the Nord Alexis and come to Port au Prince will be effective. I told the situation there with reference to their not being able to reach the sea holds that if his orders get through to these troops they would board the Nord Alexis all right; so I forwarded his radiograms and gave you your orders relative to the Nord Alexis, as it will do no harm to try.

"I have been investigating Montreuil's activities and am endeavoring to get a line on him which will give you something definite to work on. You have orders to arrest him immediately if he attempts to start any more trouble.

and neither he nor any of his so-called factions can be having our own troubles in Port au Prince endeavoring. Things are not entirely satisfactory, and I may have a military government here. My general plan with reference to entire freedom consistent with carrying out the general policy are familiar.

"W. B. CAPERTON."

Reports continued to be received indicating pillaging and disorder, that is, in the northern interior. At this time there were no Government troops in the northeast of Haiti near up with the president of paying these soldiers a few dollars for some clothes, and bringing them down to Port au Prince. They were there, as they lived in the southern part of Haiti. I consented, and I had them brought down.

At I had a conference with Mr. Charles Zamor and Gen. Caco question. These gentlemen made the proposition to me, consisting of Gen. Zamor, Gen. Robin, and one other of our American officers, proceed into the interior and visit their towns. Upon the arrival at each chief and they would be paid to them in the form of checks, which would be drawn on the National Bank of Haiti within the American lines, and could be used for the surrender of arms and ammunition to the American Government. Money to be paid to depend upon the particular influence of his detachment, and other local conditions to be decided on the spot. These gentlemen say that then they would leave their homes and cease marauding. They proposed to meet them, and also the men. They would gather their arms and disband them.

Paying each soldier 15 gourdes if he will surrender his arms. 100 gourdes to each chief, which is the standing proposition, quite liberal, and at this rate not more than 200,000 gourdes, gold, could possibly be spent. It is therefore evident that Zamor's is, to a great extent, an attempt to bleed the opposition was for a great deal more than this. I forget must the American charge d'affaires received from the Haitian Government the written reply of the Haitian Government to the proposition. In this reply practically every stipulation of the proposition either omitted or so changed as to defeat its purpose. The repeated assurances that the Haitian Government would meet the United States as to all principles involved, differing only in details.

Zamor propose that the Americans or the Haitians pay

The sums were, of course, to be paid out of the Haitian only asked that because you referred to his bleeding the

That is what I have here in my notes.

meant to take advantage of American credulity?

I think that was the idea. This money was all paid out of the pocket of the president at that time for these various arms.

William Theodore arrived at Cape Haitien on the 29th of the opinion that the providing of work to the Cacos in the north would be a valuable aid in stopping the present disorders in the north, more toward this end than a commission such as Mr. Theodore has understood from reliable sources that the National Railroad Company has present contract with the Haitian Government, amounting to 1,500 men on new construction between Bahon and the number between St. Marc and Petit Riviere. d'

L'Artibonite, and about 1,000 men between Gonaives and Gros Morne. I believe that if the State Department will use its good offices to induce the National Railroad of Haiti to begin this work and will offer its help, the work may be begun at once. Funds from the customs will not be available for me to begin public works as directed by the department for some little time, and an early employment of the men in the north is extremely desirable.

A message was sent to the Secretary of the Navy on August 29, as follows:

AUGUST 29

From: Commander Cruiser Squadron.

To: Secretary of the Navy.

Believe providing work will do great deal toward stopping present idleness in north. Understand from reliable sources that national railroad can immediately employ about 1,500 men on new construction between Port-au-Prince and Pignon, about same number between St. Marc and Petit Riviere de l'Artibonite, and about 1,000 between Gonaives and Gros Morne, under present contract with Haitian Government. Recommend State Department use good offices to induce National Railroad of Haiti to begin this work at once. Funds from customs will not be available for me to begin extensive public works as directed by department's radiogram 20018 at once, and early employment men in north extremely desirable. 16029.

C

On the 30th of August the American chargé d'affaires had a conference which lasted several hours with President Dartiguenave and his cabinet. They agreed only to sign the treaty in a modified form. They insist that the treaty control infringes on the bank concession, and this matter must be discussed before further discussion. They also stated that they are willing to give up customs control, but even after this difficulty is removed would not be willing to allow the United States the administration of customs.

The CHAIRMAN. How did they make a distinction between customs and administration?

Admiral CAPERTON. I think they meant the collection of customs. The collection of collecting customs depended entirely upon the collector of the customs. I have been informed by high officers there that it was only necessary to appoint a Haitian as an official collector of customs in one of these ports to give him the opportunity of becoming a rich man. They seemed to be satisfied with the manner in which we went about collecting the customs, reducing the number of employees in the office, and with the vast increase in the amount of money turned over to the Government, because formerly each man paid a rake-off to his pay, received a rake-off, which they admitted. When we readjusting the pay for the fewer number of men we found it necessary to increase their pay to include their rake-off, which was not too much, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean the rake-off was reasonable?

Admiral CAPERTON. The president himself seemed sincerely desiring to reach an agreement, but he does not appear to be a man of sufficient authority to control the cabinet and the congress at this time.

On the 31st of August there were no encouraging developments in the situation. I have therefore decided that, unless otherwise directed, I will occupy and begin administering the customhouse at Port au Prince as early as possible on the 2d of September. I so informed the department of this decision.

In connection with this matter I would like to put in the record the following communication:

AUGUST 31

From: Commander Cruiser Squadron.

To: Secretary of the Navy.

Unless otherwise directed will occupy and begin administering customhouse at Port au Prince at 10 a. m., September 2.

C

On September 1 I appointed Paymaster Charles Conard "administering customs" and "fiscal officer" for the civil administration, relieving Charles Morris of those duties. In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I have put into the record the following communications:

CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP,
Port au Prince, Haiti, September 1, 1915.

Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet. command-
forces in Haitian waters.
les Conard, United States Navy.
t as "administrator of customs."
mmander Cruiser Squadron's letter of instructions No.
24, 1915.

appointed "administrator of customs" and will immedi-ter Charles Morris, United States Navy, of the duties of sh an office at Port au Prince and administer the customs e with department's radiogram No. 20018, reference (a), where this law is not inconsistent with these instructions.
eyond the seas is required by the public interests.

W. B. CAPERTON.

CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP,
Port au Prince, Haiti, September 1, 1915.

Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet, command-
forces in Haitian waters.
les Conrad, United States Navy.
t as fiscal officer for "civil administration."
Department's radiogram No. 20018.

appointed the "fiscal officer" for the squadron commander e funds placed to his credit by the various "collectors of mediately relieve Paymaster Charles Morris, United States
f that office.

be disbursed under the following appropriations:
stabulary," to be used for the organization and mainteconstabulary.

olic works," to be used for conducting such temporary afford an immediate relief through employment for the l discharged soldiers.

itary and civil government of United States forces," to enance of the customs and port services and such military nited States may establish.

itian Government," to be transferred to Dartiguenave e determined by the squadron commander."

ng after such disbursements will be left in the admiral's aim in trust for the people of Haiti.

e necessary accounts and files and the returns rendered by anders.

month after the receipt of the detachment commanders' ynopsis of these estimates and a synopsis of the allotsider necessary for the different detachment commanders
; and you will submit same to the squadron commander on approval of these allotments, you will make the neces-rough the National Bank of Haiti to place the funds so of the detachment commanders.

beyond the seas is required by the public interests.

W. B. CAPERTON.

informed the American Chargé d'Affaires that I proposed, avy Department orders, to assume charge of the custom-nce at 10 a. m. on the 2d of September, and requested him n Government of this intention and to request that they eps to inform the Haitian Administrator of Customs. I t the Haitian Government direct the Haitian Administraret Paymaster Conard at the customhouse at 10 a. m. on so that an amicable arrangement could be made relative to the transfer. In connection with this, Mr. Chairman, I would like to put the following communication in the record:

EEE.

No. 8655-15.

CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP
Port au Prince, Haiti, September 1, 1915.

The AMERICAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES,
American Legation, Port au Prince, Haiti.

SIR: I have the honor to state that at 10 a. m., Thursday, September 1, in accordance with orders of the Navy Department, I will assume the command of the customhouse at Port au Prince, Haiti.

I request that you inform the Haitian Government of this intention and request that they take the necessary steps to inform the Haitian Administrator of Customs.

I further request that you ask the Haitian Government to direct the Administrator of Customs to meet Paymaster Charles Conrad, United States Navy, at the customhouse at 10 a. m., Thursday, so that an amicable arrangement can be made in the premises.

I am, sir, respectfully,

W. B. CAPERTON,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy, Commander Cruiser Squadron
and Commanding United States Forces in Haitian Waters.

In view of the uneasy situation, the possibility of disturbance, the attitude of some of the members of the Cabinet toward the Government, and the trouble or outbreak at Port au Prince is possible. In such a case it is necessary for me to declare martial law. That was on the 1st of September.

In reference to this I sent the following message to the Secretary of the Navy, under date of September 1, 1915:

MMM.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1915.

From: Commander Cruiser Squadron.

To: Secretary of the Navy and Commander in Chief.

Conditions Port au Prince Haiti uneasy. Continued reports of minister exercising unwarranted authority and committing other abuses which minister appears unable to control; newly appointed police in towns near Port au Prince overbearing and cause general complaint. Cabinet minister very to-day to be especially on guard against outbreak against Government and to-morrow and intimated present Government would not be adverse to martial law. President states action taken by Haitian minister at Washington, D. C., Menos, relative treaty negotiations was done without knowledge of President or counsel of cabinet; have reliable information Minister of Foreign Affairs Sannon communicated with Menos relative this matter of responsibility. Will occupy customhouse Port au Prince to-morrow. Outbreak or trouble Port au Prince may necessitate martial law. 23401.

On September 2 I requested the American chargé d'affaires to inform the Haitian Government of the necessity of assuming charge of the port and the intentions of the United States Government relative to the stationing of customs. I also informed the commanding officer of the French Condé of the action I had taken with reference to the customhouse. In connection I would like to put this communication in the record:

YYY.

No. 8781-15

CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP
Port au Prince, Haiti, September 2, 1915.

The AMERICAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES,
American Legation, Port au Prince, Haiti.

SIR: I have the honor to state that the following appointments have been made by me to administer the customs and the port service at Port au Prince: Paymaster Charles Conrad, United States Navy, administrator of all customhouses taken charge of in Haiti.

t R. Stevens, United States Navy, collector of customs at Willis McDowell, United States Navy, captain of the port inform the Haitian Government and all foreign diplomats natives of these appointments.
 ectfully,

W. B. CAPERTON,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet, Haiti,
and Commanding United States Forces in Haitian waters.
 g letter was written under date of September 2 to the Affaires at Port au Prince:

UISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
 U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP,
 Port au Prince, Haiti, September 2, 1915.

GÉ D'AFFAIRES,
 Port au Prince, Haiti.

onor to request that you inform the Haitian Government the United States Government, I will administer the custom-ve assumed charge for the benefit of the Haitian people and e present Haitian Government.
 I will be used for the organization and maintenance of an , will be used for conducting such temporary public work iate relief, through employment, for the starving populace ers, and for supporting the Haitian Government. s will be held for the time being by the United States Gov-the people of Haiti.
 ectfully,

W. B. CAPERTON,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
nder Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet,
Commanding United States Forces in Haitian Waters.

creasing uneasiness at Port au Prince, the apparent inability ment to control conditions with which it is confronted, the apers and public men of inflammatory propaganda against the American occupation, the disloyalty to the present Government officials, the personal request of the President, or support the present Government, I decided to proclaim y of Port au Prince on the 3d of September, 1915. Under ptember I sent the following message to the Secretary of

SEPTEMBER 2, 1915.

Cruiser Squadron.
 Navy, and Commander in Chief.

creasing uneasiness Port au Prince, present Government con-is apparently unable to control; propaganda by newspapers lammatory propaganda against Government and American y to present Government of some Government officials; and port the present Government I will to-morrow, September 3, y in Port au Prince, Haiti. This action in accord with faires. Proclamation follows by radio 22402.

CAPERTON.

sage to the Secretary of the Navy under date of September
 s for martial law given in my 22402, I was also this mornsident Dartiguenave, in informal interview, to establish as possible."
 ptember I issued the following proclamation:

0000.

CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET
U. S. S. "Washington,"

PROCLAMATION.

To the people of Port au Prince, Haiti:

Information having been received from the most reliable sources that the present Government of Haiti is confronted with conditions which it is unable to control, although loyally attempting to discharge the duties of its respective offices; and these facts having created a condition which requires the adoption of different measures than those heretofore applied; and in order to protect the inhabitants of Port au Prince and other territory hereinafter designated as the privileges of the Government, exercising all the functions necessary for the establishment and maintenance of the fundamental rights of man and woman under my authority as commanding officer of the forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian waters, proclaim that martial law exists in the city of Port au Prince and the immediate territory now occupied by the United States under my command.

I further proclaim, in accordance with the law of nations and the customs, and functions of my own and other Governments, that I exercise with the power and responsibility of Government in all its functions and branches throughout the territory above described; and the proper administration of such Government by martial law will be provided for in the future to be issued from time to time, as required, by the commanding officer of the forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian waters.

The martial law herein proclaimed, and the things in that respect provided for, will not be deemed or taken to interfere with the proceedings of the national Government and congress of Haiti, or with the administration of justice in the courts of law existing therein; which do not affect the military or the authorities of the Government of the United States of America.

All the municipal and other civil employees are, therefore, requested to continue in their present vocations without change; and the military will not interfere in the functions of the civil administration and government except in so far as relates to persons violating military orders or regulations, or otherwise interfering with the exercise of military authority. All citizens can confidently pursue their usual occupations, feeling that they will be protected in their personal rights and property, as well as in their social relations.

The commanding officer of the United States Expeditionary Force, Lieutenant Colonel W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, is empowered to issue the necessary regulations and appoint the necessary officers to make this proclamation effective.

Done at the city of Port au Prince, Haiti, this 3d day of September, 1914.

W. B. CAPERTON,

Rear Admiral, United States NavyCommanding the Forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian Waters

Later I wrote the following letter to the chargé d'affaires of the United States Legation at Port au Prince:

PPPP.

No. 8840-15.

CRUISER SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET

U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP

Port au Prince, Haiti, September 10, 1914.

The AMERICAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES,
American Legation, Port au Prince, Haiti.

SIR: I have the honor to request that all foreign diplomatic and consular representatives be informed that martial law has been declared in Port au Prince, and that copies of the proclamation be sent to them.

I am, sir, respectfully,

W. B. CAPERTON,

Rear Admiral, United States NavyCommander Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic FleetCommanding United States Forces in Haiti and Haitian Waters

I also requested that a copy of that letter be sent to the commander of the French cruiser Condé, informing him of this fact.

the conditions in the north, on September 4, the following officer of the Connecticut, Capt. Durell, reported that at Cape Haitien from the Cacos regarding the sur- they still besieged the town; and that the prices of food- and were causing hardship and suffering among the poor- ing officer of the Connecticut further reported that two the troops at Ouanaminthe, had arrived at Cape Haitien us and pay. The sum of 5,000 gourdes granted last week tion these troops for one week, and he stated that 7,000 necessary.

and the commanding officer of the Connecticut what outly- e necessary to occupy to insure the food supply for Cape troops in addition to what he had would be necessary for s and conducting offensive operations in connection there- of the interior, Mayard, on this day stated that provision tioning the troops at Ouanaminthe and Mont Organise for is becoming critical. These Cacos will not come within er their arms and d'sband on account of the leaders, who tain exorbitant bribes. The liberal offer of 15 gourdes ourdes per chief, to pay for their rifles and give them urn to their homes, has not been accepted, after repeated ough channels in the north and through the'r leaders in se Cacos are a source of annoyance in the north, and, if ng Cape Haitien it may force active measures against pinion that furnish'g work on the railroad construction. e Haitien, as recommended in my radiogram No. 16029, these men to desert their chiefs and go to work. Unless ken in this connection, I will probably be forced to con- sive operations against these Cacos.

September 4, I received a cable message from the American an Domingo City, stating that he had reliable informa- munities of war were being made in Haiti along the Fonds Parisien, and Fonds Verettes. In connection with o put into the record the following communication:

argé d'Affaires, San Domingo.
ulser squadron.

information that deposits of munitions of war being made in ces on border mountain near town of Bourg St. Louis or a towns of Fonds Parisien and La Mission or Fonds lace can be reached via railroad and Lake el Fondo.

JOHNSON, American Chargé.

ent the following report to the Secretary of the Navy:

SEPTEMBER 4, 1915.

uiser squadron.

Navy and Commander in Chief.

ch Haiti becoming critical. These Cacos will not come surrender arms and disband on account leaders who tain exorbitant bribes. Liberal offer of 15 gourdes per es per chief to pay for their rifles and give them sufficient ir homes not accepted after repeated efforts both through l through their leaders in Port au Prince. These Cacos sting Cape Haitien and are preventing market people and own. Believe furnishing work on railroad construction as recommended in my radiogram 16029 might induce r chiefs and go to work. Unless prompt measures are on will be forced to consider very soon offensive opera- acos. 11504.

CAPERTON.

SEPTEMBER 4, 1915.

uiser squadron.

Navy and commander in chief.

g of Marietta and sixth company of marines will leave ay afternoon to occupy Jeramie and customhouse that place. Paymaster Manning H. Philbrick has been appointed collector and captain of the port of Jeremie. No further news. 22204.

STAT AND LIBRARIES

On September 5, under my direction, the commander of the expedition force sent for Mr. Charles Zamor and requested him to go immediately to Haiti and endeavor to persuade the Cacos to open the food supply place. Mr. Charles Zamor was informed of the seriousness of the situation and of the great danger of serious consequences to the Cacos if they refused in such methods of annoyance. Mr. Charles Zamor agreed to go as instructed.

This expedition was finally arranged after much talk and discussion with Mr. Charles Zamor for several days previous.

On this same day, September 5, I received the department's message No. 12005 that I should take no offensive action against the Haitians, first consulting the Navy Department. I am now investigating the situation of occupying the towns on the principal roads entering Cape Haiti and the food supply for the city. I will not undertake any offensive action before referring the matter to the Navy Department. In this connection I would like to put in the record the following radiogram:

A

SEPTEMBER 5

From: Secretary of the Navy.

To: Commander cruiser squadron.

11504. Take no offensive action against Haitians without first consulting the Navy Department unless absolutely necessary to prevent loss of life or property. More detailed instructions will be sent you to-morrow. Inform the Cacos immediately of any conditions that would seem to make offensive action desirable or necessary. Acknowledge. 12005.

Further unrest was reported at Gonaives on account of the reports of the Cacos. Information was continually coming in of Cacos moving to various places in the north. I would like to give you for your information the connection with that matter, the following:

D

SEPTEMBER 5

From: Commanding officer Castine.

To: Commander cruiser squadron.

Gonaives and St. Marc quiet. Plaisance reported quiet. Inform the Cacos are moving from St. Raphael to St. Michel. 08005.

E

SEPTEMBER 5

From: Commanding officer Castine.

To: Commander Cruiser squadron.

Officer 5102 (Capt. Fay, Marine Corps) reports considerable unrest at Gonaives over reported approach of revolutionary forces under Charbonnet last reported near Ennery. U. S. S. Castine will proceed to Cap-Haitien tomorrow upon arrival of U. S. S. Osceola. 19305.

I reported the situation to the Secretary of the Navy that evening in the following message:

SEPTEMBER 5

From: Commander cruiser squadron.

To: Secretary of the Navy and commander in chief.

12005. Charles Zamor, at my request, agreed to go immediately to Haiti and endeavor persuade Cacos open food supply to that end. I am investigating feasibility occupying towns on principal roads entering Haiti to secure food supply for city. Will not undertake offensive action before referring to Navy Department. Some unrest Gonaives over reported approach Cacos. 23205.

On the same day, September 5, I issued a campaign order, No. 9, concerning the deployment of the forces in Haiti and Haitian waters for maintaining military control of the ports of entry and the collection of duties thereat, pending negotiations between the United States and Haiti. The campaign order which I have just referred to reads as follows:

SEE SQUADRON, UNITED STATES ATLANTIC FLEET,
U. S. S. "WASHINGTON," FLAGSHIP,
Port au Prince, Haiti, September 5, 1915—10 a. m.

ent.—Capt. E. H. Durell, Connecticut, Nashville. First Second Battalion, one battery. Field Artillery.

ent.—Commander J. F. Carter, Castine. Seventh and Infantry.

ent.—Maj. N. H. Hall. Sixth and Twelfth Companies

ent.—Commander L. McNamee, Sacramento. Fourth and Infantry.

Washington, Marietta, Eagle. First Brigade Infantry, less companies. One battalion Field Artillery, less one battery. remain in arms in north Haiti. South Haiti is at present relative to the treaty with present Haitian Government are ernment without funds and not at present strong; efforts port it are continually under way.

assume and maintain military control of the ports of entry customs thereat pending negotiations between United States ment maintain military control Port de Paix and military tlen. Nashville patrol Port de Paix and Cape Haitien.

these operations.

ment maintain military control St. Marc and Gonaives.
rc and Gonaives and support these operations.

ent occupy Jeremie. Maintain military control Petit ment occupy Les Cayes (Aux Cayes) and Jacmel. Sacra- es and Jacmel and support these operations.

maintain military control under martial law at Port au support these operations. Marietta patrol Petit Goave, le and support third detachment. Eagle continue repairs.
ary control and administer customs at all ports occupied.
ty and preserve order. Disarm all Haitian troops encounanamo. Osceola will make trips between base and various ores, mail, and provisions. Jason and Solace remain e present.

nder on Washington. Make daily and such other reports keep squadron commander fully and frequently informed seventy-fifth meridian mean time.

W. B. CAPERTON,

Rear Admiral, Commander Cruiser Squadron,
ding United States Forces in Haiti and Haitian Waters.

at Gonaives at 5 p. m. on September 6. The town of easy and there is much excitement among the natives. A cacos are a few miles from the town under Chief Rameau.
to stir up the inhabitants against the Americans. Many naives in small craft. The Castine disembarked her land-reinforce the marines on shore.

nit, in connection with the arrival of the Castine, the folommanding officer of that vessel:

SEPTEMBER 5, 1915.

officer Castine.
er squadron.

naives 5 p. m. Monday; immediately sent landing force to ment in patrolling town. One hundred fifty Cacos a few r Chief Rameau. Cacos endeavoring to stir up inhabit-
s. It is reported that Cacos sympathizers having come v days, inhabitants fear town will be burned by Cacos people leaving Gonaives in small craft. Much excitement e Cacos difficult. Will maintain regulation patrol of town elopments to-morrow. 19006.

CARTER.

On the 7th of September the American chargé d'affaires had a conference with the President and his cabinet relative to the treaty. The minister of foreign affairs and public instruction, Mr. Pauleus Sanon, and the minister of agriculture and public works, Mr. Antoine Sansaricq, refused to accept the adviser stipulation. Upon this refusal the President requested and their immediate resignation. The remainder of the cabinet agreed to the treaty substantially as submitted. The President then asked to have a short delay to enable him to fill the vacancies in the cabinet, which was refused. The resignation of the minister of foreign affairs and public instruction removes a dissenting and undesirable element.

It was reported on the same day that the Cacos were outside of Port-au-Prince under the command of Rameau.

The commanding officer of the Castine, Commander James Carter, suggested that it was advisable to disperse the Cacos or drive them back without the aid in view of the present force being insufficient for outposts and patrols. The Cacos were driven back.

On the same day I sent the following message to the commanding officer of the Castine:

SEPTEMBER 7

From: Commander cruiser squadron.

To: Commanding officer Casine.

09007. Do not take offensive unless necessary to protect life and property and hold town. Charles Zamor should arrive Gonaives to-day. He is to be used to consult with Rameau and arrange difficulty. Believe you can have a conference with Cacos through Charles Zamor and obtain results in view. Have already told Zamor we can not tolerate these Cacos' annoyance unless they cease will be forced take strong measures. Acknowledge. 11547.

Later in the evening of September 7 I sent the following report to the Secretary of the Navy:

SEPTEMBER 7

From: Commander cruiser squadron.

To: Secretary of the Navy and Commander in Chief.

Gonaives uneasy and much excitement among natives. About 200 Cacos to town under Chief Rameau. Cacos endeavoring stir up inhabitants and Americans. Castine has landed seamen to reinforce marines. Zamor to Gonaives to endeavor induce Cacos to cease operations. Have directed Castine not take offensive unless necessary protect life and property and hold town. 11407.

SEPTEMBER 7

From: Commander cruiser squadron.

To: Secretary of the Navy and Commander in Chief.

Passed Assistant Paymaster Fred E. McMillen and Passed Assistant Master Henry R. Snyder appointed collectors of customs and captains of port at Petit Goave and Miragoane, respectively. These officers sent reports on U. S. S. Osceola to-day. Pauleus Sanon, minister foreign affairs, Antoine Sansaricq, minister agriculture, resigned to-day. 22407.

SEPTEMBER 7

From: Commander cruiser squadron.

To: Secretary of the Navy.

National Bank of Haiti at Port au Prince has contributed $500 to fund. 23107.

On September 9 Louis Borno and Paul Salomon were appointed ministers of foreign affairs and public works, respectively, filling the vacancies in those places.

The CHAIRMAN. Louis Borno was appointed minister of foreign affairs and Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; Borno was appointed minister of foreign affairs and Salomon was appointed minister of public works. President Daigault informed me that Leconte, minister of war, had instructions to go to Port-au-Prince with the Cacos at Cape Haitien and endeavor to reach an agreement with them.

us. Leconte is not to pay any money or make an pecuniary em.

you have omitted a dispatch of September 8 to the com-Connecticut. The language of that message is: "Success-ty is predominant part present mission. After encounter-treaty situation at present looks more favorable than n effected by exercising military pressure at propitious
 ns. Yesterday two members of cabinet who have blocked re resigned. President himself believed to be anxious to present am holding up offensive operations and allowing mplete cabinet and try again. Am therefore not yet ready erations at Cape Haitien, but will hold them in abeyance on is that under the direction of the department the naval States in Haiti were using the military pressure to com-
 ."

 the treaty.

I have that message in my record.

think you ought to describe the character of the military ear to secure the ratification of the treaty.

Well, the only pressure I can think of or consider was pressure to bear, in order, if possible, to quiet the Cacos intimidatng the members of congress and the senate who reaty as has been previously stated in my testimony. The y, was more moral than military. As I have frequently ver these customhouses at times, I ceased taking them ed to militate against us in getting the treaty ratified at I would have taken the customhouses at some distant cessary at that time, owing to the disturbed conditions, ully have had a moral effect on the congress. There was no ment made against the congress.

am only seeking the interpretation of your own cable.

If there was any pressure brought to bear at all, it was f the government, which I was there to support.

0 o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned until Thursday, 0.30 o'clock a. m.)

MANHOOD LIBRARIES

OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, Senator Angell.

Mr. Angell, Mr. Horace G. Knowles, and Maj. Edwin N. Mc-Marine Corps, in their respective representative capacities testified.

REAR ADMIRAL WILLIAM B. CAPERTON, UNITED STATES NAVY, RETIRED—Resumed.

Mr. Angell has requested the committee to grant him the original questions of Admiral Caperton regarding his testimony, objections, his request will be granted, but this must not precedent.

Q. At the time that you went down to Cape Haitien in October, 1915—

A. Yes.

Q. For assignment of duty in the West Indies to observe the situation—

A. Those were my original orders.

Q. Original orders to which you testified, I think the first day at that time familiar with the correspondence between the Department of State and the Secretary of the Navy, which was introduced by Chairman McCormick yesterday, that being specifically, the letters of October 28, 1914, and the replies? You may have known in advance or in a memorandum to know specifically the letters to which I refer, the 13th et seq. of the typewritten report of the hearing. My question is whether you were familiar with that correspondence.

A. No; in glancing over them, it is all new to me.

Q. And you at that time had any conferences with the responsible officials of the Navy or State Departments or any general discussion along the line of those letters, namely the desirability, in the opinion of the State Department, of putting additional naval forces in the Caribbean in conjunction with the proposed negotiation of a treaty?

A. No; I knew nothing about it. I did know that the Georgia was believed to be down there, because we were always getting reports of the papers, and in this way I knew something about it, but nothing of official correspondence.

Q. And no knowledge, then, of any purpose behind the presence of the Georgia in Haitian waters?

A. No; I had not.

Q. That fall and winter?

A. I had not.

Q. Now, did you have any knowledge, or have you since acquired, of the affairs of the Machias at Port au Prince on when the $500,000 were taken from the bank and brought

Admiral CAPERTON. I do not think I have enough definite information to discuss the matter at all. I merely heard that this amount of money was sent from Port au Prince, and as I recall, the Machias was the vessel. I have discussed it a little bit, but I really know nothing about the matter at all.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever have an opportunity to discuss it with the commanding officer of the Machias?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; I had not; I do not yet know who he was, I do not recall.

Mr. ANGELL. You never discussed it, then, with anyone who had been in contact and immediate connect on with that affair?

Admiral CAPERTON. No.

Mr. ANGELL. With reference to your presence at Cape Haitien in July, 1915, at the time you established a field radio station, and later the marines, as you said, to protect the railroad property, am I correct in believing that your testimony on the first or second day was that the marines had already been reembarked on board when you arrived there?

Admiral CAPERTON. As far as I remember, they had been withdrawn.

Mr. ANGELL. And was the French vessel in the harbor when you arrived?

Admiral CAPERTON. It was inside, in the inner harbor. You could not take a big vessel in there until after I surveyed that harbor.

Mr. ANGELL. You arrived there about July 1, as I remember?

Admiral CAPERTON. The second time.

Mr. ANGELL. The second time, yes.

Admiral CAPERTON. From Vera Cruz.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you have any conference at that time, personally or with your staff officers, with the commander of the French vessel there, regarding the presence of the French marines or French forces at Cape Haitien?

Admiral CAPERTON. Oh, yes; I have stated in my testimony here that I gave him an official visit, of course, the moment I arrived, and told me the details which I have outlined in my testimony. I returned the call, I think the next day, as far as I remember now. I know I did, if the weather was good. I discussed it further afterwards.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the discussion about the advisability of the landing of the French on the shore?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; the captain, as I have stated here, was asked to land at the request of his own consul or consular agent, as I recall, and, as I have outlined it in my testimony, the commanding officer told me he had been sent there by the French minister at Port au Prince, and that of the French consular agent at that point being fearful of the safety of his interests.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you have any instructions from the Navy Department regarding the point of whether or not it was deemed advisable and proper for the landing of the French on the shore in Haiti?

Admiral CAPERTON. I had no direct information as to that point. I do not recall my testimony exactly now, but my orders were to proceed there.

Senator ODDIE. I think it would be a good idea for the admiral to take a moment to prepare his answers, because he has to refresh his memory.

Admiral CAPERTON. I had orders for each move, which I have outlined in my testimony, but I had so many things to do that I can not recall.

Mr. ANGELL. The purpose of my question was to find out if there was a general or, on this occasion, any special policy of the Navy or the State Department, as indicated to you, regarding the presence of foreign forces in Haiti. In connection with my question, let me call your attention to the fact that on July 28, 1915, from the Acting Secretary of the Navy to yourself, which is as paragraph 9 of Gen. Barnett's report attached to the report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1920, reading as follows:

"State Department desires that American forces be landed at Port au Prince and that American and foreign interests be protected; that representatives of Great Britain, France and Germany be informed of this intention; informed that their interests will be protected, and that they be requested not to land."

That was, of course, later in the month, regarding the landing of the French on the shore in Haiti.

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; later in July.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, earlier in the month, when you were at Cape Haitien, were there any such instructions, general or special, as far as you remember?

Admiral CAPERTON. I will have to refer to my notes.

that can be answered and put in the record. Admiral, that is abeyance until you have time to prepare it. We will save my notes I find I received no additional orders or instructional, except the following, which is my original orders, 1915, at Vera Cruz:

French Marines landed Cape Haitien. Proceed there with USS French Commander take necessary steps to protect property. Dispose of vessels on Mexican coast to best advantage. Arrietta enroute Vera Cruz acknowledge 14022 Daniels."

Following the same line, Admiral, and jumping a month, Port au Prince, as I remember your testimony and the official vessel Descartes arrived in Port au Prince three or four days, on the 1st or 2d of August. A very short time, a day French land marines or naval forces in Port au Prince, at a legation guard, or otherwise, do you remember?

I would rather refer to my notes. I have stated this in my notes and I do not just recall.

Do you not remember whether or not they landed at all?

Oh, yes; I think they landed a guard, and after a certain time, and I sent an officer to be present when they relieved the guard, referring to my diary I find the French guard landed August 1st, 1915, as a legation guard at the French legation.

Again in Gen. Barnett's report, paragraph 34, the following:

"On August 2, 1915, informed the Navy Department that the French legation guard at 7 a. m."

How long, roughly, how long their legation guard remained on shore? For a few weeks, or months?

They remained there for quite a while. I can tell you from my notes the exact date they were withdrawn, and the date of their withdrawal. I do not think the exact date is material. Was it weeks or months? I think it was weeks? Or months?

Yes; and possibly months, I think. I believe it was Mr. Farnham, the National City Bank's vice president, who arrived earlier here substantially to the fact that the French legation guard, remained in Port au Prince on shore some six months. At recollection, do you think?

I could not answer that without referring to my notes, but I could give you the exact dates.

Do you have any idea or recollection how large a force that was maintained and maintained? In other words, was it a dozen men, or more?

Well, it was a legation guard. Without referring to my notes, I believe there were about 25, perhaps, or 50, maybe more. I think it was sufficient.

I have the exact numbers in my notes or official reports. I believe the period of your command in Haiti, that is from November, 1916, did any other European nations have forces in Haiti?

No. I am quite sure there were no others; in fact, I do not know of any foreign men-of-war that visited the port during this time. Were there any French?

Yes; they depended entirely on the Americans, because the French captain, officially informed me that he would not be particularly particular with the American occupation, and that he would not be inside the legation, and that they would not be seen out with arms.

That, I suppose, was followed, as you remember?

As far as I know, that was followed, leaving the entire city to the Americans and the rest of the city to the Americans.

So far as you know, was the purpose of the French in Haiti at Port au Prince for the protection of the legation and the prevention of its violation about the time of the murder of the

STATE OF DEPT. OF NAVY

Admiral CAPEBTON. Well, I can not go into their motives, as to they proposed to protect when they went ashore, but they landed as guard for the protection of the legation.

I find here that, referring to incident in question, I made a report Secretary of the Navy something as follows, on the 31st of July:

"French minister informed me he had received dispatches from Paris Government, stating that French Embassy, Washington, had been deformed United States Government that France considered landing legation at Port au Prince necessity for national honor. French minister received conviction that we were ably protecting life and property and assured would be confined to legation and that arms of French guard would be carried by them outside of legation. He further stated that he wished stood he does not intend interfering in any way my actions in town.

Mr. ANGELL. That is the answer. I had not seen that before.

Admiral CAPEBTON. That is already in my evidence, I think; I am I quoted it.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you think, Admiral, that there was on the part of the in Haiti, or the British official representatives, any fear of the Germans the island as a base for operations against them in the war which almost a year old, or using the island as a base for propaganda?

Admiral CAPEBTON. Well, I can hardly answer that. On one occasion I was in Mexico—off Vera Cruz, Mexico—we heard something about a ruhe, I think it was, one of those German ships having entered the S. Mole at one time, which I investigated but never could find out the name about it, or whether she was really there or not. Some vessel went never could find out what nationality she was.

Mr. ANGELL. Well, during your 15 or 18 months in Haitian waters in the course of conversations with individuals or by reports which come to you, learn anything which would have given you grounds to think that the French or British had any such fears regarding the use of of Haiti by the Germans?

Admiral CAPEBTON. Well, the commanding officer of the French ship there always kept very close guard and watch in port; that is to say, out his orders and regulations in regard to protecting himself from the side, as we did not know—at least, he said he did not know—what the Germans might appear, but I had no discussion with him at all because busy.

This will repeat my evidence given before, but I find that on the 27th the department informed me as follows:

"23327. State Department desires that American forces be landed at Port au Prince and that American and foreign interests be protected; that natives England, France, be informed this intention; informed that their interests will be protected and that they be requested not land."

As I have stated before, after my arrival an hour or two after the French minister, the British chargé d'affaires, accompanied by the British d'affaires, Mr. Davis, came off to the ship with some of my staff who sent on shore to find out the latest information and condition of affairs. Both the French and the British representatives requested me and please me earnestly to land forces and to do it as quickly as possible, as the idea as to what might or what might not happen on shore. This was very busy.

Mr. ANGELL. At Port au Prince?

Admiral CAPEBTON. At Port au Prince, immediately after my arrival on the flagship, the Washington.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, to come to one or two points in connection with the order of President Sam and the events of the landing, did you hear of any foreigners, including Americans, who were at that time molested or threatened by the disturbing element in Port au Prince?

Admiral CAPEBTON. When I landed I took possession of the city between the hours of 5 and 10 at night, when everything was settled. I had given the commanding officer, as he passed the various foreign legations, to see if they needed any guard, and, as I recall it now, many or all of them asked for the guard. I even gave a small guard to the German minister. When being asked whether he wished them, replied that he would like to have them and they remained there, as I recall it now, for several days.

Mr. ANGELL. When your forces landed did you hear of any actual molestation prior to the landing when foreigners had been molested or harmed?

No; things were in such a chaotic condition that I did not know if they had been hurt or murdered, and I did not know whether or not.

Do you receive any reports, voluntarily given you, of foreigners molested?

No; I do not think I did.

Did your representatives, of course, conferred with the British chargé d'affaires and others, as you have said?

Every day.

The French diplomatic officials at Port au Prince report to you that they had been molested in their legation except the Haitian taken out?

Not as far as I remember now, there was no one else.

As far as you can now remember, you received no reports at Port au Prince of foreigners having been actually molested or harmed during the time of your landing?

No; I do not recall any.

Do you remember receiving any reports of the harming of foreigners, including Americans, at any time immediately following your landing, other than the casualties to the French?

No; under my orders, they could not very well have been given orders strictly to protect everything in the city and to keep it quiet.

Were there any specific attempts to molest or harm civilian foreigners?

Well, we had several attacks on the city at night. I do not know if the fellows wanted to shoot up. Apparently, they wanted to, but they never told me whether they were after the British or not.

Were there no specific attacks on individual foreigners?

The view that I took of it was that with a mob, with various chiefs around the city, I considered that anybody was in more or less danger, because these fellows were drunk and did pretty much as they pleased about the city; they were not particular.

When you landed had this so-called revolutionary committee, of which you speak, actually been formed?

When my chief of staff landed, as I recall my testimony, at that time he found a committee on shore of three or four. There was one, and I think Delvar was another. There were others. Later there was a committee of six or seven. I do not remember the names you gave?

Whose names I think I gave here.

Did you give those names?

But these fellows, except Mr. Polynice, were all Cacos. Robin was a man, as I afterwards found out, in command of the forces, or the Cacos, in the city. He is one of the big fellows.

Did you find a committee which you found, or your chief of staff found, of this so-called revolutionary committee, and that was the committee of which you speak?

That is the committee that they usually formed every day, at Port au Prince.

This was the committee which a little later Capt. Beach, of the American expedition, dismissed or—

It may not have been this first committee, because they, or either joined in or formed a committee; but it was a committee, and I think all the members who were in this first committee, were also in this final "committee of safety." As I reported to you, three or four, and so reported to me; that there was, I think, Mr. Delvar, and I do not know whether he said that at first meeting or not; but he said he met several of the committee of safety, and it was this committee that he asked for permission to land, seeing that the—

Mr. ANGELL. That is August 3?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; the 28th.

Mr. ANGELL. I was just inquiring about what this committee was.

Admiral CAPERTON. I would like to add that they were about all that had any appearance—

Mr. ANGELL. Of authority or government?

Admiral CAPERTON. Had any appearance of order or authority, and the committee agreed to my landing, but said they would not be responsible for my reception.

Mr. ANGELL. I find in your message of August 3, which is contained in graph 36a of the Barnett report—I do not know the page of the report in the middle of the second paragraph, you say:

“Revolutionary committee at first acted practically under my direction, and now frequently give orders without my knowledge and act more independently.”

I also find a similar message earlier, on July 31, which is paragraph 36b of the Barnett report, the last sentence of which reads:

“All Government functions are at present carried on by a committee which acts practically under my direction.”

The phrase “practically under my direction” appearing in each of these messages, just what did that mean? How were they acting under my direction, sir?

Admiral CAPERTON. They promised that they would not issue any orders or anything contrary to my orders, you might say, or my ideas and wishes in the matter. In other words, they promised to cooperate with me in everything.

Mr. ANGELL. So that you had, pursuant to instructions from Washington, assumed both military and to a certain extent political control of the Port au Prince?

Admiral CAPERTON. I did, because there was no political head, and the only people who apparently were trying to keep peace.

Mr. ANGELL. Was there a Congress in session at the time you landed?

Admiral CAPERTON. Oh, no.

Mr. ANGELL. Congress was not in session?

Admiral CAPERTON. Not in session; no, because a few days afterwards.

Mr. ANGELL (Interposing). When did the Congress meet, do you remember how soon after the murder of Sam and your landing?

Admiral CAPERTON. I think I have the exact date here, but I think it was several days, about the 5th, 6th, or 7th, because the permanent committee had the authority and power to call Congress together under such circumstances, but they were unable to get a quorum, so that Mr. Guillaume Sam had to wait several days in the city before he was elected President, and it is usually done in a few hours if they can get a quorum of the Congress together.

Mr. ANGELL. Well, in the Navy Department file there is a message from Admiral Caperton to the Secretary of the Navy on July 31, the end of the message reads: “Chamber Deputies asked permission to elect President in compliance with my request.” That would seem to indicate that a number of Deputies were in session at that time or had convened.

Admiral CAPERTON. Well, as I recall it now, they were trying to meet, they wanted to elect the new President, and, as far as I could find out, the reason why they did not meet, which I have stated in here, was because they could not get a quorum. I knew that that was no time to have a meeting on the 31st, because things were so unsettled, and I dare say that if they had been able to have gotten a quorum—I do not know, but it appears to me that I would have requested them to wait a day or two, so that things could have settled down a little bit and so that I would have a better grasp of the situation. I was able to protect foreign interests in case they had an outbreak in connection with the elections as I have been told it was their custom to do when a President was elected, with Cacos all armed all over the city, the galleries full of people with their pistols, and as each representative was called upon to vote, he would cast his eyes around and see everybody had a pistol aimed at him. I do not know what was told to me there by the people throughout the city. I do not know what was told to me there by the people throughout the city. I do not know what was told to me there by the people throughout the city. I do not know what was told to me there by the people throughout the city. I do not know what was told to me there by the people throughout the city.

Mr. ANGELL. Of whom did the chamber of deputies ask permission to elect a President? Your message reads, “Chamber deputies asked permission to elect a President?”

ed in compliance my request." Did they ask you or your ore for permission to elect a President?

I suppose they must have.

Message would so indicate.

I would infer that.

Do not remember the incident specifically?

I do not recall now, but I kept in touch with all these g to get order and to assist them.

Purpose of my question, Admiral, was merely to establish, the approximate date at which you had actually assumed not merely of the military affairs in the city, but of the nts which culminated in the election of the President.

At the time referred to there was nothing, no govern-except these three or four self-constituted "committee of no government, no President.

Do not remember, then, Admiral, when the Congress con-

I have it here.

st have been prior to August 5, because in the long cable wing appears in the beginning of what apparently is the though Congress is in session, it has elective power only.
dent. Upon the election of President Congress acquires l revolutionary committee loses all authority." So that t of fact, which was undoubtedly an accurate statement situation. That is August 3. Then, Admiral, so far as s indicated by this message of August 3, Congress was in

On the 29th of July I have this note:

Business, however, exists throughout city. Both houses lay. An effort is being made to elect a President. The and although a government may be established in form, esent in sight sufficiently stropg candidates to alleviate ong the populace and to insure prevention from further ing candidates here at present appear to be Bobo and 9th of July.

y here that in my previous answer in regard to there not Congress, I was then referring to the previous President, entered the city about the 22d or 23d of February, and I recall it now, until a week afterwards anyway, for the the congress.

coming down, Admiral, to the 5th of August when you etary of the Navy that the Haitian Congress had issued e Sunday following they would elect a President, but at d postponed the election, how, if you remember, was that nnunicated to Congress?

I am quite sure through my chief of staff, and probably d'affaires, perhaps. I am not sure whether he went partment, but I imagine he did.

was the usual procedure in your diplomatic negotiations
; that is, did Capt. Beach go direct to the leaders of the e entirely through the chargé d'affaires?

I always cooperated very closely with the chargé d'affaires.
order and custom.

What form did that cooperation take?

Consultation. I do not remember a special case.

Do you remember whether Capt. Beach went direct, for example, two Houses?

You mean on this occasion?

Is or similar occasions.

That I can not recall now, but Capt. Beach will be able s procedure on shore.

g now to the 9th of August, when the Acting Secretary of Admiral Benson, sent the message to you, you remember, ians wish, you may permit the election of a President to tion of Dartiguenave is preferred by the United States."

Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you communicate to the leaders of the two H. statement, or the substance of it, to the effect that the election of Da was preferred by the United States.

Admiral CAPERTON. I did not.

Mr. ANGELL. That was simply information for your guidance?

Admiral CAPERTON. That was information for me and my officers, it was for me really.

Mr. ANGELL. It was not communicated to the leaders in Congress?

Admiral CAPERTON. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. ANGELL. Not to your knowledge?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; I do not think it was.

Mr. ANGELL. Either formally or informally?

Admiral CAPERTON. I think not. Of course, we had met these va didates and had discussions with them, and talks, and found out would do and what they would not do; but, as I stated before here, I know, Mr. Dartiguenave may have thought that he was the favorite in the eyes of the United States, but he was never so informed by my orders. I made up my mind about him from the answers which me in various conferences which my chief of staff and other officer with him on shore.

Mr. ANGELL. What steps, if any, were taken, Admiral, so far as remember, to throw the weight of the United States influence in Port either the influence of the military forces under your command or ence of the chargé d'affaires, to the support of Dartiguenave as a for the presidency?

Admiral CAPERTON. I think it was Mr. Dartiguenave himself. He president of the senate, and he had many friends. He had been pre some time—I do not know for how long, but for quite a little while f and, as I have stated here, he was a man of a good deal of personal and I think he swung these fellows himself. There was certainly n brought to bear on them.

Mr. ANGELL. Well, was the election of Dartiguenave, then, in a s sense, a free election of the candidate popularly desired by the electiv

Admiral CAPERTON. I think it was, perhaps, the only fair and fr that Haiti has ever had, as far as I know, not having read up all the but it was free from all sorts of intimidation, free of Cacos, with t and each man got up and spoke and voted without any fear of any ing him or going to shoot him afterwards, as far as I was able to p My chief of staff, as I said here before, and several of the Marine off reports to me of the election afterwards, and they were present ther what was going on.

Mr. ANGELL. Capt. Beach was present on the floor at the electio not?

Admiral CAPERTON. He was present on the floor; and perhaps you the day I recited the speeches they made and the little incidents that The President, when elected, came down from the speaker's stand hands with Capt. Beach, and it was absolutely an orderly election. one gun was fired, as far as reported to me; and on previous occas was nothing but shooting over the whole town.

Mr. ANGELL. And such American influence as there was—military matic—in Port au Prince was not thrown in favor of or against s candidates?

Admiral CAPERTON. As far as I know, no sir. We had only been ti days, and we would have been pretty good diplomats to have g influence that was required to elect a President.

Mr. ANGELL. Of course, several times, at your request, though, poned the election, so you had acquired that much influence?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; I had many friends in Haiti at that tin met and told on the streets time and time again that it was thei and that they appreciated everything of the kind. They saw wha doing, and it was the first time they had ever been able to walk streets without being in fear of being shot at.

Mr. ANGELL. I do not want to appear to insinuate that you went your diplomacy as to have the electors approached in order to secur tion of the candidate we wanted, but you evidently were a good eno mat to secure the postponement of the election several times?

That was always accomplished, as far as I know, in any way, by requests, and by representing to them that the time the city was still in a state of great unrest, and as soon as they thought that things were quiet enough for them to really elect, I had made all preparations to preserve order and had my forces throughout the city the election was held. My forces did nothing but peace, to protect everybody. All sorts of people went to the election when the election took place, as I have said before, whether senators or deputies, as their friends. They were disallowed to go in. The representatives all wore their commissions.

Did he say something, Admiral, in testifying on Monday last, that he frankly did not get thoroughly at the time, and I want to know undoubtedly is in the record there, but there was some question, if I remember correctly, of getting one senator to come to the election. There was somebody who was absent, away at

No; I never mentioned that, but there was a senator who came down from Cape Haitien, I think. That was for the election of the President or for the ratification of the treaty.

Oh, I think that was it.

That was an incident of bringing down a senator from Cape Haitien along in the ratification of the treaty in October or November.

Yes; but not for the President.

For the President?

You see, at that time I did not know any of the people on that I had met in the few days before the election took place.

Further connection with the election of the President, you see, in the morning, Admiral, there was a question which was put to me by McCormick regarding Dartiguenave's statement that Haiti would give up the whole of the island gladly to any and all terms proposed by the United States in exchange for the cession outright of Mole St. Nicholas, and he asked you, I put in there the message verbatim, as it was, because in the message there was merely a paraphrase of it. Maj. McClellan found

He found it afterwards, and I quoted it and put it in the record, not in this stenographic copy I have.

It is coming, I suppose; it has not been copied yet.

It is to be inserted on page 301 of the typewritten copy.

message, can you tell us why Dartiguenave, ostensibly a man interested in guarding the welfare of Haiti, should have made an offer in advance of his election to cede Mole St. Nicholas to the United States?

No; I do not know what was in his mind to cause him to make the message to which I refer was sent by you on August 7, the day of his statement; that is, some 9 or 10 days after you had

Yes.

There has been any discussion with him, so far as you know, by your representatives, Capt. Beach or others, or by the representatives in Port au Prince, regarding the question

Not by my orders. Capt. Beach, as my representative, or two others, trying to arrange for the election. I knew Mole St. Nicholas was or St. Nicholas Mole, but I knew nothing about or gave no word to Mr. Dartiguenave that we wanted that or would want him elected. I do not know what these officers said to Mr. Dartiguenave. I had several formal and informal meetings with Mr. Dartiguenave with all the other candidates that we heard proposed. As one of them we would try to find out what kind of a fellow he was and whether he was to be trusted or depended upon; whether he was a good man or we inquired about Mr. Dartiguenave we always heard of him. He had been distributing the spoils, you might say.

I believe that was the way it was done in Haiti. The President of the Republic dealt out the money—I do not know where they got it—or the funds as they say, and I have heard it said by many, and by prominent men, although Dartiguenave had been doing this according to the custom of the country, not believe Mr. Dartiguenave had ever accepted a cent in that way—that channel, and so, of course, I had a high regard for Senator Dartiguenave at that time. But as to why he made this remark and whether there was any pressure, you might say, brought on him to make this remark, I am not sure. There was nothing, to my knowledge.

During this time, it is but fair to say, that I did not know everything the State Department was doing through the chargé d'affaires. I was working very closely together, but I did not know that I ever told anything that I did and I do not believe that he told me everything he did.

Mr. ANGELL. There was no treaty or draft of a treaty, of course, at that time. To anyone at this time, prior to the election, was there?

Admiral CAPERTON. No. I had never seen one.

Mr. ANGELL. The first draft of a treaty submitted to the Haitians was the arrival, so far as you know, was that draft which the State Department submitted to Davis, by telegraphic message sent through you, to submit on August 14.

Admiral CAPERTON. I have already so stated in my evidence here that I am going to do it.

Maj. McCLELLAN. You did on the 14th, and the whole thing is in the record there.

Mr. ANGELL. That is included in the testimony of yesterday.

Admiral CAPERTON. It was; so it was.

Mr. ANGELL. And the suggestions and corrections for the draft of the testimony of yesterday.

Admiral CAPERTON. That is in my testimony of yesterday.

(Whereupon, at 12 o'clock m., a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the adjournment of the recess, Senator Oddie presiding.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring, Admiral, to the message of August 14 from the President of the Republic, directed through you to the legation at Port au Prince, which was received, as appears on page 306 of the typewritten report of the hearing, more than a year the Haitian Government has been familiar with the terms of the treaty contained in department's instructions of July 1, 1914. I ask you whether you were or are now familiar with the terms of the treaty as contained in the department's instructions of July, 1914?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; I am not familiar with it.

Mr. ANGELL. You do not know whether or not the terms of the treaty, or the department's instructions, as referred to in this message, have any reference to Mole St. Nicholas's session?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; I do not. That was a year before I went to Haiti.

Mr. ANGELL. In your testimony of this week, Admiral, you referred to the statement on August 9, I believe, to the revolutionary committee that the treasury's services would be restored to the national bank and would be the banking firm of Simmond Freres. I wanted to ask you in connection with that, Admiral, whether the service was restored by you to the National Bank of Haiti?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What steps did you take or have taken to restore the National Bank of Haiti? In other words, how did you accomplish the transfer of the treasury's service from Simmond Freres to the National Bank of Haiti? What I wanted to bring out, Admiral, is the general means by which you effected this transfer from one bank to the other.

Admiral CAPERTON. I do not recall at this time. I had a paymaster here who was looking out for the financial arrangements on shore.

Mr. ANGELL. The financial arrangements with regard to the Haitian fund?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; but without finding my notes here, I cannot remember the modus operandi, but, as I recall it, it was done through the office of staff and the paymaster.

Senator ODDIE. I would like to ask a question here, Admiral. Whether the bank of Simmond Freres?

It was reported to me that anybody got money, as I have seen here, who had the power to go and demand it. I mean who controlled the bank itself? What interests itself?

Well, I do not know. It was a private bank, Simmond Freres, two or three brothers of them, I think. You know whether it had any connection with any country and Haiti?

I do not recall that now, sir. It was more of a banking bank, as I understand it.

But in previously in my testimony:

"The treasury service by an arbitrary act was taken from the Haitian Government, the national treasury, by a proclamation of President Lullier to private banking firms, the principal one of which is Simmond Freres is under no control that will safeguard it. They merely make collections of the revenues received, take as their fee, and turn the rest over to whosoever may please or persuasion in the name of the government or revolution. The result is that considerable money is being thus forced out of the country by the so-called revolutionary committee in various ways. It is being used to actively support the revolutionary cause of military necessity, therefore, I this day informed the President, Simmond Freres, and the National Bank of Haiti that the service could be resumed by the National Bank of Haiti. I made a legal and exact contract for the handling of the treasury's service."

Admiral, are we to understand from this testimony that the funds were of the Haitian Government on deposit at Simmond Freres and directly controlled by you and your officers between the time of the landing and the election of the new President?

We seized no money at all, and as far as I remember I was not aware of any fund that was transferred. I do not know whether any funds in the bank or not. I simply ordered the National Bank of Haiti to resume the service for the Government, with the understanding that the funds in future there and not making them with Simmond Freres.

Were there any order, for example, given to Simmond Freres to transfer funds which may have been on deposit there nominally for the Haitian Government except upon your orders or subject to your orders?

No; there were no orders of that kind given at all. I was not to do with the money that Simmond Freres had. I just reported to me that everybody with authority who came to me, or words to that effect.

They were collecting it and paying it out and the different banks, there must have been some funds which were nominally deposited somewhere?

Yes; it was deposited there, I imagine.

Simmond Freres?

With Simmond Freres, yes; but I did not transfer any funds. I just issued an order that day that in the future the funds should be resumed at the other bank, and then if there was any money it would be deposited in the other bank. Of course, at that time I had taken over any of the ports of entry or not.

Speaking now of the point of activities up to the taking of the customhouses?

Yes. Understand, I had my officers detailed to look after the customs on shore. I did not attend to these duties personally; I left them to the officers. I do not recall that it is not quite fresh or clear in my mind as to what the procedure was. I do know that I took no funds out of the credit of the Government.

As far as you remember, Admiral, there was no seizure of the funds of the Haitian Government whatsoever, while the funds were in the hands of Simmond Freres, and the seizure and control of the funds coming in from the ports?

STANDARD LIBRARY

Admiral CAPERTON. Nothing prior to the time when I received deposit whatever was collected (after I had seized or taken possession of ports of entry in my name) in this National Bank of Haiti and its branches.

Mr. ANGELL. What you refer to as the funds collected at the ports is the funds you collected through the customs?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; through the customhouses.

Mr. ANGELL. So that the sole control exercised by you over the matters and funds began with the customs seizure?

Admiral CAPERTON. Began with the taking over of the customs. As a matter of fact, this was done simply to let the National Bank of Haiti (which had a regular contract, by law, or a regular agreement, to look out for the interests of Haiti) receive these funds again and not let them go to an outside party to which they had been transferred, as I said before, by some arbitrary act, not legal at all.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you receive any orders, Admiral, from Washington directing this shift of service from Simmond Freres to the National Bank of Haiti?

Admiral CAPERTON. I must have received such orders or I certainly would not have done so.

Here on the 19th of August I find the following cablegram, which was sent to me. I was directed to take charge of certain customhouses, and then had to spend the money, and all that sort of thing, and to collect the import and export duties, to be immediately deposited by me with the respective branches of the National Bank of Haiti, in a separate account open in my name.

I have either testified to this before or else have it in my notes. When I come to it. I had probably received orders before that time. I had no money in the hands of Simmond Freres. I simply wanted to do it in a manner in which the duties or customs were being deposited at that time to the National Bank of Haiti, which had a lawful contract to handle the duties.

Mr. ANGELL. So far as you remember, were the funds collected in accordance with the issuance of your orders to the National Bank of Haiti and to the branches of Simmond Freres deposited according to your instructions?

Admiral CAPERTON. Do you mean here on the 8th or 9th?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes, sir. In other words, was the service resumed with the National Bank of Haiti?

Admiral CAPERTON. Without refreshing my memory, I am unable to say this; I do not recall.

Mr. ANGELL. At that same time, namely, August 9, you will remember that the Acting Secretary of the Navy sent you a message, to which we have referred here a number of times, regarding the election of the President and the Vice-President. Dartiguenave was favored, and that message went on to say, as is in the record, "You will assure the Haitians that the United States has no other motive than the establishing of a firm and lasting government by the Haitian people, and wishes to assist them now and at all times in the future to maintain both their political independence and territorial integrity unimpaired." The message was, as I read it, an order to you to assure the Haitians of the purposes of the United States?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember, sir, what steps you took to carry out the order to assure the Haitians of these avowed purposes?

Admiral CAPERTON. I think I issued several proclamations there. I do not remember the date?

Mr. ANGELL. August 9, sir.

Admiral CAPERTON. Just taking them as I find them here, here is one from the commanding officer of the Connecticut: "Referring to your proclamation which will be published broadcast in French to-morrow and copy sent to outposts to people leaving town.

"Have received no word yet from revolutionary generals."

That shows the proclamation was there.

Mr. ANGELL. What is the date of that? That is the 8th, is it not?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; that is the 10th, really the 9th, you know. I sent to me on the 9th. Everywhere that I had any ships or any men I issued this proclamation throughout the country, and, as in this instance, it was posted on the outside or near the entrances of the city, so that people leaving the city could see it.

Admiral, referring to your testimony yesterday, on August 14, to your chief of staff, appearing on page 313 of the record of the hearings, in which you say in paragraph 2: "In conjunction with the American chargé d'affaires, carry out and have charge of the important relations with the Haitian side of that is repeated in several other communications of the kind as appears in the following pages of the record, to Capt. Beach, to the chargé d'affaires, etc.

Q. What is the date of that?

A. August 15, immediately following the election, and at the time negotiations were just being put under way. Can you tell us, now, what the respective parts were, played by yourself or by the chargé d'affaires, in the negotiation of this treaty, which culminated in its signing, and the part played by the chargé d'affaires?

A. Well, I do not know everything the chargé d'affaires did, but I know the work I cooperated with him and Capt. Beach. I had Capt. Beach go around to the different Senators around through the town, and talked with them, and discussed it with them to get their views, all of them. I had a talk with every one of them—that is, through Capt. Beach. We worked together in trying to persuade them or to represent the treaty was. The chargé d'affaires, of course, conducted it. I assisted him, and I went so far as to tell Capt. Beach to go to the different Senators and talk to them about it. If I had spoken for the treaty, perhaps, seen some of the Senators and deputies myself. In the record it does not appear, you see, what respective parts your side in Haiti, and what part was played by the American representatives.

A. I had orders to cooperate with the chargé d'affaires and in every way, which I did.

Q. Understand you rightly, then, the chargé d'affaires really was the general directing head of the American side of the treaty. Certainly. He made the reports and conducted the negotiations and had him in every way I could. There is one thing I do not want to bring out; that is, where the radiogram was sent to me to inform him of giving him his power to sign the treaty, etc. He had no cable being out of order, so I received it by radio and testified, Admiral, yesterday, and it has already appeared in the record, that on the 17th of August, Mr. Davis, the American Minister at Port au Prince, delivered to President Dartiguenave a draft of the treaty in a message which passed through you on August 14.

Yes.

Q. You know whether or not the draft of that treaty, as presented to the President, contained any reference to Mole St.

A. Without looking at it I do not remember. It was a long draft and I read it at the time, but now I can not recall it. It was long, and you have a copy of it. You can read it yourself.

Q. This is what I wanted to find out, whether the original draft, delivered by Mr. Davis to President Dartiguenave on August 17 contained any reference to Mole St. Nicholas.

A. Without looking at it, I could not tell.

Q. You testified yesterday, Admiral, that on August 17, 1915, five days after the signing of the treaty by President Dartiguenave, and three days after the receipt by you of the draft of the treaty, that Mr. Davis, the American chargé d'affaires, delivered to President Dartiguenave the draft of a treaty, and you remember whether that draft contained any reference to Mole St. If he delivered the one that I received by radio, if that is the one, which I presume it is, the treaty itself, a copy of which is in the record, show of itself whether there is anything about Mole St. I am sure it is all in the record, and has all been submitted. I do not know how to go to that and get it.

Mr. ANGELL. Pardon me. Perhaps I misunderstand, but what is in the message of yesterday is the message of the 14th, which outlined a treaty message of August 14 directed Mr. Davis to prepare a draft of a treaty on the following basis.

Admiral CAPERTON. That was the message of August 14.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, on August 17, as you testified yesterday, he had at that time evidently made a draft of a treaty and presented to Dartiguenave a draft of a treaty, a complete treaty in other words.

Admiral CAPERTON. That is not in the record of yesterday. In my message I was referring to the message that I received from the Navy Department that is, from the State Department, I think it was, through the Navy Department and through me to Mr. Davis.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, what I am referring to is the actual draft, as presented three days later by Mr. Davis to President Dartiguenave.

Admiral CAPERTON. That I am unable at this time to answer, because I do not recall. No doubt I read the treaty before he presented it, but I do not know whether St. Nicholas Mole was mentioned or not.

Mr. ANGELL. Coming now, sir, to the message of August 19 which was received by you, on the authority of the State Department to seize the 10 major customhouses, you testified yesterday, on page 326 of the typewritten record of the hearings, that you were directed to confer with the American chargé d'affaires for the purpose of having President Dartiguenave solicit the advice of the American chargé d'affaires, namely, the seizure of these customhouses, "but whether the President requested or not, I was directed to carry out the State Department's directions."

Do you remember whether you did confer with the American chargé d'affaires for the purpose of having President Dartiguenave solicit the seizure of the customhouses?

Admiral CAPERTON. Oh, yes; I conferred with him through my chargé d'affaires. Before taking over any customhouses, I always conferred with the President and informed him of what I was going to do, and requested his permission. I never secured an agreement to the matter, and as far as I remember now, he never consented. In each case where a customhouse was taken over, the order to do it was referred to the chargé d'affaires, to have him go to the President first, and in many instances I asked him if he would not aid me in carrying out the seizure by having his customhouse officials present to aid me when taking over.

Mr. ANGELL. When you say "he," you mean the President?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; the President.

Mr. ANGELL. But, so far as you know, he never consented affirmatively to the seizure of any customhouses?

Admiral CAPERTON. Not that I recall now, but I did have some of the officials at different customhouses, several of them, who aided us in carrying out the seizure. If he did not assent, he naturally objected. I do not know what he said at the time, except that it was generally understood that he could not prove it.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember whether or not he made any specific objection?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; I can not recall that now, in the absence of the representatives who personally conferred with him.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember the protest which was published in the Moniteur on September 4, 1915, specifically regarding the seizure of the customhouses at Port au Prince, which was dated September 2? I want to know what is in the record, and I will read you the material portions of it. Admit that it refreshes your recollection on the general attitude of the Government.

"Haitians! At the very moment when the Government, engaged in negotiations to settle the question of the presence of American military forces in Haitian territory, was looking forward to a prompt solution in accordance with law and justice, it finds itself faced with the simple seizure of possessions and the administration of the capital.

"Previously the customhouses of several other cities of the Republic had been occupied in like fashion, and whenever the news of such seizures reached the national palace or the department of finances it was followed by an energetic protest, demanding that the diplomatic representatives of the American Government residing at Port au Prince restore the customhouses and put an end to acts so contrary to the relations at present existing between the Government of Haiti and the Government of the United States of America."

And it goes on to comment on this situation, and is signed by General Dartiguenave.

So far as I recall now, I had no paper written to me concerning, nor do I remember the words of objection that were presented to my representatives but I know there was more or less either from the President himself, or whether from the people.

The protest above quoted is as follows:)

Regarding these facts officially to the attention of the country, we declare further, in the most formal fashion to you and to the world, that the order to carry out these acts so destructive of the rights, and sovereignty of the Haitian people is not due and can be cited against the patriotism, devotion, spirit of courage of those to whom the destinies of the country have been entrusted by the judges of that.

It is the fact that my astonishment is greater because the order had been undertaken in the hope of an agreement upon conditions presented by the American Government itself, after going through the ordinary phases of diplomatic discussion with the enemy on both sides, have now been relieved of the only obstacle which hitherto appeared to stand in their way.

This agonizing situation, more than tragic for every truly patriotic government, which intends to preserve full national sovereignty, to maintain the necessary resolution only if all are united with intelligence and energy with it in the present task of saving

"SUDRE DARTIGUENAVE.

National Palace, September 2, 1915, in the one hundred and twenty-fifth session of the Chamber of Deputies.

For further reference, Admiral, to this question of the customs, and the seizure, and the like, you testified yesterday with regard to that which was being collected at the customhouses as follows—from page 329 of the typewritten record of the hearings: "The funds that were being collected were being used at the disposal of the revolutionary forces, in some instances. There was no

—appreciating the difficulty of remembering things that are so many—can you now remember any specific instances where the funds were being used by the revolutionary forces or bands of

No; I do not know that I can recall any specific instances where the funds were being used by the revolutionary forces or bands of fact—and I am asking this for mere information—that, and as I understand it to be, many of the customs services were specifically pledged to meet the foreign debt or for other services?

Yes; I think that is the case. I do not know about the no particular port or ports in mind, but merely the fact

The money that was collected from customs on indifferently allotted for certain purposes or for certain debts, and as I understand it to be, many of the customs services were specifically pledged to meet the foreign debt or for other services. A certain percentage of it was to pay for one thing, and for another thing.

You remember, Admiral, whether there were any pledges of a specific port for the service of a specific foreign loan?

No; I do not know of that detail.

At the time the customs services were seized by you, pursuant to the request, as contained in the Navy Department's telegram, were you informed officially by the Navy Department, or by the American representatives in Port au Prince, that the customs were being used in some instances, and on some types of exports and imports, for the service of certain foreign loans?

Yes; as I recall it now, the National Bank of Haiti had been looking out for it all along except when the funds were referred to previously. That was their duty. That was a part of their obligation, to devote so much of the money to this, and so much to that.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know whether the seizure of the customs, as by you, contemplated the honoring of these pledges?

Admiral CAPERTON. I do not know about that. I only know what with the money after I collected it; it was paid out in accordance with instructions from the Navy Department.

Mr. ANGELL. You have no idea whether the Navy Department or the Department accepted these customs receipts to be used to carry out the pledges previously made by the Haitian government?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; I do not. I made several recommendations, to pay out this money that was collected, and I know that several hundred thousand dollars were paid out for the interest on the internal bonds. I was particularly interested in that, because it was to me on shore, what the internal bonds were. I was there such a short time, less than a year, after the time I took over the customs; however, I collected a good deal, and, as I remember, when I left there I left a receipt for a half or $2,000,000, something like that, in the Haitian National Bank, which paid out $600,000 or $700,000 for interest on the internal bonds.

I might say that all these details were looked after and handled by my officers whom I detailed for that specific purpose. For instance, the administrator of customs, Capt. Connard, looked out for all of this. I made a study of it, and was constantly in consultation and worked with the Bank of Haiti, and he would come and report to me the results of what he was doing, so that I would know what was going on. He is thoroughly conversant with every step that was taken with regard to the finances of the country from his arrival and after his appointment under me.

Mr. ANGELL. During the period of your assignment to duty in Haiti, the waters, which was up until November, 1916, as I remember—

Admiral CAPERTON. No; until July 18, 1916.

Mr. ANGELL. July 18, 1916, there was no payment made, was there any interest on the foreign debt?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; I think you will find in the records here a frequent mention of this subject, but, as I recall it now, we paid interest on the external or foreign debts.

Mr. ANGELL. There was no direction from Washington to you to pay interest on the foreign debt?

Admiral CAPERTON. Not that I recall now.

Mr. ANGELL. In connection, Admiral, with the negotiation of the financial matters such as the customs control, did Mr. Farnham have any interest in any way in these questions, or did he assist in any of them?

Admiral CAPERTON. I never saw Mr. Farnham. I heard a lot of talk from him, promiscuous talk. I appealed, I presume it was to him, or to the National City Bank, or some one in New York, to try to start up work on the railroad to keep the people from starving, which was outlined in the money, or will be before I finish, but as far as having any interest in him at all, I had none whatever.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember or not whether he was in Haiti in the summer of 1915?

Admiral CAPERTON. I do not recall now; I do not believe he was in Haiti, have been, but I never met him. Of course, there was a great deal of talk about him. The people on shore did not seem to like him; a great deal of talk, not, especially the people who were against the occupation. In that connection, he would frequently bring up his name, but I paid no attention to it, had my own orders and business to attend to.

Mr. ANGELL. Coming back again now to the customs, sir. It is a question, not, that the customs service was the chief source of revenue of the government?

Admiral CAPERTON. Oh yes; as far as I know, it was the only source of revenue.

Mr. ANGELL. There was none or practically no internal-tax revenue?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; they said they collected them, but when I took charge, I could not find any.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring still to the customs seizure, you testified on page 330 of the typewritten record of the hearings, that on August 19, 1916, as it appears here—I think it should be August 19—you sent a message to the Secretary of the Navy, stating that the United States had now tary intervention in the affairs of another nation. Re-message, you testified yesterday, and it appears in the said, "This secrecy extremely important now, pending the secrecy referring to the proposed seizure of the you remember whether secrecy was maintained at that mitted to carry out your own idea of maintaining secrecy? Yes; to a certain extent I was. It came through me, intercepted it was kept more or less secret by me. To the secrecy was maintained.

ed to in this message refers to the secrecy covering the of marines. I think it refers generally to all my activities ended the bringing down of a lot of marines, additional now, looking at it, as I recall it, I meant that my general ept secret, because I was not ready to do much then. If places were taken over one at a time for a while, because o do otherwise. When I took one I had to have a sufficient t myself, to protect the act, and look out for the custom- at was properly protected.

aking over of an individual customhouse was not a matter as it?

Oh, no.

was done entirely openly?

After the act commenced, and, as I have stated before, ne Government of the fact and asked them if they would ing over the archives.

at as soon as you seized an individual customhouse that enerally and broadcast at once?

Oh, yes; as fast as news traveled at that time in Haiti. se I notice that in your testimony yesterday, on page 336 cord of the hearing, you quote a message or note of yours was the date, I believe, that the first of the customhouses t at St. Marc saying, "an unfavorable sentiment has ap- in the form of inflammatory speeches against the customs n occupation in general." That is on August 21, the date er of any of the customhouses.

Then the 21st was the date on which the first one was ooking at my notes?

ing to this statement in there with regard to the unfavor- ring in speeches against the customs control, that would t, that this whole question of customs control was being n agitated, in and out of Congress, even before the customs

In other words, was there any general discussion inside e on the question of the customs control or seizure of the first actual seizure by you on or about the 20th or 21st at the storm broke regarding the seizure of the customs f the seizures?

Not that I recall now.

It would appear that way.

ugust 23 you reported, Admiral, to the Navy Department, on page 338 of the typewritten record of the hearings, in a s, "Treaty negotiations are still unsatisfactory," and that substantially the same or indicating the same idea, appears ssages of this general period. Can you tell us what you ession or expressions as "treaty negotiations are un-

Yes. Of course, I kept track every day of the discussions on in Congress. I knew exactly nearly everything that took was able to tell when they were opposing it violently, or ming around, so to speak. In other words, if the speeches n congress were satisfactory, they were satisfactory; if tory, they were unsatisfactory, favorable to the treaty or ner they were favorable or unfavorable to the acceptance of am trying to ascertain.

One day we would have a senator with us, and then the e against us.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the main ground of such opposition as was it the opposition to the customs control?

Admiral CAPERTON. Oh, the customs control, no doubt, had something to do with it, but I think the whole American occupation. These people were bitterly opposed to it were against the occupation, and many of them do not know what you would call them, Cacos, perhaps; they were very sympathetic with the Cacos.

Mr. ANGELL. The opposition in general was to the principle of the occupation of Haiti?

Admiral CAPERTON. Well, the customs, I suppose, also had something to do with the opposition.

Mr. ANGELL. Including the customs?

Admiral CAPERTON. Yes; otherwise there would have been, as far as I see, no opposition to it at all.

Mr. ANGELL. And those who opposed the acceptance of the stream of American occupation in general were the Cacos?

Admiral CAPERTON. Well, there were some men who opposed it; I like to say they were all Cacos, but they were sympathetic with the occupation at that time. I think what I intend to infer is, that many of the senators, were really Cacos.

Mr. ANGELL. You read into the record yesterday, Admiral—and then on page 347 and following of the typewritten record of the hearing instructions regarding the customs administration.

Admiral CAPERTON. What is the date?

Mr. ANGELL. The particular letter which I have in mind being dated of August, your letter of instructions to the United States forces in the waters, where, under the heading of "Civil administration," it says:

"Detachment commanders will have charge of such other civil affairs as may be assumed within the limits of their respective commands."

Can you tell us what those other civil affairs were intended to be? Was the charge was actually assumed by detachment commanders over the affairs beyond the customs?

Admiral CAPERTON. I have in my previous testimony shown that over the affairs of Haiti I said that the civil affairs would still be run by the Government, and that we would only take charge of the affairs as interfered with my military operations. That, I am sure, is in the record, and was possibly in the proclamation, as I remember in order to my representatives on shore when they took over a place that the civil authorities would not be interfered with except where they interfered or clashed with my military operations.

Mr. ANGELL. The military operations, of course, were regarded as a matter of course in case of any conflict?

Admiral CAPERTON. Those were my operations; yes. When I did as I recall it, I usually informed the Government, or informed them that it was necessary to do that. That was my intention to always do that and I think I did.

Mr. ANGELL. On August 31, as you testified yesterday on page 363 of the typewritten record of the hearings, you sent a message to the Secretary of the Navy, saying: "On the 31st of August there were no encouraging developments in the treaty situation. I have, therefore, decided that, unless otherwise directed, I will occupy and begin administering the customs house at Port au Prince at 10 a. m. on the 2d of September." Was your determination to occupy the customhouse at Port au Prince made with a view to forcing or compelling that act in the general aim of bringing about an acceptance of the treaty?

Admiral CAPERTON. No; I think, as I stated there, whatever the result was there, that the developments were not encouraging for the treaty. I was waiting and waiting to take over this customhouse, because I had some time before to do so, and as the paymaster had only arrived a few days before that, I decided to take it over the next day and not to wait. I think if the conditions under which the treaty was being considered had been taken into consideration I would not have taken over this customhouse. I had wanted to improve the treaty negotiations, because every time I went over a station there was a howl, and I lost a great many senators and representatives. On a round-up they went against me. They said they would now the other way on the treaty.

al, there has already been placed in the record Maj. Mc-n which was submitted back here in August, containing a of course, a great many specific details. In that memo-g on page 67 of the printed record appears your proclamaf September 3, in which in the second paragraph I note vested with the power and responsibility of government branches throughout the territory above described, and tion of such government by martial law will be provided be issued," etc. That proclamation and the language of to be reconcilable, would it, with the previous proclama-endence as ordered from Washington through you?

I do not quite get that.

I remember, sir, the message which has been referred to a y of August 9, in which you were directed by the Secresure the Haitians that the United States wished to assist times in the future to maintain both their political inde-al integrity unimpaired? I was asking you, in a question argumentative, possibly, whether the purposes of that ould be reconciled with the fact of the issuance of the al law and the language of the proclamation?

I think that is answered in the next paragraph, which is reads as follows:

erein proclaimed and the things in that respect so ordered taken to interfere with the proceedings of the constitud Congress of Haiti or with the administration of justice existing therein which do not affect the military operations the Government of the United States of America."

er words, the military operations or the authorities of the be regarded as supreme?

No; I will not say that at all.

s that martial law would not interfere with the proceed-onal Government or Congress or the courts that did not erations of the United States.

That is the theory, I think, of martial law. On page 68
s appears a legal opinion rendered by the judge advocate ith reference to the status of the marines in Haiti, which es of the United States have not displaced the civil gov-established a military government of the United States in engaged, pursuant to law, in lending sufficient aid to the c.

can read it on that page.

inion is based, as I read it, sir, upon the treaty and upon ed States forces in Haiti subsequent to the treaty of Sepreas your proclamation of martial law was made and o effect 13 days before the treaty was signed, so that the dvocate general is hardly in point. It seems to me. That is the record than a question to you, sir, because that is a ion of constitutional and international law. I simply s your opinion there was a conflict between the avowed the political independence and territorial integrity uninpeople and the acts which were taken by you in accordctions received from Washington.

Well, if you will recall my testimony, it was by the ent of Haiti that I declared martial law. I announced I d the approval of the department.

to understand from your answer that you believe there en the announced purpose to take no steps to impair the of Haiti and the steps which were actually taken?

Well, I found it necessary to declare martial law in order along. No one seemed to pay any attention to the laws.
defaming us and me individually, and everything was der to handle matters and keep peace at all I really did support the constitutional government of Haiti.

not asking you personally to defend it, and I am not g it, but I am just trying to get the official view, if I of these acts with our avowed purposes.

Admiral CAPERTON. I informed the department before that I would not unless matters got better, and I had their approval, and I let them know that I would not interfere with their civil government in any way in which they did not affect the military operations or the authorities of the United States.

Mr. ANGELL. In other words, in accordance with the discretion vested in you, or with the instructions, you regarded the step of martial law as an act necessary and proper to assist in the maintenance of political independence of Haiti?

Admiral CAPERTON. And to preserve law and peace; yes; and I was mented by and had the approval of many of the best people in the country. Of course, a great many acts arising from this they disapproved, but the things I did for them they all agreed to. They came to me and said that was the best thing. They could not live there without martial law, and I believe they could exist there without it at the present time.

Mr. ANGELL. You have referred in your testimony, Admiral, and it is in the record in the memorandum prepared by Maj. McClellan, to the law, as proclaimed by you on September 3, 1915, in Port au Prince, with the American forces by President Dart guenave. Can you tell me where, to whom, and under what circumstances that request was made?

Admiral CAPERTON. I can not at the present time. It came to me and I would say very likely it came through my chief of staff. He reported to me. Just how I received the message now I can not recall, but it was reported to me that it came from him, and I reported it to the Secretary of the Navy, and it is a matter of record, and I think it is already entered in my testimony. Intervention was required because there was no existing or prospective authority, either civil or military, to cope with the existing state of affairs. The only possible means of establishing order and bringing peace and order to the mass of the people, martial law was declared. This martial law, in fact, the martial law of the Republic of Haiti put into effect at the request of the President of that Republic and for the preservation of the property of law-abiding Haitians as well as to avoid the necessity of the use of units of the military forces adopting their own means for self-protection for the preservation of order in their immediate vicinity.

(A supplemental statement filed by Rear Admiral William B. Caperton is printed in full, as follows:)

STATEMENT OF REAR ADMIRAL WILLIAM B. CAPERTON

(In accordance with the previous understanding between the committee and Admiral Caperton the following was introduced in written form on September 10, 1921, by Mr. Howe, counsel for the committee, on behalf of Admiral Caperton, as a continuation of his former testimony:)

On September 9 I received the following report from Mr. McLean, American deputy receiver in the Dominican frontier customs service, vouching for its truth: "Town quiet. Minister Leconte will send out a committee to interview Cacos. Following message received this afternoon. Vouching for its truth by Beall, United States deputy receiver of customs, by boat leaving at 8 p. m. September 7: 'Haitian revolutionists are attacking the town of Ouanaminthe. They desire the loyal troops to unite with them to capture and attack the Americans. When the troops at Ouanaminthe begin a siege and then the attack. The revolutionists are being repulsed on this side. The Dominican authorities have taken a stand against the troops, but allow the rebels privileges here. In short, the Haitian revolutionists are being maintained and sustained by the Dominican Government. Prisoners taken by both sides are put to death in most frightful manner. Troops at Ouanaminthe are willing to turn in arms to Americans as long as they can find a way to do so. The revolutionists of Bobo and Thierremont preventing them going to the cape for that purpose.'"

McLean, deputy receiver frontier customs service. 19308. Durell.

On this same date Louis Borno and Paul Salomon were appointed to the posts of foreign affairs and public works, respectively, filling vacancies in those places.

On September 10 I received the following message from Commander F. Carter, commanding officer of the Castine: "Between 300 and 400 men reported to be at Poteau; majority armed with rifles. Reported shore battery. After this salute, in company with my staff, I called on the Haitian President, which I at once reported to the Secretary of the Navy. On this day the treaty was presented to the Chamber of Deputies and was referred to the committee of 11 deputies. This committee consisted of five mulattoes and six blacks, five from North Haiti, two from the West, and four from South Haiti.

On September 17 I called the attention of the department to the fact that since the establishment of martial law conditions at Port au Prince the disturbances have become greatly improved, so that the city is now quiet and well regulated.

It was reported on the 17th that interference with the food supplies by the Cacos continues. The Cacos levied illegal tax on the town and had cut off the town water supply.

On September 18 the President of Haiti and his cabinet called a meeting on board the Washington during the forenoon. Full honors according to regulations were given. The Haitian congress was formally dissolved on the 17th of September on account of its being the end of the session; the President convoked an extraordinary session of both bodies on September 20. I was informed that on the reconvening of congress the Senate would appoint a committee and the deputies would name a committee mentioned above to consider the treaty and make recommendations to their respective bodies. It was understood that after this report for a modus vivendi would be passed. I was informed that the President was confident that there would be no opposition to the ratification of the treaty but desired a full discussion to take place in order that acceptance would be made nearly unanimous.

The report formerly received that the Dominican authorities were aiding the Haitian Cacos to lay siege to the loyal troops at Port au Prince and openly aiding the Cacos was confirmed on September 18 by the receipt of customs at Santo Domingo city.

On September 18 I was informed by Col. Waller of the condition of the loyal forces. He reported that with my approval he would take Major adjutant to Gonaïves on the Osceola on the following day; that the water would be cleared by direction from the chiefs outside Cape Haiti; that water and food supplies were most important for Gonaïves; that the Osceola was involved and that if necessary he would stop at Gonaïves in case of need; he believed pressure necessary on the small bands; that no offensive movement was involved, and that protection of movements at a point where a landing was necessary. I immediately approved this contemplated action of Col. Waller's.

Commander Carter, the commanding officer of the Castine, reported that in the morning of the 18th he sent a working party, accompanied by a detachment of the 1st Marine Regiment, to repair the water main broken by Cacos at the reservoir near Pier 1. The Cacos fired on our men when landing, but were quickly dispersed. On the mountains when we returned fire with machine guns; that the water main was then repaired; that on the afternoon of September 18 the Cacos attempted to force against our outpost at Gonaïves, but retreated to the bushes on the approach of a patrol. It is reported that the Cacos received reinforcements and it is estimated that their force now amounts to 600 men. The landing force is still on shore. Interference with the food supplies continues and is a great hardship on the poor people.

The commanding officer of the Castine earlier in the day reported that a patrol of 8 men and 1 officer encountered 75 armed Cacos outside of Port au Prince at 9 a. m., September 18; that the Cacos attempted to surround the patrol, who then fired a few shots; and that the Cacos returned the fire and withdrew to the bushes. There were no casualties at this time.

I decided to await a report from Col. Waller, who was en route to Port au Prince before taking any active measures at that place which could not be accomplished from the spot under his instructions.

On September 19 the Caco chiefs failed to appear for a conference with Col. Waller, which had previously been requested by them, but instead appeared the commanding officer of the Connecticut, Capt. Durell, stated that they were sending a letter stating their views. On this day the water main at Gonaïves had been repaired by our forces the day before, was again broken by the Cacos.

and it necessary, owing to conditions, to forward the following American chargé d'affaires:

CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES,
Legation, Port au Prince, Haiti.

In order to state that reports from various towns which American officials show a dilatory attitude on the part of some Haitian officials with the American authorities, amounting in some places to a refusal.

In bringing this matter to the attention of the Haitian Government it is necessary that instructions be issued immediately to cooperate with and meet the wishes of the American authorities on official matters under consideration without delay.

It may be necessary for me to take action in order to maintain business and to safeguard the interests of the Haitian people and the cities.

Respectfully,

W. B. CAPERTON,
Read Admiral, United States Navy,
Commanding United States Forces in Haiti and Haitian Waters.

The Navy on September 18 informed me that the State Department information received from the British vice consul at Santo Domingo, indicated need of protection for lives and property at Santo Domingo, and requested me to send a vessel to Santo Domingo under the conditions there. I accordingly directed the Marietta to carry out these duties.

On September 18 I received a report from the American consul, stating that Bobo had sent a cablegram from Santiago de los Caballeros in Cape Haitien urging the Cacos to hold out.

I received the following reply from the American chargé d'affaires of the 19th, relative to the dilatory tactics of the Haitian towns:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
September 20, 1915.

I am inclosing a copy of the treaty. As you will notice, the text is somewhat rough, but I suppose this will serve as well for your purpose.

Your letter received this morning with regard to lack of cooperation of Government officials in the different ports, I have brought the matter to the attention of the minister of foreign relations, and he assures me that the action requested be at once had.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

R. B. DAVIS,
Chargé d'Affaires ad interim

Col. Waller from his reconnaissance and inspection trip having received his report I made the following report to the Navy, describing the situation on September 21:

On Monday from reconnaissance and inspections trip to Santo Domingo and consulted with Caco chiefs in north, explained the situation in regard to Haiti. Cacos found to be interested in the situation, but opposed Dartiguenave government. They were willing to open railroad from Cape Haitien to Grand Riviere to Santo Domingo, but were opposed to departure of train. They had three squads marines, two machine guns, and wrecking equipment. They opened railroad to Grand Riviere without difficulty. Cacos offered no resistance, and finally accepted situation apparently the point train was derailed by Cacos, where two rails had been hidden in grass. Cacos were little threatening the marines taking position to guard men working on track under immediate command of Morenci and Petion. Country around Grand Riviere greatly pleased our action. Condition of the country not to be considered any value as troops; they now live by agriculture and market people. Same class Cacos exist vicinity Gonave, due to excitement created by their proximity. Have directed commanding officer Connecticut keep railroad to Bahon open free access market people and coffee to Cape Haitien. 13421, Cap

Col. Waller brought a report from the north that it is possible would accept the Government's proposition relative to disarmament, it be assured that the money involved would be handled and paid to the Americans. I accordingly sent Col. Waller to see the Government, with the American chargé d'affaires, and come to a definite understanding to this matter. As a result of this conference the Government guarantee payment of 50,000 gourdes to every 1,000 Cacos soldiers who would proceed to Cape Haitien or Gonaives and surrender 1,000 serviceable rifle ammunition to the American officers at those places within a period of beginning the day this notification reached the Cacos chiefs. The Government agreed to deposit to my credit the sum of 100,000 gourdes, and more if necessary for this purpose.

I informed the commanding officers of the Connecticut and Castine that money would be deposited to the credit of the collectors of customs at Cape Haitien and Gonaives; that the disbursement would be controlled and made personally by American officers appointed by them; that no payment would be made unless the Caco chiefs agree in writing that hereafter their men will not oppose the present Government or interfere in any manner whatsoever with commercial, agricultural, or any other industries, and that when they return to their homes and take up peaceful occupations, I directed the commanding officers of the Connecticut and Castine to inform the Caco chiefs of the proclamation of general amnesty made by the President would be in accordance with the United States forces. I then definitely withdrew all pecuniary considerations made by me relative to the surrender of arms and disbanding of the Cacos.

Preparations were made September 20 to open the railroad from Poteau. When the Cacos learned of these preparations they endeavored to destroy the railroad track, and a detachment of marines sent out to the Cacos to desist were fired upon. The fire was returned, the Cacos retreated into the bushes, though sniping from the bushes continued at intervals. The Caco chief was warned on the morning of September 21 not to interfere with the food and water supply. I immediately afterwards gave orders that the railroad be kept open to Ennery and that such steps as necessary be taken to insure the food and water supply for the town and a free entry for coffee, and that tampering with these necessities be permitted.

I was informed about this time that the steamer Fauna, due to leave for the Prince on September 24, had on board unsigned bank notes for the Government to the amount of 500,000 gourdes. In view of our recognition of the Dartigue Government, I, on September 21, requested instructions as to the disposal to be made of these bank notes upon their arrival.

On the 21st Maj. Butler, with a detachment sent out to keep open the railroad, held a parley with Gen. Rameau, who agreed to withdraw his forces from the neighborhood of Gonaives and promised not to interfere with the railroad, water supply or injure the railroad or telegraph lines.

In connection with the expected arrival of the Fauna with unsigned bank notes for the Haitian Government and in reply to my request for instructions, in the premises, I received the following from the Secretary of State:

"15221. State Department has sent full instructions to chargé d'affaires to consult with you. Hold gourdes for present and be guided by State Department wish as expressed in instructions to chargé. Acknowledged. Daniels."

On September 23 I learned that the Cacos at Cape Haitien were holding out for a much greater sum of money than had been promised by the Haitian Government through Charles Lec

On the same date I learned that Rameau was informed that he would be held personally responsible for any further interference with the water and food supplies or the interruption of railroad and telegraph communication or the collection of taxes on coffee or other products. He promised to prevent further interference and to keep his men beyond the railroad.

The Haitian Senate met on this day in closed session and appointing a committee to study the treaty: MM. Fouchard, Martineau, Pouget, Morpeau, Edmond Roumain, St. Lafontant, Beauharnais, and Dr. Jaenty.

On September 24, 1915, I informed the commanding officer of the Connecticut that I desired trains to be sent frequently on the Grande Riviere, and that detachments to remain at Grande Riviere over night occasionally, and at Limonade, Quartier, Morin, Haut de Cap, Plain du Nord, towns. These scouting operations were in no way in the operations, but were necessary to insure the free entry of goods into the town of Cape Haitien, and, in addition, to give knowledge of the surrounding country. On this day the vessel arrived at Port au Prince in the afternoon, having on board 10 men assigned to the Haitian Government. In accordance with the Navy Department, I directed that these bank notes be placed pending disposition in accordance with instructions submitted to the American chargé d'affaires.

To quieting rumors received from Port-de-Paix, I directed the military forces at that place, on September 25, to report how business had been conducted, and directed him to warn the Cacos that the food and natives must cease, authorizing him to do so, but warned him to not fire unless fired upon.

The Caco chief, Morenci, and Petion gave Charles Zamor and his lawyer of attorney to go to Port au Prince to see President Lullier conditions of disarmament, giving them full power to do so and pledged themselves to abide thereby. The commanding officer of the Connecticut informed Morenci and Petion that he would send out no offensive or hostile intent. On the next morning the commanding officer of the Connecticut and the American consul each received warnings not to attempt to patrol the Plain du Nord. The commanding officer of the Connecticut replied that he would continue to patrol but not to attempt to patrol the Plain du Nord.

On the morning of September two patrols, about 40 men each, were sent out, the first to go to the town of Plain du Nord via Haut de Cap and the second to go to Haut du Cap via Petit Anse. The patrols had orders to do no offensive action, but to defend themselves if attacked. The first patrol was ambushed and attacked between Petit Anse and Carrefour. The patrol forded the Haut du Cap River and returned to Cape Haitien. About 4 p. m. with 4 wounded, all horses having been killed. The commanding officer of the Connecticut stated that the work of this patrol was to patrol the Plain du Nord. The patrol met opposition at the Caco outpost, but went on to the Caco outpost. About 8.30 a. m. firing became general near Haut du Cap. The commanding officer of the Connecticut and the American consul each received warnings not to attempt to patrol the Plain du Nord. The commanding officer of the Connecticut replied that he would continue to patrol but not to attempt to patrol the Plain du Nord.

The commanding officer of the Connecticut stated that the work of this patrol was to patrol the Plain du Nord. The patrol met opposition at the Caco outpost, but went on to the Caco outpost. About 8.30 a. m. firing became general near Haut du Cap. The commanding officer of the Connecticut and the American consul each received warnings not to attempt to patrol the Plain du Nord. The commanding officer of the Connecticut replied that he would continue to patrol but not to attempt to patrol the Plain du Nord.

On the morning of September 25 I attended the election of President Lullier, celebrated in honor of the election of President Lullier. Afterwards attended a reception at the palace. This was attended by the American chargé d'affaires, the Cuban chargé d'affaires, the Haitian chargé d'affaires, and the Consul general.

On the morning of September 25 I attended the election of President Lullier, celebrated in honor of the election of President Lullier. Afterwards attended a reception at the palace. This was attended by the American chargé d'affaires, the Cuban chargé d'affaires, the Haitian chargé d'affaires, and the Consul general.

On the morning of September 25 I attended the election of President Lullier, celebrated in honor of the election of President Lullier. Afterwards attended a reception at the palace. This was attended by the American chargé d'affaires, the Cuban chargé d'affaires, the Haitian chargé d'affaires, and the Consul general.

On the morning of September 25 I attended the election of President Lullier, celebrated in honor of the election of President Lullier. Afterwards attended a reception at the palace. This was attended by the American chargé d'affaires, the Cuban chargé d'affaires, the Haitian chargé d'affaires, and the Consul general.

first installment of its own circulation in accordance with its contract required reserve to be set aside from funds in hand. The notes so submitted over to the Haitian Government immediately after ratification of the convention. Rate of exchange of bank circulation being 5 to 1. The of these notes will constitute the loan of $100,000 by bank mentioned in Department dispatches to chargé d'affaires. Bank approved this plan by cabling New York to-morrow for necessary authorization. Bank in conference with Conrad regarding further steps for retirement of Government nickel currency, to be undertaken promptly if above plan is carried out. It is believed that the issue of notes under the conditions stated will be acceptable to the Haitian Government, since it is to the loss of prestige resulting from the depression that they really object. Will also indicate desire of bank to settle settling difficulty and to carry out contract. This matter has not been discussed with Haitian Government, and if plan is approved it is required that chargé d'affaires be authorized by State Department to negotiate in conference with Conrad, as my representative, on that basis. This message was sent without knowledge of chargé d'affaires' dispatch to State Department.

"Ca

The Eagle arrived at Cape Haitien at 9 p. m. the 27th of September. Col. Waller and his staff.

On September 29 I received the following report from Col. Waller Durell, commanding officer of the Connecticut, concerning the agreement made into, and signed between them and the Cacos chiefs at Quartier Morin in accordance with agreement by Haitian president and cabinet, made in an interview with me, agreement approved by you, I have to-day in conference with the Cacos chief, concluded following agreement: Cacos of Haiti will immediately. All arms to be deposited at Quartier Morin as soon as the Cacos chiefs submit to the Government of Haiti, as represented by the president. Cacos delegates will visit Port au Prince, consult with the Government. No money transaction involved now. We stand ready to affirm for the Government made by Leconte of 50,000 gourdes. Nothing asked. Cacos to-day all outposts and guards as evidence of good faith and country traffic. Agree that after this all armed bodies of Cacos shall be disbanded. This agreement effective after to-morrow. We agree to a general amnesty proclamation. No arrests for political offenses since institution of Dartiguenave government. All armed opposition to date of this agreement to be treated as act of bandit. Cacos chief to be the appropriation heretofore made for the army be diverted to public use. Agreed we urge that upon Government. Cacos ask representation in the army, police and civil government. We will see to the first two proposals. Urge upon Government the wisdom of the latter, especially in localities where we asked that the many wounded Cacos be sent in for treatment in hospitals. We will see to pay for treatment. This is voluntary and outside of any agreement. Day after to-morrow I shall visit ——— and chief of the Cacos at Morin. Charles Zamor has been invaluable in all dealings with the Cacos. He lived up to his promise to us. Request that money to be sent at once to the Government to pay the troops. 17029. Waller Durell."

On the 29th I addressed a communication to the American consul at Port au Prince requesting any further information he might have regarding Dr. Rosier and in reply was informed on September 30 that Bobo was still at Port au Prince and under close surveillance.

In view of the fact that the Haitian Government did not wish to enter into any joint agreement with the bank regarding the issue of the 500,000 gourde plan proposed in my radiogram 23525 can not be accepted. I then on September 29 addressed the following message to the Secretary of the Treasury: "As the Haitian Government does not wish to enter into any joint agreement with the bank regarding issue of 500,000 gourdes, no such plan can be carried out. At the same time the Government claims to be seriously embarrassed and is counted definitely on using the bills now withheld by me. Need for funds seems to be real. If the State Department does not intend to provide bills without condition, nor provide loan prior to ratification of the agreement, authorized to furnish Haitian Government such funds as can be secured from the sale of customs receipts? 22229. Caperton."

On October 1, I received a radiogram from the Secretary of the Navy regarding the organization of the Haitian constabulary, which reads as follows: "The Navy is intended to proceed with organizing of Haitian constabulary. A [illegible][illegible]

የገቢት ፊርማ

የግብርና ሚኒስቴር

የገቢት ፊርማ

[illegible]

የገንዘብ ፋይል

so difficult that he and his cabinet will resign rather than attempt to carry the senate under this handicap.

"I fear that I have failed in my previous reports to make perfect clear the existing situation, which is as follows: The vote on ratification of the treaty will take place probably to-morrow, the committee having unanimously recommended ratification. Under the mode of procedure, after ratification by congressmen, the treaty goes before the senate, and there it is referred to a senate committee, who, after considering, submit a report, which is then discussed and distributed, and three days allowed for consideration before discussion on the floor of the senate begins. Therefore ratification can not be expected before the latter part of next week.

"The President and cabinet are using every possible effort to secure ratification and seem confident of securing the same if not embarrassed financially. The Haitian Government realizes that such ratification is absolutely essential for the welfare of Haiti. Opposition in the senate is strong, due to the fact that many senators are unscrupulous politicians or fanatics and wish to embarrass the United States by nonratification or to overthrow the present administration, hoping to secure possible personal gain thereby. Pressure is also being brought to bear by outside interests which desire a continuation of past conditions for reasons of financial gain and which will be glad to see the present administration which is already reorganized and supported by the United States forced to resign.

"It is most important that the present administration remain in power. It is not believed that one more favorable to the United States could be found, and in view of all facts as they appear here that a military government would probably have to be established should this Government fall.

"Inasmuch as it is necessary to secure a treaty ratified before any financial plan can be formulated or permanent peace and prosperity achieved in Haiti it would seem advisable to support and maintain the present administration, which will fall unless the slight financial assistance which is requested is immediately available, and further, the progress made during the last two months will be lost. Although funds collected from customs have been expended for the first three purposes named in the department's instructions as to the use of money collected, not one cent has been turned over to the Haitian Government for living expenses, which expenses have been met out of gourdes then on hand and now expended. In view of the importance and the extreme urgency of the case it is recommended that Admiral Caproni be instructed to turn over needed sums out of customs receipts not needed for the customs service, constabulary, and public works. Request earliest possible decision and reply. Davis."

In a report made to the Secretary of the Navy on October 4, stating the lining total customs receipts in Haiti to September 30, and quoting figures for various public works, etc., I reiterated my concurrence in the recommendation of the American chargé d'affaires, that I be allowed to turn over to the Dartiguenave government such funds from the customs receipts as might be considered necessary for its support, in the financial crisis of the Dartiguenave government, the loss of which to the United States should that government fall, and the inevitable demoralizing effect upon the treaty the failure of that government would have had.

On October 4 the American consul at Santiago de Cuba reported that Rosalvo Bobo had left that place for Guantanamo.

On October 5 Cape Haitien and vicinity was reported as quiet. A report stated that certain minor Cacos chiefs were still collecting food products entering Cape Haitien and that unarmed outposts were maintained outside that town by Morenci. The detachment commander at Cape Haitien and warned Morenci that these outposts must be removed, and that if not removed a patrol would be sent out to arrest the men in charge of the outposts.

I reported to the department that the chamber of deputies met on October 6 to consider the adoption of the treaty and voted to ratify it without amendment, the vote being 75 in favor and 6 against ratification.

On October 7 I informed Col. Waller that the matter of bringing the mission of Cacos chiefs to Port au Prince at that time was left to him to handle. I further informed him that Gen. Christian Fish was still under arrest and incommunicado. On this day the commandant of the naval station at Guantanamo reported that Dr. Rosalvo Bobo arrived at Guantanamo on October 4 and left the same day for Santiago de Cuba; the commandant n consul at Santiago de Cuba of this fact. The mayor received instructions from the secretary of the interior to Bobo and to detail policemen to watch him while there. or, Marpoint, Noel, Etienne, Mehu, and Belleirie, left Cape or Port au Prince via Plaisance on horseback. This com- the Cacos in the negotiations with the Haitien Government. be a member of the chamber of deputies.

tober 8, with his staff, returned to Port au Prince from American consul at Santiago de Cuba reported that Dr. t place for Jamaica on the preceding night.

of Col. Waller he reported north Haiti quiet; that move- Government troops at Ouanaminthe were well under way; ided for feeding and transporting them to homes.

ent disturbances in the north; of the fact that for a num- ber of unrest had been in the vicinity from Cape Haitien order; and of the reports that arms were being received ; and that coffee and other products were being smuggled om Haiti to Santo Domingo, I decided to occupy Fort ninthe. The Eleventh Company of Marines, which were Liberte and Ouanaminthe, was ordered to Ouanaminthe. sent the Fifteenth Company of Marines from Port au te on board the Nashville. The Nashville sailed for Cape erte at 3 p. m. that date.

y message to the department of October 3, in which I al of the request of the American chargé d'affaires of t of the same date that immediate financial assistance Haitien Government, to which message the Secretary of the made the following reply: "23103. Cable has been sent with full instructions. You are authorized to furnish weekly amount necessary to meet current expenses. Use n customs. Question payment back salary will be settled liately after ratification of treaty. Report what weekly necessary under these instructions. What is full amount aid? Acknowledge. 22004. Daniels."

reply to these instructions given me by the Secretary of following radiogram to the department: "Estimates sub- government for expenditures classed as absolutely neces- 0,000 per month. This does not include salaries of Presi- other expenditures of like character. These figures have etail but are difficult to check accurately. It is recom- y allowance of $25,000 be made. This is all that customs or the present, in view of expenditures contemplated for orks, etc. 18309. Caperton."

he 100,000 gourdes deposited to my credit by the Haitian arded by me to the collector of customs at Cape Haitien bursement by American officers to the Cacos for turning ng to the agreement made with them, this money having he collectors of customs at Cape Haitien and Gonaives n October 5 addressed a letter to the National Bank of

OCTOBER 5, 1915.

HAITI,
Prince, Haiti.

are requested to retransfer to the Haitian Government dred thousand (100,000) gourdes, recently deposited by under the heading "Arms and ammunition."

rs,

W. B. CAPERTON,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy.

y had been expended for the purpose intended, as the he loyal Government troops who had been left at Ouana- teen no means available for them to return to their homes steps to relieve them, their situation having been reported to me as most deplorable. On October 4 I ordered the Haitian Nord Alexis to be coaled from the U. S. S. Hector and to proceed to Cape Haitien with orders to report to the senior officer present at that place for the purpose of transporting the loyal Government troops at Ouanaminthe to Port au Prince. The Nord Alexis sailed at 9 a. m. October 4 and arrived at Cape Haitien at 8 a. m. October 5 and reported as directed. On October 6 Col. Waller arrived at Fort Liberte with the loyal Haitian troops, about 370, where they were to embark on the Nord Alexis. In the morning I requested for money for pay due these troops I had on October 6 from the collector of customs at Cape Haitien for payment to them for 60 days pay, 10,000 gourdes, and for rationing them on the Nord Alexis 60 days pay. Before leaving Ouanaminthe for Fort Liberte it had been necessary to equip nearly all of them, as they were ragged and many of them naked. The Alexis with the loyal Haitian troops on board sailed from Fort Liberte on October 9, touched at Cape Haitien, and arrived at Port au Prince on October 10 where they were disembarked and ordered to proceed to their homes near Port au Prince.

During October 11 reports from the north showed that rifles and ammunition were being turned in at various places in the north and that at Ouanaminthe the Cacos were failing to live up to their agreement.

On October 11, in view of the official request of the Haitian Government for information on the following subjects, (a) Are salaries of all customs employees being paid by the United States forces, and if so, have these salaries been increased over the salaries paid them by the Haitian Government and to what extent; and (b) the percentage cost of collecting customs at the different ports, I directed the administrator of customs to furnish the information in the following letter:

No. 11055-15.

OCTOBER

From: Commander Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet,
United States Forces in Haiti and Haitian Waters.

To: Administrator of customs.

Subject: Customs administration.

1. The Haitian Government has officially requested information on the following subjects:

(a) Are salaries of all customs employees being paid by the United States forces, and if so, have these salaries been increased over the salaries paid them by the Haitian Government and to what extent.

(b) The percentage cost of collecting customs duties for the different ports.

2. You will please submit at the earliest practicable date a written report embodying this information for Port au Prince. The reports for Ouanaminthe to be submitted as soon as you can obtain the necessary information.

3. In case the percentage cost can not be furnished at this time, please report of the amounts expended for the collecting of customs at the different ports since they have been under the charge of American officials, together with the total amount collected at such ports.

W. B. C.

On October 12 I received the following message from the Navy Department:

"Report immediately what in your opinion is cause of delay in ratification of this treaty. What steps should be taken to accomplish early ratification. Edge. 21011.

"BENSON,

There is no doubt but that there was active opposition to the ratification of this treaty, and, in addition to the delays caused by the legislative procedure, this opposition endeavored to prevent the treaty from being ratified and employed various means to delay its being acted upon. I believe the Haitian Government was using its utmost endeavor to expedite the ratification of the treaty, and considered that any open interference in its proceedings would be productive of evil results. I informed the department of marine on this subject at 3 a. m. October 12, as follows:

"10001. Cause of delay in ratifying treaty due to legislative procedure and discussion in senate. Considerable opposition in senate due to h motives. Believe opposition can only employ dilatory but can not block ratification, as opposition much weakness vote of deputies. Haitian Government taking all steps ratification and expects favorable senate vote first part of for the present we should only support present Government action. Senate meets Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

"CAPEERTON."

with the department's radiogram No. 10001, regarding the gendarmerie, on October 12. I submitted the following a message to the Secretary of the Navy:

following recommendations regarding constabulary, gend-merie to consist of 1,530 men, officered by 55 marine officers. The gendarmerie will perform the duty of both urban constabulary. (b) There are no arms in Haiti suitable for Annual cost estimated, as follows: Pay, including marine officers as officers, $351,200; clerical force, $9,780; uniforms, and remounts, $22,769; ammunition and target practice, and other expenses, $43,099; total, $478,848.

during the first year on pay rations, and other estimated will cover the necessary appropriations of barracks, and equipment, as the recruiting up to the full strength will take ation provides for two marine officers for each company and be assigned when they are properly instructed in their duties, marine officers to be gradually reduced as the Haitian officers the gendarmerie, as proposed, will be about $40,000 less than 1914-15 for army and police.

recommended for the American officers and gendarmerie is as officers to receive following additional monthly pay: Com- sistant commandant, $200; quartermaster and paymaster, rtermaster and pymaster, $150; directors, $200; inspectors, rs, $150; captain of company, $150; lieutenant of company, rs and men, monthly pay as follows: Captains, $90; lieutenants, $15; sergeants, $20; corporals, $15; privates, $10. ceive ration of 10 cents per day. In addition to pay and ed man will have certain clothing allowances. 14412.

"CAPEERTON."

received the department's authorization to establish a weekly $25,000 to the Haitian Government for the present, which reads authorized to establish weekly allowance of $25,000 for recommended. Acknowledge. 11013.

"DANIELS."

the delegation, composed of Charles Zamor and five others, arrived at Port au Prince.

reported the situation to the Secretary of the Navy as with detachment 50 men returned to Fort Liberte, having Michel to Le Trou to Fort Liberte. Coupe Michel is high and former Caco stronghold. Found no Cacos and met with and destroyed 116 rifles at Terrior Rouge. Caco delegation by Col. Waller was received by President Dartiguenave. Meeting amicable but no definite negotiations entered into. by Senate to report on treaty has expressed desire to negotiations. Cabinet to-day declined to discuss treaty with understood Government will endeavor to force committee date even if report is unfavorable desiring to bring treaty to senate where Government believes ratification will be voted.

"CAPEERTON."

On October 14 the administrator of customs submitted a reply to No. 11055-15, of October 11, 1915, in which I directed him to report on the difference between the salaries of customs employees under United States administration and salaries formerly paid by the Haitian Government and the percentage of cost for collecting customs duties. I transmitted this information to the Haitian Government informally. The administrator's letter follows:

OCTOBER

From: Administrator of Customs.

To: Commander Cruiser Squadron, United States Atlantic Fleet and United States Forces in Haiti and Haitian waters.

Subject: Customs Administration.

Reference: (a) Commander Cruiser Squadron's letter No. 11055-15, of October 11, 1915.

1. The salaries of all employees in the Haitian customhouses and in the United States are paid from custom revenues. While direct comparison between salaries paid by the Haitian Government and salaries paid by the American administration is difficult, the following relative to Port au Prince will be of interest:

	Haitian
Number of employees.....	8
Monthly pay (in gourdes).....	10, 42
(Gourdes calculated at 6.20.).....
Average per employee (in gourdes).....	121. 2

2. It is not believed that figures based on one month, during which the customhouse was in course of development, will be found of much value. So far, however, it would appear that while the total pay under American administration is less, the average per employee is higher, fewer men being employed. It was found that many employees under the Haitian Government received merely nominal pay, their income being increased by fees advanced by merchants dealing with the customhouse. These fees have all been abolished and rates of pay in some cases have been raised to allow a fair wage for the employees concerned.

3. The percentage of cost for collecting duties at Port au Prince for the month of September was 5.1 per cent. This cost, however, included expenses not properly chargeable to capital account, covering repairs and improvements of property.

4. Reports on other ports will be made as soon as practicable.

CHARLES

In connection with conditions in the north, on October 15 I received the following report from Col. Cole:

"Sullivan returned this morning; reports resumption of cultivation all quiet generally; priests Le Trou and Limonade state that people are beginning to return to their homes; roads beyond Limonade generally in better condition than this side, though in wet season in present condition will probably be impassable for motor trucks; believed that if Government will adopt the repair and construction roads immediate improvements in general condition will follow. Campbell returned from Quartier-Morin new route; reports good cultivation and attitude of inhabitants very friendly; have received reports from Grande Riviere that some pillaging and enforced recruitment is going on in vicinity St. Suzanne; am sending Campbell with 62 men and an automobile train to-morrow morning to operate in section around and beyond Grande Riviere. Butler reports all quiet but no rifles turned in Fort Liberte."

On October 15 the report of the board ordered to submit a report on the organization of a constabulary for Haiti was submitted to me.

On October 16 rumors in Port au Prince were rife to the effect that the Government would force action in the Senate on the treaty during the next week, regardless of the report of the committee. No definite information on this subject was obtainable.

received the department's radiogram stating that Capt. E. L. Navy, had been ordered to command the U. S. S. Wash- arrive at Guantanamo, Cuba, October 22, 1915.

The Haitian Senate convened and reelected Steven Archer as its president. No action in regard to the treaty was taken. The matter was referred by vote of 21 to 17 was regarded as showing that the Senate was in favor of the treaty. Mr. Archer was known to be in favor of the treaty. The Secretary of the Navy on October 19 that Col. Cole was unable to visit the Caco chiefs at Fort Capois on account of heavy rains. The report was forwarded to the local chiefs informing the Cacos at Fort Capois that if they remained under arms they would be treated as bandits. The Haitian Government in charge at that place was favorable to America. The Secretary of the Haitian Government and upon the advice of the Haitian Minister of Affairs, I authorized the payment from custom funds of $35,000. to the senators and deputies, amount allotted being $35,000. On October 20 sent a boat expedition to Petit Port Francais, east of Cape Haitien and arrested Mennor, the leader of a band of robbers who had just previously robbed and pillaged at Fort Francais, and sent him to Col. Cole for trial.

Received the following message from the Secretary of the State Department that Governor Monti Cristi, S. D., has advised the Government that armed Haitian discontents crossed frontier and had encounter with frontier guard. Several Dominican Government has ordered authorities capture and intern these discontents on frontier and for authorities to cooperate with military forces. Acknowledge. 13020.

"DANIELS."

Received the following message to the Secretary of the Navy and from Cape Haitian Ouanaminthe, Fort Liberte, continued. The Haitian Government from cruise to Mole St. Nicholas, Port de Paix, having investigated conditions these ports. Situation unchanged. 22220.

"CAPERTON."

Received the following message to the Secretary of the Navy from the Haitian Government. On Friday, at 1 a. m. Friday, at 1 a. m.; known casualties, one Caco chief killed; none of our

"CAPERTON."

Received the following message to the Secretary of the Navy and from the Haitian Government. The Haitian Government received assurances from president of Senate that Senate committee report will be submitted. The Haitian Government while returning from that place, but there was no casualty. The Haitian Government pressed for action by committee. Press and public opinion delay. Inasmuch as I have received continual assurance from the Haitian Government that they have refrained from taking any steps to use force to secure ratification, believing it to best interests of the country that treaty be ratified after full discussion following procedure. 22122.

"CAPERTON."

On October 24 that patrolling in the vicinity of Bahon and being continued. A patrol from Bahon was fired on the while returning from that place, but there was no casualty. He further stated that it was proposed to garrison Le Trou Francais to clear the district in the vicinity of St. Suzanne and then operating in that section. This was reported to the Secretary of the Navy and C. in C.

On October 24 the first company of the Connecticut bluejackets left for Grand Riviere at 4.30 p. m.; second company Connecticut blue been landed at Cape Haitien.

Orders were issued on October 25 by the governor of Monto C. Domingo, that all Haitians be returned immediately to Haiti.

On October 25 I was assured that the Senate committee would submit a report favorable to the treaty, but with interpretations of articles. I was informed that the Senate would vote for the ratification of the treaty without change, regardless of the committee's report. The opinion in Port au Prince seemed to be very much in favor of it at an early date. The press was favorable to ratification, and within a few days posters had been put up in various parts of the city, calling on the Senate for delaying the ratification.

Capt. E. L. Beach, United States Navy, arrived at Port au Prince on October 25, on the Osceola with orders from the Navy Department to return to the Washington.

On October 26 Col. Cole returned from Grande Riviere. The patrol between that point and Bahun were fired on several times, always from hillsides considerable distance. Yesterday much of the firing was from western side of railroad; to-day almost entirely from hill to the east. Practically all firing has been beyond kilometer 30, except night attacks on Grande Riviere. Conditions of unrest reported from time to time, but present nothing to indicate it except in localities reported on heretofore. There is much clearing of ground going on, and yesterday the former governor for Bobo sent his distillery apparatus to his place, about kilometer 15, to resume operations, it having been in store in Cape Haitien for some time for security. Patrol to Milot yesterday and to Quartier-Morin to-day. Conditions normal.

On October 26 I sent the following message to the Secretary of State and C. in C.: "To-day President Dartiguenave again personally assured me that treaty will be ratified and stated that he had fully expected this week, but that in view of more favorable attitude of Senate committee he had considered it wise to wait a little longer before forcing action. He stated that under any circumstances will secure ratification next week."

On October 27 Col. Waller left Port au Prince at 7 a. m. on the Osceola for Cape Haitien.

As I had heard nothing from my radiogram No. 22019 relative to the financial conditions in Haiti I, on October 27, informed the Secretary of State by radio that unless otherwise directed I proposed to allow customs funds in excess of current needs to be used by the National Bank of Haiti for the purchase of New York drafts, thus facilitating shipments of coffee. This would result in transferring part of my credit to New York, subject to the order. This step was necessary in order that funds might be available for moving the coffee crop, and unless this or equivalent steps were taken customs funds, which were kept apart in the bank, would soon be exhausted to the extent that it would seriously disturb economical conditions in Haiti.

"22019. Unless otherwise directed I propose to allow customs funds in excess of current needs to be used by national bank for the purchase of New York drafts, thus facilitating shipments of coffee. This would result in transferring part of my credit to New York subject to 15 days' order. If no such or equivalent steps be taken funds will be hoarded in bank seriously disturbing economic conditions. Request acknowledgment. 23027. Caperton."

On October 19, in order to temporarily relieve the situation in Haiti for foreign exchange, I suggested to the department that New York drafts of the National Bank of Haiti be allowed to deposit $26,000 in the bank and the pay officer of the Washington be authorized to deposit the amount in the bank here, this money to be used by the bank to cash New York drafts, which were then discounted at 2½ per cent. I requested the department to render assistance later by allowing the customs funds, which were segregated and held entirely subject to my orders, to be used for the same purpose. I therefore sent the following message: "After consultation with the syndicate of exchange and later with national bank find that foreign exchange situation likely to become serious. New York drafts now discounted at 2½ per cent. The reason for this is that the demands for foreign drafts experienced this season of year does not exist owing to the probable payment of interest on foreign debt. Coffee exporters for the most part have been compelled this year to sell drafts on New York to realize on the crop."

and I have directed Col. Waller to take active measures to suppress this plan. This plan should be kept secret, as action to be effective must be surprise or bandits will escape to mountains and continue depredations. Caperton."

On October 30, 1915, I was informed by Col. Waller that all reports that there was a gathering of Cacos in the neighborhood of Capois there was much discontent in the north due to the appointment to Dartiguenave government of men formerly affiliated with the V government, and that unless the gathering in the vicinity of Capois broken up that discontent would spread and serious disturbances result. Col. Waller also submitted a general plan of operations against the forces in the vicinity of Fort Capois, which was approved in the following message to him: "For Col. Waller. 21429. Plan. Conduct operations at discretion. 13130. Caperton."

Referring to the sanitary board consisting of Passed Asst. Surgeon and Passed Asst. Surg. P. R. Garrison, appointed by me to make survey of the city of Port au Prince, although their report was but a preliminary report and did not go into details as was contemplated for a final report, it was complete in itself and contained information which would be of great value in planning in the improvement of sanitary conditions. This report was forwarded by me on October 30 to the Secretary of the Navy.

On October 31 Col. Waller reported from Cape Haitien that all preparations for a campaign against the bandits in the Fort Capois district had been completed and that troops would be in position to-morrow evening, weather permitting. He further stated that the general feeling in the north was much improved.

In view of the report that Dr. Rosalvo Bobo was to return to Haiti on October 31 I requested the commandant, Naval Station, Guantanamo to forward the following message to the American consul at Kingston requesting him to investigate this rumor: "Informed Haitian General to return to Haiti from Kingston. Please report if it is true and keep me advised of Bobo's movements. Caperton 20031."

I received the following message from the Navy Department on October 31 concerning the financial situation: "Flag, State Department, informed that the Bank of Haiti can not purchase coffee draft on Paris now discounting at 10 per cent because you have made no remittance of custom receipts pledged to service of foreign loans of 1825, 1896, and 1910. State desires to furnish bank with funds to purchase draft on Paris to enable it to provide confidence to bondholders of foreign debt and to facilitate coffee export and increasing customs receipts. In this connection you are informed that the new constabulary will be commenced immediately modus vivendi is a plan under consideration contemplates annually appropriation above the Provision should be made for appropriation to meet initial expenditures of organization. In view of the above is it possible to pay to bank any part of the now collected by you pledged to service of foreign loans above mentioned without substantially affecting expenditure constabulary, public works, and other out-standings? Tail weekly advances to Haitian Government? 16030. Benson, Acting Secretary."

In reply to this radiogram from the department on November 1 I forwarded the following message to the Secretary of the Navy and C. in C.: "I have recommended in my 23027 is designed to correct high exchange rate and to facilitate movement of coffee. It is possible, advisable to pay bank part of the now collected but impossible to guarantee sufficient funds in excess of what is needed to meet service of foreign loans, if excess funds are transferred to New York for purchase of drafts as I suggested they will be later available for service of the Government. This plan suits bank. Very few transactions in Paris exchange are now being everything financed through New York. Consider this matter urgent. Caperton."

On November 1 I reported the situation to the Secretary of the Navy and C. in C. as follows: "In pursuance plan of action against bandits in the Capois district forces being disposed in north, all Connecticut and one-half company of landing force ashore. No news Bahon and Grande Riviere to-day. chargé d'affaires and Surg. May sailed for New York via steamer Albatross 21001. Caperton."

On November 2 I received reports of skirmishes between our forces and bandits near Le Trou and a report from Col. Waller stating that operations against the bandits in the Fort Capois district had been delayed.

In connection with the financial situation, on November 2 I received the following message from the Navy Department: "Flag. 20101. State Department."

establish satisfactory arrangement to meet Haitian financial needs. New York representative national band. Will inform you of results upon earliest possible date. Acknowledge. 120002.

ing messages to the Secretary of the Navy on November 2, 1902. "Patrol yesterday encountered bandits pillaging the Riviere. Bandits driven off with serious losses. No other news. U. S. S. Patuxent sailed 8 a. m. Tuesday with Sixteenth Regiment for Cape Haitien. 11402. 'Aperton.'" "Caco bandits attacked morning. Six were killed by our forces. No other news. 'Aperton.'" "Patuxent arrived at Cape Haitien and at 8.45 a. m. the 16th of Marines left Cape Haitien in boats for Caracol, en route to conduct operations in the Capois district were again posted. On this date I received the department's radiogram, stating that Bailly-Blanchard had been ordered to resume duties and that he would arrive at Guantanamo about November 9, 1902. I send a vessel to transport him to Port au Prince.

Capt. E. L. Beach, on November 3 I called on the President of Haiti by President Dartiguenave and Minister Borno was explained the department's desire to cultivate friendly relations between the Republic of Haiti and the United States by telling the President the benevolent intentions of the United States in Haiti and to support the Dartiguenave government. I suggested that my friend, Capt. E. L. Beach, United States Navy, and a representative of the United States visit the interior and coast towns, in order to explain this to the Haitian people. This suggestion was enthusiastically received and the necessary cooperation promised.

Now I made a statement to the President of Haiti, substantiating the views of Capt. Beach.

Capt. Edward L. Beach, who is my senior captain, orders to go to Port au Prince with power to get the treaty ratified. Accordingly, he has recent members of the senate treaty committee, as well as influential Haitians, and has earnestly and forcefully explained my reasons why the senate committee should reconsider the treaty determined upon, and should recommend immediate ratification of the treaty as it has passed the House. Capt. Beach is working for this ratification.

I have you, President Dartiguenave, give me the names of the senators whose attitude toward the treaty is doubtful for the purpose of presenting my arguments to them. These arguments are that Dartiguenave needs support and is entitled to the support of the people of Haiti; the salvation of Haiti depends on the immediate ratification of the treaty; that the interests, prosperity, and honor of Haiti depend on the present complete prostration of business, agricultural activities requires it; the deplorable misery of so many people crying for food need it. The only objections are unimportant and abstract principles. These and other details can be explained to the President.

The President prefers no further modifications of the treaty. It desires a settlement of the Haitian question. Failure to ratify will delay the relief of tens of thousands who are crying for food will become more clearly understood that the outside world will not invest in business enterprises in Haiti until Haiti's relations with the United States are settled.

I thoroughly understands these and other reasons of convincing the President. I am glad to have impress on any senators now in opposition to the treaty is in doubt, particularly and always showing why the support of Haiti depends on Haitians supporting Dartiguenave. The support of Haiti are needed for Haiti's regeneration; there is now no opposition to President Dartiguenave, nor for political

Capt. Beach should explain my views where they would help to carry out his measures, and would be glad if the President in me unofficially in ways in which I can help to secure the necessary help create and maintain confidence in the present Haitian government.

Government; and therefore I would like the names of any senators who might possibly influence.

"I desire to inform President Dartiguenave that as soon as the treaty is ratified I wish to institute systematic methods to inform the people of the benevolent, unselfish, and helpful purposes of my Government to them. When conditions are such that I can be spared from Port au Prince to visit different parts of Haiti, either personally or by my representatives, perhaps at times go into the interior. My purpose will be to meet with all classes and to explain to them the friendly intentions of the United States. With this friendship, if there is genuine cooperation on the part of Haiti will be a land free from violence, with President Dartiguenave as the destinies of his country. With the support of his people, justice and prosperity will mark the life in Haiti, the country's fertility and possibilities be developed, there will be plenty of work with good wages for the peasantry, and employment for the abilities and intelligence of all classes. It is easy to see that instead of misery and desolation, instead of knocking at every door, Haiti will be a land of honor, peace, and contentment. Haitians will do this for themselves; the United States will be as an elder brother to help and support. I shall give Capt. Beach an opportunity in spreading this information amongst Haitians.

"I hope that President Dartiguenave will be interested in this plan, that he will designate some official to arrange plans and details of this plan and that he will see that in it there are possibilities for Haiti, and that one of its chief features is to make everywhere a necessity of complete and cordial cooperation by all Haitians for the benefit of President Dartiguenave and his measures.

"Capt. Beach understands thoroughly my policies and is imbued with the spirit of what I wish to accomplish for Haiti and is in complete cooperation with me in working for the good benefit, honor, and peace of Haiti, as well as for the good relations between Haiti and the United States.

The Haitian Senate met on November 4, but the committee ordered on the treaty did not submit its reports, giving as an excuse that the documents had not been prepared. It was expected that this report would be submitted the next day.

Fort Capois was captured on November 5 by a detachment under General Campbell, United States Marine Corps. There were no casualties to our forces. One more company was landed from the Connecticut and another company sent to Grande Riviere. The Connecticut remained ashore in various places 363 men and 15 officers.

The senate committee on November 5 presented its report on the treaty substance, as follows:

Article 1: This article was accepted as being conventional and as a preamble to all treaties.

Article 2: This article is declared unconstitutional because only the president of the Republic can appoint.

Articles 2, 3, 5: Are contrary to the agreement now in force with Haiti. The appointment of a receiver general is a political act of the President of Haiti to the President of the United States, who is responsible for any malfeasance on the part of the receiver. In the event a receiver is proposed.

Article 4: To be cut out and an expert appointed to advise the government on finance.

Article 6: The substance of this article would better be included in the contract as it is proposed to make with a bank.

Article 10: Better to have commission of American instructors, not of the gendarmerie.

Article 11: Accepted.

Article 12: Changed in some unimportant particulars.

Article 13: Republic wishes the United States to loan funds for the improvement of public works. American and Haitian engineers to do the work.

Article 14: Added the word "constitutional."

Articles 15, 16: Accepted.

A new convention (treaty) was recommended.

The Haitian Government claimed to have a majority in the senate and repeated its determination to force ratification of treaty without delay in spite of the adverse report of the committee.

d on November 6 that he would continue clearing the u of bandits, and on the same date I received the follow-
Navy Department:

e received following telegram from minister, San Do-October 30: "Confidential minister of Haiti tells me he g report from Borno: "With the idea of overthrowing ent in Haiti, which he accused of selling itself to the ng himself into our power. Zamor is playing a double he is in favor of the American policy in Haiti and that men in reality he is working for the power and to obtain me. Zamor about 15 days ago sent agents from Port au deputy, to treat with Cacos for the above objects. The g to the American forces at Cape Haitien and are un-have been hidden in Dominican territory near the sible for him to overthrow the Government with the e island, he is plotting to assassinate Dartiguenave. The iti are acting in accordance with certain Dominicans of nce." The Dominican official referred to is Desiderio sell." Acknowledged. 11006. Roosevelt, acting."

d. Waller reported that operations were progressing well its and that the bandits were scarce at present. He also nion the north would be quiet, but that our troops would ys more. He expected to interview several Caco generals rected the commander of the fifth naval district to occupy uin in accordance with orders previously issued. Ensign States Navy, U. S. S. Sacramento, was designated for lector of customs and captain of the port, Aquin.

ted by the Haitian Government to furnish transportation coils from Cape Ha'tien to Port au Prince (Mr. Francois ator to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator er 8 I sent the following orders to the U. S. S. Connecti- will vote on treaty Thursday. Absolutely essential all tification be secured. Haitian Government urgently reis, Cape Ha'tien, who will be elected to fill vacancy, be Direct Hector proceed November 9 to Port au Prince is as soon as he comes aboard. Acknowledge. 221508.

the excellent work performed by the U. S. S. Eagle, under abrey K. Shoup, United States Navy, in Haitian waters, t the following message to the Secretary of the Navy:
Eagle from Haitian waters, squadron commander wishes press to Navy Department his appreciation of efficient officers and crew that vessel while under his command in commends this personnel to department for its most
n. 22008. Caperton."

the financial situation. I received the following message on November 9: "22019. Authority granted pay officer $6,000 with Haitian Bank for use in cashing drafts. This osted to official credit of Paymaster Morris subject to cy shipped by Vulcan for deposit with bank. Acknowl-an."

the treaty ratification I advised the department on Nogly believed treaty would be ratified Thursday, but that the senate were against ratification; that should ratification requires a year's delay before reconsideration of the be by the same senate. There was a strong demand ry from all classes for immediate ratification and no where against it. Tens of thousands were starving and industries demanded ratification. I also informed the would probably cause further outbreaks because of pre-
The Dartiguenave government seemed earnest in work-Haitian people, and I had heard no protests against the except from senators working against the treaty. In requested instructions from the department

STAT OR LIBRARIES

In reply to my message to the department in reference to ratification of the treaty on November 10 I received the following reply from the Secretary of the Navy:

"23109. Arrange with President Dartiguenave that he can meet before the session of senate which will pass upon ratification of the treaty and request that you be permitted to appear before that meeting and make a statement to President and to members of cabinet. On your own part state the following before these officers: 'I have the honor to inform the President of Haiti and the members of his cabinet that I am personally gratified that public sentiment continues favorable to the treaty; that there is a strong demand from all classes for immediate ratification and that the treaty was ratified Thursday. I am sure that you gentlemen will understand my sentiment in this matter, and I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification that my Government has the intention to retain control in Haiti until the end is accomplished, and that it will forthwith proceed to the complete pacification of Haiti so as to insure internal tranquillity necessary to the development of the country and its industry as will afford relief to the populace now unemployed. Meanwhile the present Government will be supported in the effort to secure stable conditions and lasting peace in Haiti, whereas those offering opposition can only expect such treatment as their conduct merits. The United States Government is particularly anxious for immediate ratification by the present senate of this treaty, which was drawn up with the full intention of employing as many Haitians as possible to aid in giving effect to its provisions, so that suffering may be relieved at the earliest possible date. Rumors of bribery to defeat the treaty are rife, but are not believed. However, should they prove true, those who accept or give bribes will be vigorously prosecuted.' It is expected that you will be able to make this sufficiently clear to remove all opposition and to secure immediate ratification. Acknowledge. 22010. Daniels."

On the morning of November 11, in accordance to the above instructions, having asked for and obtained an audience, I appeared before the President and his cabinet and made the following statement:

"I have the honor to inform the President of Haiti and the members of his cabinet that I am personally gratified that public sentiment continues favorable to the treaty; that there is a strong demand from all classes for immediate ratification and for the belief that treaty will be ratified to-day."

"I am sure that you gentlemen will understand my sentiment in this matter, and I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification that my Government has the intention to retain control in Haiti until the desired end is accomplished, and that it will forthwith proceed to the complete pacification of Haiti so as to insure internal tranquillity necessary to such development of the country and its industry as will afford relief to the starving populace now unemployed. Meanwhile the present Government will be supported in the effort to secure stable conditions and lasting peace in Haiti, whereas those offering opposition can only expect such treatment as their conduct merits."

"The United States Government is particularly anxious for immediate ratification by the present senate of this treaty, which was drawn up with the full intention of employing as many Haitians as possible to aid in giving effect to its provisions, so that suffering may be relieved at the earliest possible date."

"Rumors of bribery to defeat the treaty are rife, but are not believed. However, should they prove true, those who accept or give bribes will be vigorously prosecuted."

Minister Bailly-Blanchard arrived at Port au Prince on November 10 a. m.

On November 10 the commander of the expeditionary force at Forts Selon and Berthol had been captured on November 8; that the enemy fired at the sight of our men; and that all the people in the Caco were displaying white flags. He further reported that a band of 150 men were trapped near Grande Riviere and that 2 were killed and 9 wounded. He reported Limonade quiet, and stated that he was satisfied that the enemy was more than an aggregation of ordinary brigands. The remainder of the expeditionary force now expected to start operations to the railroad and toward Renquitte.

The senate met at 10 a. m., November 11, and remained in session until 3 p. m., when it ratified the treaty by a vote of 26 for to 7 against. The session was long, the opposition being led by Senator Pouget. Pouget, at the close of the session, stated that he approved of the treaty in principle the details. It was noticeable that there was a great relief among the people upon the successful outcome of the treaty. I promptly reported the ratification of the treaty on this point.

When I reported the ratification of the treaty I received the following from the Secretary of the Navy, November 12: "22111. Express its gratification at the ratification of the treaty and the able manner in which you have handled this important duty you have shown in directing affairs in Haiti. Acknowledgments."

I made the following report to the Secretary of the Navy: "A military force returned Cape Haitien November 11, having driven the bandits to eastward of Cape Haitien—Bahon to westward at railroad begin to-day and expect to end by November 14. First Lieut. Ostermann slightly wounded in arm between Bahon and Grande Riviere. Secnav. Flag Wyoming."

I reported the following conditions to the Secretary of the Navy: "Quiet and more people going to work on farms near Grande Riviere. Secnav, Washington, and Flag Wyoming. 22013."

I sent the following dispatch to the department: "Mr. Ostermann received to-day formal audience by President and cabinet as minister of the United States to Haiti."

I also sent to the Secretary of the Navy the following report: "President of Haiti, made in reference to the ratification of the treaty. Nov. 15."

Liberty. Equality. Fraternity.

Haiti. Sudre Dartigneuve, President of the Republic.

ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

At the meeting of November 11 the senate of the Republic of Haiti-American convention. This event, the most important in our history, is the foundation of Haiti's independence, of the new era of progress for the nation after the power of the 28th July, which days we can not think of without a er the vote of the convention by its merits and patriotism. We give him legitimate homage to the honorable members of the convention who have shown once more their sense of duty in the face of a bloody grave for this unhappy country. They have come forward to open finally the road of material and through which is always been their object. "Honor, therefore, to the glory of their act for which the magnanimity is only due to have the right to the benediction of our posterity." These pressing circumstances which have made known to the convention with all the unhappy sacrifices which go to atone for the faults and errors of a century. It is not necessary of this, nevertheless, for the safeguard of the future, ourselves during these days were the chaos, the anarchy, of the people resulting from our unscrupulous competition, which disputes with one another for a part in the advance to bring about the sterility of the people at the hopeful moment of the final breaking up of the above into a discussion of facts anterior to the coming of the day that in a moment of our supreme despair the powerful Republic of North America saw our unhappiness, taking pity upon the name of humanity and universal fraternity to offer us aid and of succor. Was it necessary to repulse, even under the name of several people of the same type as many of my predecessors, this friendly aid.

Being persuaded of the loyalty of the Government of the United States, convinced that its people who, by means of their work, have become to become our ideal, desire fully to guide us in the route which civilization has made, we unhappy slaves of false mentality, jealous prejudices, have never tried to find this way for our own I, therefore, have not a second of hesitation.

I wish here to thank cordially my official collaborators whose wisdom, and imperturbable conviction, together with the ardent faith and devotion have been the strong aids to my firm resolution.

You have not been strangers to the struggle brought about by the opinion whereby people opposed to the convention struggled with the Government to prevent its acceptance. We have defended it foot by foot, have guaranteed its various clauses in order to overcome the inertia which lack of reflection and blindness was liable to threaten our sovereignty. And who can affirm but that the formal refusal to accept the convention would have been the destruction of our independence?

It is, therefore, in regard to the acts of brutality which have been for so long a time, and also with the conscientious reflection that your name signed the act of diplomacy which has but recently been signed by your own republic.

If you have seen the executive power marching resolutely to the solution of these troublesome questions, it is because that the power had that your hearts beat in unison with their own, although far away from the chimerical dreams dear to those people who had no common sense and no appreciation of events as they really were.

The people in the future will see that we have done the best thing that we have acted for love of country.

Fellow citizens, by your new contract with true civilization there are agencies of living absolutely free which will appear before you and are the make of you a prosperous, honest, and laborious nation. There is not your satisfaction to anticipate the happy effect of the new state implanted in our midst.

To the populations of the department of the north and the north-west, the Artibonite, who have been the most afflicted by our latest calamities, shown themselves above all courageous and confident, what a joy for them to return to a full existence made possible by the local efforts of the convention which has been so unjustly attacked.

All those who have been longing for such a long time for a definitive union are concerned so that this treaty alone can bring to the country prosperity, and happiness, and they recognize that already there is a future assured them by means of work which incurs agriculture and commerce. This is the end of your desires and has come after dreams of peace after your sad deceptions, the sacrifices of life which have been accepted in the hour of peril to our signification.

Therefore, fellow citizens, let us wish success to ourselves and to the new world of civilization. I repeat that the new era has begun, but your labors demand that you repudiate forever the past shame and the past which has made a blot upon the immortal names of our ancestors.

If the generations which have preceded you are judged by their accumulated crimes you will be more than pardoned if you refuse to do to-day yourselves to the work of the nation's redemption.

Having thought well over this convention and with firm realization of the future, join in crying:

Long live peace and union.

Long live work.

Long live regenerated Haiti.

On November 18 I sent the following report to the Secretary of War describing the capture of Fort Riviere on November 17: "Fort Riviere was captured by forces under Maj. Butler. All avenues of escape had been previously cut so that no Cucos escaped; 51 were killed, including Gen. Joseph B. C. chiefs, and all others captured. No casualties our forces. Attached to the Thirteenth Company Marines, Capt. C. Campbell; marine detachment, Capt. Barker; Fifth Company Marines, Capt. W. W. Low; sent from Connecticut, Lieut. (Junior Grade) S. D. McCaughey, and a detachment from Third Company. Assault made by Fifth Company lasted 10 minutes. Forty-seven rifles, considerable ammunition of masonry and brick of most substantial construction. The fact that this fort was taken without a murmur speaks well for ability and judgment all officers controls continue operations to southward. All other areas in 12018. Caperton."

The department's radiogram 13050, a copy of which follows, and recommendations relative to the claims of the P. C. S. Light Co. at Port au Prince, on the Haitian Government, I, this day, forwarded to the Navy Department information as to his company, and recommended that the loan to the Haitian and a half million dollars, which the State Department has spatches to the legation and of which the Haitian Government, be immediately made after the signing of the modus at the Haitian Government may settle many pressing claims, and is one. I further recommended that the $100,000, promulgation of the treaty in the State Department's cablegram of 12018, be cabled at once. In view of the promises made by the Haitian Government which have not yet been carried out, the fact that the enemies of the treaty are taking advantage of this apparent weakness of the present Haitian Government to its detriment and intend to move to Washington to aid in the fight against the ratification of the treaty by the United States Senate, I consider that American prestige is at stake.

The department's radiogram 13050: "P. C. S. Railroad, Power and Light Co. at Port au Prince prior to American intervention in Haiti had forbidden the Haitian Government that operations have to cease on October 1, 1918, for lack of funds if Government continued not to live up to its obligations toward them. Department now informed that as these companies without funds they will be unable to continue further operations. The Haitian Government has so far continued to operate under direct orders of the United States naval authorities. In view of above companies having no funds, Department to give them preference of speedy consideration of their claims. If arrangements can be made to assure operation of railroad company, comments and recommendations requested. 13015.

In my reply to the department's radiogram forwarded on November 19, commencing middle of August electric light company is being organized. Per month, contract price for light Port au Prince and Cape Haïtien. Railroad has been paid $5,000 and later $2,500 more in order to operate as a military necessity. Haitian Government owes several month arrears. President Staudé states that if amount of $17,000, is not paid the road will be forced into bankruptcy. Haitian Government has this debt but is unable to pay. Owing to peculiarity of the Haitian Government which guarantees annual interest at 6 per cent on amount of $688 I hesitate to recommend further payments of interest. Instead I recommend further that loan to Haitian Government of $100,000 which State Department has mentioned in its dispatch of which the Haitian Government has been informed be made available after signing modus vivendi in order that the Haitian Government settle many pressing claims of which railroads is one. The department's radiogram in State Department September 15 p. m. 12018, be cabled at once. American prestige involved in this matter. 14118.

On November 19, I made a report to the Secretary of the Navy: "Operations against Cacos in Haiti during last three weeks has resulted in dispersing Cacos, their strongholds, destruction quantities arms and ammunition. Peaceful conditions throughout Cacos country. This area includes Cape Haïtien, Dondon, San Raphael, Pignon, Carice, Manamonthé, Mouth of Massacre River, and Cape Haïtien. The area is now peaceful, is now peaceful, and is now busy with their crops. Our patrols are also at present active through Ennery, St. Michel, Marmalade, Plaisance, and de Paix for distance of 8 miles to southward and from St. Donite Valley. These areas are quiet. This last movement of Cacos appears to have been of revolutionary nature against present government as well as brigandage. While petty brigandage will continue to time; yet it is hoped no more such organized brigandage or revolutionary activity will occur. Our casualties to date in this campaign one of one man wounded. Secnav, Washington, and Flag, Wyoming. 14418. Caperton."

On November 19 I received the following radiogram from the Secretary of the Navy referring to the capture of Fort Riviere: "12018. Department appreciates excellent work done and gallantry displayed. In view of help to Haitians in recent engagement department desires our offensive be continued in order to prevent further loss of life. Acknowledge. 32018. Daniels."

In reply to this message on November 19, I sent the following dispatch to the Secretary of the Navy: "22018. Department understands that present situation in north Haiti is now under way by American forces and that hostile operations of the bandits may unavoidably occur from time to time, resulting in loss of life. Operations being conducted are purely of defensive character for the maintenance of law and order, suppression of revolutionary activity against the Government and military intimidation of people, and for protection of property of the innocent farmers and tradesmen, who form by far the majority of the population in these districts. The Cacos, against whom operations are undertaken, are bandits pure and simple, owing no allegiance to the Government or any political faction, but organized under petty chiefs for the purpose of stirring up strife against Government and robbing, pillaging, and murdering innocent people. The suppression of this brigandage and these actions are absolutely essential to peace and security in Haiti. It will be remembered that there is no Government authority in these areas at present, and that when the disbanded Haitian Army, heretofore the only means of protection for the inhabitants. The operations now undertaken should continue until the brigandage is suppressed or the constabulary is ready to relieve our forces. In undertaking this intervention any diminution in the protection and services rendered the Government and people of Haiti by the United States will be a harm to our prestige. Our action is approved by Haitian Government. It is absolutely necessary that our present movement continue to southward, to Hinche at least, where arms and ammunition have been collected for our forces in accordance with agreement of Quartier Morin, and if we do not occupy it will therefore form base for further revolutions. If there is some slight opposition may be encountered at Hinche, although we are confident there will be none. Unless otherwise directed will continue this movement. Secnav, Washington, and Flag, Wyoming. 16119. Caperton."

Referring to the financial condition, on November 19 I received the following message from the Secretary of the Navy: "After setting aside sufficient of the revenue coming into your hands for support of Dartigueave government, for public works, and for constabulary, you may, upon request of Haitian Government, apply remainder of revenue collected by you, for purpose of and in accordance with pledges thereof, which have been heretofore made or given by Haitian Government. Acknowledge. 18018. Daniels."

In connection with this message from the department and also under reference to 14118 of November 18, I sent the following dispatch to the Secretary of the Navy: "18018 and my 14118. Strongly recommend that distribution of revenue in accordance with past pledges be not attempted, for following reasons: Current receipts much too small to satisfy arrears of creditors extending over many months. Computation complicated owing to retention of sums for purposes mentioned by you, and results obtained will be difficult to maintain. Treaty provides different and better method of handling revenues, so it is unwise now to revert to old system. The immediate loan of sufficient money to discharge all obligations and subsequent organizations of debt as provided in the treaty considered the only satisfactory method to follow. 18019. Caperton."

On November 20 information continued to be received from reliable sources that active aid was being sent to the Cacos from the Dominican Republic. The latest reports stated that Dominican police were aiding the Cacos against the rebels; that the governor of Monte Cristi was entirely failing to take the necessary steps to prevent this; that there were many Haitians on the Dominican frontier of the border; that there was considerable agitation going on in the Dominican Republic; that the American chief of the Dominican frontier guard was receiving numerous reports to the governor of Monte Cristi, who made no effort to do anything in the matter; that notorious Haitian bandits were operating in the Dominican Republic, notably one Hara and Hose Rinto; and that officials in power to prevent the American chief of the frontier with our troops on the Haitian side.

I received the following message from the Secretary of the recent military operations: "16119. Department strongly per. Haitians killed. Department feels that a severe at Cacos and believed that a proper patrol can be maintained and protect innocent persons without further offensive measures prove inadequate, inform department before could lead to loss of life on either side, except in case Acknowledge. 14020. Daniels." I immediately transmits to Cols. Waller and Cole, who in turn issued the all organizations to the effect that all operations must be pending further instructions.

Following inquiry from the Secretary of the Navy: "12018. taken at Fort Riviera? 10019. Daniels." I replied as 22, 1915: "10019. Later reports from north Haiti ind-Riviere was rushed by Fifth Company Marines 29 Cacos élée. Many jumped over the parapet and attempted to be attacked by remaining companies and 22 were killed. y escaped. My radiogram 12018 was in error relative t Riviere; none were captured there; 42 prisoners were elsewhere. 14322. Caperton."

On 22 I reported to the department the action taken s's instructions to suspend active operations against the 4020. All operations except protective patrolling have actions have been given that loss of life both sides be 4122. Caperton."

As smuggling along the coast, which had been brought to, on 24 I issued special orders to naval vessels and re to begin operations against smuggling at once, and to es to the nearest provost court for adjudication.

Statement of President Staude that his railroad would be forced interest on the bonds, amounting to $48,000 was not paid, at the following recommendation to the Secretary of the 14118. In view of statement of President Staude that his ed into bankruptcy if interest on bonds, amounting to December 1, it is recommended that stay of proceedings City Bank, chief bondholder, or money furnished to tide an Government acknowledges indebtedness to various cor- y Staude considerably exceeding sum stated, but can not ruptcy proceedings which might be ascribed partly to deemed inadvisable at this time irrespective of actual s quo of this and all other concession holders should be settlement of differences by commission under terms of ment and information action taken requested. 22324.

Dessource, minister of war, was dismissed from the cabinet. This was done on account of Dessource's grafting. This to the Secretary of the Navy.

at Dartiguenave called at the French legation and formally ion of that legation on July 28, 1915. The Haitian shore of 21 guns to the French flag. This salute was returned ench cruiser Dacartes, with the Haitian flag at the main. e Dacartes got under way and stood to sea. These facts ecretary of the Navy.

days the American minister and I had been in daily con- an Government relative to the modus vivendi.

On 29, the modus vivendi embodying the exact terms of the Mr. Bailly-Blanchard and Mr. Louis Borno, plenipoten- States and Haiti, respectively. This now put the treaty , and I therefore immediately recommended the following by the President of the United States in accordance with r to act in a pro tem capacity pending the arrival of the Financial adviser, Capt. E. L. Beach, United States . Paymaster Charles Conard, United States Navy; senior instabulary, Col. L. W. T. Waller, Marine Corps; engineer-for public improvement, Lieut. E. G. Oberlin, United States Navy; sanitation, Passed Asst. Surg. P. E. Garrison, United States Navy.

This would continue the work heretofore done by the same officers. They have been doing it, with the exception of Capt. Beach and Lieut. Oberlin. Special duties had theretofore been done by Paymaster Conard and the improvement duties had been done by the marines under Col. Wall. I informed these nominations would be acceptable to the Haitian Government. I reported these facts and made these recommendations to the Secretary of the Navy and the commander in chief at 6.30 p. m. November 29.

On November 28 I received the following message from the Secretary of the Navy, which is self-explanatory:

"Loan of $1,500,000 can not be arranged until after arrival of the Haitian Government and settlement of difficulties with bank. Advance of $100,000 upon ratification of treaty proposed to furnish funds for current expenses in the place of the gourdes held by you, but Haitian Government declined offer and desired that conditions of affairs with National Bank of Haiti remain the same. Weekly payments of 25,000 was authorized in lieu of this advance and was intended to supersede it. If, however, Haitian authorities consider 100,000 due upon ratification of treaty, the amount may, to maintain prestige, be paid from funds in your hands, provided such advance from this source is agreeable to Haitian Government. Owing to strained relations understood to exist between National City Bank and Central Railroad of Haiti it is not desired to attempt to make arrangements for staying of the loan unless it is absolutely necessary. Central Railroad informs State Department that Haitian Government has requested you to pay $48,000 to railroad. Can you not do this under authority granted in 18018? It would seem that the loan would be protected in such payment made at request and with the approval of the Haitian Government. Desirability of plan suggested by you appears to be that delay in getting loan can not be avoided and prompt compromise is necessary. To place entire responsibility on Haitian Government and to follow the following procedure: If it requests that payment be made to prepare signature of proper officials acknowledge receipt from you of $48,000, receipt from you for your signature acknowledging receipt from Haitian Government of $48,000, to be paid over to the Central Railroad of Haiti in accordance with request of Haitian Government. If you will direct paymaster New York to make payment to New York representative upon notice from you that $48,000 of Haitian funds has been turned over to Paymaster Morris, to be taken up under general account of advance and used for offsetting payment. Above sent after consultation State Department conforms in views expressed in its cable of November 23 to American Legation. Acknowledge. 14027.

"VICTOR

On November 29 the department again sent me a message containing the foregoing, as follows:

"Very urgent department's 14027 should be settled by November 29. Expedite action. Acknowledge. 11029.

"ROOSEVELT

In reply to these messages on November 29 I reported the following taken, my report reading as follows:

"14027 and 11029. One hundred thousand dollars were transferred to the Haitian Government to-day from funds in hand. Haitian Government requested $48,000 to pay Central Railroad and amount will be turned over to Paymaster Morris to-morrow. Immediately thereafter purchasing agent New York will be notified that he may make payment to New York representative of railroad. Regarding loan of one and a half million dollars the Government fully expects to receive this amount immediately, as Secretary of State's dispatches have indicated that temporary loan would be arranged immediately after signing of treaty and modus vivendi. Earnestly trust that such temporary loan be made as soon as commission suits the negotiations in Washington, to be afterwards included in final settlement of all outstanding obligations. 23129.

sent the following dispatch to the Secretary of the Navy:
 ent has officially recognized Dartiguenave. British charg  ctions to recognize Dartiguenave government. Sec. Nav.
Wyoming. 231529.

"CAPERTON."

n accordance with my report to the Secretary of the Navy sent the following instructions to the Navy pay office,

e, New York:

he Navy Department, pay immediately to Central Railroad Street, $48,000. Same amount has been deposited with der general account of advances. Acknowledge. 15030.

"CAPERTON."

ent the following dispatch to the Secretary of the Navy:

l from Port au Prince to rejoin battleship squadron noon nder cruiser squadron takes this occasion to express his ellent service and support rendered by the commanding rew of Connecticut to the cruiser squadron and marines last four months in Haiti. He regrets that the lack of e cruiser squadron forced the temporary withdrawal of a most important war-training duties with the battleship

"CAPERTON."

received reports from the north to the effect that condiiaphael and Dondon were excellent; that the priests had absolutely quiet. There were many men at work clearing district recently infested with outlaws. Patrols from monale, Fort Liberte to Perches, and from Ouanaminthe to rth report all quiet. There was considerable cleaning of tion of work between Perches and Terrier Rouge.

e Haitian treaty commission to consult with the State Dethe details and operations of the treaty was announced as Menos, Haitian minister at Washington, president; August tor of finance, Port au Prince; and Pierre Hudicourt, lawy to second peace conference at The Hague, as members;
 chief of bureau of ministry of foreign affairs, and Edgard he ministry of finance, secretaries. I reported the sailing o the United States on December 6 to the Secretary of the

p. m., Monday, from Port au Prince for Annapolis, Md., men of Haitian treaty commission: Pierre Hudicourt and nbers, and Edgar Larouche, secretary. Recommend reprertment, who speaks French, meet commission upon arrival accommodations Annapolis and Washington and special polis to Washington be arranged. Request Prairie be in-made in advance arrival Sec. Nav., Washington, and flag

"CAPERTON."

r 6 in further connection with the Haitian treaty commission to the Secretary of the Navy:

now sailed for United States. Urgently recommend loan e immediately, as previously recommended in my 231229.
 has inherited months of unpaid debt and has incurred
 g country to realize necessity of ratifying treaty. Salaries, s amounting to $500,000 must be paid before December 20.
 nt prestige will be lost amongst Haitians and serious condixpect part of cabinet will resign unless Government can by this date. Settlement of existing problem will be de-United States impeded under present conditions. Believe immediate favorable action on this recommendation vital and 22206.

"C.

In reply to my recommendation relative to a loan to the Haitian Government made on December 6, the Secretary of the Navy on December 8 sent the following:

"22206 and 231229. In view of article 1, section 9, paragraph 8 of the constitution, officers nominated in your 18329 can not be appointed by me until special authority obtained from Congress, which may take place. Treaty negotiations did not provide for arranging for loan until a commission of commission in Washington, D. C., and there are certain matters which will be adjusted by commission. State Department averse to loan being made without assurance it will be properly disbursed. Can you assure disbursement made under supervision naval officer pending appointment by President? provided in modus vivendi? Loan negotiations will be expedited as soon as a commission subject to foregoing. For information, State Department by radio statement from occupation to November 30, showing total amount collected from each general source, total payment received from Government payment for work done under your direction by general and balance on hand acknowledged. 10008.

Information as to the intentions of the United States Government in reference to executing the terms of the modus vivendi was very helpful in guiding me in the administration of Haitian affairs, and I on December 10 sent the following message to the Secretary of the Navy:

"1008. Information as to United States Government intentions in reference to executing terms of modus vivendi very desirable in guiding the administration of Haitian affairs at this time. Is it intention to ask Congress to pass necessary resolution authorizing naval and marine officers to take offices under Haitian Government or will civilian nominations be made? latter, when may these appointees be expected to arrive Port-au-Prince? 15410.

"C.

In reply to the department's radiogram 10008 of December 8 requesting information relative to the question of expenditures and collections of duties since the occupation I forwarded the following:

"10008. Total collections to and of November, $953,372. Including coffee, $366,098; miscellaneous exports, $144,227; imports and marine duties, $443,047. Expenditures, $179,519, divided as follows: Customs, $22,099; public works, $66,763; military and civil government, $64,200; service, $26,447. Transferred to Haitian Government, $393,000, which includes $48,000 to Central Railroad; balance, $308,853, of which $325,972 was in hands of Admiral Caperton and $54,681 in hands of disbursing officer. Figures given closely approximate, as returns not all in for November. 231229.

"C.

On December 11, 1915, there was considerable unrest on the Dominican border in the vicinity of Monte Cristi and Dajabon. The American customs officials in the Dominican service stated that the Dominicans were hostile to the Americans, particularly to the Americans occupying Haiti. Dominican officials used to visit Haiti, but that now they never crossed the border owing to the presence of the Americans; and that the people of Santo Domingo were much agitated over the reported pressure being brought for making an addition to the present treaty between the United States and Santo Domingo, especially as to the clause for the formation of a constabulary. The formation of a constabulary would affect the politicians and officers connected with the rural police, who would lose their present graft. It is fairly well established that the Dominican authorities were aiding Haitian criminals and aiding Haitian bandits.

With reference to the question asked by the Navy Department as to whether or not I could assure that disbursements of a loan made by the completion of the work of the commission would be made under officer, pending the appointment by the President of the officer modus vivendi, I made the following report to the Secretary 2108. Can assure disbursement of $500,000 will be made under E. L. Beach, United States Navy, under following written Haitian Government: 'With regard to the disbursement of $500,000 gold desired to be received by the Haitian Government 20, 1915, it is agreed that the advice of Capt. Beach for the expenditures to be made from the $500,000, and that Capt. Beach will be required by the depository bank in this amount. This procedure applies to this advance only considered as an application to the terms of the treaty of 1825. It is equally agreed that in order to facilitate the payment will be at his office at the hours of service, and that he will comply to the payments regularly ordered by the law fixing (Signed) Louis Borno.' Recommend this sum be deposited in National Bank. This bank already agrees in writing as follows: 'With regard to the $500,000 proposed to be deposited with this bank as a repository, the Haitian Government, the bank agrees that on all with particular deposit the prior signature of Capt. E. L. Beach, will be required; provided, however, that instructions to be passed to the bank by the depositor when the above said de. (Signed) Reine.' Secretary of the Navy, Washington, 10412. (Aperton.)

The situation in north Haiti was quiet. Many people were apparently friendly.

On the temporary appointment of financial adviser and other congressional action, the department on December 13 advised in account of constitutional restriction impossible to appoint and other officials without congressional action. The department in the meantime officers are discharging these duties, not such is the case. Acknowledge. 21013. Daniels."

I advised the department as follows: "21013. Status of affairs here the same as prior to signing of modus vivendi. Considered practicable to proceed under the terms of the modus vivendi nonappointment of necessary officials. Instructions received of the Navy, Washington, and flag Wyoming. 11414.

By the signing of the modus vivendi was now under the officials provided by the treaty to carry the same into effect. Recommended officers for these offices, and as there was no objection could be done by me or by the Haitian Government, I continued to request further instructions in the matter.

On request for further instructions in the matter the department advised me as follows: "11414. Department has assumed that appointments of financial adviser, general receiver, engineer for engineer for sanitation these duties were being performed by Capt. Beach, Paymaster Conrad, Lieut. Oberlin, and Garrison, respectively. Is such the case or not? 18014.

In foregoing message I on December 15 advised the department that Officers mentioned are not performing duties mentioned in treaty, nor are any other officers performing these duties. Paymaster Charles Conrad, Col. L. W. T. Waller, Marine Asst. Surg. P. E. Garrison are performing duties somewhat provided in the treaty for financial adviser, general receiver public works, and engineer for sanitation, respectively. Subordinate officers aiding me in maintaining military command, under authority department's radiogram (20018), August, military instructions as have been issued. The terms of the treaty to effect by the modus vivendi are not being carried out by the government has made repeated requests that United States ratify of modus vivendi agreement and urge immediate appointments made. Have explained constitutional restriction preventing making appointments, have stated that civilian appointments are not possible, and have offered to recommend such appointments. I have earnestly requests appointments of naval officers and recommended efforts be made to expedite these appointments. Can not joint resolution be immediately obtained from Congress authorizing terms naval and marine officers to serve temporarily under Haitian Government. Secretary of the Navy, Washington, and Flag Wyoming. 11315. (For the benefit of the committee it is stated that the department's (20018), August, mentioned in the foregoing will be found in my covering the date Aug. 19, 1915.)

In explanation of the foregoing I desire to make the following remarks: The status of our administration in Haiti was at this time purely one of military control. The terms of the treaty as placed into effect by the modus vivendi were not being carried out by anyone, nor could they be until appointments were made which would give a legal status to the appointees. For the protection of the United States' interests and the officers concerned, it was necessary to gain the benefits to accrue from the treaty and prevent misguided interpretation on the part of the Haitian Government, no officer should attempt to perform the duties defined in the treaty until their legal status and their authority and responsibility could be definitely assured by proper appointments. At the same time the present military control should continue.

The Haitian Government had made repeated requests that the United States carry out their part of the modus vivendi agreement and urged that appointments be officially made. I had explained the constitutional provision preventing naval officers accepting appointments, had stated that appointments could be made at once, and had offered to recommend appointments. The Haitian Government earnestly requested appointments of naval officers and requested that special efforts be made to expedite appointments.

From a cablegram received by the American minister on December 12, 1915, appeared that the possibility of making the loan of $500,000 to the Haitian Government was very slight. I therefore made the following recommendation to the department: "Dispatch received by American minister to-day that possibility of making loan of $500,000 to Haitian Government is very slight. It is now recommended that I be authorized to transfer Government funds in my possession to meet immediate pressing demands for funds to be disbursed under agreements similar to those contained in the modus vivendi. If this be done, it will be necessary to arrange payment of interest on similar obligations from funds to be later loaned to the Haitian Government. Secretary Navy, Washington, and Flag Wyoming. 22220. Caperton."

(NOTE.—The message 10412, mentioned above, may be found quoted in my testimony covering December 12, 1915.)

It having been decided to turn over to the Haitian authorities the management of all activities now being undertaken by the American forces for which expenditures were then being made under the heads "Military and civil government" and "Public works," with the exception of such activities as were necessary to maintain military control under martial law for the purpose of preserving peace and order, I, on December 20, issued the following instructions: "I have decided on this decision in a letter to the expeditionary commander, which is as follows:

"1. It has been decided to turn over to the Haitian authorities the management of all activities now undertaken by the American forces for which expenditures are made under the heads "Military and civil government" and "Public works," with the exception of such activities as are necessary to maintain military control under martial law for the purpose of preserving peace and order.

"2. To this end you are directed to proceed with the preliminary arrangements necessary.

"3. (a) You will designate officers at each of the places where work is being done under control of these activities, who will make an inventory of the utilities, works, repairs, etc., in progress and who will confer with the representatives appointed by the Haitian Government who are to receive control of these activities.

(b) Furnish squadron commander with the names of the officers designated.

(c) The terms of the arrangements will be forwarded to the squadron commander in each case, together with your recommendations, before the place is actually surrendered.

(d) For your information Mr. Price is designated by the Haitian Government to receive the Hydraulic Service at Port au Prince. W. B. C.

On December 21 a band of outlaws was reported to have been seen near Maissade. A marine patrol was sent to investigate.

in north Haiti. A marine patrol while investigating robbery in the vicinity of Perches had a slight skirmish with a five thousand rounds of ammunition were captured by Dominican border, having been buried there. The locality through the secret service. Incriminating papers had been found in Haiti from a Caco chief, one Darius Davilmar, including a letter from Cuba written in September, in which he styled himself as operating against the Americans. It was rumored that the recent Caco troubles.

the decision to turn over to the Haitian authorities the public works, etc., I on December 22 transmitted to the American Secretary of the officers who would consult with the Haitian officials to make the necessary arrangements.

I received the following radiogram from the department: "Many marines as possible sent north at earliest practicable date and make recommendation. 13021. Daniels."

Accordingly, on December 22 I advised the department as follows: "In view of present unsettled relations between United States and Haiti, the necessity of maintaining present military control of situation under modus vivendi are made, in view of public work carried on under present status of military occupation, and in view of the necessity of organization, training, and arming of constabulary and their assumption of duties of maintaining peace and order unassisted, the marine force now ashore in Haiti be not reduced at this time of the Twelfth Company, and that Col. Waller remain here as usual. Recommend that twelfth company of marines be sent to Second Regiment and ordered proceed north on Washington. This company has been on continuous cruise service for about one year without leave or recreation, and need of leave and recreation as crew of Washington. Secretary of Navy and flag Wyoming. 16122. Caperton."

Mr. Andrew was appointed secretary of war and navy, and I so reported this fact to the Secretary of the Navy.

On the turning over to the Haitian Government of the activities of the public works under "Public works" and "Military and civil government," I made the following recommendations to the department: "Control of public works and civil expenditures assumed by me is now to be turned over to the Haitian Government. Monthly payments of $25,000 now authorized was not estimated under the activities to be transferred, it is recommended that the same be authorized. Expenditures made by me for public works have averaged $12,700 per week, and similar expenditures for funds are to be transferred should be limited to this amount. Estimates from Haitian Government will be required for the same for these purposes. Secretary Navy, Washington, and Caperton. 14127."

I received a letter from the President setting forth what the situation due to the lack of funds, etc. I transmitted this to the Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

I received the following letter from President Dartiguenave: "Mon Dieu, plus que quatre jours pour la fin de l'année. Toutes nos affaires sont plus de deux mois, vous ont suffisamment renseigné que, malheureusement, les pires Gouvernements n'ont pas laissé le peuple aux prises quand l'année se renouvelle. C'est le pays entier qui, par conséquent, me le rappelle. Hier, Je vous ai écrit et jusqu'à ce jour j'attends votre réponse au sujet de l'argent qu'il nous faut pour la continuation de l'occupation. Je dois ajouter que, dans la situation de crise à laquelle nous sommes en train de traverser, par manque de moyens de subvenir aux obligations de l'Etat, J'ai de sérieuses raisons de craindre que les choses ne se disloquent, si la question d'argent pour la fin de l'année. Et je crains aussi qu'il ne me soit difficile, dans ce cas, de vous en dire davantage. En attendant votre réponse, je vous renouvelle, mon cher, l'assurance de mes meilleurs sentiments. Signed, Dartiguenave."

TRANSLATION.

MY DEAR ADMIRAL: There are only four more days before the end. All our conversations for more than two months have sufficiently shown that even at the worst periods the worst Governments have not learned to struggle with hunger when the new year began. The entire reminding me of this fact by letters and telegrams. Yesterday I am still awaiting your reply on the subject of money, as our money is retained by the occupation. I must add that in the acutely critical situation through which the Government is passing, due to lack of means of meeting the most pressing obligations of the State, I have serious reasons to believe that the council of ministers may be dissolved if the question of money is not settled before the end of the year. And I also fear that it will be difficult for the Government to form a new cabinet. Awaiting your reply, my dear Admiral,

Yours, very respectfully,

DAE

On December 30 I received from the department the following message transmitting to me a message to the American legation from the Haitian Government relative to the loan to the Haitian Government:

"Your December 18, 6 p. m., eliminating the appropriation for public work, public debt, and service of the armistice contained in the Haitian budget for 1914-15, that budget, although contemplating a large deficit, met the requirements for an average monthly expenditure of about $150,000 gold a month."

"Inasmuch as the Haitian Government had to make no expenditure for public work, public debt, and service of the bank during the months of November, and December, it should have needed on a basis of the budget the sum of $450,000. During these months the Haitian Government has actually been in receipt of $385,000 advanced to it by office. It should therefore require but $65,000 to cover the deficit. The department believes that the law of December 2 contemplates the expenditure of $1,000,000 for these three months is unwise and is not prepared to authorize the use of an advance of $500,000 upon any loan to be made for the purpose contemplated in that law and will not under the terms of the law also increasing the foreign debt of the Republic of Haiti for any purpose. The Commission informs department that Minister Menos has received from President Dartiguenave instructing him to request department to authorize officer No. 17 to pay over all the funds in hand to be received from the loan of two million, and states that situation of Government is in a ministerial crisis imminent."

"The department's opinion regarding such loan is stated above. It considers the funds held by officer 17 to be in the nature of a trust fund. The moneys do not belong to the Haitian Government but to the holders of the different debts of the Government. In view, however, of alleged necessity, the department will report immediately by cable the amount in your opinion absolutely necessary to defray salaries of public employees for months of November and December while, notwithstanding advance of $25,000 per week, the Government is surprised to learn have not been paid. Lansing.' 19029. Daniel."

In answer thereto I forwarded for the American minister to the Haitian Government for transmission to the Secretary of State, the following:

"For Secretary of State. 'Your December 29, 7 p. m., Navy. It is impossible to obtain at once from the Haitian Government a complete statement of the situation requires, the information necessary to enable me to form an opinion and report immediately the amount absolutely necessary to defray salaries of public employees for months of November and December. The Haitian Government now states that to avoid crisis by covering most pressing needs for November in the Provinces and December in Port au Prince is imperatively needed. Immediate favorable reply urgently requested. 19140. Caperton."

On December 31 I received the department's radiogram, which is set out below, answering my messages of December 20 and 27, requesting information, etc.:

"22220 and 14127. National Bank of Haiti, which is operating on a basis from which an immediate unsecured advance could be obtained, is not prepared to restoration of contractual right before it would consider making such a loan. This was not acceptable to Haitian commission. Offer of a ten percent loan stipulated for guaranty by United States which can not be given."

in the near future in addition to current revenue are not nothing can be done until after a thorough investigation of available resources. The State Department as evidenced in the letter to Minister Blanchard is not satisfied with the purpose of the additional funds. For the above reason it is deemed inadvisable to make the payment to the Haitian Government of the reserved fund. Delay in securing advance or loan is not due to cause of the United States, but to unsatisfactory conditions. Do not turn over control of public works or any other civil government which have been assumed by you to the United States until so directed by the department, because State Department status quo be maintained until the officials provided for the modus vivendi have been appointed and are ready to assume the modus vivendi provides for settlement of certain questions by the United States and State Department in Washington, D. C., before money is paid per week be paid over to the Haitian Government unless the department authorizes. The foregoing has been submitted to the department which concurs. Acknowledge. 10130. Daniels."

On January 3, I received the following message from the department: Minister Blanchard regarding message 15031 to him sent this message for disbursement of $50,000, etc. Obtain verbatim copy of this message and provision as outlined by State Department. Acknowledge.

On January 3, I received the department's radiogram 15031, transmitting message to the American legation. This message was authorized to make use of $50,000 of the funds in my possession for the payment of unpaid salaries of the public employees referred to in the message of December 30, 5 p. m. It was directed that the money be paid to the Haitian Government, but should be drawn out by me or my representatives, who shall pay salaries to the public employees, from whom they will obtain receipts. Preference shall be given to minor employees who are said to be in arrears. This message further directed that all salaries be discontinued, including that of the minister of war and the palace guard should be immediately disbanded; and that, in 1916, and until arrangements could be made by officials of the modus vivendi, I should have complete control of disbursement of allowance for maintenance of the Haitian Government by my representatives in the various ports to see that the money reached the public employees in the Provinces. Conditions were quiet throughout Haiti. The commanding officer of the regiment at Cape Haitien reported that conditions in North Haiti were better than they had been for many years; that cultivation was being resumed; new habitations were being built; and that the land, more or less, was being occupied again. Rumors were current at the time of projected revolutions and hostile propaganda at the time of the country but nothing serious seemed to develop. Some time the north occurred but was quickly suppressed. Bandit hiding or in Santo Domingo. The attitude of the governor of the Dominican authorities at Dajabon was apparently more friendly to the United States than it had been. It seemed to be aiding our forces in maintaining order on the island. Some slight disturbance between the police and the soldiers occurred on December 25. Patrolling by our forces in North Haiti was

The department's instructions contained in the department's radiogram of December 30, orders were given to the commanding officers of the military units on January 3, informing them that the public works of military and civil government would not be turned over to the Haitian authorities and directed them to cease the arrangements previously thereto.

On January 3, a report was made to the Secretary of the Navy on January 5 regarding disturbances which occurred in Port au Prince early on that date: the day barracks occupied marines at Port au Prince fired on the Haitians. This was followed by firing in other parts of the city. The city was fired on several times. All disturbances suppressed in the city.

One Haitian killed and some wounded. Corpl. Wedor,

Marine Corps, slightly wounded in foot. Disturbance apparently of a nature against Dartiguenave government and American occupation. Arrests of leaders and bad characters made to-day by marines and some rifles captured. Precautionary measures under martial law taken. Prince now quiet. Secnav, Washington, and Flag Wyoming. 22205.

With reference to preparing a system for paying Haitian employees and creditors as directed in the department's radiogram of December 31, following to the Secretary of the Navy:

"In preparing system for paying Haitian employees and creditors in 15081. It is important to know whether system is to be continued after appointment of necessary officials. Plans laid now show comprehensive in character in order to insure efficiency, but if system is discontinued such plans must be less comprehensive with partial efficiency. It is recommended that, if practicable, treaty arrangements this method of disbursements. 15107. Caperton."

In connection with the disturbance on the morning of January 7 at Port au Prince, it was discovered that the outbreak was part of a well-planned plot, etc., and on January 8 I sent the following message relative to the Secretary of the Navy:

"Disturbance Wednesday morning, Port au Prince, part of well-planned plot covering Port au Prince, Les Cayes, and South Haiti in general. Engaged belong to black party as distinguished from mulatto. At Port au Prince were Pierre Paul, Misael Codio, Pradel, Annabel E. Philogene. Latter three, with several other minor leaders, have been arrested and confined. Pierre Paul and Misael Codio escaped. This movement was made in favor of ex-Senator Paulin or Pauleus Sannon for President. Contemplated assassination of President. North Haiti entirely quiet. No cause for alarm. No cause for alarm. Situation in our hand. Secnav, Flag Wyoming. 14108. Caperton."

On January 9 I received State Department's message "Bomky" Department code, by radio and transmitted it to the American Legation. I also received the department's 18008, directing me to cooperate under the provisions of State Department's "Bomky," quoted as follows:

"Flag Attention invited to State Department Bomky to American Legation. cooperate carry our provision. 18008. Daniels."

During this time our patrols continued to work in north Haiti. No disturbance was reported quiet with the exception of some petty stealing.

The municipal elections were now due in various parts of the country. The disorders were to be expected as the result of them here and there. Mayor Goave the election lists were stolen, so that the election could not be held and in order to avoid disturbance at that place I found it necessary to arrest the mayor of the town, who was responsible for the safety of the election, under arrest and take entire charge of the town. I reported the matter to the department on January 10, as follows:

"Municipal elections now due; expect minor disorders. Election lists stolen. Mayor Goave has been stolen; to avoid disturbance have found it necessary to arrest Mayor Petit Goave under arrest and take entire charge that town. 5,000 gourdes has been offered for Pierre Paul and Misael Codio. Flag Wyoming. 22010. Caperton."

The Prairie arrived at Port au Prince on January 10 from the United States. Commander K. M. Bennett, United States Navy, on this day reported to me. Commander J. F. Carter, United States Navy, in command of the Castroville.

In accordance with a request dated January 10, I, on January 11, transmitted from the American minister a paraphrase of State Department's message related to the disbandment of the so-called palace guards. This message related to the disbandment of the so-called palace guards. State Department's wishes and instructions relative to the gendarmerie at its place, and is in substance as follows:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PORT AU PRINCE, HAITI.

January 11, 1916.

Rear Admiral W. B. CAPERTON, United States Navy, Commanding United States forces in Haiti and Haitian waters.

U. S. S. "Wyoming."

SIR: Referring to your note of January 10, 1916 No. 434-16, I have the honor to inform you that the following message sent by the Department of the Navy, 6 p. m., January 8, 1916, referring to the legation's telegram of 5 p. m., January 5, 1916, which I communicated to you and which stated that refer-

Government and that you were carrying out the provisions as been received and a paraphrase thereof is herewith information?

Washington that it has been accepted that the so-called shed.

State proposed to the Haitian Commission, in arranging organization of the gendarmerie, that the following provision gendarmerie shall be the sole police and military force of minister maintained this would be contrary to the Haitian provides for a president's personal guard. He objected to "military" and now says that he has telegraphic instructions January 6 which permit him to accept the department's the words "excepting a palace guard not to exceed 250" ng this would allow conformance with the Haitian constitution the palace guard is an unnecessary extravagance, and its the future well develop into a source of danger to the in existence it would be impossible for the gendarmerie palace. And if the palace guard remains in existence it for any members of this gendarmerie to be detached on al attendance on the President. I am instructed to bring discreetly to the attention of the President and to show safety may be at stake. The department therefore be the commission accept the following phraseology: "Members shall form the personal guard of the President of Haiti, shall be the sole police and military force of the country." raised by the Haitian minister.

furnish the department with a copy of the telegram which I am also instructed to suggest to the President to n, and to hasten my reply in order that on Monday next include this matter with the commission. I have the honor servant.

A. BAILLY-BLANCHARD,
American Minister.

cently arrested in connection with the outbreak in Port au Prince on January 12 and this fact so reported to the Navy diagram 17012 in answer to my 15107 of January 7, was 15103 and is quoted as follows:

system for paying employees and creditors of Haiti that the present time can only be of a test nature and would require revision and amplification by the financial adviser as opportunity. It is much to be desired, however, that the method to be put in force shall be as comprehensive and as simple as the means at your disposal will permit. In this view of the fact that no expenditures are now being made for the services of the public debt, and for the treasury and as the disbursement for the public works and the public revenue are being met from other sources, it is hoped $100,000 per month or its equivalent in gourdes, which you are to use for necessary current expenditures of the Haitien Government more than sufficient for this purpose. It is intended advance authorized in department's 15021 shall be used in the Provinces for November, and salaries in Port au Prince.

Dating from January 1, 1916, it is desired that you shall make monthly payment of $100,000 to pay the salaries of public employees of the Haitien Government for services rendered except the salaries of public employees in the Provinces and that payment shall be limited to actual necessary expenses and supplies incurred subsequent to January 1. Every effort to prevent salaries from being paid to Haitians whose salaries are not authorized by the present pernicious system of the Government orders. From information in the post-office department it appears that many of the expenditures contravene the budgetary law, and particularly in the budgetary law of 1911. It is ill advised and probably in excess of the revenues which may be available for such purposes in the future. It is desired that each should use own discretion as to the payments which are to be made, and that they should not be bound by the budgetary law in making the payments. The funds are in the nature of trust funds and it is highly important that proper receipts and vouchers be obtained covering disbursements, so that the interest of those for whose benefit the revenues have been received may be protected as fully as practicable. The foregoing has been presented at a conference with and with the concurrence of the State Department. The details of the system adopted should be transmitted by radio if practicable, or otherwise by mail, and a copy of the detailed instructions issued by the State Department forwarded when available; acknowledge. 17012. Daniels."

In reply to the above, on January 14, I forwarded the following letter to the Secretary of the Navy giving a paraphrase of the scheme for the payment of salaries, etc.:

"17012. Haitian Government is now forwarding all salary lists to the administrator of customs. These are being checked against the budgetary law, deductions, absences, etc., are eliminated. Corrected lists are then prepared, and individual receipts having functions of checks, but not negotiable, are delivered to individual employees who will obtain the funds by presenting the identification at the bank. Instructions have been issued to the Marine detachments in the Provinces to investigate lists of employees, insuring that individuals are entitled to pay, to deliver receipts to the cashier at local branch of national bank as above stated. Entire payment is being carried out under direct supervision my representative. Report covering system forwarded in mail to-day. 14014. Caperton."

In connection with the above I wish to add that on the same day I forwarded to the Secretary of the Navy by mail a letter describing the system proposed for carrying out the provisions of the department's letter of the 12th instant; this letter containing four inclosures, including instructions to the National Bank of Haiti, the expeditionary force, and instructions from the administrator of customs to the collectors to carry along the same lines, covering the payment of Haitian employees.

Upon the receipt of the department's radiogram of December 30, 1914, the President of Haiti and the members of his cabinet were informed of the contents contained therein, that no further funds would be turned over to the United States Government directly, but that necessary payment of salaries would be made to the individuals concerned under the supervision of Rear Admiral Caperton, the American representative. This information caused much dissatisfaction, and the direct reply was to the effect that such a method could not be accepted by the United States Government. In view of the implied insult contained in the proposition, plans were suggested by the American authorities, intended to so arrange the matter as to negate the implied insult. But as they all included the cardinal principle that the money should actually be placed in the hands of those to whom the salaries were due, under the supervision above referred to, none were acceptable. Finally, a representative of the Haitian Government agreed to turn the business of paying salaries, etc., completely over to Rear Admiral Caperton, and to his assistance in furnishing the lists of employees to whom payment was due. As this appeared to be the most direct method of arriving at the desired result, it was decided to so proceed.

Referring to the above objection by the President and cabinet I thought it fair to make a few remarks for the information of the committee. I thought why I considered it necessary to pay each individual employee by check to my representatives. It will be remembered that I had been instructed to pay $25,000 weekly to the Haitian Government to meet its current expenses for salaries to Government employees, etc. As I recall the circumstances, the latest date there came to me many complaints from employees, especially in the low positions, that they were not receiving their salaries, and that much of this weekly allowance was going for purposes not intended. To insure the actual payment of this money to the people and for the purpose for which it was intended, the foregoing recommendations and arrangements were inaugurated. Much pains and many instructions were taken in order to insure the first payment under the new régime successful and pleasing to all. A special reception or writing room was fitted up in the National Bank of Haiti, and arrangements made for paying promptly, and at the same time care to issue new bills in any denomination requested. I was much surprised shortly after this to receive many letters from people who had been rejected in the first place to this mode of payment, and throughout highly praised by everyone, as the employees found out that they received all of their pay and not a part of it as heretofore. It was a great relief to pay to certain "paymasters" (I believe was the term) the whole amount due certain districts, which resulted in the said districts receiving a large percentage of the pay and the individuals left. I believe the first payment of about 14,000 employees was made the third or fifth of the month, which was very gratifying to them.

Military leader and one of the chief men in the attack of Port au Prince, was arrested near the Dominican border by Maj. ... on January 16, and was brought to Port au Prince, ...

Dartigue, the minister of public works, resigned from the ... otherwise remained unchanged.

I request that the balance due the gendarmerie on January ... of its authorization at the monthly rate agreed upon be ... of the gendarmerie to cover expenses of equipment and ... were available, the department answered that this request ... as soon as the Haitian commission signed the necessary ... that in the meantime to proceed under previous authori- ... the gendarmerie.

I received the department's radiogram 18025, in which it was ... conversation with the State Department Minister Menos ... alleged pressing needs of the department of the interior. He ... Washington that as the State Department had no means of ... necessity for meeting these needs the matter might properly ... The department requested my consideration and recom- ... connection and directed that I be guided by previous instruc- ... follows:

... conversation with State Department to-day Minister Menos ... matters, to alleged pressing needs of the department of ... as informed that as the State Department had no means ... necessity of these payments the matter might properly be ... Your consideration and recommendation in this connection ... previous instructions. Acknowledge. 18025. Daniels."

... on this date to the Secretary of the Navy that the palace ... in the capacity as a band for the gendarmerie. The cost ... $20,000, including pay, uniforms, instruments, and music. ... additional to the allowance for the gendarmerie. The ... the reorganization of this band to add to the dignity of the ... message follows:

... t palace band be authorized in capacity of band for gen- ... annum, $20,000, including pay, uniforms, instruments, and ... additional to allowance for gendarmerie. President has ... on of this band to add to dignity of Government. 22426.

... a statement of the customs receipts and expenditures to

OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATOR OF CUSTOMS,
PORT AU PRINCE, HAITI.

Customs receipts and expenditures.

	Gold.	Gourdes.	Gold.	Gourdes.
1. ...			$1,266,932.46	1,026,945.26
31:
...	$33,140.70	68,814.85
...	56,634.73	295,084.07
Government...	44,862.80	281,934.33
...	15,821.12	103,945.96
Government!	553,000.00	138,750.00	703,459.35	898,529.21
			563,473.11	138,416.05

... Railroad.

... rent for Les Cayes for the month of December, 1915, had not been received. ... December allotment.

CHAS. CONRAD.

The commander in chief, Admiral F. F. Fletcher, arrived at I on the Wyoming at 8.30 a. m. January 27. He paid official calls on the president of Haiti and the American minister and held a conference with the commander cruiser squadron. The commander in chief left for G at 5 p. m.

In answer to the department's radiogram 18025 of January 25, 8.10 p. m. January 27 that the department of the interior wished to have lump sums for undefined payments; for example, about $4,000 for secret service and other expenses for December. I have insisted on detailed lists of payments and amounts for salaries only prior to January 1. and so informed the Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

"18025. Department of interior wishes to obtain lump sums for secret service payments; for example, about $4,000 for secret service and other expenses for December. Have insisted on detailed lists giving names and amounts for salaries only prior to January 1. 20127. Caperton."

On January 29 Capt. E. L. Beach, United States Navy, assumed command of the Tennessee and Capt. B. C. Decker, United States Navy, assumed command of the Washington.

The flag of the commander cruiser squadron was on January 31 transferred to the Tennessee, and so reported to the Secretary of the Navy, the chief, and forces in Haiti.

On February 2, 1916, local military officials under the titles of chiefs of arrondissements, chiefs of sections, and commandants of companies were discharged throughout Haiti. Military and police functions were taken over by the gendarmerie. On the preceding day, February 1, 1916, detachments occupied 109 different stations throughout Haiti, with the intention of which would suppress brigandage, disorder, etc.

On this date I sent the following radiogram to the Secretary of the Navy reporting conditions, etc.:

"Dr. Audin appointed minister of public instruction. Public instruction transferred to charge of Minister Borno. Government discharging necessary officials in all departments. New method of paying Government employees is being received with general satisfaction. This method is direct and on time should break up pernicious system of discounting. Many demands being made for back debts, but am not considering present. 13402. Caperton."

On February 5, in reporting conditions to the department. I sent the following radiogram:

"Everything quiet. Thirteen hundred enlisted constabulary and guards not enlisted but under constabulary authority now performing control and police duty throughout Haiti. Brigandage and pillage. Complete order everywhere exists. Peasants now have feeling of security and are planting their farms. General feeling of relief throughout Haiti. Contentment with American occupation and intentions except among discontented politicians. Government and people eagerly awaiting action on treaty and introduction of American capital. 23105. Caperton."

The Haitian Government, though well aware of the orders of the United States Government regarding the payment of expenses of the Haitian Government, and of the amounts that were available, was constantly making estimates of expenditures entirely beyond the amount allotted for the support. This forced me to return such mandates to the Haitian Government as they were not payable under my orders.

In a message to the department on February 6 I described the conditions as follows:

"Office of commandant arrondissement declared abolished by the President. Civil duties assigned to them are now being discharged by Government attorneys. President informed me personally this morning that the Haitian Government is looking much better now for Haitian Government in the sense that it is not against it by discontented politicians is noticeably losing touch with the people throughout Haiti glad of assurance of security that detachments will give. 22206. Caperton."

On February 8 I reported the financial situation and made recommendations to the department in a message as follows:

"Am paying salaries public employees by nonnegotiable non-transferable checks. Injunction brought on bank in many cases attaching salaries permits not more than one-third salary attached any month. If one-third salary paid employee, system of discounting salaries perish. Should attachments be not allowed, Government and should show United States had but little regard or respect for custom. Recommend that I be instructed to inform Government that attachments interfere with purpose of United States they and bank will be given military order to that effect. This discounting salaries has been engaged in by comparatively few. I believed that this system would entirely stop if it became known who discount will not be aided by United States in collecting. 8. Caperton."

Correspondence with the department on this question the department on February 20, sent the following instructions in regard 00312. Authority granted; issue military order disregard attachment of salary of Government employees, especially attachments. It is desired to respect Haitian law so far as relates to you may recognize attachment of one-third salary by court upon act on for legitimate debt with discounting of salary. 19. Josephus Daniels."

At this time were more or less quiet, I took this occasion, in American minister and the administrator of customs, to on trip of the north and accordingly left Port au Prince inspecting the following-named places: Mole St. Nicholas, Cap-Haitien, Fort Liberté, Ouanaminthe, Grande Rivière, and returned to Port au Prince on February 22, 1916. I was quiet in all places visited and was received most cordially by natives. After this inspection trip of north Haiti I became convinced that constabulary must be increased about one-third its present strength and recommended to the department that it be considered by the department in the treaty estimates.

At the desire of the Haitian Government to send diplomatic representatives to the various countries, on February 28 I sent a message to the department:

The department proposes to send diplomatic consular representatives to American and American posts, in most cases relieving those now appointed and each one relieved entitled by law to three expenses. Cost of these changes, $17,725. Recommend that be postponed for the present and that expenditures be limited to representatives not needed abroad. 12428. Caperton."

Citizens called on me on March 1 and requested that I forward to the department stating that the resident investors for loans were suffering on account of nonpayment of interest. Held by many poor people who depended on this interest to there was no market for the sale of these bonds, largely due to currency in circulation as pointed out by me before in messages.

This committee requested that payment of this interest, of $100,000, be made immediately, thus relieving those distressed also assisting business conditions by placing money in circulation. These facts and approved this committee's request in a message immediately sent to the department.

As to the financial situation, on March 4 I sent the following message to the department:

All customs funds to my credit are held by bank separate from they are not now available for banking operations. If requested to transfer part of balance to New York, it could be made when offered and transmit them to New York for credit to bank's own risk. In this connection attention is invited to the interest on foreign debt. Recommend that semiannual interest due be paid as fast as funds are available and that the department commence immediately in order of dates past due. This is done here for foreign drafts and lower the discount rate and funds now impounded. Consideration should be given to the service of foreign debt is to be handled entirely through the other drafts on Europe can also be purchased for this purpose to cover coffee shipments. Latter would make a more free market might conflict with plans of State Department for reorganization. Owing to lack of information here regarding financial conditions being developed in Washington it is difficult to make more definite recommendations, but suggest that this matter be referred to an adviser as soon as selected.

"No room for unfavorable public opinion if funds are to be used for foreign debt. Bank has used funds forwarded to purchase drafts in absence of demand for transfer of credits abroad can not help situation. 11104. Caperton."

In reply to the foregoing messages and recommendations the Department on March 15 sent me the following instructions:

"Flag 21129, 14101, 11104, and 21413. You are authorized, in pursuance of the Haitian authorities, to apply $500,000 of surplus funds of Haiti now held by you on a per cent basis to the purposes for which the revenue had been lawfully pledged by the Government of Haiti on July 27, 1915. Statement furnished by the National Bank of Haiti shows an amount which should have been applied to each purpose during the American occupancy and proration should be made on basis of the amount. As payments have been made under your direction for some of the purposes which revenues were pledged, such payments should be deducted from the pro rata share now available for these objects, and in cases where such payments have exceeded the pro rata share nothing should be paid. It is believed that March 1 would serve as convenient date for these payments, this distribution being authorized at present to relieve financial stringency than to settle outstanding claims against the Government, and with this object in view the money should be put in circulation in Haiti with least possible delay. Should it be necessary to purchase in Haiti sufficient drafts on Paris or Le Havre from the National Bank for service of foreign loans, arrange to have manager of the bank take purchase drafts on New York and have money transmitted to New York through New York agent of the bank. It was stated in departmental communication (December) National Bank of Haiti probably only source from which immediate unsecured advancement could be obtained, and it was recommended that steps looking toward securing such a loan should be taken prior to the outbreak of controversy between bank and Haitian Government which might subject negotiations with Haitian commission. Assessment of local financial matters mentioned in your 21413 should await appointment of special adviser, which will be made as soon as possible. Trade and Commerce Department states it would seem that during the present high prices of cotton, which will probably be maintained until dyes can be obtained from the East, if method of prorating not thoroughly understood, further instructions should be given. Acknowledgment. 15016."

In connection with the foregoing, my message to the department is quoted as follows:

"14409 and my 16110. Balance in my account February 29, 1915, $35,000. Payments in February were $300,000, and transfers for disbursements $100,000. It is believed that revenues will not fall appreciably during next year. As coffee shipments will continue to some extent during summer months, and shipments of logwood are now waiting transportation. Inform the Department of Commerce as to probability of logwood market during present high prices, with special reference to possibility of any country interfering. Exchange between gourdes and gold now 5 to 1, and will be made to hold it there. This can be done if present uncertainty can be remedied. Extremely important that immediate steps be taken to settle all valid claims against Haitian Government and thus restore confidence. It is earnestly hoped that bonded indebtedness will be paid and that all special liens on various custom revenues will be removed, otherwise it will be impossible to properly revise tariff. If this rating of available balance as contemplated would be unnecessary, claims should be paid regardless of particular affectations involved. Recommend immediate short-term loan of $500,000, to be expended in settlement of Haitian debts, to be used in addition to balance of receipts available for that purpose. A commission should be appointed as soon as possible to pass on all claims. This loan should later be applied to consolidated debt, and any balance should be available for public use. In appointment of financial adviser and general receiver is having no permanent steps can be taken pending their arrival. 21413. C."

Conditions in Mexico having become acute, the following message was received from the department: "In case circumstances should require, U. S. S. Prairie will be sent Mexico with regiment marines. Do not relinquish any part military control now exercised by tial law as now in force without receipt further instructions." I on March 12 advised the department in a message forces now in Haiti not more than 1,700 men. This force to maintain present military control of country and can not be unit without greatly prejudicing United States control Constabulary are neither sufficiently trained nor reliable without support of all forces present. Urgently advise our present position this island. 23512. Caperton."

At the approaching session of Congress, which was to assist part of April, campaigning was going on amongst senators to embarrass the Government. This information came to me from various sources. It was well appreciated that with the American intervention was impossible, so other means were adopted to force the Government out, being planned somewhat as follows: When April, if the enemies of the Dartiguenave government were so, a vote of censure and lack of confidence in the Government passed and the President impeached. The charges were to be against the constitution."

At this campaigning President Dartiguenave made a statement, Capt. E. L. Beach, United States Navy, late in the month substantially as follows:

"The enemies of the Government will be in sufficient force to be passed, I expect to be able to control Congress. I believe of the reforms I have instituted, which have been to curtail expenses and discharge unnecessary employees, cut fraud out of Government contracts. Because I have not acceded to some who rated high the value of their services and for other reasons. Because I have suppressed the war department, army, and navy, a refusal made was for Haiti's good and with the advice and assistance of American officers. There is but one thing to do—to revise the constitution to fit the present needs. The following changes are required: Reduce 39 senators and 102 deputies—double the number needed. Reduce the amount to one-seventeenth of the entire revenue of the country. The number must be reduced to less than half the present number. The present constitution provides that no foreigner may acquire or hold land, prevents foreign capital from entering. Article 6 must be revised. The constitution must suppress the war department and the gendarmerie. The magistracy and civil service must be reformed. There are other needed reforms. My government will urge the necessary steps to revise the constitution on these lines. If the Government hostile and refuse there will be but one thing to do. I request the American Government to advise me to do this, nor to express any opinion on the matter, but I request the forward assurance of Admiral Caperton that the Government will receive complete military protection. I will call for a constituent assembly of about 50 representatives, patriotic Haitians, who will revise the constitution according to present needs. I request you to explain to Admiral Caperton and state that I desire from him an assurance that I be forced to dissolve the chambers my Government will call for of the United States, if needed."

Who was present when the President made the foregoing statement, Capt. Beach, stated to Capt. Beach that the President hoped that he would have Capt. Beach explain the situation and purposes of the statement in detail to American officials in Washington. This was Beach's trip to the United States on the Tennessee.

He was reported to the department in substance, and in reply I advised the Government.

March the President sent copies of the following letter to representatives of the Government in the various civil districts and commissaries of the Government near the various civil courts:

10TH OF MARCH.

President of the Government in the civil district of ———.

SIGNER: The president of the permanent committee of the Government in accordance with the agreement of a majority of his colleagues to call to the members of the legislature with a view to meeting on the first Monday in April for the accomplishment of work which the President has not yet been able to fully undertake of this character.

In view of this unusual act, I have thought, and am in agreement with the members of my cabinet, that it is desirable to anticipate a misunderstanding by making known through you to the senators and deputies who are in the district the reasons why it will be desirable, in spite of the opening of a permanent committee, that the opening of the session of Congress should not take place until the Government is in possession of full authority in regard to the legislative work for the year. No member of the convention may ignore the facts that since the meeting of the convention there has left for Washington with all instructions and powers the order to find, with the assistance of the good offices of the United States, the moneys to liquidate the debts of the Government for 1914 and 1915; to provide to the public services sufficient resources for 1915 and 1916; to provide to redeem the interior debt and pay the budget of 1916 and 1917; to organize the new public service of Haiti; to ascertain a method of reconciling the claims of the receiver general with the privileges guaranteed to the bank of the tract; to reconstitute the office of the secretary of treasury; to reach an agreement with the national railroad; to harmonize our laws with the provisions of the convention; and in a loyal effort, undertaken in common with the officials of the American Government, to prepare the solutions of problems relating to national work, which should have the favorable attention of the legislature this year.

But although it has in no sense neglected its mission and although it has already made appreciable progress, the commission has not yet completed the end of its work, and before it returns the President can not be fully satisfied as to its intentions.

Who under these conditions will compose the legislative body? Will it be that we shall again have a session of eight or nine months entirely devoted to useless agitations? And, furthermore, where may the money be found which will be necessary in order to pay the salaries of the representatives?

All these considerations, Mr. Commissioner, appear to me to be of great importance. I decide me, in agreement with the cabinet, to recommend to you that you should make to the knowledge of the members of the legislature actually present in the district that the President has not been convinced by the permanent committee of the senate of the advisability of a meeting of the Congress in April. He will not accept any responsibility for anything that may result from such a meeting.

The President does not ignore his obligations to the National Congress. He has no idea of taking away their prerogatives. But at a time when the country is completely dominated by the circumstances under which we live, why should we consider inflexible rules which have never before been applied? Why have the inflexible character which it is now considered opportune to apply to them? And while nothing can relieve the responsible officials of the Government to account for the business of the Republic, to prepare the budget, to organize the constitution of October 9, 1889, and to reassemble the elements of the national forces, is it not right that the President should be permitted to choose the time when this work can be accomplished?

It is with the certainty that these wise reflections will be appreciated by the members of the assemblies who live in your district that I renew, Mr. Commissioner, assurances of my high consideration.

DANIEL

Notwithstanding the efforts of the President to have Congress meet in April, the meeting until the return of the commission, then in Washington to report to the United States relative to the details and operation of the Haitian Congress met on April 3 and 4, but no quorum was present.

The official journal of Haiti, Le Moniteur, issued on April 5, published the decrees of the President of Haiti dated April 5, 1916. One dissolved the Chamber of Deputies and decreed that the chamber of deputies shall be convened except in case of emergency constituent assembly to, in cooperation with the executive power, to prepare the constitution of October 9, 1889, and perform such legislative work as may be called for by the President. The other decree created a council of administration composed of 21 members appointed by the President, whose duties shall be, first, to give its advice on all projects which the Government deems fit to submit to the second, to prepare and formulate laws, decrees, and other acts of the Government; third, to give its opinion on the questions which the President shall desire its action; third, to give its opinion on the questions which may be submitted to it by the President and his

at this constituent assembly would revise the constitution to amend the present treaty and that the council of state would act with the view of drawing up and preparing such changes and laws as might be required for the purpose. I therefore, on April 5, informed the Secretary of Legation in Chief of the following by radiogram.

Enclosed is a translation of the decrees of the President of Haiti as issued by the Moniteur on April 5 dissolving the senate and creating the

DECREES CONCERNING THE COUNCIL OF STATE.

Dartiguenave, President of the Republic.

It has been shown by experience that legislative business requires the presence of the council of state, which consequently necessitates the presence of a suitable number of political assemblies and with the executive authority:

DECREES.

The council of state is appointed whose functions are:

To advise on all plans which the Government may consider fit to

To draw up bills, decrees, decisions, or other documents concerning the Government which require its attention.

To answer on all questions submitted to it by the President of the Republic.

The secretaries of state may be charged by the executive authority to supervise the bills which have been passed by the council of state.

The council of state is composed of 21 members, appointed by the President of the Republic. The secretaries of state have the power to participate in the meetings of the general assembly and secondarily in the meetings of the council of state.

The bureau of the council of state, composed of a president and two secretaries, is elected by the council by secret ballot.

The bureau lasts for one year and may be indefinitely renewed. The President of the Republic presides over the meetings of the council of state.

The functions of the council of state are incompatible with every other function. Nevertheless, specialists, engineers, jurists, or others may be called on a public service to take part in the work of the council of state as councillors, with a consulting voice; and in this case, during the time they retain the rights, prerogatives and salary belonging to them, they are not able to draw their salary with that from the council of state.

The council of state is divided into four sections. A public administration will decide on the interior order of the operations of the council of state, on the division of these operations among the sections, on the functional assembly, on the rotation of members between the sections, on the personnel which will be nominated by the President of the Republic and in general on all the measures necessary to the satisfactory functioning of the institution.

A monthly remuneration of $150 will be handed to each councillor of state.

At the National Palace, Port au Prince, April, 1916, the one hundredth anniversary of the independence.

DARTIGUENAVE.

MAYARD,
Secretary of the Interior.

Secretary of Finance and Commerce.

Secretary of Justice and Public Worship.

Secretary of Foreign Affairs and Public Works.

Secretary of Public Instruction.

Secretary of War, Navy, and Agriculture.

DECREE.

Dartiguenave, President of the Republic.

Whereas the life and development of nations obey the natural law and the public law must adapt itself;

Whereas for a long time public opinion and the directing authorities have recognized the necessity of reforming the existing constitution; and whereas former legislatures have formally manifested their willingness to do so;

Whereas to the reasons generally admitted up to last year there have been added others of still more urgent a nature, created by the new conditions imposed upon the Nation;

Whereas it is indispensable, in order that the convention of September 1915, may be properly applied and may produce the advantages intended, to accomplish the revision at as early a date as possible, of a large number of constitutional texts, notably those concerning public defense, financial institutions, reports of the public authorities, the number of deputies and senators, the right of real estate property;

Whereas with the present procedure of this revision it is impossible to accomplish, in the proper time, these urgent reforms and a decision of a character conforming best to the national necessities and to democratic principles governing our institutions, must be introduced with delay;

Whereas the present chamber of deputies was formed by a special consultation which invested it directly with constituent authority, and whose distinctive fundamental character is not possessed by the senate or the public;

For these reasons and on the advice of the council of the secretaries of state;

DECREES.

ARTICLE 1. The senate of the Republic is dissolved.

ART. 2. The chamber of deputies will be convened in exclusive session as constituent assembly to revise, in cooperation with the executive, the constitution of October 9, 1889, and take in hand organized public administration and all other acts of an urgent character which will be presented to it by the executive.

It will consist of an absolute majority of its members. (A majority of more than half the number of members.)

ART. 3. A salary of $300 per month will be allowed to the constituents in their seat.

ART. 4. The present decree will be published and executed by the president of state, each acting with respect to that which concerns him.

Issued at the National Palace, Port-au-Prince, April 5, 1916, and in the thirteenth year of the independence.

DARTIGUENAVE.

By the President:

CONSTANTIN MAYARD,

Secretary of the Interior.

LEON AUDAIN,

Secretary of Public Instruction.

EMILE ELIE,

Secretary of Finance and Commerce.

A. ANDRE,

Secretary of War, Navy, and Agriculture.

E. DORNEVAL,

Secretary of Justice and Public Worship.

LOUIS BORO,

Secretary of Foreign Affairs and Public Works.

The Senate did not meet on April 6, as on coming to the senate building they found the doors locked. The permanent committee met in the house of the Chamber of Deputies and decided to request the keys from the secretary of the interior. On this date the President of Haiti sent a lieutenant of gendarmerie to lock the doors of the senate building. A. August Daumec by name, locked the building at about 2.45 p.m. and then took the keys to the President, who then directed Lieut. Daumec to take them to the minister of interior, who was present. This Daumec

Senate considering this measure rather irregular decided to meet at 10 a. m. at a private dwelling. What action was contemplated was not known. I took no action in this matter other than to prefer.

above facts to the Secretary of the Navy in a message as follows:

With orders of the President, the senate building was locked. The President of the permanent committee of the Senate have in the legislative body views this procedure as an attempt upon the rights and that they have decided to meet at a private dwelling. I am taking no action except preserving peace and

"CAPELTON."

I received a message from the department asking if the Haitian Government agreed to the distribution of the surplus revenue as authorized and in reply thereto I advised the department as follows:

The Government agrees to distribution, although opposed to payment at this time. Government has published in newspapers fact that being made and money has been transferred for that purpose.

"CAPELTON."

Members of the permanent committee of the dissolved Senate and members met in the house of one of the members and decided to take action of the President in dissolving the legislative bodies. They collected in the yard of the Senate and decided to take the Senate. Some of these deputies were intoxicated.

About 60 members of the dissolved Chamber of Deputies, who were in accordance with the President's decree as a constituent body in the yard of the senate building. No work was done except the "procès verbal," stating that no quorum was present.

The President issued a statement in the official newspaper, Le Soleil, he stated that if the deputies would not perform their duties in assembly he would call a general election for a new constituent

In a meeting of the "notables" of the city a committee was organized with President Legitime as president of the committee, to interview the opposition. This committee of prominent nonpartisan citizens met in an endeavor to bring about an amicable understanding between the President and the legislative bodies.

On the 10th of April, I held a conference with the President of the Republic on the possibility of the Government reaching an agreement with the legislative bodies in connection with the necessary changes to the constitution. There were present at this conference, besides myself, the President Legitime; the secretary of state for foreign affairs; the commander of the expeditionary forces ashore: Lieut. Col. Charles G. Long, United States Army; Lieut. Commander W. D. Leahy, commanding officer of the USS Albatross, who since February 23 had been acting as my chief of staff; and a Haitian Government interpreter, Deputy.

The extreme desirability that the Government and the opposition should reach an amicable agreement. I stated to the President that I had been told by presumably reliable persons of the opposition, members of the nonpartisan citizens of Haiti, that such an agreement was impossible. The President agreed to receive suggestions and to give such suggestions full and honest consideration and to take such action as was possible for the welfare of Haiti. In negotiations which might be started might not be interfered with by the dissolved chambers were requested not to meet in the city as legislative bodies.

Mr. Borno, secretary of state for foreign affairs, came on board the USS Albatross for an interview. Mr. Borno at this conference discussed the basis of the opposition and made a verbal statement of a "statement" which would be satisfactory to his Government.

A conference consisting of ex-President Legitime, Minister of the Interior, M. Leon, president of the Chamber of Deputies, Col. Waller, Lieut. Commander Leahy, and myself, a proposed basis of agreement between the Government and opposition, which had been previously prepared by the Chamber of Deputies, was discussed at length. The opposition made no material concessions to the Government. Following this an appointment was made with the President, at which the following were present: Ex-President Borno, M. Mathon, member of citizens' committee, Col. W. H. Leahy, and myself. After reading the opposition's proposed basis of agreement the President of Haiti informed ex-President Legitime that it was not possible for him to consider it, and that further discussion of the matter was useless. At the completion of this discussion, the President prepared a statement of the Government's proposed basis of agreement, which he offered to concede to the opposition in every material point which they desired. He stated that his decree of April 5 should not be revoked and that the two houses of the legislature should in this session make a complete revision of the constitution in order that it might be placed entirely in agreement with the American convention and fit the new conditions which had arisen in the country since the convention; and that the two chambers after organizing a constituent assembly and appointing a committee to formulate the proposed changes in the constitution, should adjourn for two months in order to give time for information necessary for the formulation of changes might be received from the Haitian commission then in Washington. This last stipulation was made by the Government in order to avoid the large expenditures of public money which would be necessary in order to keep Congress in session pending the receipt of information from the Haitian commission in Washington, when there would be no useful work for them to perform.

After extended conferences with the two sides of the controversy it became evident that the President justified his decree and action subsequently on the necessity for obtaining a prompt and complete revision of the constitution in order that it might agree with the American-Haitian convention, and fit the conditions which had arisen in virtue of this commission and also the new forms which had for many years been recognized as necessary. He was also influenced by the necessity for economy in the expenditure of the public money.

On April 27 the dissolved Senate and Chamber of Deputies met at the President's house and organized as a national assembly. This was done in accordance with the agreement. I have since been assured by the president of the Chamber of Deputies that the meeting was due entirely to a misunderstanding in regard to the necessity for permission to meet. No work was done other than that of forming a national assembly. It was then stipulated that the two bodies should stand by the dissolved legislative bodies that there would be no further action until an agreement was reached by the opposing factions.

At 8 o'clock p. m. on the 29th of April the president of the Senate, the president of the Chamber of Deputies, with several of their colleagues, met at the place of meeting and the president of the Senate showed a resolution signed by a majority of the Senate directing him to refuse acceptance of the basis of agreement, unless it could be stipulated that the legislature should retain all their legislative functions. The president of the Chamber of Deputies at the same time informed me that his chamber could not accept the proposal without the concurrence of the Senate.

I then informed the President that the failure of my efforts as an intermediary to obtain an agreement between the Government and the opposition made it necessary, in order to insure the maintenance of peace and order, that I should comply with my orders to support the Government of the President, and of my intention to support it.

This information was then given to the president of the Senate and the president of the chamber of deputies, with the request that it be communicated to the members of the two dissolved legislative bodies.

During many conferences with the opposition to the Government the opposition had stated that there was much dissatisfaction to certain members of the cabinet, but none in regard to the President himself. I then informed the President of this matter, and he stated he was aware of the dissatisfaction and had already prepared the necessary papers for the dissolution of his cabinet.

At 11 a. m., May 2, the minister of foreign relations, Borno, called by appointment to discuss the present situation. He informed me that the President of Haiti had completed arrangements for dissolving the cabinet but had not yet definitely selected all of the members of the new cabinet. He also informed me that the President was considering the names of state, which was to be formed in accordance with the decree of April 5, and that it was the President's desire to have the services of some prominent members of the Government, if they could be induced to serve, his idea that he wished all factions to be represented in the work of the constitution.

May 2 I also met on board the flagship, by appointment, the president of the chamber of deputies, and the two chambers. These men requested that I make a further attempt at continuing negotiations looking toward an agreement between the Government and the opposition, and assured me that the two chambers were now in favor of agreement, which they had refused to consider on the basis of the fact that I had informed both the Government and the opposition on April 29 that the failure of the opposition at that time to accept my other conciliatory efforts on my part useless, and that I would report the recognized and established Government, and in fact that the Government had already taken steps, which I had withdrawn, to carry out its work of reform with the assistance of the support it, such as dissolving his cabinet, etc., I informed the members of the opposition that it would not be possible for me to continue further negotiations, and that I regretted extremely the fact that I could not bring about an amicable agreement.

On the dissolution of the cabinet by the President, on May 3 I reported to the Minister Borno that the President's cabinet had been dissolved.

A few days the reports from Santo Domingo showed that the situation was fast approaching a crisis; therefore on May 9 I reported to the Secretary of the Navy and stated that I would proceed to Santo Domingo at daylight on May 10, to arrive there the following day.

On my en route to Santo Domingo on the Dolphin, I sent the following telegram to the department, the information contained therein having been received by radio from Port au Prince:

Announced in papers. Borno foreign affairs, public works, justice, agriculture. No communication with San Domingo.

"CAPERTON."

On May 12, 1916, I arrived at Santo Domingo City on the Dolphin at 6.05 a. m., May 12, 1916. I received by cable a message from the department stating that it had been requested of me to relieve Admiral C. McR. Winslow and asked that I date possible for me to get away in case my relief was not possible. I further added that owing to the peculiar conditions it was requested that I remain with my successor, at least, for the present.

At 9 a. m., I turned over the command of the cruiser squadron to Charles F. Pond, my successor, and proceeded via Washington to the command of the Pacific Fleet, in accordance with my request. I was relieved by Admiral Winslow as commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet, assuming the rank of admiral.

I entered in there as a statement that it was requested, and I stated the details of the request, if you could recall.

The committee adjourned until Monday, October 24, 1921, at

OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, Senator (chairman) presiding.

McCormick, Oddie, and Pomerene.

Ernest Angell and Maj. Edwin N. McClellan, United States their respective representative capacities as hereinbefore Walter Bruce Howe, as counsel for the committee.

MAJ. GEN. GEO. BARNETT, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS, COMMANDING THE DEPARTMENT OF THE SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

General, will you give your name and rank to the stenographer?

Major General Barnett, United States Marine Corps, Department of the Pacific; station, San Francisco, Calif.

During what period were you commandant of the Marine from February 25, 1914, to June 30, 1920.

This covers the entire period of the American occupation at that time. They are still there; yes, sir.

You began your service before we landed in Haiti?

Yes; yes, sir.

What transpired in Haiti up to the time of your departure from San Francisco was during the period of your command of the Marine Corps.

Thank you, General, if you will proceed to comment upon your communications regarding the allegations of harsh usage made by the Marine Corps, in your own way, that that would be to what we have in mind.

Mr. Chairman, has that report been incorporated in our report has been published by the department.

How long is it?

It is 110 pages in this report of the Secretary of the Navy.
There is no doubt.

It is published in the report of the Secretary of the Navy

Can we each be furnished a copy of that report?

There were plenty of them at headquarters; I have no doubt

I saw at the time newspaper abstracts from it.

I took a very few abstracts from that.

But I would like to have the opportunity to read it.
Thank you, sir.

Let me, then, ask that Maj. McClellan supply to the committee reports to which reference is made—the Mayo report and —in so far as that has been printed or mimeographed.

Maj. McCLELLAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I do that seeking to economize in the printing.

Senator POMERENE. That is, Admiral Mayo's report?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Gen. BARNETT. Admiral Mayo was the president of the court of inquiry. Senator POMERENE. Has Maj. Turner's report ever been printed graphed?

Maj. McCLELLAN. No, sir. Maj. Turner's report, from what I can see to what is in the committee's mind, consists of all the investigations initiated by Gen. Barnett's order—

Gen. BARNETT. That is right.

Maj. McCLELLAN. After he had read certain court-martial records.

Gen. BARNETT. That is right.

Maj. McCLELLAN. A naval court of inquiry was carried on both in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. I want all that correspondence.

Gen. BARNETT. I will say here, Senator, that the Turner report mentioned had not been received up to the time I was relieved as commander of the Marine Corps; but since I was relieved, in the headquarters of the Marine Corps I saw a copy of Maj. Turner's report, as forwarded by Col. Russell. No action was taken on that report I do not know; I was not informed.

The CHAIRMAN. We want all the correspondence, and that we will put in the record.

Gen. BARNETT. As I remember, an investigation was ordered by me immediately upon receipt of my letter, and a report by Maj. Turner was forwarded to headquarters after I left, and I think in that report I remember it—I just casually glanced over it one day after I was relieved. Matter of information—I think Maj. Turner's report was pretty good. It recommended certain trials by court-martial.

The CHAIRMAN. Did Col. Lay have to do with that investigation?

Gen. BARNETT. Col. Lay had this to do with it. In the organization of the Marine Corps when I was commandant, as always, all court-martial records, when marines are tried, first are sent to the Judge Advocate General of the Navy, who, before forwarding them to the Secretary of the Navy for approval or disapproval, sends them to the commandant of the Marine Corps, who, by indorsement, returns them to the Judge Advocate General. Col. Lay went to the Secretary of the Navy. Col. Lay was in the office of Gen. Haines, who was adjutant and inspector of the Marine Corps at that time and in charge of the records of the Marine Corps, and Gen. Haines had Col. Lay to read all court-martial records. Of course, I did not have to read all the court-martial records carefully, but it was Col. Lay who read all the court-martial records carefully, and if they contained anything of importance, out of the ordinary, routine matter, instead of just a formal indorsement upon them and returning them directly to the Judge Advocate General, before making any indorsement he would bring them to me, and I would read the records then.

The court-martial cases of Pvt. Johnson and Pvt. McQuilkin were brought to me by Col. Lay of such an unusual character that, after he read them to me, he brought them to Gen. Haines, his superior in his own department, and Gen. Haines then brought them to me. I read those two cases.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you a preliminary question there. Do you use the expression, "to read all court-martial proceedings"?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. How many of them were there?

Gen. BARNETT. A great many.

Senator POMERENE. Arising—

Gen. BARNETT. Not in this case. I mean all court-martial records of the Marine Corps. If a general court-martial any place in the world tried, the record is sent to the Judge Advocate General's office, and then, as a routine, it comes to me as commandant of the Marine Corps.

Senator POMERENE. These two cases were our own cases, were they not?

Gen. BARNETT. Our own cases, the cases of two marines who were tried in Haiti by a general court-martial. Those cases were brought to me by Col. Lay, and I was so startled by the disclosures shown in the report, particularly by the statement of the counsel for the accused, who was named Spear, at that time in the Marine Corps—corporate in the record Lieut. Spear's argument. ut. Spear in his argument for his client stated that these was counsel for Pvt. Johnson—that in th's case where they cted, the court should not judge them too harshly, because a general custom, and that he. Lieut. Spear, had himself ses of executions of that kind. eutions without trial?

sir.
You mean down in Haiti?
sir. Now, I wish to say right here, which has, in my ed bearing on my act in that case, that in the first place officer of the whole Marine Corps. A certain condition tion by the records in these two cases, and particularly ounsel for the accused, and I considered that some drastic at once. I, being commanding officer, it was up to me to ction that I thought at that time, and still think, regard- the court of inquiry or anybody else, that I had to take. yself, and I settled it promptly and quickly, and I settled ce an official letter on the 27th day of September, 1919, s came to my attention.

letter to whom?
tter to Col. Russell, the brigade commander of the marines I took what I considered at that time, and what I still n. I claim that nobody had a right to question my mode as long as my work was done efficiently. It was done ason, because Col. Russell got my letter, and got my per- wrote five days later, because I had reread the cases in as so impressed with the importance of these two cases r letter, which I have copied in my report, stating to ond letter, or reiterating, what I said before, the absolute ation.

Nearly all of this is Greek to me.

ill be glad to enlighten you.

Tell me who Johnson and McQuilkin were and what

Johnson and Pvt. McQuilkin were two privates in the ed in the province of Hinche, under the command of a in the Marine Corps in Haiti named Brokaw. Accord- duced in these two cases, these—

What was the charge against them?

charge was murder.

Of some native?

two or three natives. The record, which you will have, o or three people who were killed—two at least were ed that they were taken out by order of Lieut. Brokaw, wo marines, Johnson and McQuilkin, and put alongside Johnson and McQuilkin were ordered to shoot them, whom?

kaw. Brokaw has since been committed to an insane re, I think. I stated in my report, as will appear in this could be taken in the case of Lieut. Brokaw because he um at that time.

no was commandant of the marines or constabulary, or time?

that time the commandant of the marines was Col. sell, and in charge of the gendarmerie, as they call it in Williams.

What was the pretended reason for the execution of

I have no knowledge of.

By Johnson and McQuilkin?

never tried to show any reason for it whatever. I would , that it would be better to get the records of the courts- exact charges rather than rely on my memory, because o last September.

The CHAIRMAN. We have the records.

Gen. BARNETT. That was, as I say, over two years ago; but I am convinced in my own mind, knowing this case from A to Z, that it is not a case of any unlawful action by any Marine in Haiti—the first kind of case ever came to my desk.

Senator POMERENE. How soon did you learn about it after it occurred?

Gen. BARNETT. A very short time. The case was forwarded to the Advocate General immediately after the trial, and on the same day, after, probably—a few days, anyhow—he forwarded the case to the Secretary of the Navy. It was on the 27th day of September, 1919, that I got the record. On the next day I read it carefully and put an indorsement on it returning it to the Advocate General; and knowing that that case, in the ordinary course of events, would in a very few days be presented by the Judge Advocate to the Secretary of the Navy for approval or disapproval, having my indorsement on it, and having written the same day to Col. Russell, commanding officer in Haiti, telling him my views, as formed on account of the testimony and the statement of counsel for the accused, I went to the Secretary of the Navy and told him that I had gotten two cases from Haiti which troubled me very much, but that I had written the necessary order for their removal. I sold for complete correction of the faults, as disclosed by those two cases. I said all right.

Senator POMERENE. It was pretty hard to correct them if they were wrong.

Gen. BARNETT. I know; but to prevent anything of that kind in the future. Those cases were, as a matter of fact, a very few days later taken up by the Secretary of the Navy, and he signed them, approving both cases. By the way, course—

Senator POMERENE. Approved them?

Gen. BARNETT. No; approved the action of the court.

Senator POMERENE. That meant a disaffirmance of your position?

Gen. BARNETT. No; not at all. There was no question of affirming or denying the time at all—none whatever. I put a formal indorsement on it, just as I did to the Judge Advocate General. That is all I could put on a case, because the case was finished—settled. I simply showed by my indorsement that it had passed before me and that he had carried out the naval regulations in presenting it to the commandant of the Marine Corps for any action he wished to make.

Senator POMERENE. In what respect were those two men, John Quilkin, to blame if they were simply carrying out the orders of their superiors?

Gen. BARNETT. That was not for me to decide; that was for the court. I did not have any witnesses before me at all.

Senator POMERENE. But I am asking you for your judgment as to what respect did they offend?

Gen. BARNETT. No man in the service is compelled or has a right to disobey an illegal order. That is the one case in the service where anybody is disobeying orders—if he gets an illegal order.

Senator POMERENE. Who is to decide what is an illegal order?

Gen. BARNETT. The man himself must decide and take responsibility. Now, as I say, knowing these cases would come before the Secretary of the Navy in a very few days, and not wanting him to think I had just passed important cases in a pro forma way, I spoke to the Secretary of the Navy three or three days later—maybe a week later—those two cases went up and he approved them, thereby taking the same action I had. I did this because the public press has done a lot of printing about this case. It was stated that the Secretary of the Navy did not know about the case until after my final report was published. He passed judgment on the cases and approved them absolutely a few days after—

The CHAIRMAN. Approved these decisions?

Gen. BARNETT. Approved the findings of the court.

Senator POMERENE. What was that finding?

Gen. BARNETT. That I do not remember. That was of no importance whatever, because I had no remarks to make upon the cases.

Senator POMERENE. Has this record been briefed in any way, or through that whole record in order to find out what the facts are?

not been briefed. It did not reach my office until last week, to take it up or touch it so far.

Is it your purpose to brief them?

I want to say, and say most positively, that I wrote that which is called the confidential letter, and I marked it "confidential" upon the same subject as the letter which I had written before, the official letter, and I wanted Col. Russell to know these cases, and I wanted him to strain every effort in investigation of this affair.

Both of my letters. Here is my letter. First, I had better September 27, 1919. This was the official letter. I marked it also, not personal, but confidential, because I did not want in Col. Russell's office in Haiti and have all his clerks see anybody of what might be expected in the line of an interesting reads as follows:

[Confidential.]

SEPTEMBER 27, 1919.

General commandant.

Commander, First Provisional Brigade, Marine, Port au Prince, acts by members of the gendarmerie d'Haiti and marines in the testimony in the general court-martial cases of Privates and John J. McQuilkin, jr., Marine Corps, and from the counsel for the defense in the case of Pvt. Johnson, First Lieutenant. Lawful executions of Haitians, called Cacos, have occurred issue immediately necessary and proper instructions regarding these actions.

Sergt. Brokaw, lieutenant of the gendarmerie, has been in the hospital, so no action can be taken in this case.

Investigation and submit a confidential report regarding the action, as stated in his argument as counsel for the defense in the case of Pvt. Johnson. A copy of this argument is attached.

Legal and unlawful actions on the part of officers and men of the gendarmerie d'Haiti can not be tolerated under

GEORGE BARNETT.

Now, General, you use the expression there, "executions discriminate killing.

Indiscriminate killing?

Yes, sir.

To what extent had that been going on?

I knew only of these two cases, and I formed my whole opinion before me when I wrote that letter, that being the evidence of Johnson and McQuilkin, particularly the statement of the accused, who stated, in effect, that these men should not be executed, because they were following the general custom, and there had been many similar cases.

Was that all the information that you had, and all the information which you based your letter?

That was all the information I had.

After you had written that, did you make any further investigation to ascertain what the particular facts were upon which the statement was based?

That I ordered Col. Russell to make.

Are you coming to that later on?

Yes, sir.

Then, General, will you proceed to answer Senator Pomphrey, or, if you prefer, make a note of it and go on with your

Gen. BARNETT. My letter was received by Col. Russell. Here is of Col. Russell to my letter:

[Personal.]

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, October 1, 1914

Maj. Gen. GEORGE BARNETT,
Major General Commandant United States Marine Corps, Headquarters United States Marine Corps, Washington

MY DEAR GENERAL: I received your letter in the last mail, and at once to assure you that I have taken up the matter you mentioned seriously and will go into it thoroughly. I am inclosing herewith a confidential order which I have just issued, as well as a proclamation which will be published in all the newspapers in Haiti, in the towns, and read at the markets to the people of each town by the mayor.

I have gotten out several other proclamations since my arrival, of quieting the fears of the people regarding the bandits.

Almost immediately upon my arrival things began popping here and there, left and, together with an unsatisfactory political situation, kept jumping.

I wrote Gen. Long the other day regarding conditions here, and doubt he has informed you.

We have now completely cleared the plain of the cul-de-sac of bandits, and at present they appear to be gathering in Honda Valley, possibly, of crossing the border and going to northern Haiti or to the descent in the plains. The latter I hardly believe, as we get at them easily when they are in the plains.

I am now making preparations to strike the band from Bellegarde, Cohobas, Savanette. It will be unable to cross the border if our forces go out, but those that get away will be forced to scatter and retreat to Grand Bois.

It is estimated that about 2,000 bandits infest the hills. The Charlemagne Peralte, who styles himself the supreme chief. I believe they are mostly armed with machetes, knives, pikes, a few pistols, 200 or 300 rifles. I don't believe that in all Haiti there are more than 500 rifles, if that many. They are very short of ammunition. They use ammunition and the Krag by tying a piece of goatskin on string around the base of the cartridge. I have consequently issued very strict orders regarding the accounting of our own and gendarmerie ammunition.

The Haitians, as you no doubt know, are a very hysterical people. Rumors are circulated among them daily that are simply ridiculous. Like children, they believe them and completely lose their heads. I am hard, in consequence, to quiet them; however, I believe I have no choice but to bucking them up. Of course, the officials seized the opportunity as much as they could out of the affair until I sent for the President (minister of interior), told him plainly that the Government, interfering with me, was obstructing my work and that I would not do any more things brightened up as far as the officials were concerned.

Yesterday I accompanied the American minister on a visit to the capital with the result that one of the cabinet members who has been a garrisonist has resigned, so that the political situation is also much better.

As you know, General, I shall give my very best to the situation. It is far from satisfactory; and with the backing that I know I may have at headquarters, I feel confident I can clear it up and make a record for myself.

With kindest regards to Mrs. Barnett and yourself,

Very sincerely,

JOHN H. RUSSELL

Then here is the proclamation. It is written in French and the translation here. The translation is not in the original report, as printed, but I have put it here.

(The proclamation referred to, both in French and English, is in full, as follows:)

NOUVELLE ADRESSE A LA POPULATION.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, 15 Octobre, 1919.

Vous êtes tous convaincus maintenant que le régime de la corvée a été aboli. A une certaine époque, un tel travail par votre jugement a été jugé nécessaire, ce afin de vous ouvrir certaines parties de la terre qui étaient presque inaccessibles; mais il y a de cela plus d'un an que la nécessité pour de tels travaux n'existant plus, la corvée a été abolie et ne sera plus envigueur en Haiti. Nous établissons pour vous, dans votre Pays, une paix permanente, et nous vous engageons dans les travaux agricoles et autres et nous vous garantissons l'existence honnête.

Nous jurons de continuer à vaquer à vos occupations usuelles, dans lesquelles vous êtes entièrement et sincèrement protégés par l'occupation. Nous sommes déterminés à faire que les lois d'Haiti soient respectées et que vous ayez l'entière protection tous les bons et paisibles citoyens, tandis que les bandits.

JOHN H. RUSSELL,
Colonel d'Infanterie de Marines Commandant de la Brigade.

NEW ADDRESS TO THE POPULATION.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, October 15, 1919.

You are now all been assured that the reign of corvée has been ended. At a certain time a certain form of work had been judged necessary by the Government, which was the means of opening certain parts of the land which was almost inaccessible, but a year ago it had been decided that such work was not necessary. Corvée, consequently, has been ended and will never be in usage in Haiti.

We intend to establish for you, in your country, a permanent peace, and you may engage yourself in your agricultural enterprises and be able to earn an honest living.

We intend you to continue your former occupation with zeal in the peace which we entirely and sincerely protected by the occupation.

We are determined to enforce only the laws of Haiti and have no doubt that it will assure its entire protection to all the good and peaceful citizens and will drive out the bandits.

JOHN H. RUSSELL,
Colonel, United States Marine Corps, Commandant of the Brigade.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, October 15, 1919.

The Commander has had brought to his attention an alleged rumor that the gendarmes in Haiti to the effect that in the past the bandits have been summarily shot without trial. Furthermore, the men in the field have declared and carried on what is commonly called an "open season," where care is not taken to determine whether the natives encountered are bandits or "good citizens" and have been ruthlessly burned merely because they were unoccupied property otherwise destroyed.

It is the part of any officer or enlisted man of the Marine Corps and if true, would be a terrible smirch upon the unblemished reputation which we all hold so dear.

Any commissioned officer, or private of the Marine Corps, or any member of the United States Navy attached to this brigade, or any officer, noncommissioned officer, or private of the gendarmerie guilty of the unjustifiable and illegal killing of any person whom he brought to trial before a general court-martial or military commission on charge of murder or manslaughter, as the case may warrant.

4. The unjustifiable maltreatment of natives and the unlawful seizure of their person or property will result in the trial and punishment of the offender.

5. All officers and noncommissioned officers are enjoined to see that the provisions of this order are most strictly enforced, and anyone having knowledge of the violation of this order and not promptly reporting it will be held an accessory to the crime.

6. This order will be furnished all commanding officers, and this confidential order will be carefully and fully explained to all noncommissioned officers, and private in the Marine Corps and gendarmerie d'Haiti in Haiti.

7. Commanding officers will report in writing to the brigade commander every officer and enlisted man in their respective commands who has been thoroughly informed and are fully aware of the contents of this order.

8. The chief of the gendarmerie d'Haiti will report in writing to the brigade commander, when every office and enlisted man in the gendarmerie guard is fully conversant with the contents of this order.

9. Upon arrival in Haiti, all commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps will immediately be fully informed of the contents of this order, and the commanding officer of units to which they are assigned will report in writing to their immediate senior in command that this has been done.

10. The chief of the gendarmerie d'Haiti will have the contents of this confidential order carefully explained to all officers and men joining the gendarmerie and will be held strictly responsible that all officers and men of the gendarmerie d'Haiti are at all times thoroughly familiar with it.

JOHN L.

The CHAIRMAN. General, I think it would be useful if you would provide, you can, how the committee may pursue an investigation into the truth of the general allegations that there were punishments without trial.

Gen. BARNETT. As I stated before, the two cases that I know of are these two cases of Johnson and McQuilkin. In my opinion, no report should be made, and no legitimate report by a court of inquiry or any other body should be made, as to the justification for my letter, without the testimony of Lieut. Spear. Whether they had him or not I do not know, but, in my opinion, a report of anybody as to whether or not I was justified in writing that letter is foolishness, unless the testimony of Lieut. Spear can be obtained.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, General, we know where Lieut. Spear is. The issue is not the justification for your letter.

Gen. BARNETT. Not a bit, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You mentioned Lieut. Spear. Are there any other officers of the Marine Corps or not, for whom this committee ought to find information bearing on this subject?

Gen. BARNETT. As I stated before, the only cases I knew of were these two cases. Now, as I said in answer to my letter to Col. Russell, as I was ordered, as I understand, by Col. Russell, in direct compliance with your letter, and was ordered made by Maj. Thomas C. Turner. The report was received. As I stated to you a moment ago, I saw that report at headquarters. I read that report over very carefully several times. I was relieved and after this whole business was up. As I remember, in accordance with the report forwarded by Col. Russell, the trial by court-martial of certain people. I have not the record because they never came to my notice. I was not commandant of the Marine Corps at that time, consequently the papers did not come to me. I have shown that report at headquarters, and I know that certain people were recommended for trial by court-martial. I do not remember definitely who, except, I do think, Maj. Wells was one man recommended for court-martial.

The CHAIRMAN. What Maj. Wells?

Gen. BARNETT. Clark H. Wells. I think Maj. Clark H. Wells was tried by court-martial by the Navy Department, and the court-been tried or not I do not know. I will state, prompted by that he was not tried; for what reason I do not know. Johnson—I do not even know where they came from—but this I talked about a great deal at headquarters, and I heard that Lieut. J. P. Adams or Capt. J. P. Adams, who is now and probably at Charleston, S. C., would make a very good committee. I do not know what he would testify to. I never saw him in my life, never had a word with him. I have Goddard knows something about it. As a member of the committee, I would like to continue my statement as to what communications I had with the Secretary of the Continue.

When I wrote my original letter I said that I spoke to the Navy about the two cases in general terms. No more knowledge of this case until in the summer of 1920. When I was on leave from the Secretary of the Navy to come to Washington of what I knew about the trouble in Haiti. Thinking that these two cases, I brought with me copies of my letters of October 2, 1919, and took them to the Secretary of the Navy with him at his desk. He read that letter absolutely from top to bottom, and we discussed it fully, giving full knowledge to him of what had been done in Haiti.

The Secretary of the Navy told me to make a report on Haiti, and my two letters were attached to that report, which only mentioned the cases of Johnson and McQuilkin, and those two letters were Appendages A and B. The Secretary of the Navy gave me time to read it then, but that he would take it home with him the next day. He sent for me the next day and said to me, "All right as far as it goes, but what I want is a complete showing in that report everything that has happened, everything given, every letter that has been written or received at the Marine Corps or Navy Department from the first occupation time when you were relieved on June 30, 1920."

As I have said, were appendages. He went on to say, "In your final report, instead of putting these letters on as an appendix in the body of your report, so that whoever reads the report can look back and see what the appendage is, but can read it in the final report I put them in the report.

That the Secretary of the Navy sent for Gen. Haines and me to Haiti again, and again and in Gen. Haines's presence I wrote letters to the Secretary of the Navy. In my final report, as an appendix in the body of the report as directed by him, because everything I had received or written with reference to Haiti, whether written or received from Haiti, in the report.

In the report?

In this report; yes, sir; in my final report. After I had written a report of 110 pages the Secretary of the Navy said to me, "Go and read now; I will take it home with me to-night and read it tomorrow." I was under orders then to San Francisco and I was given permission to go, in accordance with my orders.

About 3 o'clock in the afternoon, he sent for me, and he had a car, and he said, "General, this is all right. You may carry on to San Francisco." Again, this letter was in this report. The Secretary of the Navy read my report that night I do not know that he had turned it over to Mr. Jenkins, his publicity man in the Navy Department, because Mr. Jenkins—

His publicity man?

Well, whatever he called him. He was a newspaper man originally from Baltimore. I do not know in what capacity he was connected with the Navy, but he attended to a great deal of personal matter

The Secretary's personal publicity?

I do not know what it was. Maybe Maj. McClellan can tell you more about it.

STANDARD LIBRARY

Maj. McCLELLAN. It was not personal, although he may have done some work. He is a well known man there.

Gen. BARNETT. He was on duty in the department and is a well known a fine fellow.

The CHAIRMAN. What was his correct duty?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not know. Immediately when I saw the letter said to me, "You may carry out your orders and proceed to San Francisco. Immediately when I left the office Mr. Jenkins came up to me and said with me and said, "General, that is the most complete report I ever saw. I have been in the Navy Department." He shook hands, congratulated me and said good-bye to me. That lead me to believe that Jenkins read the report and reported to the Secretary that it was all right.

I left that evening for San Francisco. I was called back from San Francisco the morning papers had published my letter and made a great furor about this. I was surprised to find by the morning papers that the Secretary of the Navy had stated that he had never seen my letter until the morning. I immediately took the newspaper and went to the Secretary's office and in the presence of Gen. Lejeune and the Secretary of the Navy Mr. Woodbury I said, "Mr. Daniels, I see in the morning papers that you have stated that you never saw my letter until the morning." He said, "I never saw it." I said, "Excuse me, sir, but I saw it in my presence, read it, and discussed it fully the first time it was published." I said, "Again let me say to you, you did see it. I gave it to you again when you told me to make a report. I made the report and had these two letters appended, and you, in your own words, told me when I made a final report to put these letters in the body of the report as appendages, so that whoever read it would not have to look back at the appendages but would see them in the body of the report." He said, "I never saw it." I said, "Again excuse me, but you did see it. You sent for Gen. Haines and me to come here to your office and discuss it in Haiti, and again, in Gen. Haines's presence, I handed you those letters. Gen. Haines saw me hand them to you." He said, "Of course, General, I say I saw it I must have seen it, but I forgot it." I said, "You say that you had forgotten it, but that you had never seen it."

I simply make this statement to show that I was not making a mistake in this business, but I was informing the Secretary of the Navy of what I did, because I thought it was a most important matter.

While you said a moment ago that this was not an investigation but a justification for my letter, I do want to say to this committee that the very best means that I knew of as commanding officer to correct a mistake had come to my notice in an official manner. I was the one to be judged and acted, and my letter was thoroughly understood by my staff. Col. Russell, who acted so promptly and so well that a few months later Gen. Lejeune, the commandant of the Marine Corps, went to Haiti to inspect the force. He found everything correct and in apple-pie order, and was largely responsible for that was my letter which had brought to the attention of Col. Russell's attention, and his prompt action, showing that he understood my letter, was the result.

The CHAIRMAN. This condition, subsequently corrected, grew up under Col. Russell's command before it was brought to his attention?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes, sir. Col. Russell was one of the best officers I ever knew. He would always take every action possible to correct every fault which came to his attention.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not ask that. Please answer my question. These killings, indiscriminate or otherwise, took place under Col. Russell's command. Gen. BARNETT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He did not bring them to your attention; you brought them to his attention?

Gen. BARNETT. They were brought to my attention by—

The CHAIRMAN. He did not clean things up and put them in apple-pie order until you called the matter to his attention?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not suppose he ever knew of them until it came to his attention through me, and then he took prompt action. Senator Russell a few moments ago asked a question about what these people were doing. On page 236 of the Navy Department's record I find the following:

THE ACCUSED WERE PROMPTLY BROUGHT TO TRIAL.

McQuilkin, the privates named in Gen. Barnett's letter, were members of a firing squad which "unlawfully shot and killed" two Haitian prisoners on May 22, 1919. Johnson was killed June 26 and McQuilkin July 1, 1919. At the court-martial it was testified that this was done by Brokaw's orders. Senator Pomerene asked a few moments ago—about the trial—

Q. Maj. McClellan, will you learn how it was that Brokaw was tried?

A. He is insane.

Q. I want to find out by whom he was adjudged insane.

A. All right, sir.

In this connection, I wish to state that when this conversation was had between the Secretary of the Navy and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and the Assistant Secretary said to me that I was at the court-martial and that certain testimony and the statement of the counsel showed me that illegitimate killing had taken place. They said to me that, because this statement of counsel for the accused was not a statement of counsel, and it was perfectly well known that criminal cases often made statements which could not be taken to say here that I felt, and still feel, that I was perfectly justified in my word, which was an official report made to that court-martial for the accused, and because he was an officer in the Navy, a statement made to me, because he knew, and everybody knew, that the record would come to me, and I would read it, and I also knew that it was a statement made to the Judge Advocate of the Navy, because he knew the record would go to him, and I made it to the Secretary of the Navy, because he knew that the Secretary of the Navy for final action. I therefore claim that in taking the word of a commissioned officer and in believing it to be true.

Q. Where was this court-martial held?

A. I do not remember the exact place; in Haiti.

Q. Did it pass through the hands of the Judge Advocate?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the occupation in Haiti?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he make any indorsement on it?

A. No, sir; not to my recollection.

Q. Will we get the name of the judge advocate in Haiti who was

A. Important enough to call to the attention of Col. Russell, the Judge Advocate General in Washington?

A. That would be on those two cases. I say that I took this statement because, in all my experience of 44 years in the service I have never of course that a statement made to me by a commissioned officer will admit that in civil cases or criminal cases counsel may be prejudicial or in favor of a certain man whom he is defending. I believe of an officer acting as counsel for an enlisted man or for a statement other than true. I took that statement as true. I wrote my letter, believing that it was true.

When this whole thing was over, as far as these letters are concerned, a report came in from Maj. Turner, forwarded by Col. Russell, that he saw until afterwards, after this thing was brought to the court of inquiry was ordered to investigate the Haitian affair. The court about five minutes and asked three or four questions of me. I wrote this letter, etc. I was also asked three or four questions of the number killed, etc., and a correction was made by Maj. Alland, who had compiled the data for me from the Navy. He had made a mistake in addition, and instead of being 3,250

there were 2,250 killed. I never saw the precept of that court of inquiry from their report I judge that one of the things they were ordered to do was whether or not I was justified in using my phrase that indiscriminate killing had gone on for some time. They found in their report that I was justified, although that is a question of opinion. As I stated a moment ago my opinion is entirely different, as well as entirely different from the opinion of the court, was before me, largely because of the fact that I think I was justified in making the statement of the officer.

In the final paragraph of that report they said that the publication of charges and the statement with reference to indiscriminate killing was most regrettable, unwarranted, and everything of that kind. The statement was taken by every newspaper in the United States, and by individuals, especially outside of the service that I know about myself, as a censure of me for having written this letter. Knowing the Navy I knew that no court of inquiry could censure an officer without having him a party to the trial and allowing him to appear and introduce evidence. It was not made a party to the trial, and my conduct was not under inquiry, but the concluding paragraph of their report was so badly worded that advisedly, because a thing must be badly worded that is misinterpreted by everybody, and a report on anything can only be for the purpose of creating an idea in the minds of those making the report—as I say, it was so bad that every paper in the United States, especially the Army and Navy Journal, and the Army and Navy Journal, took it up as meaning severe censure. They were not justified in that, well knowing that after I was furnished with an official copy of this report of the court of inquiry, containing the censure of me which the papers had taken to be a censure, I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, of which I will give a copy to the committee, and I stated in that letter that I had read this report of the court of inquiry—

The CHAIRMAN. If you are going to give the letter to the stenographer, I want to summarize it for the committee?

Gen. BARNETT. I think you had better hear it right here in general. In that letter I stated to the Secretary of the Navy that I had read the report of the court of inquiry, and that I was shocked to find that every paper in the United States, and hundreds of friends of mine who had written to me for having been censured by this court, had taken it for granted that I had been censured. Well knowing that this could not be so, and not intended so by the court, I requested him, as Secretary of the Navy, to have the court of justice to one of the oldest officers in the service, to disavow the report and give it publicity the same as the other had been given publicly. I had been seriously injured by this report of the court of inquiry.

The Secretary of the Navy received this letter, and after some time he gave me an answer, failing to comply.

The findings and conclusions of the court of inquiry and my letter to the Secretary of the Navy are as follows:

[Navy News Bureau. Release morning papers of Sunday, Dec. 19, 1920.]

Secretary Daniels authorizes the following:

"The court of inquiry which convened on October 19, 1920, by the Secretary of the Navy to inquire into the conduct of the personnel of the United States naval service that has served in Haiti since June 28, 1915, has reported its findings, which Gen. Lejeune, major general, commandant of the Marine Corps, and Secretary Daniels to-day approved."

Following are the conclusions of the court:

"The court, having thoroughly inquired into all the facts and circumstances connected with the allegations contained in the precept and having considered the evidence adduced, finds as follows:

"FINDING OF FACTS.

"1. The court finds that two unjustifiable homicides have been committed, one each by two of the personnel of the United States naval service who served in Haiti since 28 July, 1915, and that 16 other serious acts have been perpetrated against citizens of Haiti during the same period by individuals of such personnel.

is further that these offenses were all isolated acts of individuality. In every case the responsible party was duly brought to trial, found guilty, convicted, and sentenced.

There was found no evidence of the commission of any other unjustified or other serious, unjustifiable acts of oppression or of violence against the citizens of Haiti, or unjustifiable damage or destruction of property by any of the personnel in question.

The fact that the only unjustifiable acts found by the court to be those wherein disciplinary action has already been taken, and no further proceedings could be had in the matter, the court is not necessary to report further upon the question of responsibility.

"CONCLUSIONS.

Paragraph 2 of the precept, it is the conclusion of the court that there are no proper grounds for the statement that 'practically no improvement of natives has been going on for some time,' as alleged by Brig. Gen. George Barnett, United States Marine Corps, to the effect that the United States Marine Corps.

The amendment to the precept calling for the conclusions of the court as to the general conduct of the personnel of the naval service in Haiti, 1915, the court does not consider that the small number of offenses that have been committed by a few individuals during the period in question are entitled to any considerable weight in conclusion as to the general conduct of such personnel. It is the conclusion of the court that some offenses would be committed. However, considering the service in Haiti, it is remarkable that the offenses were so few that they all may be chargeable to the ordinary defects of the personnel, such defects as result in the commission of similar offenses in other parts and elsewhere in the best-regulated communities.

The conduct of our troops of occupation can be fairly judged by the results of their occupation.

For the first time in more than a hundred years tranquillity and security may be said to prevail in Haiti.

The people themselves welcomed the coming of our men and are glad to see them depart.

The maintenance and maintenance of tranquil conditions and the security of the country all over the Republic of Haiti has been an arduous and thankless task. That task our marines have performed with gallantry.

The court refrains from recording its opinion of much, and that the reflections which have been made upon the officers who have been in Haiti.

The characteristic of those officers, from the brigade commander down to the private, has been their sympathetic attitude toward every step that has been taken for the betterment of the country and to improvement in the physical, moral, and conditions of the population.

The lack of resources and inadequate administrative authority they have had to contend with where anything more than suppression of organized insurrection was required.

The remarks apply with particular force to those officers and enlisted men of the United States Marine Corps who have been serving as officers of the gendarmerie in Haiti.

The study of the matters in issue, based not only on the evidence presented but also upon other original and reliable sources of information, and the observations while in Haiti, the court regards the charges against the personnel as ill considered, regrettable, and thoroughly unjustified on a portion of the United States Marine Corps which have been called to a most difficult, dangerous, and delicate duty in Haiti in a manner which merits the highest commendation. The adverse criticism is entitled to the highest commendation. The proceedings of this twenty-first day of the inquiry was read by the court after having finished the inquiry, then, at 11 o'clock a. m., the action of the convening authority.

"H. T. MAYO,

Rear Admiral, United States Navy, President.

"JESSE F. DYER,

Major, United States Marine Corps, Judge Advocate."

UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS
San Francisco, Calif., December 19, 1920.

From: Brig. Gen. George Barnett, Marine Corps.

To: The Secretary of the Navy.

Via: The Major General Commandant.

Subject: Findings and conclusions of the Haitian court of inquiry.

1. I have read carefully the "Navy News Bureau release morning Sunday, December 19, 1920," authorized by Secretary Daniels and the findings of facts and the conclusions of "the court of inquiry convened July 28, 1920" and "approved December 19, 1920," by General major general commandant, and Secretary Daniels.

2. I note the first paragraph under "Conclusions" reads as follows: "Referring to paragraph 2 of the precept, it is the conclusion of the court that there have been no proper grounds for the statement that the indiscriminate killing of natives has been going on for some time," in the letter from Brig. Gen. George Barnett, United States Marine Corps. Col. John H. Russell, United States Marine Corps."

3. No officer in the Marine Corps can be more pleased than I am that the allegations of indiscriminate killings have been disproved.

4. In this connection I invite attention to the fact that while the "indiscriminate killing" was my own, the allegation of such misconduct was not made by me, and I preferred no charges against any person, nor did I publish or authorize the publication of anything.

5. In reviewing a court-martial case I read a statement of a colonel, officer, Lieut. Spear, in substance that he had personal knowledge of cases where Haitians had been executed without any legal process. I immediately directed the local commanding officer to fully investigate and in order to avoid unnecessary publicity I sent these directions in a letter marked "Personal and confidential."

6. It is, of course, evident that I would have been neglectful of my duty as commandant of the Marine Corps had I failed to order an investigation.

7. I note also paragraph 11 of the "conclusions" of the court (concluding paragraph), which reads as follows:

"After a careful study of the matters in issue, based not only on the facts in the record but, also, upon other original and reliable sources of information, and the court's own observations while in Haiti, the court regards the reflections on a portion of the United States Marine Corps which have been published as ill considered, regrettable, and unwarranted reflections on a portion of the United States Marine Corps which has performed difficult, dangerous, and delicate duty in Haiti in a manner which, instead of calling for adverse criticism, is entitled to the highest commendation."

8. Unfortunately (for me) numerous newspapers and numerous individuals having read in conjunction paragraphs 1 and 11 of the conclusions of the court of inquiry, have construed them to mean, in substance, that "Brig. Gen. George Barnett has made ill-considered, regrettable, and thoroughly unwarranted reflections on a portion of the United States Marine Corps which has performed difficult, dangerous, and delicate duty in Haiti in a manner which, instead of calling for adverse criticism, is entitled to the highest commendation."

9. I am constrained to believe that this is not the construction intended by the court or the reviewing authority. Otherwise it is certain that the court would have been made party to the inquiry and accorded the right of appeal at vindication, as provided by Navy regulations.

10. The record will show that I was not made a party to the inquiry. I received no intimation that my conduct was under investigation. I must assume that neither the court nor the reviewing authority intended that the court's findings and conclusions should convey the impression that the court had been guilty of making unfounded, unwarrantable, and ill-considered reflections against others of my corps who were entitled to commendation and reward.

11. I am thoroughly convinced in my own mind that the court did not intend to reflect on me or my conduct in mind when they drafted the eleventh paragraph of their conclusions, but that they had in mind the numerous newspaper articles published, with the publication of which I had nothing whatsoever to do.

12. The records will show, and the Secretary of the Navy has personally seen, that on numerous occasions, in my annual reports and in other reports, I have accorded and in my capacity as commandant of the Marine Corps ation for the conduct of marine officers and men in Haiti; realized the dangerous and delicate nature of their duties aside to their accomplishments. This especially in my final year of the Navy.

report of the conclusions of the court of inquiry has been that my personal conduct in connection with the case has diverted upon by the court and through their approval by Commandant and the Secretary of the Navy.

a number of newspapers (vide attached clippings from the Star, dated December 25, 1920), this construction of the have received dozens of letters from friends and acquaintance that I should be so censured.

tion is correct I request as an act of simple justice to an honorable service that the Secretary of the Navy give out a press to correct the impression that has gone broadcast over that the court found me guilty of misconduct and the marine Corps and the Secretary of the Navy approved the only to that letter is as follows:

GEORGE BARNETT.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 10, 1921.

of the Navy.

George Barnett, United States Marine Corps, commanding Pacific, No. 36 Annie Street, San Francisco, Calif. General Commandant.

and conclusions of the Haitian court of inquiry.

Gen. George Barnett's letter 12-30-20.

With reference (a), there is transmitted herewith for your of the Navy News Bureau release of December 19, 1920. this release does not contain any news items other than conclusions of the court of inquiry and the fact of their approval by the General Commandant and the Secretary of the Navy. complained of by you which appeared in certain newspaper from the department, and the department therefore with reference to them.

to paragraphs 4 and 5 of reference (a), your attention is that your official report of Haitian affairs shows that the affairs mentioned in the general court-martial proceedings Walter E. Johnson and John J. McQuilkin, jr., was directed to the brigade commander in Haiti, dated September 27, and a confidential letter was not written until October 1920; also, that the following allegations are contained in the confidential letter above mentioned, namely:

of one private for the killing of a native prisoner brought his counsel which showed me that practically indiscriminate gone on for some time."

most startling thing of its kind that has ever taken place and I don't want anything of the kind to happen again. the knowledge gained only from the cases that have been that the Marine Corps has been sadly lacking in right and you to see that this is corrected, and corrected at once." also invited to the fact that while you did not publish the confidential letter above mentioned, yet you did include it in a public document, which you had been informed and which announced would be given to the press in its entirety upon omission by you.

you are informed that, although the court of inquiry was meant to investigate and determine whether there had been a date killing of natives in Haiti for some time, as alleged in the confidential letter to Col. John H. Russell, it was not up to your conduct, and that, therefore, the court did not hold the inquiry.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

The CHAIRMAN. The controversy between you and the Secretary concerns the committee.

Gen. BARNETT. Entirely so; I understand that. I am simply showing that he did have knowledge, the same knowledge that I have. As I have stated before, this letter shows that he refused to make a request to state whether or not that finding referred to me, which he did not, because it was one of the most positive regulations that I refer to me in any possible way. I thought, and still think, that a man, appealed to officially by one of the officers who had at least done service for 45 years nearly, was entitled to a statement from the the Navy—

Senator POMERENE. With regard to these executions, is it claimed that these men were shot by direction of this sergeant who was demoted?

Gen. BARNETT. Oh, no, sir; that has nothing to do with the case. The only question that ever came up at all about the whole affair was not there had been any indiscriminate killings in Haiti, and how many.

Senator POMERENE. Your opinion is, I take it, that these two men were mates?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Has your further investigation enabled you to find out many others there were?

Gen. BARNETT. Only as I have stated in my letter, only the one as having been seen personally by Lieut. Spear, counsel for the Government, then from the report on file at the Marine Corps headquarters by which who was directed by Col. Russell to make a report. I do not know of any others are in that.

Senator POMERENE. Are you able to state just briefly here your judgment, were the causes which led up to this state of affairs?

Gen. BARNETT. No, sir; I was not there, and the only knowledge I have of the cases were these two court-martial cases.

Senator POMERENE. Who can give us that information?

Gen. BARNETT. Col. Russell, I have no doubt.

Senator POMERENE. Have you any one else to suggest?

Gen. BARNETT. Maj. Wells, I have suggested, while you were out. and I mentioned three or four while you were out.

Senator POMERENE. I will not ask you to repeat them, then. Are there any in this country now, or down there?

Gen. BARNETT. Some of them are here and some of them are down there.

Senator POMERENE. You, I believe, made the statement before we came to the Senate Chamber that you took charge down there at the time of our occupation; did I understand you correctly?

Gen. BARNETT. The marines?

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

Gen. BARNETT. Yes; they were landed at once.

Senator POMERENE. What were the general orders which were given at that time? In other words, what were the reasons for sending you down there if you know?

Gen. BARNETT. That was given to Admiral Caperton, who was in command. He has been before this committee for a week and probably stated the facts of that kind.

Senator POMERENE. Well, I was not able to attend the hearing, but I have been attending two or three other committees.

Gen. BARNETT. The orders were given from the Navy Department to Admiral Caperton, who was in supreme command down there.

Senator POMERENE. You have not been down there?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes; I was down there on a tour of inspection in 1917, with the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt.

Senator POMERENE. And how long was that after the marines were landed there?

Gen. BARNETT. They landed in 1915, and I was there in 1917.

Senator POMERENE. What condition did you find then?

Gen. BARNETT. I found an excellent condition. It is so stated in the report made to the Secretary of the Navy, when I got back. I went from Haiti to the other on horseback through the mountains.

Senator POMERENE. Did you have any knowledge at that time of any undue aggressions by our marines or others against the natives?

had no knowledge, nor did I hear of any case, and I dis-with the President of Haiti and with other prominent men in rish priests and the local officials in the different towns passed.

E. They were nearly all Negroes, were they?

A. I heard of them, and I heard no complaints whatever.

E. Was there any objection at that time to our possession of heard none. I heard many remarks to the contrary.

E. Was there any outbreak, revolutionary or otherwise, re?

A. None whatever.

E. Or have you learned of any since the time the marines here had been many occasions.

E. That was early after they took possession?

A. Once after that there was a concerted attack on Port au

E. By natives?

A. By natives, and was repulsed by the marines, and followed y, and properly so.

E. From a military standpoint, did you see anything to critby these marines?

A. I did not, and so stated in my report to the Secretary of the me back very much pleased. I heard it stated by numerous t for the first time in a long, long time the people felt at markets, and the markets were full of Haitians. Theretonable to go to market because they would be robbed, etc., or

E. Then the burden of your complaint grows out of these proper executions?

A. Entirely from those two court-martial cases and the state-for the accused. That was the only knowledge I ever had, the Marine Corps, of any trouble in Haiti.

E. Has the department made any further investigation?

A. The department sent Gen. Lejeune down there. I made this summer of 1920, and Gen. Lejeune went down later on and on, and reported everything in good shape. I understand—true—that the Secretary of the Navy has been down there the court of inquiry, of which Admiral Mayo was presi-

E. You mean Secretary Denby, do you?

A. Yes, sir. Of course, I do not know what they found. I have report, or heard any statement from them, but I have read that they found things in good shape.

E. Well, did you find any objection at that time that you our marines being there?

A. I found none whatever, and I am sure that Secretary Roosevelt would make exactly the same statement, because we made

E. You think, then, it was the consensus of opinion up to here that the marines were a good influence there for law

A. I think entirely so, with a very large portion of the population.

E. Did you find any sentiment there to the effect that the trying to take possession of the island for the purpose of , or anything of that kind?

A. I never heard any such remark.

E. Of course, you knew there was no such disposition on the States authorities?

A. I certainly felt it, and think so yet. I think the landing was and the marines have been kept there ever since, in my opin-United States considered was for the good of Haiti. And, in any way the Marine Corps for their action in Haiti, no them more praise than I have given them in my annual reports and in my report of my inspection down there, and in m

I saw the construction of roads, I saw prisons cleaned up as clean

Senator POMERENE. You speak of the construction of roads.
roads being constructed under the supervision of the marines?

Gen. BARNETT. The gendarmerie.

Senator POMERENE. How was the labor performed, and who paid

Gen. BARNETT. They were under the corvee system at that time.

Senator POMERENE. Who was it that issued these orders for the marines do it?

Gen. BARNETT. The gendarmerie, which was a part of the Ha ment; that is according to Haitian law.

Senator POMERENE. As I understand, under that system down tives may be directed to do a certain number of days' work on the

Gen. BARNETT. That is the corvee system.

Senator POMERENE. And did you find any opposition to that or

Gen. BARNETT. I heard none.

Senator POMERENE. How were these men fed?

Gen. BARNETT. Fed by the gendarmerie.

Senator POMERENE. Who furnished the provisions?

Gen. BARNETT. The gendarmerie.

Senator POMERENE. And that was by the Haitian Government?

Gen. BARNETT. That is a part of the Haitian Government; it is of the Haitian Government.

Senator POMERENE. No part of that was furnished by our mar

Gen. BARNETT. The officers of the gendarmerie were marines.

Senator POMERENE. Were they furnished good food?

Gen. BARNETT. As far as I saw. I only saw one meal. I saw working on the road, and when I passed there it was lunch time the only meal I saw.

Senator POMERENE. There have been conflicting statements ma committee, so far as I have heard them. One was to the effect t were eager to work there on the road, because they got better fo wise. The other was to the effect that many of these men were i there under what was something akin to a peonage system, and Did you observe anything which would—

Gen. BARNETT. I heard nothing and observed nothing to that have stated in this final report of mine, I had heard rumors only substantiation for them whatever. I do not even remember wh said it, but I heard rumors to the effect that the corvee system of trouble, on account of abuse by having natives from one pro on the roads in another, contrary to the law. I do not know wh true or not.

Senator POMERENE. We had a rule, or did have until very re country, in different States, that the taxpayers or men who were work a certain length of time on the roads?

Gen. BARNETT. At one time I remember the Secretary of the about some objection to the corvee system, and I happened to b at that time, and the Secretary of the Navy made practically t ment that you have made, that that was the common custom in It was done under Haitian law. Whether or not the corvee sys abused I have no knowledge whatever except these rumors, and stantiate them in any way whatever. I do not even know wh from. But the officers who were on duty in Haiti with the gend to be able to state fully about that.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you another question. As I we have charge of the customs down there, have we not?

Gen. BARNETT. That, Senator, I can not answer any questions o because it was under a different department entirely. We ha ever to do with it.

Senator POMERENE. You got no information which would lead an opinion as to whether it was satisfactorily administered or not

Gen. BARNETT. None whatever, because I never had the slightes slightest knowledge with respect to the customs. That was h under the—I forget what they call him—I think it is the receiv

Senator POMERENE. Well, from the standpoint of law and orde you were down there last was there then a necessity for our m there?

think so undoubtedly.

E. Why?

Because I think that Haiti has the best Government and the best that it has had in 100 years. I think the improvements we have made in the asylums, in the prisons, in the schools, and in the hospitals are almost entirely due to the marines.

E. Well, you had the different revolutionary factions there, think so.

E. And you think the demoralized condition of the island is?

It seemed so to me. I think it got to be in a condition where it was necessary to have a stable government.

E. Is it your judgment from what you have seen down there for us to continue our marines there?

For the present I unhesitatingly say so.

E. For how long a time would you say?

That I think is utterly impossible to answer. It depends on

E. Did you discover that the nationals of other countries, Germans, or British, or French, had any objection to our having

I heard none. I went to a dinner given by the American minister and another luncheon given by the President.

E. Who was the American minister at that time?

M. Baily-Blanchard, a man from Louisiana. He had been secretary of the legation in Paris, and was afterwards made minister at Haiti.

E. To say, I went to a dinner given by him, and to a luncheon given by the President, where we met practically all the different representatives of the Prince, and I heard of no complaint whatever.

E. The interchange of letters between yourself and Col. Russell in October, 1919, have you heard anything from which you could confirm or deny Spear's statements before the court-martial gave an accurate account of the conditions there on which he was

I have not heard. As I say, shortly after these letters were written in September and October, 1919, Col. Russell was ordered to make this report, and that is the only information I have had, because of the time that I was relieved as commandant of the Marine Corps, and I have not seen, except in a casual report, and that is the only information I have had, because of the report of the court of inquiry, of which Admiral Mayo was

E. Now, you understand my question was wider than one directed at the reports. What I would like to know is if since the time in October, 1919, you have heard from any source whatsoever any report, and that is the only information I have had, because of the report of the court of inquiry, of which Admiral Mayo was

I have heard no facts whatever. I have heard rumors that there were certain affairs down there, but they were the merest

E. Let me ask you in that connection, General, following the court-martial, was just being asked you, how long has Lieut. Spear been

I do not know. I do not know when he resigned.

E. Is he a West Pointer?

Yes, sir; he came in the Marine Corps during the war.

E. He was a civilian before that?

Yes, sir; and I think he is a civilian now.

E. Do you know him personally?

No, sir; I never saw him.

E. You have no means of judging of him temperamentally,

No, at all. I never saw the man and never heard of him in connection.

E. Do you know what his business was prior to going into

Gen. BARNETT. No.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know whether he had any experience in martial matters or legal matters?

Gen. BARNETT. No knowledge whatever.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know what Lieut. Spear's duty had been in the time he acted as counsel for these accused?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know what regulations, if any, there were reported by the Marine Corps of any occasions when natives met in the hands of members of the Marine Corps, either by authorized or by battle casualty?

Gen. BARNETT. I only know the custom of the service which would require, of course, a report of any deaths. Even after an engagement, a report is made of the number killed, as far as they could get at it; killed and maimed, as far as it was possible to find out, of course, in a short time, and regulations, without any specific orders whatever, would absolutely require reports as to killings.

Mr. HOWE. Did you understand Lieut. Spear's remarks to the effect that he referred to killing by marines not subsequently reported officially?

Gen. BARNETT. I d.d.

Senator POMERENE. You have referred to these illegal killings, etc., and that statement seems to apply to the higher or more severe class of cases which were inflicted upon these prisoners. Did you see anything that would lead you to believe that there were other cases, where a lower grade of penalties are concerned?

Gen. BARNETT. No. My letter contained everything that I knew.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you another question. In answer to the question which I asked, you said that you discovered what you regarded as an improvement in their educational facilities, etc. I wish you would go into detail and tell the committee what led you to believe that, or what you based that conclusion. Let me say that I ask this question because it would appear from the testimony of one or more witnesses before this committee that there was no improvement in educational facilities, and that the marines and our occupancy there was simply a drain on the island's revenues.

Gen. BARNETT. I think that statement is absolutely wrong. I have no doubt that improvement has been made in many ways. I saw the report, and I say to you now, that during this trip across Haiti with the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt, we stopped at a little village and town we passed through and sent for the head of the village, and for the parish priest, and we discussed these matters with the physicians at the hospitals, and we discussed them with the natives, the people in charge of the hospitals, and we visited the prisoners, and we who had been in Haiti before saw the improvement ourselves.

Senator POMERENE. And you had been there before?

Gen. BARNETT. I had been there before, and I did not need any argument to show me whether or not improvements had been made.

Taking the matter of the prisons alone, I know that years before I came to Port au Prince and Cape Haitien were very vile places. I know that I inspected them, you could eat your dinner with perfect safety in the prison, off the floor or off any bed. The beds were bunks made of planks. And I talked with numerous people, as I say, the parish priests, the head men of every village, and we invited any criticism or question that we could ask. Mr. Roosevelt was very much interested in this thing. When he being my senior, he conducted these questionings wherever we went, with the parish priests and the head men of these villages. I do not think I had been there before, but I say that any man who had ever been there would see himself the improvement in these places, in the management of the prisons, and in the hospitals.

Senator POMERENE. Did these priests there have charge of the education of the children?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. They had control of that, I suppose? Were these schools, do you know, or were they public schools belonging to the Government?

Gen. BARNETT. I think probably they were parochial schools, but I saw were Catholic priests.

Did any of these priests or other head men make any effort to educational facilities, or hospital facilities, or any-do not think so, from the fact that when we came back, the Mayor and I were both very much pleased with our inspection of the conditions down there.

Then, as I understand you, the statements you got from the head men were merely corroborative of what your own eyes saw in condition?

Yes, sir.

Education and hospital business is concerned, I do not know of any one as a witness than Gen. E. K. Cole, who was in command at that time when we made our inspection there.

He is of the marines?

Yes, a marine—one of the best officers in the Marine Corps. He devoted his whole undivided time to it, and went from one end of the island frequently, and he was very well thought of throughout the trip wherever we went he was received most heartily.

Well, is it your belief that these people down there are ignorant and appreciate the benefits to be derived from increased education?

I do not think the mass of the people have a thought on that subject. I do not think the whole mass of the people have a single thought, that far in thought at all. They are absolutely illiterate. I do not know to-day who would vote for a change in the conditions in the island. People who are of a little higher class in education, etc., are the Government themselves.

Then you think it is a sort of conflict between the high and the low?

Yes, entirely. I do not think the mass of the people have any subject than children would.

And, in your judgment, they are sort of treated as such, that is my idea. They should be given every consideration by the Government, and should be given every facility for improvement in the future coming into control, but the people are ignorant, not fitted for it yet.

At 3.30 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

We reassembled at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of the subject. I understand there is a matter you would like to put in the record in connection with the occupation in Haiti.

At the session this morning I was asked whether any improvement had been made in the educational facilities in Haiti. I stated that I wished to state that my knowledge of that came from this trip to Haiti with the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr.

What year was that?

That was in January, 1917, and with Gen. Cole, who was in command of the Marines in Haiti at that time. I wish to say that the improvement, if not wholly, due to the general uplift of conditions in Haiti, but largely, as far as I could see, from the warm personal regard and interest held by everybody wherever we went, and the influence of the American Government in lending his personal assistance and general approval of the work wherever we went. They were largely, as far as I could see, Catholic schools. There was no law for it. We do not understand it, to take charge of education at all, no more of hospital work, but I wish to state that at a big hospital in the hands of the Catholic Church in northern Haiti—we visited it and have never seen greater affection displayed than what we saw at that hospital. He had done, not officially, but for the general help he gave in the way of moral help, moral uplift, and little things he had done for the personal way.

I think I stated very explicitly what knowledge I had with reference to the educational system. The school there was not, in my opinion, of a high status as the hospital part. They did a great deal of work there, but it was not of any treaty provision; it was done by general good feeling and understanding.

Senator ODDIE. What is your opinion regarding the action of the Marine Corps in this matter?

Gen. BARNETT. I can say that outside of the knowledge that I had of the two court-martial cases of Johnson and McQuilkin, together with the statement of Lieut. Spear, the counsel for the accused, it is the only thing I have heard in my official career against the action of the marines in Haiti. My work, in my opinion, has been splendid, and nobody has praised me for it. I did in all of my annual reports, and in my report which I made to the Secretary of the Navy when I came back from my visit to Haiti, and I say that I think they have done the country a great deal of good, and that the country is much better off for their presence there than it would have been without them.

Mr. HOWE. General, going back to the statement made by Lieut. Johnson-McQuilkin investigation, was it ever proved that the facts stated in that statement of Lieut. Spear were actually facts?

Gen. BARNETT. I have no investigation to prove that, one way or the other.

Mr. HOWE. Has it ever been shown by any reliable information that the criminal killings by marines had ever taken place in Haiti?

Gen. BARNETT. That is all the knowledge I have on the subject. I have in my original letter, and in my final report to the Secretary of the Navy, stated the whole knowledge that I have is the simple statement by Lieut. Spear. I have no other corroborative evidence whatever.

Mr. HOWE. And the subsequent investigations you are familiar with, are they not?

Gen. BARNETT. I am not familiar at all with the court of inquiry. I have not seen their report or had reported to me. I have not found.

Mr. HOWE. Were there any other proceedings besides the proceeding of the court of inquiry, which would have a bearing—

Gen. BARNETT. Yes; as I stated this morning, after I was relieved of my command of the Marine Corps I saw the report of Maj. Turner, but it was not before me as an official paper. I never passed on it, and therefore it is not clear in my mind as it probably would have been if I had been in command. I suggest, of course, that the committee get that report and read it. In my opinion is that in that report Maj. Turner stated some cases of killing, but not these; I am not sure of that.

Mr. HOWE. Were there any other investigations?

Gen. BARNETT. No; I know of no others.

Mr. HOWE. This, then, is really your statement and testimony; you have referred the committee to those published reports, making no comment of your own.

Gen. BARNETT. None whatever. I have no comment to make, because I have not seen them, except in the most casual way.

Mr. HOWE. And you have no independent knowledge of your own of the state of affairs or facts?

Gen. BARNETT. None whatever.

Mr. HOWE. Did the entrance into the war of the United States have any effect of changing the personnel of the higher Marine Corps officers in Haiti?

Gen. BARNETT. It did change a great many; it changed the officers because it was my desire, when the war came on in Europe, to send to France of the older, deserving officers and men to France as possible, because I recognized the fact that they had had a couple of years or three years' service in Haiti, and therefore they were well fitted for the work.

Mr. HOWE. Those officers who had been in charge up to the time of the entrance into the war were experienced officers of the Marine Corps, were they not?

Gen. BARNETT. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. And, in your opinion, well qualified for their duties in Haiti?

Gen. BARNETT. That is the reason I sent them there, sir.

Mr. HOWE. After we went into the war, and after this necessity arose for new personnel, were their successors down there men of equal experience and ability in your opinion?

Gen. BARNETT. I should say almost; yes, sir. I did not weigh the balance at all. Like all details in the Marine Corps, they took what was available as far as possible, for foreign service.

just ask it in this way: Those then who were there before the war had about the same rank, did they not, when they were near.

True, however, that those who came there after our entry received more rapid promotion than their predecessors; in the case of younger men?

It applied particularly not until about 1918, when our first promotions and the promotions came along with that, and naturally the rank of colonel would not have been of the rank of and had shorter periods of service in the different grades?; but God knows they had all been long enough.

Do you know whether the important steps during the occupation were the dispersal of the Haitian Senate in 1916 and 1917, were they in the State Department, or in the Navy Department, or in the now it was not in the Marine Corps; otherwise I have no doubt that was done by the admiral, and the orders did not you do not know where that determination originated? I have no knowledge whatever. My people were there simply to obey the orders which were received through the Navy that reply would be the reply to questions about most of the things taken?

with reference to finances, all with reference to the occurrence to everything except the purely military handling of those things you have no knowledge as to what department the orders originated in?

The orders did not come through me at all. I only got the orders to the marines.

A slightly different question. Was the employment under the institutions of the corvée ever referred to the head-quarters of the Marine Corps?

Never.

Do you know whether it was ever referred to the Navy Department?

I think not. I can not answer positively as to that. I know it was referred to the Marine Corps.

Did your Marine Corps officers down there were in doubt as to whom they should consult? Did they consult through the Marine

Did they ask information of the naval authorities?

Up to a certain point they would ask their own superior as a thing beyond his power to decide, he himself would refer to a naval officer.

Did you have a senior naval officer in Haiti?

Not in Haitian waters.

It is possible, then, that the employment under the United States corvée system may have been referred to the Navy?

That I am utterly sure of.

It is possible it may have been; you have no knowledge as to whether or not?

I have no knowledge as to whether it was or not. I do not know if it was possible, because I have no means of stating one way or the other.

It might have been referred to the financial advisor, but I do not know. As I stated a while ago, my understanding of it is that it was, under proper conditions, carrying out a Haitian law, under Haitian law by the Haitian troops, the gendarmerie.

The question may never have been raised and presented to me.

It may not.

As you know?

As far as I know. I know that certain orders were issued with the corvée system by the marine officers.

Mr. HOWE. To what extent was the gendarmerie under the control of the Marine Corps?

Gen. BARNETT. The gendarmerie was officered by Marine Corps commissioned officers were of the Marine Corps.

Mr. HOWE. And what authority was there for that arrangement?

Gen. BARNETT. It was a treaty arrangement, approved by Congress, by the Haitian Government and by order of the Secretary of the Navy, which stand, was approved by the Secretary of State, and certain additional provisions allowed the officers in Haiti and Santo Domingo, and that was passed by Congress, too. That is an act of Congress.

Mr. HOWE. To what treaty do you refer?

Gen. BARNETT. I refer to the treaty between the United States and Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. Of what year?

Gen. BARNETT. I have forgotten the year. It never came to me after its adoption, but I know there was a treaty, and I know Congress passed an act in 1916 authorizing the employment of marine officers in the gendarmerie, and stating definitely that their increased compensation was to come from the Haitian Government. They got their regular pay as marines and then this additional compensation. The act of Congress authorized the officers to receive compensation, because an officer in the United States would not receive remuneration from a foreign Government without a special act of Congress.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know who gave the order for the original landing at Port au Prince and at Cape Haitien?

Gen. BARNETT. I have understood it was Admiral Caperton. He gave the order.

Mr. HOWE. You have no personal knowledge of that?

Gen. BARNETT. No.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether the Navy Department or the War Department ever advanced any plans in connection with the promotion of officers in Haiti?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not think they had authority to, accordingly I think it was all done by moral suasion, by general example, and by the encouragement of the officers.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know of any recommendations which were made to obtain the authority of law?

Gen. BARNETT. They have tried to get authority of law, but it has not been granted yet, according to my understanding.

Mr. HOWE. By "they" whom do you mean?

Gen. BARNETT. Congress.

Mr. HOWE. Who has tried?

Gen. BARNETT. The Navy Department.

Mr. HOWE. What did you understand to be the function of the gendarmerie in Haiti. General?

Gen. BARNETT. I understand the function of the Marine Corps in Haiti consists of two things: First, that a portion of the officers and the men of the Marine Corps are detailed to the gendarmerie by special order. That is, they are detailed to the gendarmerie. Although the gendarmerie officer gets pay from the Haitian Government, in any emergency he is still a marine and still under the command of the senior marine officer there. The senior marine officer is in command with all the marines under his command, and the function of the Marine Corps in Haiti is for the preservation of general order, which would be to put down any attack by the Cacos, so called, who are a sort of bandits. The general preservation of order throughout the country.

Mr. HOWE. What is the relation, for instance, between the Haitian Government and the marines?

Gen. BARNETT. So far as I know, there is no principle connection between the Haitian Government and the marines proper, except the marines who are in the gendarmerie. I do know that the senior marine officer in Haiti, been in frequent conferences with the President of the Haitian cabinet, giving them advice, but how strong the advice was I do not know.

Mr. HOWE. Did the American minister exercise any control over the marines?

Gen. BARNETT. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Did any of the American-appointed civilian officials exercise control over the marines?

Gen. BARNETT. Only the financial advisor, with reference to the money. The gendarmerie and the marine officers of the gendarmerie.

rough the financial advisor, and the financial advisor from t, I think, quarterly, allotted to the chief of the gendar-marine officer, an allocation of funds for the upkeep of every capacity—military stores, building equipment, arms, and everything for the quarter.

The financial advisor was not authorized to give any direc-tant of the marines down there?

He whatever.

commanding officer, I mean.

He whatever.

were the general or specific instructions issued through merican forces in Haiti, regarding armed conflicts and deal-similar subjects?

did not give the order. A man was sent down there to country, most of the time, if not all the time, was under man on the spot, where there is martial law, has absolute ary situation, and he reported to headquarters, the Navy y reported to the Marine Corps practically through headference to the orders I gave. We did not attempt in any individual action of any body of troops in Haiti. That tary commander, who was a naval officer. The naval understand it, did not in any way attempt to take charge e military procedure, per se. That was left to the senior ast direct knowledge or opportunity to judge of the feeling ard the American occupation was in 1917, during your at was the last time I have ever seen or talked to a you any means of judging or saying whether or not there in the attitude of the Haitians since that time?

ave not.

l, is there any matter which you think you could or should sent time which would be of assistance to the committee understanding of the affairs in Haiti?

do not think so. I think I have stated everything that nowledge, and the action that I took on the things which ot know of anything. As I have stated before, I have no of any trouble in Haiti. I know simply from official reme, and I have told you this morning the action I took em.

Mr. Howe, I will say that naturally, being given orders of the Navy to make a report on everything that happened me the marines first landed there until I was relieved as Marine Corps. I made this report, which certainly con-ing I could find in the Navy Department, assisted by he historical section, everything relating to what occurred commandant of the Marine Corps.

pt. Angell has asked permission to ask some questions, and he did the other day, and we are not establishing any ais, but it is simply as a matter of courtesy.

m willing to answer any questions anybody asks me.

o the gendarmerie, General, you have testified that the rmerie were of the Marine Corps, and so provided for do you know who chose, or rather, who was responsible organization of the personnel of the gendarmerie? I do not officers of the Marine Corps.

as responsible for it, I think. I signed the orders, but I uggestions from different officers and different members of u time to time officers were sent to Haiti, and from time n command of the gendarmerie in Haiti would state to rine officer in Haiti that there were certain vacancies in the senior marine officer in Haiti would make a report to tain people. These people had to be mentioned by name to the President of the United States to be detailed to the they could draw the extra pay as gendarmerie officers.
an officer was detailed to the gendarmerie the final order y the President of the United States.

Mr. ANGELL. When you used the expression "these people," you meant the members of the Marine Corps who were detailed to duty as officers of the gendarmerie?

Gen. BARNETT. Certainly.

Mr. ANGELL. I referred more to the whole plan of organization and choice of the general personnel of the gendarmerie.

Gen. BARNETT. That was sent by the senior officer of the gendarmerie, the senior marine officer and approved by him and sent to me and approved by me.

Mr. ANGELL. In other words, it was done by the Marine Corps and the Haitian Government at all?

Gen. BARNETT. Not at all; it was done by the Marine Corps, of course.

Mr. ANGELL. Did the officers of the gendarmerie choose the enlistment of the gendarmerie?

Gen. BARNETT. Undoubtedly; they were all Haitians.

Mr. ANGELL. Did they take and train men from among the Haitians?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not know what their scheme of enlistment was. They had that in charge the same as officers here who were in charge of the enlistments for the Marine Corps.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know what attempts, if any, was made, to make native Haitian officers in the gendarmerie, as provided for in article 10 of the original treaty?

Gen. BARNETT. Our intention was originally as fast as possible to make Haitians junior officers and see if they could not soon be in a position to be captains of companies. That was thought of at that time.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know how far that original plan was pursued?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not know. That was left entirely to the gendarmerie. It was under Haitian control entirely.

Mr. ANGELL. When you say under Haitian control—

Gen. BARNETT. I mean under Haitian control according to the treaty. They were essentially Haitian troops and they were paid by the Haitian Government.

Mr. ANGELL. And the choice?

Gen. BARNETT. Entirely with the marines.

Mr. ANGELL. This morning you made reference, General, to the roads?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. In Haiti?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. By or under the direction of the marines or gendarmerie?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And for what purpose were those roads built?

Gen. BARNETT. For the general purpose that they would be of use in any country in the world. You can not have good military control; you can not have good business; you can not have good anything in any country without good roads. It took me four days to go from Port au Prince to Cape Haïtien through the mountains, over a road which originally had been a carriage road, according to history, and in many places it was impossible to get over it on horseback, and it was utterly impossible of traffic to go over, except the roughest sort of pack animals. The road was made from Port au Prince, up through St. Marc, up around the coast to Haïtien and Ouanaminthe, and they made such a good road there. I reported to me later that the chief of the gendarmerie took the road from Haïtien to Port au Prince to Ouanaminthe in 13 hours in an automobile. Senator ODDIE. How many miles is that?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not remember the number of miles, but it is a long road. It took us four days, traveling on horseback, on a hard ride, riding a day.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the principal purpose of building the roads that of military necessity?

Gen. BARNETT. I think that was the first thing that would naturally occur to a military man, and did occur to them, that before they could move troops out in the interior they had to have roads whereby they could move the commands with the necessary equipment and food, and everything to keep up a military establishment, and it was much easier for us to move our troops in the interior by truck than it was by pack animal, and we had to get the roads in such a condition that a truck could go over them.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the statement contained in paragraph 3 of a letter of the brigade commander, dated June 19, 1919, appearing in paragraph 3 of the report of the committee on the subject of the occupation of Haiti, that the roads were built for military necessity?

Digitized by Google

Americans on the part of many classes of the people. Do you recall you give us any of the causes of that changed attitude in the spring of 1917?

Gen. BARNETT. I have no doubt that the report referred to in the graphs was largely the result of the trip Gen. Cole made with us from Port au Prince to Cape Haitien overland on horseback in January, which gave Gen. Cole a chance to see all parts of Haiti with us, and that time he saw the changed conditions, and saw they were as I reported. I came back, very favorable indeed.

Mr. ANGELL. Paragraph 171 reads:

"On May 29, 1917, Brig. Gen. Cole reported that he had made no locate causes for hostile attitude, but without success; and while his presence"—

Gen. BARNETT. It was constantly changing from day to day. It reports all the time that there would be an uprising here and an uprising when things had been very quiet.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you any recollection, then, as to what the cause was for this change, this newly hostile attitude?

Gen. BARNETT. No; I would not have known.

Mr. ANGELL. At the time of your trip to and through Haiti in January, when you, as you testified this morning, spoke to a great many people in the towns, was there no mention made to you and did you hear of anything of the forcible closing and dispersal of the Haitian Senate and Legislature in 1916?

Gen. BARNETT. It was never mentioned to me. Secretary Ransome with me, but whether or not he discussed anything of that kind with Haitian officials or Haitians in general I do not know. I was not a part of any such discussion.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you converse directly with the natives or through an interpreter?

Gen. BARNETT. Through an interpreter entirely. Secretary Ransome spoke French very often, and very often he conducted the questioning.

Mr. ANGELL. To come back once more to the question of the conditions in educational conditions in the schools, can you give us specific instances of such improvement as you say took place or along what lines was there improvement?

Gen. BARNETT. We visited the big hospital and school parishes. I mention one of the most pronounced cases, in north Haiti. I had heard of the old gentleman's name now, but he was one of the old type of men, priests, and he collected around him all of the sisters, and had no interest only of the hospital work but of the school work, and he was most anxious about the improved conditions and what Gen. Cole personally had done for them.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know what Gen. Cole had done, or what the man said he had done?

Gen. BARNETT. No; I only know that he was expressing himself as being delighted with Gen. Cole's attitude and what Gen. Cole had done.

Mr. ANGELL. So far as you know there was no fund placed at the disposal of the marines or gendarmerie for educational purposes, was there?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not think so.

Mr. ANGELL. So that Gen. Cole could not have done anything through his personal influence or—

Gen. BARNETT. Sympathy.

Mr. ANGELL. Sympathy?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Nothing tangible that could have been accomplished through the closing of schools or—

Gen. BARNETT. I think not.

Mr. ANGELL. Or the hiring of additional teachers?

Gen. BARNETT. He had no authority for that. I stated in my testimony some time ago that the Navy Department had been trying to get something which would give them authority to allocate money for that, but I think they have gotten it yet.

Mr. ANGELL. It is true, is it not, General, that a number of men in Haiti have made recommendations or requests for permission to attempt to improve educational facilities in Haiti?

Gen. BARNETT. I think so; undoubtedly.

eral, scattered through your report are various official reports from the marines and gendarmes, on the one hand, and the cacos, principally cacos, upon the other hand, as the result of which were casualties amounting to 2,250, I believe are the

es.
the natives and either 14 or 16—
very small number.

very small number for the marines and gendarmes during by your report, which is five years?

es.
t have you to say, if anything, regarding the striking configures covering the casualties?

was largely like it was in the Philippines. There were a down there who would be friends to-day and so-called Cacos ad no uniform, and it was hard to distinguish one from the re not well armed. They were brave, but they would have ell-armed troops, especially with machine guns, and it is suppose that the contrast would be very marked and that a should be killed in comparison with the number of white lled.

that extent were machine guns used, do you know?
do not. They had them there and used them if they found there an artillery battalion?

es; and they likewise used airplanes.
ou know to what extent they used airplanes?

o.
e airplanes used to bomb out supposed nests of Cacos?
do not know the particular uses to which they were put. The to the commanding officer from them would not necessarily in your opinion, the contrast between the figures of the re-on both sides were due largely to the superior military pment of our forces?

ntirely so, I think. Every marine is a good shot, almost of what extent, if you know, were offensive operations, in the use, taken by our forces in Haiti against the natives?

the particular one was the capture of Fort Riviere. That was ir.

t was the affair when there were 51 Haitians killed but no side?

was quite an affair. The Haitians were not well armed, and fought to the best of their ability.

t is covered by paragraph 118 of your report?

ort Riviere was captured on November 17, 1915, the message Waller containing the following description:

t Riviere effected by four columns. Campbell, Thirteenth marine detachment Connecticut; Low, Fifth Company; a company from Connecticut; and automatic machine-gun nty-third Company. All companies were in their position at nd Butler and Low's company made the assault, supported panies. Hand-to-hand conflict in fort lasted 10 minutes.
and twenty-two jumped parapet, but all were killed by matics, all avenues of escape being blocked. Forty-seven ble ammunition found in fort after capture. Fort of mortar substantial construction. The fact that this fort was taken ualty on our side speaks worlds for the ability and good ers concerned. Have sent to the cape for dynamite to destroy e destruction by blowing up will have great moral effect.
ople returning to town."

s that operation fairly characteristic of the operations in y our forces against the natives?

should say that was a sample. They had a little better pro-they would have ordinarily, it being an old fort on a high

Mr. ANGELL. The operations conducted by us were, in the strict offensive operations?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes; except in one case, where the natives attacked Prince one night.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know what the approximate casualties suffered in that attack on Port au Prince were?

Gen. BARNETT. In the attack itself and the subsequent operations were followed out into the mountains, etc., I think the exact number killed.

Mr. ANGELL. Those operations extended over a considerable time afterwards?

Gen. BARNETT. Several months.

Mr. ANGELL. In your opinion, General, was the method of operations used by our forces against the natives as typified by the attack on Jacmel genuinely necessary in the best interests of the maintenance of order?

Gen. BARNETT. I think it was. I have great confidence in the officer who was there at that time, Gen. Cole, and Gen. Waller also.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring to the proclamation which was published August 22, 1919, by the brigade commander, as appears and is reproduced on page 83, reading, "Citizens of Haiti: The time has come to stop to further bloodshed. It has been necessary to use stern measures to suppress the disorders in the north, and with the recent arrival of reinforcements we can use even sterner methods." Do you know to what that makes reference when it says, "The time has come to put a stop to bloodshed"?

Gen. BARNETT. The time to close the thing out, to stop the disorders coming down from the hills.

Mr. ANGELL. What is meant by the recent arrival of military reinforcements?

Gen. BARNETT. I imagine that means airplanes that arrived at Jacmel.

Mr. ANGELL. If I understood you right, General, this morning's proclamation, that largely as the result of your two letters to Col. Russell and that state of affairs was made in Haiti. Can you tell us what corrective specific steps were taken to correct such abuses as they had existed?

Gen. BARNETT. That was in the hands of Col. Russell, and, as of this morning, the evidence that correction had been made was that on November, 1920, Gen. Lejeune and Gen. Butler went there, under the Secretary of the Navy, and made an inspection and found things in shape.

Mr. ANGELL. You have no knowledge as to what particular steps were taken to change the state of affairs in Haiti?

Gen. BARNETT. He issued this proclamation and made it very effective. I read it to you this morning, it was a very drastic proclamation. As he said, was to be read personally to every marine in Haiti, to every officer, and to every marine arriving in Haiti at any time, and made it out. He got out his proclamation as the result of my letter and anything of that kind had existed, it must cease or they would be martialled. That is probably just what the result was.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring now, sir, to the corvée system, can you tell me in detail what abuses there were of that system?

Gen. BARNETT. I can not. As stated in my report, I had simply stated that there was trouble about the corvée system, but I had no record of any specific cases as long as I was commandant of the Marine Corps.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know whether or not men were taken, and if so, were taken and forced to work outside of the district in which they lived?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know whether they were forced to work outside of the district for a period of three days?

Gen. BARNETT. I do not. That I have stated in my report. That there was trouble on account of the abuse of the corvée system, but I do not know what it came from, or what it was, I do not know.

Mr. ANGELL. So, you have no knowledge as to how widespread the abuse was, or in what particular it consisted?

Gen. BARNETT. I have not.

Mr. ANGELL. Nor who was responsible for it?

Gen. BARNETT. I have not.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you any knowledge at all as to why the corvée system continued, as seems to be the case from official correspondence, in the Hinche district?

have understood from the reports I have seen since that I spoke of this morning, the report made by Maj. Turner, of the Northern Province, Hinche, it was continued contrary to orders, and he was responsible for it probably was the officer in command of the Northern Haiti.

What was that?

Maj. Wells, I think.

Do you know definitely that it was continued in violation of the senator, when you were not here this morning I stated that the report just mentioned, which was made by Maj. Turner, did not come up to the time I left the Marine Corps headquarters, but that this committee is going to request it, and that will probably give me knowledge whatever first hand of the abuses of the system. In connection with what I stated a moment ago about Fort Riviere, I will now read here paragraph 119 of my report:

No. 319, August 25, 1917, announces the award of medals to officers and enlisted men for gallantry in capturing Fort de la Riviere. The order reads in part as follows."

For what they were given this medal of honor. There are also showing the approval of the Navy Department of that the general, do you know how thorough an inquiry the court of inquiry by Admiral Mayo made into the Haitian question?

I have no knowledge of that. I only know, as I stated this morning in reference to their finding, that that was the only part that was on the record of the court of inquiry is before this committee.

Who were the members of that court?

Admiral Mayo, Admiral Oliver, and Gen. Neville.

What was of the Marine Corps?

Admiral Mayo was of the Marine Corps, and Maj. Dyer was judge advocate.

Who was Gen. Neville on duty at that time he was assigned to duty at the headquarters of the Marine Corps as assistant commandant? What was after you were relieved as commandant?

After I was relieved; yes, sir. I was relieved on June 30, Admiral Oliver been governor of the Virgin Islands?

I had two of three years—two years, I think.

Do you know whether there were any charges, official or unofficial, made or suggested against him arising out of his administration in the Virgin Islands?

I heard rumors. I never saw any trouble or paper on the subject, nor ever heard anything definite at all. I never saw any official report. Do you do not know whether in that particular he was to a great interested party?

I had no knowledge of any trouble in the Virgin Islands at all.

What was the court of inquiry—I do not know how they conducted the thing of that kind—but my only interest in it was in their report. It was worded so badly that everybody misunderstood. I do not say a few people, but I say that everybody misunderstood it was a severe censure of me.

While Mr. Angell is looking at his notes I would like to ask a question. When I was in Haiti a little over a year ago I was told that a number of the natives had been butchered, and their bodies had been devoured by the natives. Did you, when you went down there, learn anything? I did not. I heard nothing up to the time I left. I do know from the report that two American engineers down there were tied up and killed, and sent to pieces by the natives. Those people were tried by a court, sentenced to be shot—or hanged, I have forgotten which—their execution was approved in this country.

Did you not discover that a number of marines had been killed and have, undoubtedly.

STANDARD LIBRARIES

Senator KING. You reported that?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes; I reported it in here. That was to be a country where war was going on.

Senator KING. This was told me by the natives as well as that one marine in particular had his head cut off, and his skull in some of their incantations there; did you hear of that?

Gen. BARNETT. I did not hear of it, but I can well understand it.

Senator KING. In performing their libations they had used a marine. I was told also that there were a number of natives at Port au Prince—possibly in some other city, I am not sure of a trial for the butchery of one or more little children, whose blood in their rituals, in their pagan, religious ceremonials.

Gen. BARNETT. Yes.

Senator KING. Did you learn what became of those natives awaiting trial?

Gen. BARNETT. No, sir; I did not; I have no report on that subject. Mr. HOWE. General, in answering Mr. Angell's questions concerning engagements and casualties in Haiti you, of course, rely on the officers down there?

Gen. BARNETT. Entirely; it is all in here.

Mr. HOWE. You had no personal knowledge of it?

Gen. BARNETT. None whatever; I took the official reports.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Angell used the expression "offensive operation" in a strictly military sense, and that was the expression used in connection with the question to you with regard to the capture of Fort Riviere?

Gen. BARNETT. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. You did not conceive that to mean an unprovoked and unnecessary operation?

Gen. BARNETT. Not at all. I used "offensive" in the strictly military meaning that they went after them; they did not wait to be attacked after them.

Mr. HOWE. And the operation being carried out had the approval of the Department?

Gen. BARNETT. Not only the approval of the Navy Department, but the approval of the Navy Department that for that affair alone they were awarded medals of honor.

Mr. HOWE. You were asked a question by Mr. Angell as to whether the operation was characteristic of the many other operations in Haiti. It was. In what respect was the capture of Fort Riviere characteristic of other operations?

Gen. BARNETT. Simply because they went after them. They went after the Cacos wherever they met any of them.

Mr. HOWE. Not after the Haitians in general?

Gen. BARNETT. Not at all. They only went after the Cacos, which was typical in that, as I said, at Fort Riviere the Haitians had no protection than they had in most cases, because it was an old fort on a high mountain.

Mr. HOWE. General, in connection with a question asked by Mr. Cerning Gen. Cole's investigation for a hostile attitude toward the United States, I would like to read you sections 169 and 171 of your report. 169 reads as follows:

"On May 28, 1917, Brig. Gen. Cole reported that the British Consul had informed him that he was much worried over the propaganda being spread against the Americans and the changed attitude of the Americans on the part of many classes of people."

"171. On May 29, 1917, Brig. Gen. Cole reported that he had located causes for hostile attitude, but without success, and while his presence believed the belief of the British chargé to be caused by the fact that he lived with an 'alarmist.'"

Do you not think those two sections which I have just read you are a full reply to the question asked you by Mr. Angell?

Gen. BARNETT. I think undoubtedly they are a very good answer. I have heard rumors constantly about propaganda started by German agents there.

Mr. HOWE. But the fact remained that a rumor of a grievance among the Americans led, on an investigation, to the discovery of no special specific cases. I find here in the report, in reply to the Senator King about marines being cut up, that there is one follows:

been removed from the body of Lieut. Muth. The body had been cut out, and heart cut off. The underclothing had been taken away, and the latter probparagraph 251 of my report.

May I inquire, relative to the same military operations to which I directed your attention, whether those against whom you were seeking the overthrow of the existing government, and the operations of the American troops or marines was with the knowledge and approval, if not the direction, of the Haitian Government?

was in both cases.

Were any of the military operations there contrary to the consent and the native officials?

I think not.

Were they in harmony with their views?

As far as I know.

Was it aimed at the protection of law and order?

I think that without a force of marines there they would not have known it.

In connection with Senator King's last question, do you know of any military seizure of the customhouses in August and September, without the approval of the President and Government of Haiti?

I do not. You will have to ask, if you have not already, Admiral

I was not there, and Admiral Caperton was.

As to Mr. Angell's questions he asked you about the abuses of the corvée. You know that the corvée did exist there as a system, do you have you any knowledge of any abuse of that system?

I have the slightest first-hand knowledge at all, sir.

Did it exist as a system before the American troops went into Haiti? Just when it had been invoked I do not know whenever it became necessary to build roads.

Do you know whether there is any comparison between that tax system in some of the States?

I have understood it is largely the same, where a man may be required to pay so much tax. I know out West it was quite a common thing to have a boy.

The committee adjourned until Wednesday, October 26, 1921, at

OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, Senator residing.

Oddie and Pomerene.

Ernest Angell, Mr. Horace G. Knowles and Maj. Edwin N.
States Marine Corps, and Walter Bruce Howe, Esq., in their ative capacities as hereinbefore indicated.

MAJ. T. C. TURNER, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS.

Major, give your full name and rank and your position in

C. Turner, major United States Marine Corps; in charge of headquarters, Marine Corps.

how long have you been in the Marine Corps?

Since January, 1901.

you in Haiti in the years 1919 and 1920?

Arrived in Haiti October 1, 1919, and left there on November you, while down there, make an investigation of certain s in Haiti?

Yes, sir.

Were you the commanding officer?

Yes, sir; I was the brigade adjutant and acting chief of

Who was the officer in command at that time?

John H. Russell.

you state, please. Major, in connection with this investiga-when you received your orders and when you began the in-the orders came through Col. Russell, from the headquarters

Yes, sir. I started the investigation about October 5, and I think that year?

Yes, sir. I think it was completed sometime during the month of the year.

Investigation which we are now talking about, covered, did things, the actions of Lieut. Williams, Lieut. Freeman testimony by Lieut. Van Horn?

Yes, sir. I do not remember that Lang's name was mentioned. Wil-do not remember that Van Horn's was.

Is there is a sworn statement of Lieut. Van Horn's here in not certain whether it was taken by you. I merely asked the to identify this report.

Yes, sir. You made a written report?

Yes, sir.

To whom?

Col. Russell.

Give that report here. Will you please give us a full descrips of making this investigation and taking the testimony?

Maj. TURNER. As I remember it, Col. Russell called me and a letter received from the major general commandant, and at the same time an order to me to make an investigation on the contents of the letter from the major general commandant.

Mr. HOWE. Does this document which I hand you contain the results of the investigation [handing document to Maj. Turner]?

Maj. TURNER. It does.

Mr. HOWE. Is this the original?

Maj. TURNER. No; it is not.

Mr. HOWE. I notice here that there appears to be the signatures of some of the sworn statements. It occurs to me to ask. Is this the original in so far as these sworn statements go?

Maj. TURNER. This is a part of the second part of the investigation. Lieut. Col. Hooker and myself took part. This is not the first part at all.

Mr. HOWE. Will you, taking that document by pages, indicate where the report begins and where it ends—where the first part begins and where the second part begins?

Maj. TURNER. This is in reference to an investigation made by me and myself.

Senator POMERENE. I would like to have the major give the details of the charges made, which he was to investigate, and give us a general statement of the conditions as he found them. I can understand how he can verify his memory by referring to the record later, but he can give us the substance of that, which will give us a bird's-eye view of it, and give us a reference to the record afterwards and read such parts of the record as will be of assistance.

Mr. HOWE. As I understand it, a part of this document which is this report will be put into the record later?

Senator POMERENE. Yes; but he can state what the charges were.

Maj. TURNER. As I remember the letter, it stated that during a court-martial the counsel for the accused had made various statements about the charges. I took this letter and attempted to investigate the contents of the letter, but was unable to get anything on that one particular case.

My investigation brought me to other matters that looked as if there were irregularities committed by marines down there.

Senator POMERENE. Now, be more specific. That is a very general statement. What kind of irregularities were they?

Maj. TURNER. The killing of prisoners.

Senator POMERENE. Go ahead.

Maj. TURNER. I went to Col. Russell and spoke to him about it. He told me to go to the bottom of it and get everything out of it I could. There was no difference what happened.

I examined a great number of witnesses, and the more I examined the more witnesses the more firmly convinced I became that there was little to be made of the whole thing.

The reports would come to me that certain prisoners had been killed. The deeper I went into it it looked as if the killings were a fact. I am not sure of fact—

Mr. HOWE. The killing of prisoners?

Maj. TURNER. The killing of prisoners. As a matter of fact, in one case, and that is in the case of Lavole, where I considered that he had been killed in an irregular manner.

Senator POMERENE. Give us the particulars of that case.

Maj. TURNER. That was some time in January, 1919, where I considered that Lavole had machine-gunned some 15 or 19 prisoners in a graveyard of the town of Hinche, but there was no evidence, nor could I find anything to that.

Senator POMERENE. Was this man Lavole a marine?

Maj. TURNER. Lavole was a sergeant of marines, and during the time mentioned, in January, 1919, he was a captain in the Haitian gendarmerie.

Senator POMERENE. How many were killed at that time?

Maj. TURNER. I am inclined to believe it was 19.

Senator POMERENE. Nineteen native prisoners?

Maj. TURNER. That was the report.

Senator POMERENE. What was the irregularity about it?

irregularity was that Lavoie was alleged to have taken and shot them in the graveyard outside of Hinche.

Q. What was their offence?

A.

Q. Was there had been no trial; is that it?

A. They were captured caco prisoners.

Q. Do I understand you to say that a marine had done this martial proceeding?

A. That is what was alleged.

Q. Where is this man Lavoie?

A. Lavoie left Haiti, and I do not know where he is now.

Q. Is he still with the Marines?

A. No, sir; he is not; he left Haiti some years ago.

Q. That is one instance, and there were 19 men killed?

A. That is alleged.

Q. That was something of an irregularity, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you talk with Lavoie yourself?

A. No, sir.

Q. What did he say about it?

A. I would like to take a look at his testimony before saying that. I saw him exactly just now. This was a couple of years ago.

Q. I can understand how you will want to be accurate about it. Is it accurate. I thought perhaps you could give us, in a general claim was, and then you could supplement that later.

A. I remember it, I think he denied it, but I am not sure of it.

Q. Then you had better look that up and get all the facts.

A. You say there were other irregularities complained of. What irregularities were there?

A. Everything, Senator—everything; but, traced down, it was

Q. Go into the details as to what they were.

A. Rape, murder, and robbery.

Q. Did you satisfy yourself that there was nothing in these to understand that you were not able to get any proof as they occurred?

A. I was satisfied after the investigation that they were untrue. It did fall off to an end without being able to give me any definite

Q. When you speak of your witnesses, do you speak of natives

A. Natives and whites. Quite a number of these were not called into question because after talking to them I was convinced that

Q. That is of no value whatever. I put in the investigation the testimony which was of value. The rest was all hearsay.

A. Did you trace that hearsay evidence down to get hold of the primary knowledge of it?

A. No, sir; and could not get them; there was not anybody.

Q. Let us go back to this Lavoie matter again. Did his superior have any knowledge on this subject?

A. I do not think so at the time; no.

Q. Did they make any attempt to investigate this matter?

A. That I do not know. I think there was an investigation by the court-martial in 1919. I believe—that is my belief—that that matter was investigated, but how deeply he went into it I do not know.

Q. I think you ought to go very carefully into that record. Have you any matter and we ought to know exactly what the facts are

A. Yes, sir. Lavoie was discharged from the Marine Corps in 1919 and took a position with the sugar company down there, and later on went into the customs service, and later on left Haiti.

Q. What other investigation did you make? You say there were alleged irregularities, and you found nothing.

A. I investigated to find if I could put anything in this report of value. But there was nothing else found.

Senator POMERENE. What was the substance of your conclusion?
 Maj. TURNER. I made no conclusions. I was ordered to make a report, but not to give an opinion or a conclusion. The conclusions are in Col. Russell's report.

Senator POMERENE. Have you since gone over his conclusions?

Maj. TURNER. Col. Russell's?

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

Maj. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Do you agree with them?

Maj. TURNER. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Col. Russell, in his letter says:

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE
 UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, March 1919.

Confidential.

From: The brigade commander.

To: The Major General Commandant.

Subject: Report of investigation of certain irregularities alleged to have been committed by officers and enlisted men in the Republic of Haiti.

1. From a careful reading and study of the attached testimony and other reports, I am reluctantly forced to the opinion that Major Wells, formerly gendarmerie department commander in northern Haiti, is responsible for the conditions in northern Haiti as found by Brigadier General Wells on his inspection of the Hinche-Maïssade districts in March, 1919. The conditions were not actually due to his orders and instructions.

2. I am further of the opinion that these gendarmerie officers, who were in Major Wells's command who were enlisted men in the Marine Corps, or who were in the districts, were acting in accordance with what they believed to be the policy of their department commander.

3. It is difficult to believe that Capt. Doxey was not fully acquainted with Major Wells's policy and of the existing orders and conditions in the Hinche district.

4. There is no doubt, however, in my mind, as to whether or not the evidence as here brought out is sufficient to warrant a trial before a court-martial on charges of such a serious nature. It is extremely doubtful whether the evidence can be procured.

5. The event referred to herein occurred over a year ago. Many of the persons taken place in the personnel of the gendarmerie since that time. Some of the interested parties have either returned to the United States or have been discharged from the service. Mr. Lavoie, former captain G. D. H. of the United States Marine Corps, has left the service and Haiti, and his present whereabouts is unknown.

6. It is therefore recommended that these papers be referred to the Judge Advocate General, United States Navy, where the sworn statements and other evidence may be carefully sifted and weighed with a view to determining whether or not it is sufficient to warrant a trial.

7. If the decision is in the affirmative, it is requested that specifications be prepared by the Judge Advocate General, United States Navy, that a competent officer be assigned to temporary duty with this command as judge advocate of the court. At present, there is no officer at the brigade who is considered to have sufficient legal knowledge to conduct a trial to the best interest of the Government, where skilled opposing counsel is required.

8. The return to Haiti of all witnesses and interested parties, of course, be necessary.

JOHN T. WELLS

This sergeant certainly did not use the machine gun himself, but he has had some privates doing it: did he not?

Maj. TURNER. I do not remember whether the gendarmerie privates did it or not, but I am inclined to believe that Lavoie was supposed to have been the one to remember.

Senator POMERENE. I wish you would look up that record and see what the memory about that. We want to know what did occur down there and ought to have the facts.

Maj. TURNER. Yes, sir.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

reassembled, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2 o'clock will McCormick (chairman) presiding.

Turner, how many investigations did you make down there you subdivide any of your investigations?

There was one main investigation, and later on, in January or February, Hooker was ordered to assist me in making further investigation, the fact that my duty at that time would not permit me to go to visit the different points where information might be gained.
 Investigation was made by me between October—I think about the middle of the month—until the latter part of November.
 The first investigation was begun at the direction of Col. Rusg, sir.

 In connection with that letter sent by Gen. Barnett to Col.
 Turner, dated September 27, 1919?

Yes.
 It was referred to you and you were told to investigate, with no starting point or basis—
 the investigation; yes.

Yes, as I understand it, major, you investigated during the re-middle of the month of October and began to take written testimony on or?

Yes.
 That written testimony, when it was completed, you turned it in, did you not?
 Yes.

After that had been turned in that Col. Hooker was directed you in the taking of further testimony?

Yes; considerably after—two months.
 Going to ask you if this document which I hold in my hand, page 131, is not the written testimony to which we have referred you to be taken on November 3, 1919?

Yes, sir.
 Chairman, I offer for the record pages 109 to 131, inclusive.

Without objection, that will be inserted in the record.
 Inserted to is as follows:)

NOVEMBER 3, 1919.

Major C. Turner, A. A. & I., U. S. Marine Corps.
 Commander.

Investigation of certain irregularities alleged to have been committed by officers and enlisted men in the Republic of Haiti.
 Major general commandant's confidential letter dated Septemreference (a) I immediately proceeded to investigate the case. I called in Sergt. Richard R. Siegert, United States Major, duly sworn as stenographer.

JOSE BOLTE, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (corporal, United States Major, called as the first witness, was duly sworn, and testified as your name, rank, and present station.

 I, Jose Bolte, corporal, United States Marine Corps, and a captain in the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, stationed at Hinche, Republic of Haiti.
 Statements have been made that both marines and gendarmes were habit of having wounded cacos shot. Do you know anything never issued an order of that kind?

Do you know that this has been done?
 I know about it, but I have heard of it being done.
 Where did you hear this, and from whom?
 From Lieut. Floyd, Gendarmerie d'Haiti; Mr. Baker; and the Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

6. Question. Who was in command at Hinche when the last rebellion occurred?
- Answer. Capt. Kelly had it in October.
7. Question. Who relieved him?
- Answer. Capt. Lavigne.
8. Question. Who relieved him?
- Answer. Maj. Doxey.
9. Question. Were you ever instructed to make private reports on reference to operations in the Hinche district?
- Answer. Not private reports, but telegrams received through our telephone were to be kept on file at the third company office under the name of the district.
10. Question. Who gave this order?
- Answer. Col. Wells.
11. Question. Why was this order issued?
- Answer. I do not know if it was caused by this investigation which was being conducted at Hinche.
12. Question. Did Col. Wells ever instruct you to disregard telegrams received from the chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti?
- Answer. No, sir.
13. Question. Do you know whether these or any other orders were disregarded?
- Answer. No, sir.
14. Question. Do you remember when the first order against the Cacos was issued?
- Answer. The first order came out in the latter part of August.
15. Question. Was this order ever disregarded?
- Answer. I do not know that this was done. I heard it from a chief of section named Joseph Marcellia, at Hinche (Belliot) and a chief of section named Joseph Marcellia, at Albert.
16. Question. Did the priest at Hinche ever inform you that he had been there that Cacos had been killed after they had surrendered?
- Answer. Yes.
17. Question. Did anybody at Hinche tell you that?
- Answer. No one at Hinche; but a marine named Sasse told me that he had been taken out of the prison at Hinche and shot, and the priest told me the same thing.
18. Question. Who issued the order for the shooting. Do you know?
- Answer. No, sir.
19. Question. You do not know whether this was reported to Col. Wells?
- Answer. No, sir.
20. Question. While you were at the cape did a telegram show to you any considerable trouble at the district of Hinche?
- Answer. Yes.
21. Question. Between what months were those telegrams coming?
- Answer. From the 1st of January to the middle of March.
22. Question. Do you know what became of those telegrams?
- Answer. They were left in the desk of the district commander at the time.
3. Second Lieut. EDWARD J. SIEGER, (Gendarmerie d'Haiti (corps des Etats Marine Corps), was called as a witness. was duly sworn, and gave the following:
1. Question. State your name and rank.
- Answer. Edward J. Sieger, second lieutenant, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (corps des Etats Marine Corps).
2. Question. How long have you been with the Gendarmerie d'Haiti?
- Answer. Since October, 1916.
3. Question. What duty were you performing between the month of October and March, 1919?
- Answer. Patrol duty in the Hinche district.
4. Question. Did you ever see wounded Cacos killed by marines?
- Answer. No.
5. Question. Did you ever hear that it had been done?
- Answer. No.
6. Question. Did you ever hear of an order abolishing corvee?
- Answer. Yes.
7. Question. When was it issued?
- Answer. September or October, 1918.
8. Question. Did you know of any corvees after that time?

and they were running corvee in Maissade.

told you that?

tians.

was in command of Maissade at this time?

lliams.

t were your reports to Haj. Wells as to the conditions of our time in command at Thomassique?

de reports to Capt. Lavoie. I reported conditions very bad.

you ever hear that Maj. Wells had ordered Lavoie or any-disregard Maj. Wells's orders at Hinche?

ou know that they had corvees at Maissade after the order ne out?

what Haitians had told me.

ou approve of killing wounded prisoners?

you really think that conditions were good in the gen-part of 1919?

not?

came in that telephone lines were being cut and houses ou consider the Gendarmerie d'Haiti responsible for this utely responsible.

in a way?

on't know.

VERDIER, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (sergeant, United States alled as a witness, was duly sworn, and testified as follows:

your name and rank.

rdier, captain, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (sergeant, United ou ever hear of any prisoners—that is, Cacos—being shot

?

e were you stationed in 1919, up to date?

en in Ouanaminthe since September, 1918.

ou ever hear that Caco prisoners were being treated heard any remarks about it.

did the order against corvee come out?

1918.

ou ever hear that this order has been disobeyed?

at it had been disobeyed at Maissade by the magistrate.

g early part of 1919, did you have any trouble with cacos district?

uly, 1919.

ou ever hear that caco prisoners had been shot in the

at some people had been shot in the cemetery at Hinche, ther they were prisoners or cacos.

told you?

tian; I don't know his name.

ou ever speak to anyone about it?

o Capt. Kelly about it, but he said that it was not so.

was the only conversation you had on this subject?

told you of the corvee at Maissade?

member.

he white or Haitian?

e was white.

ou ever have any conversation with Capt. Bolte about maltreating them?

at I told Capt. Bolte that I had heard a rumor that they Hinche.

5. Second Lieut. P. JULES ANDRE, gendarmerie d'Haiti, w witness.

Mr. Alfred J. Holly was called as interpreter and was duly sworn. Lieut. Andre testified as follows:

1. Question. What is your name and rank?

Answer. P. Jules Andre, second lieutenant, Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

2. Question. It has been reported that there has been a lot of prisoners. Do you know anything about this?

Answer. I never witnessed any shooting, as I was at Thomom; there was some executions at Hinche and at a suburb of Hinche.

3. Question. Who was in command at these places?

Answer. Capt. Lavole.

4. Question. Did you ever hear of any other murders of any district of the north?

Answer. Yes; at Maissade, one named Garliner.

5. Question. By whose orders was the murdering done by at Maissade?

Answer. I don't know.

6. Question. Wasn't it generally known throughout the gendarmerie that these murders were the result of orders from Maj. Wells?

Answer. No.

7. Question. Can you give any reasons for these killings?

Answer. These officers acted pretty much as they liked, as they were seriously controlled by their superior officers.

8. Question. Do you know whether they had corvee at Maissade in the months of January, February, and March of this year?

Answer. They had it in December last year and in January of this year.

9. Question. By whose orders was this corvee ordered?

Answer. I don't know, but I presume it was by the order of Maj. Wells.

10. Question. Is it not generally known that this corvee was ordered by Maj. Wells?

Answer. I presume it was as he was in command of that district; orders came from him.

11. Question. What effect did this corvee have on the feeling of the north?

Answer. A very bad effect, and I think that it was the cause of the rebellion in the north.

12. Question. Did you see much of Maj. Wells?

Answer. I know him very well because he was my captain and colonel.

13. Question. Was he in the habit of using intoxicating liquors?

Answer. I never saw him intoxicated, but I know he drank.

14. Question. Do you know Maj. Doxey?

Answer. Yes, sir; very well.

15. Question. Was Maj. Doxey responsible in any way for the murders?

Answer. I think not, because he never had anything to do with the murders.

16. Question. Did Maj. Doxey know anything about the murders of prisoners at Hinche?

Answer. I don't know, because I was at the Cape and so was not at Hinche.

17. Question. Is there any bad treatment of prisoners in the present time, and if not, what is the last case of that kind you have heard of?

Answer. No; not at the present time. The last case was in the year 1911.

18. Question. Did the maltreating of prisoners stop when General Wells gave that order?

Answer. Yes.

6. FREDERICK C. BAKER was called as a witness and was duly sworn and testified as follows:

1. Question. What is your name?

Answer. Frederick C. Baker.

2. Question. Have you ever been connected with the gendarmerie and if so, for how long?

Answer. I have; I was attached to and serving with the gendarmerie for a period of three years, my service terminating April 1, 1911.

3. Question. It has been reported that marines and gendarmes were killing caco prisoners. Do you know anything about this?

hearsay.

g your time in the gendarmerie, were you ever ordered to take any prisoners?

one occasion. About November 1, 1918, while serving as District of Gonsivee, Haiti, Maissade was attacked by instructions committed there. On the date following this command, Maj. C. E. Wells, called me by phone to Gonaivos, and related the details of the attack and with a patrol from Gonaivos to Maissade. He further rs, if any were undesirable, useless, and he desired them expression of course meant to kill them. I followed out s going to Maissade and making a general patrol; no red, therefore none killed.

u know of anyone else who received like order?

st. Ernest Lavoie, G. D'H., Lieut. Sieger, G. D'H., and 'H.. I learned that they had received the same and similar ou ever hear that any of the above-named officers carried n informed and believe that Capt. Lavoie carried out these g under the orders of Maj. Wells when he executed 19 n January, 1919.

t generally talked about, among the marine officers and that prisoners were being "bumped off"?

ircles among the gendarmerie officers whom I knew best most associated it was understood, I believe, to be the mp off" as nearly as possible all prisoners taken. It was l by them all and it was generally understood among them. his understanding caused entirely by orders received from st of my belief the whole incentive behind the executious orders and sanction given the act by Maj. Wells.

you very well acquainted with Maj. Wells?

was closely associated with Maj. Wells from November, 1919, serving as his assistant on road construction in the , and by virtue of nature of this I became close to him, weeks at a time continually in his company and with him was the attitude of Maj. Wells with reference to reports th?

s often instructed me, along with others, to use the soft and except in cases of necessity or to comply with some ke no reports at all. He often explained th's by saying was too busy and had no time to receive or read reports l that he would be satisfied as long as the country was in e, and he neither cared nor wanted to hear of the details mpish this end.

Maj. Wells ever express any desire not to hear of these stated that he did not want to hear of these things.

you ever seen Maj. Wells under the influence of liquor?

umerous times.

possible that some of these "bumping-off" orders were e had been drinking?

bink it possible that some were, although at the time he mp off" pr'soners taken in or around Maissade, I do not n the slightest affected by the influence of liquor.

Maj. Doxey entirely familiar with everything that was pinion that he was. He was closer to Maj. Wells than e department of the north, and appeared always to coun-

Maj. Wells in all matters of importance pertaining to and out of Hinche frequently, and it would seem incon- entirely unconscious of the things that were going on.

e ever express any orders as to bumping off prisoners?

knowledge.

16. Question. Was it generally known or talked about that a that you referred to had been explained and gone over by Gen. visit to St. Michel in March, 1919?

Answer. It was. From others and all practically who had b by Gen. Catlin I learned that practically every phase of the cor have related were brought to the attention of Gen. Catlin at s his investigation at St. Michel and Hinche.

17. Question. At any time after Gen. Catlin's conference was by either Gen. Catlin or Lieut. Col. A. S. Williams or Maj. V conditions must change?

Answer. There was. I received an order from the chief of prohibiting in detail the execution of Oaco or other prisoners.

18. Question. What date was the order against corvee issued Answer. October 1, 1918.

19. Question. Was this order ever disobeyed?

Answer. It was. This order was disobeyed in the districts Hinche from October 1, 1918, until some time in March, 1919.

20. Question. Was this order disobeyed by instructions from a Answer. Capt. Lavoie and Lieut. Williams, when I inquired capacity as inspector of roads in the north as to by whose aut whence funds were coming to carry on their work, informed me had ordered them to construct roads between St. Michel and between Maissade and Hinche with corvee labor, and that he magistrates of Maissade and Hinche to make a certain contribu the corvee would be fed.

21. Question. What effect did the breaking of this order agai have on the people in the north?

Answer. It is my opinion that the corvee illegally formed 1918, and after the Haitian public generally knew and well und corvees and forced labor had been ordered suspended constitu factor in the dissatisfaction which led to revolution, and it is that the first Caco forces were largely recruited from the las This opinion is based on my experience of handling corvee I fall of 1917 and the spring of 1918, when I had under me directed the largest corvee ever formed in Haiti, numbering 3,00

Under the then existing conditions the members of my corve they were subject legally to be called up to do road work, offer and seemed contented during the entire operation—that is, the the road from Gonaïves to the Limbe River—and the first disc subject had its inception in the district of Maissade and Hin people learned that they were being forcibly detained, worked u knowing that the President of Haiti as well as the chief of t d'Haiti had ordered the suspension of corvee labor throughout t

22. Question. From your conversation with Marine and gen can you give an estimation of illegal executions in the district

Answer. Aggregating all reports and rumors, I would judge t ceed over 400 at least, and in this number there are included a of persons suspicioned or whose identity was never known.

23. Question. Was this estimate a low or high estimate?

Answer. This is a low estimate.

7. First Lieut. HAROLD H. WOOD, Gendarmerie d'Haiti (corpor Marine Corps), was called as a witness, and was duly sworn follows:

1. Question. What is your name and rank?

Answer. Harold R. Wood, first lieutenant, Gendarmerie d' United States Marine Corps).

2. Question. Do you know anything of the unlawful killing of Answer. No, sir.

3. Question. Have you heard in any way of the unlawful kill oners.

Answer. I had heard of some of them being killed.

4. Question. Where?

Answer. In Hinche and Maissade.

5. Question. Did you ever hear by whose instructions this was

Answer. I know nothing of instructions about actual killings o but instructions were said to have been issued not to take any p

When were these orders issued?

He said to have been issued by the department commander,

Maj. Doxey cognizant of these instructions which you had read?

I don't know, because at that time I saw Maj. Doxey but not him on a road.

Do you know whether Maj. Doxey was in or around Hinche about

Maj. Doxey was not there.

Do you know Lieut. Spier?

Doxey, United States Marine Corps, was called as a witness, and testified as follows:

State your name and rank.

Doxey, captain, United States Marine Corps.

What duty were you performing between the month of October, 1919?

District commander of the district of Cape Haitien.

Did this work take you into the Hinche district; that is, into the district of Hinche?

I was directed to go into the Hinche district on about October 18, 1919, and there until October 30 or 31. Again, I was ordered to leave on January 17 and remained there until March 31, 1919.

While in the Hinche district did you at any time hear of the killing of prisoners?

I did not in March I heard rumors of this.

What were these rumors?

The rumor was killing of prisoners, and that there would be a massacre.

Did these rumors say these prisoners had been killed?

In the Hinche district.

Was it in Hinche?

Necessarily in the district of Hinche.

Can you give the approximate date?

Did you attempt, if any, did you make to investigate these rumors?

Can you give any reasons for not investigating these rumors? I thought that I was not directed to investigate these rumors, and there would be an investigation.

What theory is, then, that if you heard of something wrong in the district you would not investigate it unless ordered. Is that correct?

That was not in my district at that time.

Can you say that some time in March you were ordered out in the district again?

From the 17th of February until the 7th of March.

Did you not hear these rumors in the Hinche district but Did you ever mention these rumors to Maj. Wells?

I do not remember.

Did you ever hear that certain gendarmerie officers had reported off prisoners?

Did you hear of the killing of prisoners you referred to the killing of nine shot in the cemetery at Hinche?

I do not recall any particular incident in regard to these prisoners, but I do recall that there was to be an investigation of conditions in the district.

Was there an investigation, was there not?

Did these rumors have anything whatever to do with the district of Hinche?

I do not recall just when I heard these rumors. I don't know if it was before or after.

19. Question. Well, had it been while you were in charge would you have investigated it?

Answer. Yes; I would have if I were in charge of the district.

20. Question. Do you know Capt. Lavoie, G. d'H.?

Answer. Yes.

21. Question. Do you know Capt. Bolte, G. d'H.?

Answer. Yes.

22. Question. Do you know Lieut. Williams, G. d'H.?

Answer. Yes.

23. Question. Do you know Mr. Baker, formerly of the gendarmerie?

Answer. Yes.

24. Question. Have you ever had any conversation with the people with reference to the killing of Caco prisoners or the unlabeled any Haitians?

Answer. On about March 10 I received written orders in disposition would be made of prisoners, and I personally instructed Williams and others in district, as I recall now in this order its meaning to each officer and each gendarme before they left or may have been a conversation that I can not recall at this time.

25. Question. You state positively, then, that you do not recollect conversation held with the gendarme officers aforementioned with reference to the killing of prisoners or Cacos in the Hinche district.

Answer. I don't recall any, as I stated that I did not have with any killings.

26. Question. If you had had any conversation with any of the mentioned gendarmerie officers before March, it would surely have attracted your attention, would it not?

Answer. Not necessarily, because during this time there was much rumor and gossip going on, and I did not go in for either.

27. Question. Did you not consider it necessary, then, to consider the rumor or gossip in the district you command?

Answer. I did not command the district of Hinche until about March 10 and did not interest myself in anything that happened prior to that date, did after this date, and every rumor or report of killing had much to do with the rumor or report of it.

28. Question. Did you ever find that on an investigation that the rumors were true?

Answer. I remember of one prisoner who was killed—I believe while on a detail getting sugar cane. I investigated this and reported of it, as required then by regulations, and later was directed to make a more detailed report, which I submitted and was accepted.

29. Question. Who did the killing?

Answer. A private in the gendarmerie.

30. Question. What duty were you performing at Hinche between March 10 and October 31?

Answer. To operate patrols and try to capture Charlemagne.

31. Question. Were you in command of the Hinche district at that time?

Answer. No, sir.

32. Question. Were you the senior officer present?

Answer. After the 22d I was.

33. Question. The second time you went to the Hinche district in February 17, was it not? What was your duty then?

Answer. To see that there was no friction between the gendarmes and the marines.

34. Question. Were you the senior officer present then?

Answer. No, sir; not at all times. Col. Hooker would come in.

35. Question. If you heard any rumors of killings of prisoners in February 17 and March 7, would you have investigated them?

Answer. Not necessarily. I would have reported it to Maj. Wells.

36. Question. Did you ever make any report to Maj. Wells with reference to the killing of cacos, or prisoners, before the investigation of Gen. Wells?

Answer. I would have, perhaps, told him that I heard rumors of the district.

37. Question. Do you know of any investigation he ever made of the district?

Answer. I don't recall if he did or did not make an investigation.

38. Question. Would you know if he made an investigation?

Answer. No; not necessarily.

sation with Gen. Catlin told him that I knew there was too much and that the corvee was still in existence. Gen. Catlin then gave me instructions to go into the Hinche district and submit a report on what I found there. This report I forwarded about the middle of February, in writing, and in which I stated that I had seen 100 men doing corvee labor and had seen gendarmes maltreating Hinche I stopped a gendarme from whipping a woman in the street because her price for tobacco was more than he thought it should be. I reported this case to Capt. Lavoie in Maj. Doxey's presence. I was being beaten by three gendarmes with the butts of their rifles. Pere Belliot, of Hinche, and from Pere Lerue, of San Michel, told me that the inhabitants were in a state of terror and being killed. The bishop of the cape told me the same thing. This I did not see myself at that time witnesses to prove, but I could see that a reign of terror. When my report was received by Gen. Catlin I was sent for an interview, in which Gen. Williams and Maj. Wells were present.

My report was discussed and the existence of corvee was confirmed by Maj. Wells. From this time to March 6 or 7 verbal reports were made, when Gen. Catlin, on account of conflicting testimony, made a personal investigation himself. On March 7 he arrived in Hinche accompanied by Gen. Williams and Mr. Holly, where I met him and Maj. Doxey were also there. We all started the next morning for Maissade. On coming into the town there were some workmen. Gen. Catlin stopped and after being told by several that they were doing nothing, that some had been working since February, I asked for the early part of their work they spent the night in prison. They said that some of them had received 30 cents Haitian a day for about a week. Gen. Williams had promised them a gourde a day on the coming morning. Catlin told them that those who were not there voluntarily to stop on the side of the road. All but three did so. Two of these three were chiefs of the work and well paid and the other stated that he had stepped over because he lived in Maissade proper. The general gave testimony for about three or four hours, and the gist of it was that corvee had been going on and that several persons had been killed through the false testimony of the magistrat, Martial Preval, to the effect that there was no direct proof to many of the stories, but Lieut. Williams to having executed three or four and later five or six. Several persons had died to the death of Garnier, the notary, and Lieut. Williams a man had died. A report made against the magistrat by five citizens. They were confined in Hinche and tried in Maissade without a jury. Garnier stated in the court that this was not justice, or word for word. That night about 7 or 8 o'clock Garnier was taken to Williams the magistrat, and at 2 o'clock the next morning was found dead in the barracks yard, beaten with a club.

In Hinche that same day testimony was received from Pere Belliot, the magistrat, Savique Perlate, and Juge de Paix Monthe. They said many persons had been executed with a machine gun and that the execution was being continually in operation. The first statement was corroborated by Lang in a statement to Gen. Catlin and myself at the San Michel. Capt. Lavoie admitted to having taken six prisoners and executed them for disobeying orders. Both Lieut. Williams and Capt. Lavoie were where their instructions came from allowing maltreatment during Gen. Catlin's investigation. Marines were placed in all the towns as to give more men for patrols to the gendarmes in March, and I issued orders to them dated March 12 concerning their treatment of inhabitants.

(Copy of order attached, A. Copy of commanding officer, B. Copy of company, B.)

These instructions were repeated on many occasions and all the inhabitants thoroughly understood them. Such maltreatment of inhabitants was notice or were subject to proof and not idle rumors were punished by court-martial. On June 7 I investigated a report made against me as to his giving orders to shoot prisoners if sure they were Cacos. I told him he stated to me before Col. Wise that he had an order from Gen. Williams dated March 10, forbidding the shooting of prisoners. Maj. Wells had verbally told him that that order did not exist. The prisoners were actually in prison, and that he should go on.

nothing about it. I recommended and Capt. Hamilton was before a general court-martial for murder. This is the only I personally was told by one who had himself received Maj.ecute prisoners. There were many rumors and the impressionth was that such orders existed. I have heard many storiese wantonly killed, but upon investigation I have found thatand usually circulated by men who were trying to make themd men. I heard that Lieut. Ryan had killed two natives withommanded and brought him to trial before a general court-you know anything of Lieut. Spear's actions?

as at Hinche and in the north. He was in the south. I knowexcept that there was such an officer.

you know of any order forbidding corvee?
n October 1, 1918, the chief of the gendarmerie issued suchr, on October 18, he issued an order stopping it all over.
the corvee was going on in the Hinche Maissade, San Michel ese places were not mentioned in his first order. There was notice from the brigade commander to the same effect.

you know positively that the corvee continued after the n February, 1919, I myself saw the corvee in operation near ups of between 50 to 75 men each were working on the roads, of about 45 in the market place at Maissade.

you know if Maj. Wells gave orders or knew that the corvee on there?

know; but Maj. Wells was in command of that department, e being built, which Maj. Wells knew; therefore he must ere was corvee.

HOLLY was called as a witness and testified as follows, after at is your name and occupation?

lfred Holly; translator at brigade headquarters, United s, Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti.

March, 1919, did you act as interpreter for Gen. Catlin in an aissade?

eat as nearly as possible the conversation you translated for ssade the greater part of the investigation was devoted to dence as to the continuance of and manner of conducting as to the treatment of the men, and the manner in which l, and as to the wages paid them.

e evidence tended to show that the peasants were "invited" emble at a certain place to attend an "audience" to be illiams, then in command at Maissade. When the country e place of rendezvous the lieutenant was not there and they to Maissade. When they arrived at this place they were for the night, and the next morning they were put to work the time the general was speaking to them the majority en kept at work for two months or more. Every night they rison to keep them from running away.

a declared that, as a matter of fact, they had been invited d work on the roads; that they considered the invitation as such was the custom in Haiti and because they knew of ose who refused to respond to the invitation were beaten e, and that some who tried to run away were fired at.

of the gang, with one exception, on being asked the question died that they would much prefer to return home and work which, they said, were going to ruins. All of them owned rights. The exception was the gang leader, who explained tain extent, responsible for bringing the men there; he could y that he preferred to be at home. In this case his presence entirely voluntary.

It was found that up to the time that the general was speaking to the none of them, with the possible exception of the gang leader, had been receiving wages to which he was entitled.

On being given permission to do so, the whole gang broke up and went home. There were complaints of illtreatment of the natives, and of persons beaten to death. One instance is that of the public notary of the place, a man by the name of Garnier. This man was arrested at the investigation of the justice of the peace and of the mayor of the commune (magistrate communal) taken to the bureau of the gendarmerie at about 7 o'clock in the morning and was beaten by the lieutenant himself until after 9 o'clock, when he was put in a rocking chair in which he died sometime during the night. The offense was that of having remonstrated with the judge as to the severity of the sentence rendered by him in a case in which the magistrate communal was plaintiff. I can not recall the particulars of the case, but I do remember the sentence was heavy fine plus imprisonment, and the notary thought in view of the fact that there were serious doubts as to the justice of the case the fine should have been considered to be a sufficient penalty.

Lieut. Williams's action in this matter seemed to have been due to his friendship or sympathy for both the mayor and the judge.

There were complaints of unlawful capture of cattle and other animals which were sent to the pound and which, under various pretexts, the lieutenant refused to return to the owners. Many, and among them all the gendarmes stationed at Maissade at the time, testified that Lieut. Williams had summarily executed some 12 or 16 persons, some with his own hands, and buried the bodies in the yard back of his office. The spot where the bodies were buried was pointed out, but the grass had been leveled down when it was learned that Gen. Catlin was coming to hold an investigation.

Maissade was the only place among those that was visited where the gendarmes bitterly complained of being illtreated by their chief.

All the evidence taken at this place showed that the lieutenant, the judge and the judge all worked together and that the one was the accomplice of the others.

The above is, to the best of my recollection, a true and faithful relation of the conversation that took place at Maissade in the month of March, 1900, between Gen. Catlin, then chief of the occupation, and the inhabitants of the place, that nothing has been added or withheld that in one way or the other might alter the value of the facts as they were given to the general.

11. The undersigned question many others, both civilian and commissioned, but while they all admitted of hearing many rumors of murdering prisoners none of them were able to testify under oath that such was so, and they had heard it. Almost everyone stationed in Haiti during the early part of this year seemed to have some knowledge of the fact that both marine and gendarmes were killing prisoners. It was very difficult to get any one to testify directly as, in the opinion of the undersigned, they were all culpable. As far as Lieut. Spear is concerned, no one seemed to know anything about him, and I am inclined to believe that his statement before the court that he had killed prisoners, was deliberately untrue.

12. That there were killings and many of them is undoubtedly true. I believe that all of these can be directly traced to Maj. Clarke H. Wells, who was in command of the district.

13. The gendarme officers in the district were all noncommissioned officers of the old Marine Corps, men who believed in their officers and to whom it was to be obeyed to the letter. These officers received instructions from Maj. Wells to bump off negro prisoners, and they carried their orders out to the best of their ability. I do not feel that under the circumstances they should be held responsible, and that the responsibility should be placed where it belongs on the shoulders of Maj. Wells.

14. Capt. Doxey's testimony was undoubtedly colored by the fact that he was attempting to shield himself, and even if his testimony was true he showed the greatest disregard for his duty when he neglected to report all rumors of killings to Maj. Wells. His work in Hinche seemed to be to get by and do nothing.

15. I am convinced that Corp. Edward J. Sieger, United States Marine, deliberately lied in his testimony. Sufficient evidence was brought out to show that he was included in the ones who received the "bump-off" order.

16. Sergt. Dorcas R. Williams, United States Marine Corps, who was in charge of Maissade as a lieutenant of the gendarmerie, could give quite a different evidence, if he desired, but he is now in the United States, probably disfact that Gen. Catlin made an investigation at San Michel e that something wrong had happened. I have searched the pendence on this subject, but found none.

ked "A," "B," and "C" is the only data on this subject in ade.

T. C. TURNER.

am not sure of this, but, as I remember, a letter came from f the Marine Corps directing Col. Russell to make further that is why Hooker was called in, because of his knowledge e probably had a better knowledge of the Haitians than any ere. And it was also due to the fact that I could not go out could not go out into the hills because you were acting as nd chief of staff?

s; because of my duties I could not be away for any length sh to offer for the record, Mr. Chairman, a copy of letter , 1920, from the brigade commander, Col. Russell, to Col.

im to investigate. That is on page 30 of the report. I also etter dated January 11, 1920, from the same to the same, page 31 of the report, directing the cooperation of Col.
Turner.

Col. Hooker was in command where at the time?
was assistant chief of the gendarmerie at the time.
e referred to are as follows:)

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, February 12, 1920.

commander.

S. Hooker, United States Marine Corps.
he gendarmerie d'Haiti.

on by adjutant and inspectors department.

ter from this office, No. 5-18, dated January 11, 1920.

commander desires that every effort be made by you to expe-on mentioned in reference (a).

tion will be completed before the end of the present month.

t duties are such as to interfere with this work you will so e commander in writing, and the necessary action will be

JOHN H. RUSSELL.

Maj. T. C. Turner, assistant adjutant and inspector, United
s.

JANUARY 11, 1920.

commander.

ard S. Hooker, United States Marine Corps.
endarmerie d'Haiti.

on by adjutant and inspectors department.

y ordered to cooperate in the investigation of certain irregu-conducted by Maj. T. C. Turner, assistant adjutant and ates Marine Corps.

ill be made direct to the brigade commander.

JOHN H. RUSSELL.

, I will show you pages 55 and 59 of this report and ask you ur knowledge, that is the written testimony which resulted investigation?

s.

Mr. Chairman, I offer that for the record.
rred to is as follows:)

GONAIVES, HAITI, February 19, 1920.

HOEN. lieutenant, gendarmerie D'Haiti, was called as a wit-that he need not answer any incriminating questions. testit is your name?

O. Van Horn, lieutenant, gendarmerie d'Haiti, stationed at 2. Question. Where were you stationed in the latter part of early part of 1919?

Answer. At Ouanaminthe, Haiti.

3. Question. During the trouble at Hinche from October, 1918, Ouanaminthe used as a relay station for telephone messages to and from Hinche?

Answer. Yes, sir.

4. Question. Do you remember the nature of those messages?

Answer. Some messages were written and placed on file at Ouanaminthe. Some were verbal over the phone and relayed to their destination. Some related to transportation activities and some were reports from Col. Wells.

5. Question. Did these reports from Levole indicate that there was trouble in his district or not?

Answer. Yes; some did and some were to the effect that all was quiet.

6. Question. What were the nature of these reports during January and March, 1919?

Answer. I don't remember exactly what the reports were, but the things were not quiet. This was during December, when I was at La Meille, Haiti.

7. Question. Do you remember any instructions from Col. Wells as to the treatment of Cacos or Caco prisoners?

Answer. No; I never heard him say anything about that, but when he came up here he always told me he had to tell to the district commander.

8. Question. Have you spoken to other officers on the treatment of Caco prisoners; and if so, what was their idea on the subject?

Answer. I remember speaking to several officers, but I can't remember now or exactly what was said. But I was under the impression when I went out after an armed band of bandits I was supposed to kill them and get rid of them. When the prisoners were taken I treated them the same as other prisoners, like prisoners in the civil war. I brought them in to stand trial.

JOSEPH O. V.

Lieutenant Gendarme

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 19th day of February, 1919.

R. S. HO

Lieutenant Colonel, United States Marine Corps

Sous Chef Gendarme

A true copy:

R. S.

Lieutenant Colonel, United States Marine Corps

STATEMENT OF SERGT. LAMARTINE TOUSSAINT, FIFTEENTH COMPANY GENDARMERIE D'HAITI.

FIFTEENTH COMPANY GENDARMERIE

Ouanaminthe, Haiti, October 1918

Lieut. Van Horn, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, had turned over to me a man named Saul Peralte, to conduct to Mount Organise. On arriving at Organise he asked me permission to drink some water. I refused. He was crossing said river he tried to escape. I cried out "halt" on which he did not want to stop. Seeing that he was gaining ground I fired four times, the first time in the air and the last three times in the water. Bullets attained him in the back and went through his stomach. He fell, and in the space of three he expired.

Certified a true copy:

JOSEPH O. V.

Lieutenant,

CAPE HAITIEN, February 1919.

FRANK VERDIER, captain, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, was called as a witness. He informed that he need not answer any incriminating questions; and he answered me as follows:

1. Question. What is your name?

Answer. Frank Verdier, captain, Gendarmerie d'Haiti, stationed at Ouanaminthe since September, 1918.

Are you present at a conversation between Col. Wells and so, state the subject matter of this conversation, as far as it.

; I was present at this conversation, and most of the Caco situation. I don't remember the exact conversation, say that such men as Saul Peralte should be gotten rid of, as any mention made to the effect that either you or Capt. file your district and that it would not be necessary to make activities?

Have been mentioned, but I can't recollect. Have any instructions given to make it as hard as possible for Instructions were given to make it hard for the Cacos, but I what they were.

Your opinion, what was meant by making it hard? What did want?

That Col. Wells meant to convey the idea to get rid of them,

Are you spoken to other officers on this subject; and if so, they have relating to these instructions?

I spoke to Bolte on this subject, and he had the same

During this trouble in Hinche, from October, 1918, on was not any station for messages from the cape to Hinche?

Do you remember any reports from Hinche to the department cape relative to the situation in Hinche?

Number receiving some telegrams regarding activities.

Are those messages confidential?

Came to and from Col. Wells and Lavole at Hinche, and personally at Cerca la Source. They referred to operations against of officers. I had verbal instructions not to let you see them with Ouananminthe.

Have you copies of those messages?

Probably certain I have. I will try to find them and give them to you there.

Do these Caco telegrams state that the situation in Hinche was

I consider so.

Do you remember whether Lavole was nervous over the situation, thought he could handle it without outside aid?

When I was in Hinche, in November, 1918, Lavole thought he could handle it, but later he requested that machine guns be sent to him.

Do you transmit any messages from Maj. Doxey to the department cape after he went to Hinche in January or February, 1919?

What were the nature of those?

Regarding the shipment of supplies.

Anything regarding the Caco situation?

There was something regarding the Caco situation, but I was.

Do you remember if these messages said that all was quiet, or that there was trouble with the Cacos?

Everything was quiet.

Captain Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

Described to before me, this 17th day of February, 1920.

Lieutenant Colonel, United States Marine Corps.

Sous-Chief de la Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

R. S. HOOKER,

Lieutenant Colonel, United States Marine Corps.

Mr. HOWE. Now, Major, I want to go into your method of inquiry, beginning in October, 1919, and beginning with the Barnett dated September 27, 1919. How did you go about it, Major?

Maj. TURNER. I interrogated everybody I could find. I started if they had heard of any of these things, and particularly that to the letter.

Mr. HOWE. That part of what?

Maj. TURNER. The part that the letter referred to about Lieut.

Mr. HOWE. In his statement in reference to killings?

Maj. TURNER. Yes; before a general court-martial. I could not find anything about Lieut. Spear. I did find rumors and statements that there were killings. So I considered, in view of the major general commandant's statement, I should continue with that, and I did so.

Mr. HOWE. Did you, in the course of your investigations, run across any rumors which were alluded to or may have been alluded to by Lieut. Spear?

Maj. TURNER. No.

Mr. HOWE. Did you see Lieut. Spear?

Maj. TURNER. No.

Mr. HOWE. Did you find anybody who knew Lieut. Spear?

Maj. TURNER. No.

Mr. HOWE. You did, however, run across other rumors of killings?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. What were the principal ones of those rumors?

Maj. TURNER. The only ones I could seem to get any information about were the alleged killing at Hinche in January, 1919.

Mr. HOWE. In order to identify that, what was the name of the officer who was supposed to have directed this killing?

Maj. TURNER. Capt. Lavole, of the Haitian gendarmerie; Ernest.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he an enlisted marine?

Maj. TURNER. He was a private in the Marine Corps, detailed as an officer in the Haitian gendarmerie.

Mr. HOWE. Was the name of Lieut. Williams, of the gendarmerie, connected with any one of these rumors?

Maj. TURNER. Yes; at Malssade.

Mr. HOWE. Was there any connected with the alleged killing of Lieut. Williams?

Maj. TURNER. Garnier was a notary; yes.

Mr. HOWE. You then proceeded to try to trace down these two rumors, and any other rumors you came across?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Did you, as a matter of fact, learn of any other rumors besides these two?

Maj. TURNER. No. There were many rumors, but you would not believe them down and there would not be any foundation for them. You would not believe them as you could—I remember one case where a man told me he had seen the murders at Grande Riviere, and I ran it down and found his mother-in-law had told him, so he said, and his mother-in-law had been dead for many years, which would have been about six years before it possibly could have happened.

Mr. HOWE. Was that sort of luck you had in tracing a rumor that you ran into as to many of these statements made to you by witnesses?

Maj. TURNER. In almost all of them, yes.

Mr. HOWE. If, for instance, some one down there whom you were mentioning mentioned an occurrence or killing, and said some one had been killed, what would you then do?

Maj. TURNER. I would try to get the person who was supposed to have done it.

Mr. HOWE. If you got that person, what would he, in general, tell you?

Maj. TURNER. That some one else had told him, in almost every case.

Mr. HOWE. Did you, under those circumstances, follow out the chain, in turn, everyone who was quoted?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Did this written testimony, which appears on the report which you have seen, embody the most definite part of what you learned?

Maj. TURNER. Yes; it was the only definite part I could learn, and I put it in writing.

Mr. HOWE. And that is all the definite part of it that you learned?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

you give us an idea as to about how many individuals you written testimony you did not take during this investiga-

; I think about 50—probably 40; it may be 40.
 report states, as an instance of these hearsay reports which testimony of Bolte at the bottom of page 109:
 ce Bolte, gendarmerie d'Haiti, corporal, United States called as the first witness, was duly sworn, and testified te your name, rank, and present station.

 ce Bolte, corporal, United States Marine Corps, and a captain d'Haiti, stationed at Hinche, Republic of Haiti.
 ements have been made that both marines and gendarmes bit of having wounded Cacos shot. Do you know anything a never have issued an order of that kind?

you know that this has been done?
 know about it; but I have heard of it being done.
 ere did you hear this, and from whom?
 it from Lieut. Floyd, gendarmerie d'Haiti, Mr. Baker, and merie d'Haiti.

no was in command at Hinche when the last rebellion elly had it in October.

no relieved him?

avigne.

no relieved him?

oxey.

re you ever instructed to make private reports to anybody operations in the Hinche district?

ivate reports, but telegrams received through Onanaminthe to be kept on file at the Third Company office under lock no gave this order?

ells.

hy was this order issued?

ot know if it was caused by this investigation which took id Col. Wells ever instruct you to disregard certain orders chief of the gendarmerie d'Haiti?

o you know whether these or any other orders were dis-o you remember when the first order against corvee came st came out in the latter part of August.

as this order ever disregarded?

ot know that this was done. I heard it from the priest at and a chief of section named Joseph Marcellia and one named id the priest at Hinche ever inform you that before you os had been killed after they had surrendered?

id anybody at Hinche tell you that?

at Hinche but a marine named Sasse told me that prisoners of the prison at Hinche and shot, and the priest at Hinche ing.

ho issued the order for the shooting? Do you know?

ou do not know whether this was reported to Col. Wells or hile you were at the Cape did a telegram show that there le trouble at the district of Hinche?

"Answer. Yes.

"21. Question. Between what months were these telegrams co

"Answer. From the 1st of January to the middle of March.

"22. Question. Do you know what became of these telegrams?

"Answer. They were left in the desk of the district commander. Did you find and interrogate Floyd, Hayes, or Baker?

Maj. TURNER. I did.

Mr. HOWE. All of them?

Maj. TURNER. All of them; yes.

Mr. HOWE. What did you learn from Floyd?

Maj. TURNER. From Floyd—he stated that he had heard rumors know where they came from, and he did not know anything about

Mr. HOWE. You do not include Floyd's testimony among your mony.

Maj. TURNER. No; neither Floyd's nor Hayes's. Hayes state Floyd.

Mr. HOWE. That he really did not know about it?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And Hayes's written testimony was not taken?

Maj. TURNER. No.

Mr. HOWE. What about Baker?

Maj. TURNER. I took Baker's testimony. Baker's testimon hearsay, too.

Mr. HOWE. And that you included, because there was something definite?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Is that example typical of the way you went at the and of the thoroughness with which you went at it?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Did you have any instructions from Col. Russell as and thoroughness of your investigation?

Maj. TURNER. I did. When I first took up the investigation were so bad that I went to him and told him what these rumors asked his advice on the subject. He told me, never mind, to go and get to the bottom of it and get everything in hand on that subject.

Mr. HOWE. And you proceeded to do so?

Maj. TURNER. Which I did.

Mr. HOWE. Did anybody direct you to discontinue your investigation?

Maj. TURNER. No.

Mr. HOWE. Never?

Maj. TURNER. Never.

Mr. HOWE. Then why did you stop investigating?

Maj. TURNER. Well, I could not find anything more. I could have thousands of pages with just that kind of stuff, hearsay. There was any further because I could not get anything definite.

Mr. HOWE. Major, as a matter of fact, were you trying to get anything definite there?

Maj. TURNER. Yes; I was. I had a feeling at first that there was a fair treatment to the Haitians. I thought it was up to us to stop it, but I did not know who was responsible, and it did not make sense, and, as I say, I had had this talk with Col. Russell, and I went on into the case and got everything out of it that I could.

Mr. HOWE. And when you handed in this written testimony with the date of November 3, you felt you had pursued the investigation as far as you profitably could?

Maj. TURNER. Exactly; as far as it could possibly be taken by

Mr. HOWE. Now, I am going to read from page 130, paragraph 10 of this report of your written testimony:

"11. The undersigned questioned many others, both civilian and military, but while they are admitted of hearing many rumors of murder, none of them were able to testify under oath that such was the case; they had heard it. Almost everyone stationed in Haiti during the year 1900 seemed to have some knowledge of the fact that both the gendarmes were killing prisoners. It was very difficult to get any one to testify directly as in the opinion of the undersigned they were culpable."

The CHAIRMAN. Who were equally culpable?

anybody who was telling these yarns down there, if they were culpable of misrepresentation or culpable of having told rumors that might have been true or might not mean here that they were equally culpable of killing if it had been true, they were.

culpable of misrepresentation?

people I had been able to get who had talked would not give so I felt they were all equally culpable if it had been true. were some of these witnesses you d'd not believe in their or denials of crime?

aph 11 continues: "As far as Lieut. Spear is concerned, no anything about him, and I am inclined to believe that his court that he had killed prisoners was deliberately untrue." her comment to make on paragraph 11?

aph 12 says: "That there were killings and many of them but I believe that all of these can be directly traced to s, who was in command of the district."

ould like to state that these killings were in the corvee and ners. They were people who attempted to escape, and in re killed.

ose were the many killings to which you referred?

e certain that in this paragraph 12 you d'd not refer to old-blooded removing of a prisoner from prison and shoot-the killing of escaped prisoners or people escaping from the ple escaping from the corvees or people who had jumped d were killed, in these different Caco bands throughout the aph 13, at page 131, says:

icers in the district were all noncommissioned officers of , men who believed in their officers, and to whom an order the letter. These officers received instructions from Maj. co prisoners, and they carried their orders out to the best not feel that under the circumstances they should be held the responsibility should be placed where it belongs, on j. Wells."

ment to make at this time on paragraph 13?

at the present time of the belief that Maj. Wells did issue o off prisoners?

I am not.

ou, at the time you submitted this report, of that opin'on?

if anything, have you learned which has changed your

d only been in Haiti a short time when I made this investi- ot thoroughly familiar with the character of the Haitians re I saw of them the more I became convinced of their un- any statement was concerned.

atement they might make?

statement they might make, yes. All their statements were benefit or to gain something.

s your present idea as to the extent to which the killings e went on, without reference to the shooting of natives in ve no doubt there were many killed in the corvee.

ou mean that many were killed in attempting to escape corvee?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. When they would jump and run they would

Maj. TURNER. They were shot.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that there were any executions

Maj. TURNER. Yes; I think there have been executions without my opinion, but I have no facts to substantiate that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does your report cover the harsh treatment of any prisoners, apart from killings?

Maj. TURNER. Yes; as far as I could find out; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Were prisoners frequently or habitually rough

Maj. TURNER. Not that I could find out.

Mr. HOWE. If you had heard any rumor or accusation of brutal treatment of prisoners, would you have investigated that?

Maj. TURNER. I would.

Mr. HOWE. You would have conceived that to have been in the line of investigation?

Maj. TURNER. I would. The word was "irregularity," and I think of ill treatment of prisoners as coming under that word.

Mr. HOWE. What is your present impression or belief as to the treatment of Hinche, where it was said that from 15 to 19 prisoners were taken and machine-gunned by Capt. Lavoie?

Maj. TURNER. I believe something actually happened there.

Mr. HOWE. Is it not true that a further investigation of that case was made later on?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Was that Gen. Lejeune's investigation?

Maj. TURNER. Gen. Lejeune and I also believe the Mayo Board made an investigation of that.

Mr. HOWE. You took the testimony of Lavoie yourself, did you?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. As I recollect it, in that testimony it does not appear that I asked Lavoie the direct question as to whether or not he had knowledge of Hinche. That is so, is it not?

Maj. TURNER. No. There is a lot that did not go into the testimony, coming back and forth, which was not put down, and I know Lavoie did not do any of that killing.

Mr. HOWE. Your present recollection is that although it does not appear in the written testimony, the question was asked as to whether or not the natives?

Maj. TURNER. I do not know whether it was asked in a question, but I know he denied it.

Mr. HOWE. He denied it to you?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether or not in any of the other cases that were admitted or partly admitted that occurrence?

Maj. TURNER. No; I do not.

Mr. HOWE. Some of these witnesses made a more favorable statement than others, did they not, as to telling the truth?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. How would you characterize the testimony of Juvénat?

Maj. TURNER. I was very favorably impressed with André's

Mr. HOWE. He was a Haitian, was he not?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And a second lieutenant in the gendarmerie?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. He states in his testimony—

Maj. TURNER. I would like to state right there that I questioned him whether or not he could give me the names of anybody who had been in these murders or killings, and he told me he could not.

Mr. HOWE. He made a statement in his testimony that they were in the control of the officers of the gendarmerie by their superior officers of the districts of Haiti, did he not?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. What comment have you to make on that answer, from knowledge gained in your investigation?

Maj. TURNER. I should say some of the officers had positions that were not capable of holding. They were young in the service and not capable of handling these jobs they had.

t period of time is most closely connected with these rumors between October 15, 1918, and March 13, 1919.

the date of October 15 after some particular outbreak down

October 15 was after Charlemagne had started his revolution Haiti—after the attack on Hinche by Charlemagne.

ing that time prisoners were taken and safely sent back, were es; lots of them.

at other times many prisoners were taken, were they not?

es.

that fact appears in certain records, does it?

appears in my testimony in the Mayo Board investigation.

you gained any impression as to what was the custom down

l would come upon Cacos with guns in their hands?

ne Cacos would jump immediately; they would never stand, he firing on both sides right away. Most all of the attacks cks. They would find out where the bands were and would jump them.

many prisoners were taken who had guns in their hands?

do not know, but I do know that not just at this time, but sands were taken who had guns.

had guns in their hands?

es.

you investigate any abuses of the corvee that you might his investigation?

es.

questioned individuals and witnesses about that?

lid.

you find difficulty there in locating witnesses who had corvee in operation?

es.

ur opinion the corvee was in operation, and after it had been ed?

es.

re was that?

the Maissade and Hinche district.

Who were the commanding officers there?

ut. D. L. Williams at Maissade and Lavoie at Hinche.

What became of Lavoie?

do not know, sir.

you any direct knowledge of your own as to the employment m?

es.

you did come across witnesses and interrogate them who

es.

also came across witnesses who reported it from hearsay ect?

, yes; many of them.

s testimony Lieut. André refers to the corvee as the direct ary outbreaks there. Would you agree with him in that?

lid. The corvee, I believe, might have made conditions harder down there, but it had nothing to do with the outbreak.

s an aggravating circumstance always, was it not?

s; they were able to recruit lots better, because there was it from.

Was that due to the corvee or to the use of corvee workers ghborhoods in which they lived?

think it was due to the fact that they were taken away oods in which they lived.

estimony of Frederick C. Baker appears in your report, and he refers either as of his own knowledge or by hearsay to aj. Wells to bump off prisoners. Did you yourself examine

Maj. TURNER. No; Maj. Wells was not in Haiti at the time. He was examined by Col. Lay, I believe.

Mr. HOWE. In this country?

Maj. TURNER. In this country, yes.

Mr. HOWE. That was the reason you did not examine Wells?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Did other witnesses besides Baker corroborate that Wells had issued orders that he did not want prisoners sent?

Maj. TURNER. Yes; I think Lavoie corroborated it, and probably others.

Mr. HOWE. Let me ask you this question: In other words, your testimony you took includes all such statement as to Major Wells's orders for any such order?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. No information you got on that phase of the subject from your written testimony?

Maj. TURNER. No.

Mr. HOWE. You also examined Capt. Doxey, did you not?

Maj. TURNER. I did.

Mr. HOWE. How would you characterize his testimony? Did it or not?

Maj. TURNER. I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he another enlisted man who was detested by the gendarmerie?

Maj. TURNER. No; he was a captain of the Marine Corps, a Regular.

Mr. HOWE. He denied knowledge of conditions there pretty generally, did he not, in his testimony?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And would not say whether or not Maj. Wells was aware of those conditions?

Maj. TURNER. He was very evasive in his testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. These incidents which you were investigating during the period of the command of the gendarmerie by whom?

Maj. TURNER. You mean the chief of the gendarmerie?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Maj. TURNER. By Col. A. S. Williams.

The CHAIRMAN. They did not antedate his command?

Maj. TURNER. No; because I do not think anything I was told antedated October 15, 1918.

Mr. HOWE. Major, if you had that investigation to make over you go at it in any different way; would you have been more thorough?

Maj. TURNER. I would have gone at it in an entirely different way. I do not know that I would have been any more thorough, but I would have placed as much faith in some people as I had placed at that time, and I would have placed more in others.

Mr. HOWE. In general, which one would you not have placed more faith in?

Maj. TURNER. One or two of the witnesses I called, and I would place more faith whatever in any of the Haitians' testimony.

Mr. HOWE. Tell us a little bit more about that, about the untrustworthiness of the Haitians' testimony.

Maj. TURNER. I was chief of staff down there, and we would get reports from Haitians on different subjects, making requests, and investigations. Almost invariably it turned out that their reports were untrue.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know the methods that Col. Hooker pursued to get the Haitians to cooperate with you in this investigation?

Maj. TURNER. Yes. Col. Hooker went all through the north. He went about the Haitians. I think that any officer down there and was not so friendly with them than any officer down there. He went all through the north for information. He took the matter up with the gendarmes, who were to be stationed around Hinche and Maissade and attempted to find out definite. All he found was letters from Van Horn and Sieger and named Touissant. Sieger had already been examined by me.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether or not he interviewed other persons among those three men?

Maj. TURNER. Lots of them; yes.

Mr. HOWE. About how long was he on that investigation?

Maj. TURNER. I do not remember; I could not even state approximately.

Mr. HOWE. Was it a few days or a couple of weeks?

it must have been a couple of weeks, because he received his and 12th of January. His first report came in on the 1st of he must have been quite some time on that.

is more than six weeks after he got his orders?

es. That was his first report.

me say this for the record: This report, the pages of which have ting certain matter into the record, is a carbon copy and not an ginal of Maj. Turner's report, as I understand it, was lost. on copy of that brought up by Gen. Lejune to Washington. ich we have had actually before us to-day is not that copy. n introduced here for the convenience of the witness and of at copy of Gen. Lejune's, I am informed, is in the Navy De- now being searched for, and when it is found it will be offered this is a correct copy, however.

the original carbon will be produced and offered and will be- record. That is the copy brought up by Gen. Lejune, but the Turner's report, as I understand it, was lost in transit from l States.

man, I will offer in evidence pages 64 to 106, inclusive, of this or report, being the testimony taken by Lieut. Col. H. R. Lay, s, including a sworn statement by Gen. Catlin, and consisting of Lieut. Col. A. S. Williams, Maj. Clarke H. Wells, Capt. rgt. Dorcas L. Williams, and also a sworn statement by Col. addition to his testimony.

ferred to is as follows:)

JANUARY 12, 1920.

H. R. Lay, assistant adjutant and inspector, Marine Corps.

General-Commandant, via the adjutant and inspector.

tial investigation.

to verbal instructions from the Major General Commandant, owing sworn testimony of Lieut. Col. A. S. Williams, Maj. apt. John L. Doxey, Sergt. Doreas L. Williams.

submitted the sworn statement of Lieut. Col. A. S. Williams, garding conditions existing in Haiti during his service as an gendarmerie.

IG. GEN. A. W. CATLIN, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS, RE- TO CERTAIN IRREGULARITIES ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN COM- MERS AND ENLISTED MEN OF THE REPUBLIC OF HAITI.

John H. Russell, United States Marine Corps, in command of of Marines in Haiti, December 1, 1918. At this time marines y at Port au Prince, Cape Haitien, and Guanaminthe, while f Haiti were scattered all over the island and were handling e island. Bandits had been causing trouble in the Hinche endarmies were operating against them. The chief of gendar- Williams, United States Marine Corps, assured me that the handle the situation. Toward the end of January, 1919, e that "corvee" was still being used in the Hinche district, en ordered stopped on October 1, 1918, and also that the gent- ing the country people in such manner that many of them bandits. Col. Williams denied this and assured me that rvee" being used in the country. Rumors continued to come ut. Col. Hooker, United States Marine Corps, to Hinche to port to me the actual conditions there. He reported to me rvee" going at both Maisade and at Hinche, and that the e natives so brutally that many had left their gardens and andits or had come into the towns for safety.

ms, chief of gendarmerie, and Maj. Clarke H. Wells, district thern Haiti, were shown the report, and both denied that s reported. I questioned Maj. Wells as to the manner of and the methods of payment; he did not seem to be sure, that he had inspected within a week. I then directed Maj. o Hinche and investigate thoroughly the labor question and e number of men being worked, the manner of obtaining the ey were paid, and who actually paid them. About 10 days later Maj. Wells returned to Port au Prince and reported to me he had made the investigation directed, and that he found nothing on the road at Maisade, and that these men were all volunteers; that they were paid a half gourde a day, and that the gendarme Maisade paid them personally; that at Hinche there were no prisoners. Col. A. S. Williams and Lieut. Col. R. S. Hooker were made of this report was made. Maj. Wells stated on being questioned to be sure that there was no "corvee" in force anywhere in his district.

This report was so contradictory to the one made by Col. Hooker that he found at least 150 men working at Maisade and that on being questioned by the interpreter stated that they were forced to work, that I decided to go to Hinche in person and find out the conditions there. Accompanied by Col. A. S. Williams, Lieut. Col. Hooker, Maj. Clarke H. Wells, and Maj. Doxey I visited St. Michel and Hinche. I found conditions as Col. Hooker had reported, a large force of workmen had apparently been cut down, as I found many men working on the road near Maisade under guard of several gendarmes. I stopped and questioned these men, and they all said they were not working voluntarily; some claimed to have been beaten by the gendarmes, while others said that the chief of section had threatened them. The gendarme officer denied this, but on being told that they were to go to their homes or remain and work at a gourd a day they all left. At Maisade I interviewed the local priest, as well as the municipal judge de pais, and a number of the inhabitants, and several gendarmes. The priest accused the gendarme officer, Lieut. Williams (sergeant, United States Marine Corps), with having killed a number of men and also with having beaten a notary of Maisade to death in the only substantiating testimony of this latter charge was from the gendarmes, who also claimed to have been beaten by Lieut. Williams.

The charge was denied by Lieut. Williams, as well as by the magistrate, and the judge de pais, all of whom stated that the man was shot the night before during an attack by bandits on the town, and died from the effect of the wound. Lieut. Williams admitted that he had killed several prisoners, but only when they attempted to escape.

At Hinche I found a modified "corvee" had been in force, both in building the gendarme barracks. All the inhabitants of the section (Zeb Guinea) had been rounded up and brought into the barracks, expected bandits and had been put to work without pay, but had been paid 30 cents Haitien (6 cents gold) per day for food; they had been there a few days before my arrival. I also found that practically all the farms outside of the towns had been abandoned and the owners had disappeared, many probably having joined the bandits. The Belliot, stated that this was partly on account of their fear of the gendarmes and of the "corvee." The appearance of a gendarme uniform was enough for the peasant to take to the brush and hide.

The priest and the magistrate of Hinche stated that a number of men had been shot. On being questioned Capt. Ernest J. Lavole (United States Marine Corps) admitted that six prisoners had been shot, but that the cacos had attempted to escape several times; that the gendarmes had shot at them and had caused trouble among other prisoners. They were buried in a cemetery outside of the town and shot by gendarmes. He stated that he had no orders to shoot prisoners, and he had not reported the matter to Maj. Wells. Maj. Wells stated that no report had been made to him, but that he would not expect a report in case of shooting of prisoners.

Upon the admission of Capt. Lavole that prisoners had been shot, Williams immediately wrote an order, a copy of which he had sent to the gendarme officers in Haiti, forbidding the killing of any prisoner, and directing that in case a prisoner should attempt to escape, a report with names of witnesses be submitted at once.

I considered that the action of the gendarmes in this section had had a bad effect on the inhabitants, and I directed Col. Williams to send the officers, Capt. Lacle and Lieut. Williams, and all gendarmes from Maisade to Port au Prince, and replace them with others from the island. I also directed that marines be stationed immediately at Maisade, San Michel, Cerca La Source, and Thomond, with a view to the place, and directed Col. Hooker to assume command of all troops.

officers and men be instructed to treat the natives kindly in effort to regain their confidence. I also directed that all arms cease and that they be restricted to the towns (in this that the gendarme officers had made no attempt to propitiate they were in most cases antagonistic to them and treated with respect and had gained their ill will, when they might have been in dealing with the natives.

Maj. Wells carefully, and while I was unable to get anyone to give any orders for "corvee" or the killing of prisoners, I directed the officers under him understood that they were to get no expected to make any reports. I considered Maj. Wells reliable for the conditions as found. He stated that he made no of all posts, and it is inconceivable that he should not have the conditions. I directed that Maj. Wells be relieved of the northern district. Maj. Meade arrived about this time and command at Cape Haitien. Maj. Wells applied to be relieved and was ordered to the States.

The young gendarme officers performed their duties to the best according to the orders they received. They were all marines by custom, never questioned any orders given them by regular. In my opinion that the actions of many of the young gendarmes in treatment of natives is due to the methods taught them in the "workmen."

A. W. CATLIN.

Headquarters Marine Corps, Washington, D. C.
 sworn to before me this 31st day of December, 1919.

H. C. HAINES.

*Colonel, Assistant Adjutant and Inspector,
 United States Marine Corps.*

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 8, 1920.

Captain, United States Marine Corps, having been called as a witness, been informed of his right to decline to answer any criminal questions duly sworn, and testified before me, Lieut. Col. H. R. Haines, Adjutant and Inspector, United States Marine Corps, as follows:

I state your name, rank, and present station.

I am Doxey; captain, United States Marine Corps; stationed at the Navy yard, Philadelphia, Pa.

Have you recently been on duty with the Haitian Gendarmerie; if so, your rank and title while on such duty; also, where were you while on such duties were assigned to and performed by you and

From January 25, 1916, to about June, 1918, I held the rank of captain, but my principal duties have been as a captain. From about February, 1917, I was stationed at Port au Prince; from February 13, 1918, I was stationed at Hinche; from March 8, 1919, at Cape Haitien; from March 8 to April 1, 1919, at Hinche; from June 28 to September 17, 1919, Cape Haitien; from November 8, 1919, Port au Prince; from about October 30 or 31, 1918, at Hinche; from about February 22 to March 1, 1919, out of Hinche, but not assigned as district commander at that time.

During your service with the Haitian Gendarmerie in Hinche or elsewhere, were you aware of the existence of any compulsory labor subsequent to the receipt of the order of October 1, 1919, suspending the law? If so, please state particulars.

No knowledge there was none. I personally questioned D. L. Deschamps, enant at Maissade, the magistrate of Maissade. Martial law was going on. I questioned these people some time before the month of March, 1919. In this connection I would like to state that the people expression for any work by either a small or large number of natives are working for the gendarmerie, the Marine Corps, or other natives, and in case you should ask if corvee were going on the natives would naturally answer "yes," whether or forced labor. My understanding of corvee when questioned officer is that a body of men are working against their wish may be paid or not paid, while it may or may not be with native, when questioned, thinks that any work, whether paid whether voluntary or not voluntary, is corvee. To my knowledge of the word "corvee" it was not going on in the district at that time.

During my investigation, which was about March 3, 1919, I questioned natives working on the road at that time near Maissade out of 45, and each one told me in substance that he was glad on the road, because he could not work his garden on account of the bandits. That he would rather make a little money until the bandits were paid, and would rather be at home working on their garden. A few days later I was with Gen. Catlin, and through his interpreter the same men personally told him that they were forced to work. At that particular time in that section there was no particular work going on, even in preparing their gardens to be planted, as it was very early in the season. My duty with the natives I have found that practically all, even the educated, will work for you just because they like you, and at times they may be against their wishes, and you would not know about it until they would be through fear that they might displease the chief, and might persecute them, would influence the native to work for you. In this case, if an opportunity occurred, another inspector might find that the natives had a dislike for this work. At this time, as far as I know, one was being paid for the work performed. At this time I paid up 600 or 800 gourds to pay the native road workmen, and before this time, there were about 3,000 gourds available for the road workmen, and after my trip, as I remember it, there were 1,200 gourds. This money was kept at Hinche for safe-keeping only, and was the commune of Haissade.

4. Question. Did you at any time observe personally, or receive reports of instances of abuse or ill treatment of members of corvee by the gendarmerie?

Answer. No, sir.

5. Question. Did you ever see or hear that caco prisoners were captured and executed without trial?

Answer. I never did see this, and I don't remember of ever seeing this until March 19, 1919, when Gen. Catlin's investigation was made.

6. Question. In your position which you occupied, did you ever see cases where any persons were shot without trial in or near Hinche?

Answer. No, sir. However, when Maj. Turner made his investigation, he did hear from Maj. Turner that 19 prisoners had been killed in Hinche. I personally did not believe this; for, in numerous conversations with the natives, they never mentioned that anything of this kind had happened. I had personally known the natives in the district of Hinche, and if anything of this kind had been on their minds they, perhaps, would have brought it up in some of these conversations. From all my conversations with the Haitian, it is absolutely impossible to tell whether an occurrence took place or not; they may tell you that an incident took place, which is incorrect; they may tell you that an incident happened and that it was the natives; and upon investigation you will find their statements untrue.

7. Question. Did you hear it spoken of among the gendarmes that it was customary to execute, "bump off," caco prisoners and to make their affairs to higher authority?

Answer. No, sir.

8. Question. Have you any knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the death of Garnier, the notary, at the house occupied by Li Maissade?

Answer. Only from hearsay, after Gen. Catlin's investigation, he investigated this case himself.

9. Question. What, in your opinion, were the principal causes of unrest prevalent in the Republic of Haiti?

Answer. The natural dislike of the Haitians toward any foreigner (alien) in Haiti and the changing of article 6 of the constitution, which substance allows a foreigner to own land in Haiti. This change took place in June, 1918. My personal feeling and the intimate knowledge believe that the changing of article 6 of the constitution is banditism in Haiti.

you consider that the Haitians residing in the district of [redacted] were unduly oppressed by the Haitian you ever see or hear of any confidential reports, confidential messages being received in Maj. Wells's office [redacted] the killings and the corvée after the order abolishing corvée the vicinity of Hinche or Maissade?

so far as I know no such messages ever came to his office. [redacted] would you have been in a position to have known had such [redacted] es or telegrams been received?

essarily, although Maj. Wells usually gave me all reports to [redacted] you ever hear of any confidential reports, confidential tele- [redacted] tal messages of any kind disappearing from Maj. Wells's [redacted] re you intimately associated with Maj. Clarke H. Wells [redacted] rtment commander?

ring that time did you live with him?

but I lived in the same town with him and saw him prac- [redacted] ring this time did you ever see Maj. Wells under the in- [redacted] flicting liquor?

you know Mr. Frederick Baker, formerly an officer in the [redacted] le?

ase state what you know in regard to his character and [redacted] among his associates in Haiti?

essay from American business men and gendarmerie Heu- [redacted] gitator and is not loyal to his superior officers and always [redacted] ident that he may have personal knowledge of. I personally [redacted] ny statement he ever made to be a fact, and I have heard of [redacted] y him that were absolutely incorrect, according to different [redacted] information.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS,
Washington, D. C.

sworn to before me this the 8th day of January, 1920.

H. LAY,
Lieutenant Colonel, Assistant Adjutant and Inspector,
United States Marine Corps.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 7, 1920.

Major, United States Marine Corps, having been called as [redacted] vey been informed of his right to decline to answer any [redacted] tions, was duly sworn, and testified before me. Lieut. Col. [redacted] nt adjutant and inspector, United States Marine Corps, as [redacted] commencing the testimony of Maj. Wells attention is invited [redacted] report of the brigade commander, First Provisional Brigade, [redacted] nes, Port au Prince, Haiti, to the major general commandant, [redacted] 1919. In paragraph 2 it is stated that from an investigation [redacted] pears that in the north of Haiti, in violation of the order of [redacted] spending the application of the corvée law, this law was put [redacted] sections after that date by order of the gendarmerie district [redacted] Clarke H. Wells, United States Marine Corps. This is mis- [redacted] Wells at that time was department commander and Capt. [redacted] strict commander where this corvée was alleged to have been [redacted] put into effect. Maj. Wells was in command of the entire department, comprising seven districts, and was 90 miles away from this district at the time.

1. Question. Please state your name, rank, and present station.

Answer. Clarke H. Wells, major, United States Marine Corps, Marine Corps recruiting station, Washington, D. C.

2. Question. Have you recently been on duty with the Haitian gendarmerie, and if so, what was your rank and title while on such duty? When were you stationed and what duties were assigned to and performed by you between what dates?

Answer. I was detached from the Haitian gendarmerie on March 1, 1918, at that time I held the rank of colonel in command of the Department of the North with headquarters at Cape Haitien, Haiti. To the best of my knowledge I joined the gendarmerie on May 6, 1916, and was on duty all the time between those dates. I joined the gendarmerie first as an inspector, and then as the road system in north Haiti and also in command of the Department of the Cape Haitien, which was then in process of construction. I was then assigned to regular inspection duty in that department. I was appointed to the gendarmerie on the 16th of December, 1918.

3. Question. Can you give the names and rank of some of the officers under your command and subject to your orders?

Answer. In the north I had Capt. Bartel as inspector, Capt. Termaster, Maj. Hayes as quartermaster, Capt. Doxey in command of the Company at Cape Haitien, and Lieut. Bowley, his assistant; Capt. Hamilton at Ouanaminthe, Capt. Verdier; at Hinche, Capt. Williams at Maissade; Capt. Howell at Port de Paix; Capt. Remount station; Capt. Hartman at Letrou; Lieut. Cates at the Cape Haitien; and Capt. Gibbons at Gonaives.

4. Question. During your service with the Haitian gendarmerie at Maissade and elsewhere were you aware of the existence of a compulsory "corvee" subsequent to the receipt of the order of October 1, 1918, pending the corvee law? If so, please state particulars.

Answer. After the receipt of the order of October 1, 1918, and to the best of my knowledge, as far as I could find out during my service there was no compulsory labor, meaning "corvee."

5. Question. Between what dates, approximately, were corvees abolished in the department under your charge?

Answer. Corvee was first started when the road system was in the process of construction, by order of the chief of the gendarmerie, in the latter part of 1916.

6. Question. Did you at any time observe personally or receive reports of instances of abuse or ill treatment of members of corvee by the gendarmerie?

Answer. I visited Hinche as frequently as my other duties would permit. No complaint ever reached me from any civilians or anybody in the Department of the North of the ill treatment of natives or members of the corvee, nor was there any report of the corvee ill treated by members of the gendarmerie.

7. Question. Did you at any time subsequent to October 1, 1918, give your tacit consent for the convening of compulsory construction work in your district?

Answer. No; I had personal charge of 65 miles of road between the Cape Haitien and Gonaives. After the corvee was abolished these laborers were sent back to their homes each week. The road to Hinche was in charge of the District of Hinche, Capt. Lavole, who as a member of the communal council used the taxes which the people were required to pay for the purpose of goods to sell for the purpose of paying for this labor. This was the consent of the magistrate there, as the people were very desirous to have the road.

8. Question. Did you ever see or hear that Caco prisoners had been killed and executed without trial?

Answer. When Gen. Catlin made his inspection in Hinche in March, 1919, it was found that several prisoners had been shot by Gen. Catlin by several natives, who were interrogated by him. This was the first intimation that I had had of anything of the kind. No complaints ever reached me from any source as to any shooting of Caco prisoners.

9. Question. Following the attack by bandits upon Maissade on November 1, 1918, did you express the wish to any of your judges that Caco prisoners, if undesirable or worthless, be "bumped off"?

Answer. Never.

did you hear it spoken of among the gendarmerie that it was quite a "bump-off" Caco prisoners and to make no report of such authority?

Was any report made to you, or did you ever hear, that Capt. executed some 19 caco prisoners in or near Hinche in January, was any investigation made by you at the time and what

Williams and myself visited Hinche in January, 1919, and found that, with the exception that roving bands of bandits in that district the market workmen, burned the houses, and in general terror was reported. The strength of the gendarmerie detachment in central Haiti was approximately 100 men and officers. Hinche, on Cape Haitien; all supplies had to be sent through on pack mules. In my opinion that the officers on duty there were very active. It was one of the finest barracks buildings in the gendarmerie. A hospital was installed there, and the place was generally in good order. Numerous bands of bandits were reported from time to time. The reports were numerous, and rumors travel very fast in that country. The reports were actual facts. I think the natives had the notion that they had the habit, of exaggerating and lying to a great extent. The position was reinforced by the cavalry from Port au Prince, and the officers would come up for two or three weeks for patrol duty. On my numerous visits to Hinche the officers seemed to be working; especially the construction work of building up the defenses seemed contended in the vicinity of Hinche, and there were evidences of any forced labor, except by prisoners. The jail contained approximately 60 men and women during my trips there. I never saw any of the prisoners or the inhabitants.

Were you well acquainted with Capt. Doxey, and, if so, what was his ability as an officer and reputation for veracity? Were his relations friendly or otherwise?

Doxey and myself were good friends; we were together during all of our service down there, and I would not doubt a minute. He was always truthful and conscientious in his work, very thorough, painstaking, and a good all around dependable man. His relations with Capt. Doxey were always very friendly. He was pure, sensitive, and a man of few words. He was respected by the natives. The bad element during his service in Hinche was because he was doing his duty. On account of his upholding the law and going out for the interests of the better element of the people, in his house one night at Hinche by bandits who were armed with rifles. At this time he displayed great courage. He was very brave. He succeeded, after the alarm had been sounded, in quelling the bandits and driving the bandits out into the country. He sent a report outlining the circumstances, saying that he was all right and that the bandits were killed during this attack. I think he was one of the most dependable officers in the service. He was very kind to the Haitians, listened to all their troubles, and had many friends among the better element.

Have you any knowledge of the circumstances attending the death of the notary, at the house occupied by Lieut. Williams in

He reported to me verbally that this man had been shot during an attack on that town. The officer in charge, Lieut. Williams, seemed to be the only one implicated in the attack, as the bandits came through his house and were firing from his house. Lieut. Williams was in Maissade at this time. This affair took place about the middle of the afternoon. Lieut. Williams was in his own house, across the street from the house. He immediately went outside to find out what was going on. He stated to me that the bandits were firing all around him, and to protect himself he got his men in the best shape he could. He returned the fire, and finally succeeded in driving the bandits out. A number had been killed. Just how many actually were killed I do not know. It was during this attack, it was reported, that Garnier was found dead in his house.

14. Question. What was the attitude of Frederick Baker to he was a gendarmerie officer?

Answer. He was my assistant in the road business; had a district of Gonaïves, which is 65 miles from Cape Haitien, over and our relations were always pleasant. When his enlistment in the Marine Corps he was released from the gendarmerie. Haitian Products Co., which was then organizing in Haiti. I seldom after this, as he was working in a different part of the country. He did notice, however, and it was talked about among the other officers of the gendarmerie, that he seemed to avoid further relationship with officers attached to the gendarmerie.

15. Question. What, in your opinion, were the principal causes of unrest prevalent in the Republic of Haiti?

Answer. The principal cause, I think, when Charlemagne escaped from Cape Haitien by bribing a gendarme. This man had great influence over a large number of people. He was educated, and circulated all kinds of propaganda about the American occupation. There was no trouble with general police cases, throughout the north until his escape from the country. They were all afraid of him and he got recruits every place he went. They thought that he was there to drive the whites out of Haiti. Because he was abolished he spread great discontent by circulating the idea that the Americans were there to make slaves out of them. The Haitians were very excitable, rumors and news travel very fast, and they have the whole of Northern Haiti composed six districts of the most mountainous part of the island, about 150 miles across and about 90 miles wide. The population of this territory was about 960 men divided between the different districts.

16. Question. Do you feel justified in stating that there were no deaths of native prisoners in the department under your charge?

Answer. Yes; except in the instance of the investigation at Cap-Haïtien in March, 1919, of which I never knew the outcome, the decision was, or the attendant circumstances. About this part of the country I knew nothing, it having never been reported to me, if it took place.

17. Question. Admitting that natives were in some instances killed without trial and without official report of same being made to higher authorities, it your opinion that such killings were justifiable under the circumstances?

Answer. I do not think that any killings are justifiable without trial in the case of bandits in the hills who are armed and trying to obtain arms and ammunition in their possession, as happened in numerous cases.

18. Question. Do you consider that the Haitians residing in your department were subjected to ill treatment or were unduly oppressed by the gendarmerie?

Answer. I do not; I think they were better treated than they were before in their lives. During the time that I commanded in the department was put in jail without a trial, as had been done before the gendarmerie was established; the communes had more money; the taxes were more regular; the trails and roads were made passable both for automobiles and for pack animals; bandits were stopped from pillaging the inhabitants; disputes among the people were settled; and everything was done to improve conditions.

(At this point the witness submitted to the examining officer a letter which he requested be made a part of his testimony. The letters were as follows:)

GENDARMERIE D'HAÏTI, QUARTIER
Port au Prince, Febr

From: Chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haïti.

To: Commandant Clarke H. Wells, Inspector, Gendarmerie d'Haïti.

Subject: Road work.

1. The following indorsement, signed by the commander, Department of Cape, appears on your road report for the month of January, 1919:

"The attention of the chief of the gendarmerie is invited to the fact that under the supervision of Maj. Wells the amount of work accomplished has greatly increased per month. This is undoubtedly due to the attention given the work by this officer and to the efficient manner in which he has expended the funds given him."

2. Gen. Cole, to whose attention this indorsement was brought, signed, stated to me that you are doing exceptionally fine work and that it gives me great pleasure to add my approbation to that of all the officers of my Department.

road work largely depends the future of this country, and it is particularly gratifying to hear such praise as is given. This letter will be appended to your official gendarmerie record.
S. D. BUTLER.

GENDARMERIE D'HAÏTI, QUARTIER GENERAL,
Port au Prince, March 3, 1917.

the Gendarmerie d'Haïti.
Clarke H. Wells, Inspector, Gendarmerie d'Haïti. on of barracks, prisons, etc., at Cape Haïtien.
g extract appears in a report made by Col. H. L. Roosevelt, G. d'H, on a recent trip made through your district; prison in a most excellent condition; in fact, it is easily the of its kind in Haïti and would be a model anywhere. It otless, and the buildings are admirable for the purpose and s remarkable. The greatest credit is due to all who have connected with the maintenance and operation of this prison t is due to Commandant Clarke H. Wells, G. d'H, who is in at condition of the Cape Haïtien prison is a subject of ment by everyone who has seen it, and I take pleasure in your work in connection therewith.

This letter will be appended to your official gendarmerie record.
S. D. BUTLER.

(First indorsement.)

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CAPE,
GENDARMERIE D'HAÏTI,
Cape Haïtien, March 3, 1917.

H. Wells, G. d'H.
ned is much pleased to note the contents of this letter, which lit upon you.
J. M. TRACY.

GENDARMERIE D'HAÏTI,
QUARTIER GENERAL,
Port au Prince, Haïti, December 21, 1917.

ing officer, constabulary detachment, United States Marine H. Wells, United States Marine Corps.
andatory letter.
eto is a radio from the major general commandant, United rps, transmitted to these headquarters by the brigade coms will be appended to your Marine Corps record.
S. D. BUTLER.

(First indorsement.)

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CAPE,
GENDARMERIE D'HAÏTI,
Cape Haïtien, December 27, 1917.

t commander, Department of the Cape.
H. Wells, United States Marine Corps.

J. K. TRACY.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST PROVISIONAL BRIGADE,
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS,
Port au Prince, Haïti, December 20, 1917.

ommander.
armerie.
pair.
g radiogram has been received in reply to one sent from this successful run of an automobile from Port au Prince to Cape th instant.

"Brigade Port au Prince, information contained radiogram gratifying. My sincere congratulations to all who have been in doing this great work. 13319.

2. It is with great pleasure that I am able to forward this dispatch to the organization which is solely responsible for accomplishment of the work in question.

JOHN

GENDARMERIE D'HAITI, QUARTIER C
Port au Prince, Haiti, Decem

From: Chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

To: Maj. Clarke H. Wells, G. d'H.

Subject: Letter of commendation.

Inclosure: One.

1. This office takes pleasure in forwarding to you the attached dated November 16, 1918, from the American minister, Port au Prince.

2. A copy of this letter and inclosures will be appended to your

ALEX. S.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF A Norem

Gen. ALEXANDER S. WILLIAMS,

Chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, Port au Prince.

SIR: In reply to this legation's dispatch transmitting your report ending August 5, 1918, addressed to the Secretary of State, in which that "the road work is progressing satisfactorily and that Maj. Capt. C. F. Baker, and Capt. Ernest Lavoie, of the gendarmerie, can too highly for their energy and resourcefulness," the Department directs me to inform you that because of its desire for the improvements in Haiti it is particularly pleased to learn of the progress made in road construction and to request you to express to the mentioned the real appreciation of the department for their work with the road between Cape Haitien and Hinche.

I am, sir, your obedient servant.

A. BAILEY-BL
Ameri

GENDARMERIE D'HAITI, QUARTIER C
Port au Prince, Republic of Haiti, Janu

From: Chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti.

To: Col. Clarke H. Wells, G. d'H.

Subject: Inspection of the Department of the Cape.

1. On the completion of my recent inspection of the Department which you command, I have to inform you that I found little to much to commend. The great improvements made in barracks and enlisted personnel, in roads, in prisons, in hospitals, and in the ministered by your officers reflect great credit on your conduct especially as much of the improvement, even allowing for the predecessors, is evidently due to your ability, energy, and initiative.

2. A copy of this letter will be attached to your record.

ALEX.

19. Question. Did you ever receive any confidential messages existing in your department; and if so, were those confidential taken from your files or lost?

Answer. I never received any confidential reports.

20. Question. Did you ever receive any confidential telegram reporting the actual state of affairs at Hinche and Maissade in regard being carried on after the order was issued abolishing it, or about killing of natives in or near those towns?

Answer. No; no telegrams of this nature were ever received by

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1920.

WELLS, United States Marine Corps, was recalled as a witness, informed that his previous oath was binding, and of his right under any criminating question, further testified, as follows:

Q. Did you ever intimate to any member of the gendarmerie that you would receive reports about prisoners?

A. I testified that I did not care to receive such reports. The regulations called for regular inspections and reports about inspecting officers attached to the department, and these reports were always written up and remain in the department at Cape Haitien. The district commanders made written additions existing in their districts at the end of each month to the chief of the gendarmerie. These reports are on file, by the records of the gendarmerie.

Q. Did you ever receive any messages?

A. Messages were received each day over the telegraph from the districts.

Q. It has been stated by witnesses that the telegrams and orders in the north have disappeared. Do you know what became of them?

A. The time I was detached from Cape Haitien, May 17, 1919, all telegrams were there as I had received them. I know nothing about the disappearance.

Q. Why were the papers referred to kept under lock and key?

A. The drawer of the department commander's desk was kept locked, and I was watching the activities of certain natives were kept there; reports from the chief of the gendarmerie, all of which remain in the department.

Q. You stated, in answer to question 20, that no confidential telegrams were sent by you. How do you account for the discrepancy between questions 9 and 10 in the testimony of Capt. Laurence Bolts?

A. While visiting the Third Company's office one time, which was used by me also, in which there were always a number of natives present, I requested Lieut. Bolts to keep the telegraph file out of sight, as I was watching the movements of certain natives who were under guard. I thought that it might be read by those about.

Q. After Gen. Catlin's visit to your department, in which he found out that corvee was practiced after the issuance of the order of the department and also that some prisoners had been unlawfully killed, what did you do to correct this?

A. I reported that there would be no further doubt about how the work of the department was suspended. Gen. Williams, who was also present, was on the spot that no prisoners under any circumstances were to be shot, and these orders were dispatched by me, by special messenger to the department.

Q. But, Williams has testified that certain escaping prisoners were shot and that he had made written reports of these killings, and that the district commander; were any of these prisoners killed by you by the district commander under whom Lieut. Williams was acting?

A. If so, did you make any report to Col. Williams?

Q. I remember certain reports of operations made by Lieut. Williams; whether they mentioned any killings of prisoners, but I forget to report to Col. Williams. These reports were concerning the situation, so far as I remember. I also made several trips to the department during this time and talked over the situation with Gen. Williams.

Q. Did you ever tell Capt. Hamilton that Gen. Williams' orders concerning the killing of prisoners did not apply unless the prisoners were guilty of a crime?

A. I gave no instructions whatsoever to Capt. Hamilton concerning the gendarmerie orders.

Q. Did you tell Capt. Hamilton that he should go ahead executing the orders without anything about it?

Answer. No; I never mentioned to any officer or man during service in Haiti anything about executing anybody. The entered my head.

In this connection I would like to supplement my answer to my former testimony, by saying that I did receive confidential telegrams in code, all of which remain on file.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this January 12, 1920.

Lieutenant Colonel, Assistant Adjutant and Inspector, United States Army

WASHINGTON, D. C.

ALEXANDER S. WILLIAMS, lieutenant colonel, United States Army, having been called as a witness, and having been informed of the purpose of the hearing, and having been sworn, declined to answer any incriminating questions, was duly sworn, and me, L'eat. Col. H. R. Lay, assistant adjutant and inspector, Marine Corps, as follows:

1. Question. Please state your name, rank, and present station.

Answer. Alexander S. Williams, lieutenant colonel, United States Army, stationed at Marine Barracks, navy yard, Philadelphia.

2. Question. What duty were you performing from May, 1915

Answer. I was chief of the Haitian gendarmerie from May, 1915, 1919, and I was assistant chief from organization of the gendarmerie until May, 1918.

3. Question. Did you ever hear that Caco prisoners had been executed in a cemetery in or near Hinche and shot; if so, please state what you saw or by you to verify this statement.

Answer. Yes; during a visit of inspection made by Brig. Gen. Catlin to Hinche in January, 1919, Gen. Catlin interrogated gendarmes, local officials, the local priest, enlisted gendarmes, and inhabitants. He reported to me certain reports which he told me had been received by him. He alleged that certain prisoners involved in banditism had been executed in a cemetery in Hinche, led to a point outside of Hinche, near a cemetery, and executed by a detachment of enlisted gendarmes. This allegation was supported by the statements of one or more gendarmes interrogated by me. To the best of my recollection, Capt. Ernest Lavole who was then district commander at Hinche, acknowledged that such an execution had taken place. He offered in explanation of this action the fact that it was necessary to obtain conviction in the local civil courts, and that after the expiration of the sentence in the provost court in Cape Haitien and the expiration of the sentence by such court, that they would return to the neighborhood of Hinche with bandits with whom they had been originally identified and make the investigation of the region more difficult. The entire investigation was conducted by me, Gen. Catlin, and the allegations seemed supported, except as to the execution. No steps were taken by me to verify this statement or the allegations, for the reason that Hinche at that moment, at the date of my departure from Haiti, was under the direct military control of the commander of the district of north Haiti, who received his orders from the brigade commander, First Provisional Brigade, United States Army, at Port-au-Prince. I was not a party to this investigation, but was not a part of it.

4. Question. What duty was Maj. Clarke H. Wells, United States Army, performing during the latter part of 1918 and the beginning of 1919?

Answer. Maj. Clarke H. Wells at that time was department commander of the cape, which department included the district of the cape.

5. Question. Did you consult with Maj. Wells from time to time regarding matters were going on in his department; and was the killing of prisoners ever mentioned?

Answer. Yes; the killing of prisoners in custody was never mentioned. Instructions were given that every effort should be made to distinguish those who were actually involved in operations against bandits from those who were in the vicinity of the operations or who might have been involved with the bandits against their will.

6. Question. Would it have been possible for 6 or 10 prisoners to be executed at any one time in the Hinche district without your knowledge?

Answer. Yes.

conversation with Capt. Lavoie and Lieut. Williams was the tion of prisoners ever mentioned?
 cept along the broad lines of general treatment of natives and of banditism.

ring your service with the Haitian gendarmerie did you ever der the influence of intoxicating liquor?

What is your opinion as to the character and veracity of Maj.

der Capt. Doxey—then major in the gendarmerie—to be an e feeling. He was noted among gendarmerie officers for his and sympathy with the natives. He was successful in his gendarmerie affairs, and had the confidence and respect of marked degree. This was not due to his temperament entirely gh understanding of the native dialect (Creole), which he stood better than any commissioned officer of the Marine the gendarmerie. I have found in every official and per-h Capt. Doxey this officer to be very careful in his state-never had any reason to suppose or believe that he was not t in all of his statements.

Did you ever see or hear of any order being issued by Maj.
 putting into effect the corvee law, after October, 1918, in his nt where he was commanding?

has been stated that corvee was seen in operation in Feb-Maissade, where two groups of between 50 and 75 men each the road and a third group of about 45 men in the market le; please state what you know about this?

Catlin informed me that Col. Hooker had reported the exist-the neighborhood of Maissade, and directed me to have an
 e. I assured him at the time that no corvee was in opera-orders relative thereto were being carried out throughout sed through Maissade two or three times and had seen no mposition of which, or the attitude of which, led me to be-was being carried on. I had seen road gangs working under ngle gendarme who was in charge of the road construction.
 l by my observations was borne out by reports to the effect rk in this neighborhood was being conducted by volunteer e cost of this labor, which was not paid for from federal aid from communal funds. On the occasion of Gen. Catlin's when I was present, a road gang of perhaps 50 men were estward of Maissade. Members of this gang were interro-Catlin through the interpreter, a Mr. Holly, a Haitian, and ed that they were forced to work. Gen. Catlin asked those ed to work and wanted to return to their farms to step to ally the entire gang stepped to the front.

was still present, Capt. Doxey, if I remember correctly, an interpreter, reinterrogated them; and Capt. Doxey told nd time, that with the exception of a very few men all had vere not forced to do this work; that they were free to ished, and that from time to time they took advantage of returned to their farms in the vicinity. The report as to in this question I believe was made by Lieut. Col. R. S.
 ult of the contradictory statements made by the men in the form no definite conclusion at that time as to whether or d been as alleged forcibly collected, forcibly detained, or nd as stated in an earlier question the military control of g devolved upon the district commander of the district of , I made no further investigation. I did, however, direct k in that neighborhood cease. I further directed Lieut.
 ed man of the Marine Corps serving as officer of the gene know how many men of this gang returned to work or the beginning of the following week. My recollection is at a fair percentage had shown up the following week for you know if Maj. Wells knew that corvee was still in ober, 1918?

3. Some time subsequent to this Gen. Catlin told me he had been used in the neighborhood of Maissade—this, I believe, was in November, 1918. He directed that I make an investigation or have one made; I directed the department commander, Maj. Wells, to determine the date when corvée was stopped, by order, and November had been continued on the Maissade-Hinche road, but with paid laborers. During this period I had been over this road two or three times, but saw no evidence of corvée being used. I saw gangs of natives, perhaps, 50 or 60 men, working on the road without other guard but gendarmes, in charge of the work. These gangs in no way resembled the gangs working in this region or in any other part of Haiti; and the fact of working, their remoteness from the towns, and the absence of any necessity so necessary in corvée work, led me to believe that these were paid laborers. If coercion was used at all it is probable that the coercion was simply in the issuance of an "invitation" which is the only method that has been used in French or Creole for men to work. How this invitation was conveyed to the country people I do not know positive, but I presume it was known to them by enlisted gendarmes and local representatives of the Government. This would be perfectly regular, and provided the work was adequately paid, and free to leave the work when they chose, would not invite criticism. It is alleged that force was used in bringing these gangs to the farms that they were restrained by force, and kept at work long hours on the farms called for their presence.

Aside from the difficulty of defining just what is forced labor in these circumstances, I am not convinced that corvée was actually used. Maj. Wells reported that no corvée was used, but in view of the fact that he reported to Gen. Catlin, Gen. Catlin decided to investigate himself, and that he wished to visit northern Haiti, and further, that he came with him. I do not remember whether or not any notice of this visit was given; I think it must have been, however, for Maj. Wells was at Gonaïves. Together with Gen. Catlin the party visited St. Marc and Hinche. At all three places Gen. Catlin interrogated gendarmes, local officials, priests, and gendarmes, prisoners, and certain officials. Gen. Catlin was not present at all of the investigations, but enough was learned to allow for the unreliability of native testimony, to indicate that measures had to be taken to put down banditism; and even if the inexperience and youth of the officers involved, they did not make a good judgment. Without entering into a defense of such error, it must be borne in mind that a single white officer placed in the control of a district embracing 400 or 500 square miles and swarming with bandits, and having at his disposal a very insufficient and ill-trained native police, was apt to take the most direct course in such a circumstance.

The case of Lieut. Williams, at Maissade, is a case in point. He was asked if there were any gendarmes who wished to complain of the treatment they had received, and one at least testified that he had been treated badly by Lieut. Williams. This would seem an inexcusable exhibit, but when it is considered that Williams was living in a town in a country full of bandits, which had been jumped twice by bandits, and which occasions the gendarmerie garrison had been driven out, and striking this man, who was the only sentinel by night over the barracks, and who was found by him to be asleep on post, and without an explanation. I can not remember that I ever issued up a formal or informal order bearing on the killing of prisoners. The regulations provided for this, and gendarmes who were guilty of the killing of prisoners, or killing of prisoners, were always tried by either a court-martial or by the civil courts of Haiti. The sentences were always very severe, as I controlled the policy of the gendarmerie to a certain extent could influence the civil courts. Several sentences were adjudged, and these sentences upon my personal presentation to the President of Haiti were always approved by him and the action was out by firing squads. The action of these courts is referred to the president invariably commuted the death sentence of civilians to imprisonment, and in this matter realizing the racial defects of his own government in enforcing discipline in the gendarmerie in the one matter, the greatest trouble; that is, the abuse of authority by Haiti, and free from superior control.

This man, from the very beginning of American occupation more than friendly to the Americans, and was first brought to our favorable notice by his action in organizing a posse and number of people who participated in the first attack on Hinche. His matter won him a commendatory letter from the President of the Republic, thus definitely identified himself with the Americans he incurred the hostility of his countrymen, and as time went on and the communal revolts reflected with greater regularity, the local laws enforced as they had before, Preval's attitude gained him the native hostility of the Haitians in his commune. It is more than probable that Preval's extortion and that he did use forced labor on his outlying properties.

These faults I found to be prevalent among Haitian communities. Just what efforts were made to control his actions I can not say. On my visit I had no reason to suppose that anything was radically different in the conduct of communal affairs in Maissade. I did know, however, from personal inspection, that the entire aspect of the small town was different. The streets were clean, a proper market established, and the commerce increased. If, however, Preval was guilty of all with which he was charged, his actions must have borne heavily on the inhabitants; and as he was constantly doing these things with the knowledge, consent, and aid of the gendarmerie officers any feeling of hostility held by the natives toward the gendarmerie must have been intensified.

6. While visiting Hinche, Gen. Catlin interrogated people including the officers and men of the gendarmerie. It was alleged that a number of natives had been executed in an open space in front of the barracks by machine-gun fire. This allegation was denied by the commander, Capt. Levoie, and all knowledge of such an occurrence was denied. The enlisted men of the gendarmerie who should have been cognizant of the affair.

At the time the alleged execution took place two enlisted men of the Corps were stationed at Hinche with a Lewis machine gun. I can not say positively whether or not these two men were in Hinche at the time of the visit. I do not remember at the time who made these allegations. They were made by a local official. It was further alleged and as I remember, that a number of prisoners were taken from the barracks, they had been confined and executed about a half a mile outside the town. I believe the gendarmes who took part in this execution were executed. Gen. Catlin and acknowledged the charge in part, differing from them in respect to the number of prisoners.

7. While the use of corvée on road work had been alleged in the neighborhood of Hinche was alleged mostly in connection with the work of the gendarmerie barracks. Specifically it was stated that a number of inhabitants of a certain rural section called "New Guinea" had been brought to Hinche, placed at work on the construction of a barracks, kept on this work for a considerable time. There was some question as to the amount of money paid these men, but they were paid something. It was alleged that they had been taken by Capt. Lavoie as a military measure and designed to be a section touching on the no man's land between Haiti and Santo Domingo, which was an asylum for bandits for both Haiti and Santo Domingo. Capt. Lavoie stated that working these men on barracks construction was incidental.

8. It was alleged generally by the civil officials, and I believe by the gendarmerie in this region, and that between the bandits and the gendarmes the inhabitants did not know which way to turn. This statement is true. The bandits were only partly armed, were not organized, would scatter usually at the approach of a gendarmerie patrol. A gendarmerie patrol established contact with a group of bandits a few shots were fired, by these and the bandits would scatter in all directions and would go to the inhabitants of that particular locality, especially those who were friendly or otherwise furnished food to the bandits and who felt guilty with them. In the pursuit it is more than probable that many of the inhabitants were killed. So far as my own orders were concerned as concerns those orders issued by officers under me, every effort was made to distinguish between bandits and those who were involved in banditry of their will. I have no knowledge that Maj. Wells, the departing commander, ever issued any order contravening mine or of his own initiative an order contrary to my expressed and generally known wishes as to the treatment of natives, whether under arms or not.

of Gen. Catlin and myself to Port au Prince in January, desired that Capt. Levoile and Lieut. Williams be removed to Maissade. I ordered to Hinche Capt. Doxey, whose disposition was that of kindness, sympathy for the natives, and more of native dialects than any other senior officer of the marines had been ordered to Hinche and outlying posts, the assigned to ordinary police work within town, and Lieut. Col. placed in military command of the affected central region. Orders were made subsequent to that by Gen. Catlin, by Col. or marine officers I do not know.

As I do it is difficult for me to believe that the banditism, which in or about Hinche and was spread rapidly north, east, from there, attaining its maximum in Mirabaldis and Lascaz, specific misconduct or misadministration on the part of any even during Spanish colonial times, has been a nexus of banditism. Long before corvee was used in this region Hinche organized bands, the first attack taking place while Capt. Levoile stated, enjoyed the confidence and liking of the natives, was in command. It is impossible for me to believe that corvee within a limited area would have such an effect. I do not believe, and my belief is founded on most careful thought, that in central Haiti, which grew almost to the proportions of a plague to other causes.

These causes was the illegal general application of the corvee; second, antagonism between the Negro and the white; third, the national independence; fourth, the economic conditions brought

These reasons I wish to make it clear that had these causes not been stressed and played upon by Haitian leaders the would never have occurred and the natives would have lived under almost any system of abuse, as they rested quiescent years under graver abuses inflicted by their own people.

That the corvee was illegally applied in the neighborhood of Maissade, and in defiance of my clear orders on the matter, and, that the allegations of indiscriminate and unjustified killings made it difficult to understand how these things could have been known to responsible seniors. With the best of will in view of administrative work thrust upon all gendarmerie it was impossible to properly supervise the details of local administration and rumors seemed to justify an investigation into any commotion itself was attended with every difficulty.

The interior the native has no knowledge of the time, dates, or the reality as a witness caused me to approve gendarmerie courts (or less reluctance), and the amount of work involved in was very often out of all proportions to the results obtained. It was necessary in making an inspection trip to judge conditions and what one was told. Another index, and one upon which I largely as showing the mental attitude of the natives, which was necessary a reflex of the attitude of the gendarmerie toward the natives or not the natives when met on the road showed no desire to my party. This was not true where the corvee had been in every time when corvee was alleged to have been terrorizing Hinche and Maissade, the weekly markets in Maissade were more people as they never had been before. Than this at these days there is no better barometer of the state of feeling with regard to protection and security. If there were any of dissatisfaction among the well disposed country people I and while the inspection trips of my subordinates could and more into detail it is quite possible that they too failed to suspect that affairs were not well.

It may be stated that the efforts of practically all the natives were devoted to improving the condition of the natives and will. This they did because of a liking for, and sympathy to make the conditions of their own service more pleasant, to conduct themselves in this fashion, whether commissioned or enlisted in the Marine Corps, were detached from the have no knowledge of corvee carried on contrary to orders, of prisoners, except as stated, nor have I knowledge of any ord encourage or justify any such action.

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 7th day of January,

Lieutenant Colonel, Assistant Adjutant and United States

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan

DORCAS L. WILLIAMS, sergeant, United States Marine Corps, called as a witness, and having been informed of his right to do any criminating question, was duly sworn and testified before H. R. Lay, assistant adjutant and inspector, U. S. Marine Corps.

1. Question. What is your name, rank, and present station.

Answer. Dorcas Lee Williams, sergeant, United States Marine Corps, stationed at Marine Barracks, Navy Yard, Brooklyn, N. Y.

2. Question. Have you recently been on duty with the Haitian gendarmerie, and, if so, what was your rank and title while employed on such duty, where were you stationed and what duties were assigned to you? Answered by you?

Answer. Yes, sir; as a second lieutenant of the Haitian gendarmerie, stationed in the district of Hinche from November 12, 1918, to March 19, 1919, was performing patrol duty. I was in Maissade from March 19, 1918, to some time in March, 1919; the rest of the time I was in the district of Hinche, guarding the town and performing patrol duty. While I was in Maissade I was in charge of road work and acted as district commander and looked out for the duties of the district.

3. Question. Who was your immediate commanding officer with the gendarmerie; if more than one state names and dates you served under each? Did you at any time have independent command of any forces or any commune or district?

Answer. Capt. Ernest Lavole; he was the only one who was my immediate commanding officer. I never had any command that was independent.

4. Question. While serving with the gendarmerie, did you ever have knowledge of the killing of any caco prisoners; if so, state particulars?

Answer. No, sir; except prisoners trying to escape.

5. Question. While serving with the gendarmerie, were you ever in charge of the convening of any corvee, compulsory or voluntary, subsequent to the order of October 1, 1918, suspending the corvee law? If so, state knowledge of the facts in the premises.

Answer. There was no corvee as I would call it, as the people were all paid for the work they did. My understanding of corvee was compulsory work or labor, feed, and imprisonment. The men who worked the road or for the commune were paid by the magistrate from the funds, and I witnessed all payments. From the time I came into the district all work which was being performed by native labor was not corvee.

6. Question. Did you, personally, subsequent to October 1, 1918, directly or indirectly, for the convening of any compulsory construction work in your district?

Answer. No, sir; I never did.

7. Question. It has been alleged that you had personal knowledge of a number of caco prisoners near Maissade. Is this allegation true, and, if so, what were the attendant circumstances?

Answer. There were no prisoners killed except escaping prisoners who were attempting to escape. Several prisoners were attempting to escape. Between December, 1918, and March, 1919, there were several attempts by prisoners to escape, and quite a number were killed, 15 or 20. During that time we probably killed between 10 and 20 who were trying to escape.

Do you know of any other prisoners being killed in or near your duty there?

Do you have any knowledge of the circumstances attending the death of a notary, who, it is alleged, was found dead in your district?

I have some knowledge of this man. He was found wounded in the barracks and I questioned him, asking him why he had not reported his wound; why he had not made some report of his being wounded; how he could have treated his wound, and all he would say was that he wanted to go back to his house, and would not talk to me while sitting in front of the barracks in a chair. The sergeant denied treatment. He would not agree to anything being done for him if he was denied being wounded.

That came through Garnier's house, or about 3.30 o'clock in the afternoon, was an attack by the bandits on the town, and the barracks. The bandits came through Garnier's house and took cover between the barracks and the barracks and they were firing from the barracks. After the skirmish was over, I chased the bandits out of the barracks when I returned to the town; so I went into my house and reported to my house the sergeant came over and told me that he had been wounded. I sent the sergeant to see if he could

When he returned he brought Garnier with him. I asked Garnier if he was wounded and he said that he was not. The sergeant unbuttoned his shirt and showed me the wound on the towel. I asked Garnier who had wounded him and he did not know. I asked him why he didn't report so that he could get treatment, and all he would say was that he didn't know. I asked him anything about the attack and he said he didn't know. I wanted to lie down and he said he would rather sit up. I went to the front of the barracks. I went to bed and left the sergeant and do what he could for him. Some time in the night the sergeant said that Garnier was dead. The sergeant awoke me and asked what I wanted done with Garnier's body; I said that the Judge de Paix, which was done. Everything was done that could be done. I gave him the best I had in medical supplies for his life.

Do you have any good inhabitant of the town and friendly toward us? I said that in the way of a stray bullet during the fight. After this state, all the civilians left the town.

Do you have any order, written or verbal, ever received by you, or did you receive an order, to summarily execute (bump off) cacao prisoners or any other such executions to higher authority; and, if so, from what authority; or, if no order was received, what led you to execute such actions would meet with the approval of your superior?

I never heard of anything like that; the orders we had were to capture and capture organized bandits. The bandits were all organized in bands of from 30 to 150 men, and in the district we were instructed to scatter these people and we could, and any stolen property that was recovered I turned it to the owners, if the owners could be found. These bandits were armed with machetes and rifles, and when attacked, or when they would always fire on you.

Do you ever hear that Capt. Ernest Lavoie had executed some prisoners or near Hinche, in January, 1919; and, if so, from what authority?

I was in the district I did not hear that any prisoners had been killed, but after I left the district and returned to Port au Prince—sometimes that 40 prisoners had been killed, and sometimes that 10 prisoners had been killed in the district of Hinche. I heard rumors floating around that bandits had attacked this town and that more false rumors than anything else; every man that came to me to tell.

Do you have any duties place you in direct contact with Maj. Clarke?

Maj. TURNER. Except through investigation and through testimony of two of the witnesses.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you make any investigations of any rumors of killings by or under the direction of Lieut. Freeman Lang, of the 1st Infantry, in and about the district of Hinche?

Maj. TURNER. No.

Mr. ANGELL. In October and November, 1918?

Maj. TURNER. No; that was one which never came to my notice.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you make any investigation of any alleged supposed killing of Garnier by Williams at Maissade?

Maj. TURNER. Yes; I tried to connect up the Garnier killing and was unable to get any information on that subject. I tried to get some of the gendarmes who were there, but the records at Port-au-Prince such that at that time I could not get any. Williams was not in the time.

Mr. ANGELL. Had Williams been in the Marine Corps service?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. But he had left Haiti at the time you made your report?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. He had also been in the gendarmerie?

Maj. TURNER. He was a lieutenant in the gendarmerie.

Mr. ANGELL. He was an enlisted man in the Marines?

Maj. TURNER. He was a sergeant.

Mr. ANGELL. So you never had an opportunity to interview Williams?

Maj. TURNER. No.

Mr. ANGELL. You said you believed that something actually happened at Hinche in regard to this supposed killing of natives under Captain Latte's command?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What is your belief regarding that incident?

Maj. TURNER. I believe somebody was killed at Latte. Latte was the commandant.

Mr. ANGELL. You say that somebody was killed? What is your number that were killed?

Maj. TURNER. That I do not know.

Mr. ANGELL. What is your belief as to the circumstances under which they were killed?

Maj. TURNER. That I do not know.

Mr. ANGELL. When you say somebody was killed at Latte, do you mean in combat?

Maj. TURNER. Oh, no; I mean—

Mr. ANGELL. You mean unlawful killing?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Unlawful killing under the direction and with the approval of Capt. Lavole?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Is it a fact, then, that you believe his denial of the matter made to you was not true?

Maj. TURNER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And of course an admission by him of such killing would have been self-incriminatory?

Maj. TURNER. Yes. I told them all in any questions they were asked that they did not have to incriminate themselves; that they could refuse to answer any questions which might incriminate them.

Mr. ANGELL. You said a little while ago in answer to a question that you heard, but could not get any definite information regarding brutal treatment of prisoners. In answering that question did you have in mind that the men were taken from the Cacos or did you refer to men working under the corvée or both?

Maj. TURNER. I had in mind the idea of prisoners from the point of view of anything else.

Mr. ANGELL. You were not referring to those working under the corvée?

Maj. TURNER. Yes; I was, in a way, too. Yes; that was consistent.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you find any definite information regarding the treatment of men working under the corvée as distinguished from prisoners?

Maj. TURNER. No.

are distinguishing brutal treatment from the killings you were thinking that taking them on the corvee might be convenient, but I did not consider that part as brutal treatment. the course of your investigation and of the performance of it, did you learn of the extent, if any, to which airplanes attacking the native force?

Q. How many airplanes did you know of that were used in combat against the natives?

A. Approximately—

Q. How many were there?

A. Three to five. There was one case where as many as three were used.

Q. For what purpose were those airplanes used?

A. For information and scouting, locating the bands of Cacos, and to see if they attacked them.

Q. Did they attack them with what?

A. With machine guns.

Q. Were they ever used for bombing, as far as you know?

A. I believe some homemade bombs were used, but that was about all.

Q. Was the use of bombs upon orders from headquarters or upon orders of officers immediately in charge of the airplanes?

A. I do not believe that any orders were ever issued to use bombs from headquarters. In fact, I am sure none were issued.

Q. Why was it stopped, if you know?

A. I do not know why they were stopped, but I do not believe they were. There were not enough Haitians together to make it worth a bomb.

Q. Do you know of specific instances where bombs from airplanes were used?

A. My knowledge on that point is confined to knowledge of the fact that airplanes had been on some occasions used as a means of attack.

Q. Can you give me any instances where bombs were dropped from airplanes? I know of only one case, and I do not believe it happened there—I know it did not—but they dropped a bomb, I heard.

A. It did not result in any deaths, as far as you know, in that particular case.

Q. Do you remember the talk among the aviators that they had no success whatever with bombs. They never got together to make it worth while to drop bombs.

A. Yes, the bombs dropped on villages?

Q. Yes, no.

A. I testified that when our marine or gendarmerie forces came they jumped them, and that there was firing on both sides?

Q. Yes.

A. That, you say, resulted sometimes in the death of natives—of course.

Q. Do you have any idea of the number of Cacos killed under those circumstances?

A. Altogether, you mean, throughout Haiti from the time we were there?

Q. What is your understanding of those figures?

A. I should say about 2,100. I know almost exactly how many were killed on October 1, 1919, and October 1, 1920.

Q. Do you tell us what that number was, approximately?

A. It was 1,132.

Q. That is the number of Haitians killed between October 1, 1919, and October 1, 1920?

Q. Yes.

A. Those are the official figures?

Q. Those are the official figures.

Mr. ANGELL. You think those figures are accurate?

Maj. TURNER. Except probably for the first two months, October, and they are approximately accurate. You can call the accurate. They were all killed in action, every one of these.

Mr. ANGELL. You testified, if I remember correctly, that you there were many killings of men working under the corvee tempted to escape. Have you any idea, even approximately, killed in this manner?

Maj. TURNER. At first I thought there were quite a lot, but in comparing it down, and I should say probably a hundred or less.

Mr. HOWE. During the whole occupation?

Maj. TURNER. Yes. I have no figures to prove that at all; opinion on it. At first, in taking the testimony, it was a good it was later. As I got to learn them better I scaled down my everything.

Mr. ANGELL. Those would be native Haitians who had been killed while trying to escape from the forced labor on the roads?

Maj. TURNER. Yes. I would like to say that the 2,100 approximately what our figures gave when I was down there. I am also of the opinion that is exaggerated, particularly the number of deaths that to October 1, 1919. I happened to know of a case where it was 50 were killed, and on investigation only one dead body was found at the scene of the action. Before we took these records and made them quite often reports would come in that cacos had been jumped, number killed, and the number killed seemed to be such a gross exaggeration of the number supposed to be in the band that orders were issued to stop reports of killings would include only dead bodies found, and the number dropped back to normal or below normal, considering the actual deaths.

Mr. HOWE. The estimates turned out to be higher than the actual?

Maj. TURNER. Yes. As I say, in this case where a major was killed there a report came in that they had been attacked and that was about 50, and that was accepted on the records. An investigation was made and when they looked it up they found one dead body and no other else having been hurt. I also know that reports had come in that 75 Cacos were met at a certain point and 25 were killed, and I found sometimes that they found straw hats, and considered that the men who lost their hats were killed.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring to the letter signed by Lieut. Col. H. J. H. addressed to the brigade commander, dated February 28, 1920, in which report of your investigation, and particularly referring to paragraph 1 of the letter [reading]:

"We are of the opinion that Maj. Wells and Capt. Doxey knew that existed; that inhabitants were being maltreated and killed; and to the extent we are convinced that some reluctance was shown in the Prince fully posted as to the true conditions."

I would ask you whether that represented your final opinion as to whether you have had any occasion whatever to change your opinion.

Maj. TURNER. Yes; I am quite well satisfied that the inhabitants in the corvee and some were killed in jumping the corvee and some were killed in jumping the corvee and some were killed in jumping the corvee.

May I go back again and say also that between October 1, 1919, and October 1, 1920, there were exactly 298 encounters with bandits, and in these encounters there were 1,132 killed, which averages less than one killed per engagement.

Mr. ANGELL. During the course of your investigation of the corvee were you able to learn for how long a period the natives were kept under forced labor?

Maj. TURNER. Yes; I think some of them were kept at work for several months.

Mr. ANGELL. And were you able to form any opinion as to the effect of keeping these natives at work in districts other than those in which they lived?

Maj. TURNER. The corvees existed only at Maissade and H. J. H. that was after the order of September 1, 1918, forbidding the corvee. I take the corvee into consideration before that at all.

s to the corvee, your report deals with its continuance after our opinion, based upon your investigation of the corvee who were laboring under the system as you found it, or the Hinche or Maissade district, after October, 1918, object to that there for periods running up to two months?

; I think they did object.

labor then under those conditions was not in any proper order?

you hear rumors or reports of cruelty or abuses or killings of Capt. Fitzgerald Brown at St. Marc?

; that was Fitzgerald Brown. I did hear something about him out—this was after my investigation that I came on that Fitzgerald Brown was a boaster and just a plain fool, whatever.

you hear any reports of complaints by natives that he had prisoners at the prison in St. Marc?

he an enlisted man or a noncommissioned officer of the rank of the gendarmes?

was a sergeant; yes.

a captain of the gendarmes?

you had occasion to see the Haitian memoir printed in it, on pages 30 to 32 of the printed record, are 25 specific instances and abuses of natives on the part of gendarmes and ce over this list, and refer particularly to the instances on pages, 1, 2, 4, 5, and 11. I will ask you whether you heard investigation of afterwards any complaints or reports re these instances, and if so, what investigation you made of them. I have never heard of any of them. If they had been heard, I would have heard of them. If anything of that sort was reported and investigated.

I never saw that before.

or, have you read the statements or are you familiar with them. A. W. Catlin, dated December 31, 1919, and of Lieut. dated January 6, 1920, both sworn and contained in the 65 to 67 and 85 to 99, respectively?

have read them, but I am not familiar with them.

your recollection, having read them, can you state whether substantially with the statements and conclusions therein would like to read them over again before answering that these a year and a half ago, and I do not remember the matter o'clock p. m., the committee adjourned to meet to-morrow, 17, 1921, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, Senator residing.

Mr. Walter Bruce Howe, Mr. Ernest Angell, and Maj. Edwin N.
in their respective representative capacities as hereinbefore indi-

BRIG. GEN. SMEDLEY D. BUTLER, UNITED STATES CORPS, COMMANDING MARINES, QUANTICO, VA.

General, will you give your name, rank, and present station,

Smedley D. Butler, brigadier general, United States Marine Corps, Quantico, Va.

General, how long have you been in the Marine Corps?

I have been in the Marine Corps 23 years and 6 months.

Were you in Haiti in 1916?

Yes.

At what time did you go to Haiti at that time?

I landed in Haiti on the 10th of August, 1915, and remained until the 9th day of March, 1918.

Were you commander of the gendarmerie of Haiti?

I was the first commander and organizer of the gendarmerie of Haiti. When did you assume those duties?

I was detailed by the commanding officer of the naval forces on the 3d day of December, 1915, to organize the gendarmerie until the passage of the act of Congress in June, 1916, authorizing the United States service to serve with the Government of Haiti by regular appointment in an order from the commandant of the naval forces, dated September 1, 1916, and during the period between September 1, 1916, and September 1, 1916, I served as such, but only under the command of the naval forces, Admiral Caperton.

Between August, 1915, and December, 1915, what were your duties? I was commanding the forces in the field in the north in various parts of the north?

My forces operated from Gonaives to Cape Haitien, and from the Dominican border, and south to the line running east and west, known as the district of the north.

When you, in September, 1916, got your orders from the commandant of the Marine Corps, was your status then changed; and if so, how, were those orders?

My status was simply changed in this respect, that what I previously, under the orders of the occupation, I proceeded to execute the orders of the President of Haiti. I had always acted under the orders but had consulted with the American commander.

Were those orders in September, 1916?

Gen. BUTLER. Yes, sir. After that I still considered myself, du-ence of martial law in Haiti, a member of the forces of the occupnothing with respect to the Haitian people without first discuss-with the President of Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. And receiving his directions?

Gen. BUTLER. And receiving his directions.

Mr. HOWE. During the time you were organizing the gendar-to say, from December, 1915, to September, 1916—will you please little more definite idea as to the extent to which you consulted of Haiti and took his directions?

Gen. BUTLER. During the period from the 3d of December, 1915, of January, 1916, the gendarmerie performed no functions what-those necessary to its own organization. It was assembled in towns for drill and organization and equipment purposes only.
no police functions; it was nothing but a school.

Mr. HOWE. And consequently you, as its organizer, were in police functions?

Gen. BUTLER. No police; and had no connection whatsoever with President, except as to its future development and status. During with the assistance of the President of Haiti, we wrote and promulgation, upon the confirmation of the service by our own Com-rules and regulations for the government of the gendarmerie.
with the treaty, which rules and regulations were promulgated in the name of the President of Haiti, and the whole conduct of the gendarmerie during the whole time I was in it was directly with the directions and orders given by the President of Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. And in the preparation of those orders he was con-

Gen. BUTLER. Every day.

Mr. HOWE. Did those early orders and regulations meet with his

Gen. BUTLER. Absolutely, or they could not have been published rules and regulations that they had to be promulgated by the President of

Mr. HOWE. You are referring to Article X, no doubt, of the treaty

Gen. BUTLER. I am referring to the gendarmerie agreement he the same effect with us as the treaty.

Mr. HOWE. Will you give a reference to that gendarmerie agree-

Gen. BUTLER. It is an agreement dated the 24th of August, 1916, appears this provision:

" Rules and regulations for the administration and discipline merie shall be issued by the commandant after being approved by of Haiti."

That was strictly carried out. That is article 7 of the protocol
August, 1916.

Mr. HOWE. While you were organizing the gendarmerie did you other duties?

Gen. BUTLER. I did not.

Mr. HOWE. After you were duly appointed commandant—is that term, or commander?

Gen. BUTLER. I would like to bring this in. On the 1st day of the following proclamation was issued by Admiral Caperton:

PROCLAMATION.

Whereas the President of Haiti and his cabinet have decreed that the commandants of communes and the chiefs of sections are also that all military and police duties of the commandants of a-are taken away, it is hereby ordered that from this date all the police duties heretofore performed by those officers be performed darmierie of Haiti, supported by the expeditionary forces under m-

By order of Rear Admiral W. B. Caperton, United States Navy, United States forces in Haiti and Haitian waters.

LITTLETON W. T. WALL

Colonel, United States Marine

Commanding United States Expeditionary Forces Ash-

PORT AU PRINCE, HAITI, February 1, 1916.

Mr. HOWE. The date of that proclamation was February 1, 1916.

Gen. BUTLER. Yes.

did that affect you, sir?

That made me chief of police in Haiti. I assumed all responsibility and proper policing of the Republic of Haiti.

Through what instrumentality did you operate?

The gendarmerie.

When the gendarmerie did begin to operate before September,

yes, sir.

I misunderstood you. I thought I understood that they did not begin to operate until September, 1916.

I thought I put that in there; I intended to put it in; until you say.

That the gendarmerie, as a going operating institution—— commenced to perform its legal functions——

February 1, 1916. Is that correct?

Yes, sir; to perform its functions, under Article X of the treaty, January.

The formative period, as such, lasted from December, 1915, to January, 1916?

Under my control. Previous to my control it had been in operation for six weeks, but when I took command of the gendarmerie, the total personnel of about 600, and on the 1st of February, 1916, we had 1,500.

Now you describe the organization of the gendarmerie, please?

It is organized exactly as laid down here in the protocol which is in the protocol of August 24, 1916?

Yes. Soon after that protocol came into effect did the organization begin to operate?

About seven months.

Yes, then, in 1917?

Yes; late in 1916, if I remember correctly, on the 1st of February, 1917, the gendarmerie was completed.

From February 1, 1916, up until that time in 1917 the gendarmerie was in the course of organization?

Yes, sir; the 1st of October, 1916. There were only six or seven companies.

Now get this straight. You were detailed to organize and command the gendarmerie in December, 1915?

Yes, sir.

From the proclamation on February 1, 1916, the gendarmerie began to operate?

Yes, sir.

On August 24, 1916, the status was somewhat changed by the treaty?

Yes. It outlined the extent of the organization and made definite provisions; is that right?

Correct.

Some seven months later——

No, sir; only two months later.

Two months later on, in October, 1916, the gendarmerie attained its full strength.

Full strength.

Yes, sir; that is right.

Will you just ask you, General, to describe how you went about organizing the gendarmerie and how you selected your officers.

The marine forces in Haiti were distributed throughout the country in small sized organizations, from a platoon to a battalion, being stationed in smaller towns, preserving peace.

There was no Haitian police force; there was nothing but pillaging and rioting.

When they arrived, when they took over this police, and martial law was proclaimed in the United States.

Did they take over the police duties?

Gen. BUTLER. We took over the police duties and performed formation of the gendarmerie made it possible for them to take

Mr. HOWE. General, I want to get back later on in the examination of the facts about the selection of your forces—enlisted men and

Gen. BUTLER. That is, the organization of the gendarmerie done?

Mr. HOWE. Yes.

Gen. BUTLER. In each town where a considerable force of mentioned—that is, a company or more—one commissioned officer certain noncommissioned officers and privates were detailed by of the marines in Haiti to enlist and organize and train the gendarmerie, so that each body of marines resolved itself into a camp?

Mr. HOWE. And recruiting station?

Gen. BUTLER. And recruiting station, the Haitians voluntarily enlistment papers similar to those used in our corps. They wore our clothes. The Haitian Government bought the excess material in order that we might have some distinguishing mark for the men just as marines were dressed, with the exception that we gave them the Marine Corps device. They had no Marine Corps device, plain Haitian buttons.

That system continued until the 1st of February, 1916, when it was for the gendarmerie to stand on its own feet. On the 29th of January, Gen. Waller, commanding the marines in Haiti, notified me that the Government had decided to give up trying to maintain law and order, and said, "Now, you Americans do it with your gendarmerie"; and he gave me two days to garrison Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. With the gendarmerie?

Gen. BUTLER. With the gendarmerie.

Mr. HOWE. What did the Haitians mean, then, by saying to us to preserve law and order with their gendarmerie, when the gendarmerie was the Haitian gendarmerie?

Gen. BUTLER. It was the Haitian gendarmerie. We understood the effort on their part to embarrass us, because they well knew that the gendarmerie, or their gendarmerie that we were organizing for the provisions of a treaty already confirmed, was not complete; but when we established 117 posts around Haiti, and on the night of the 29th of January I reported to the commander, to Col. Waller, that the police force was complete, but in reduced numbers. We did not have a sufficient force.

Mr. HOWE. Did you have any difficulty in getting recruits?

Gen. BUTLER. Absolutely none. We took the best men in the country.

Mr. HOWE. Was there competition among them for recognition?

Gen. BUTLER. Very great competition. An actual blood test was made. One thousand, two hundred gendarmes selected at random, which gendarmes had been selected from 50,000 of the best Haitians, showed that 95 per cent were diseased. That is the material with which we worked.

Mr. HOWE. But you had plenty to select from, and you tried to select the best.

Gen. BUTLER. Yes; and we made every effort to cure those who were diseased. We found that they would not go to sleep standing up in the daytime. That was the test. I have frequently found a sentry on a post in front of a building sound asleep, standing up with the sun shining in his eyes. That was not his fault. He was diseased. An examination showed that they had blood diseases and 85 per cent had intestinal worms. We took immediate measures to cure it, and before I left Haiti they were able to keep awake for two or three hours.

Let me say something about the faithfulness of the gendarmes. I know something about what they can not help. Never during the time of my command, nor from any reports I have received since, has any disloyalty or insubordination occurred. I never heard of a case. I gave the Haitian honor to three gendarmes who gave their arms and their legs to the United States officers. They are sergeants and kept at headquarters on light duty. They are pieces or examples of the most devoted loyalty. The action of the gendarmes is particularly affecting.

Mr. HOWE. I think we would like to hear that.

Gen. BUTLER. At a little place called Circa la Source a gendarme named Kelly—this was in the early days, early in 1916, shortly after the occupation of the country by the gendarmerie and the taking over stationed at this town in a little native hut that we rented. With him were 16 gendarmes as the police force of that personally lived in a small mud hut next to the police station. When his house was attacked by a large number of bandits, the station next door were surprised, and the sentry, due to reasons, was asleep, and they fled. They did not run away, but into the bushes and re-formed. But the bandits were not; they were after the American officer, so they attacked his. He was a very bold, gallant fellow. He grabbed his pistol when he saw them, and rushed toward the door. His gendarme orderly, who was in the same room with him, got up and threw his arms around him in Creole. It must be remembered that none of us spoke English, yet we taught them to drill in English. All the gendarmes spoke English. Kelly was unable to understand all that this gendarme said, but he gathered enough to know that the gendarme did not want to be killed. Kelly did not agree with him, but he went to one side and grabbed the door and pulled it open. The gendarme knew the habits of his friends. He had been a Caco himself. My friend Prince was the worst Caco in Haiti, and I picked him out as the ugliest brute I ever saw, and I trusted him with my money and everything. He was the most faithful man I have ever known. The gendarme knew the habits of the men outside, and that they would lighted door the moment Kelly appeared in it, and when the door he threw himself in front of him and they put five bullets in him. They did not kill him, but he had to have one leg ampu-ated by the American officers like these gendarmes. They will give you any time, and there has never been one instance of their doing so, never once.

When we were here at Quantico who with five of them was beset by 250 Cacos, he stuck right by him. Never once have they gone back on us. When I went on an inspection to make in the woods, I left my family with him on a couch on the front porch of my house, and he never left me for two weeks. They would take his food to him. And nobody would touch the yard either. I trusted him absolutely. It is a great army.

What kind of a country did you have to operate in? Tell us how Haiti has about 180,000 acres of flat land, and the rest is mountainous, like a crumpled-up piece of paper. As a French admiral said to him over. The highest peak in Haiti is 7,000 feet, and it is in the north. There are the plains of the north along the Atlantic to the north. They run in width from a quarter of a mile to a mile, you come to a range of mountains running east and west, 2,000 feet high, a ridge range. You cross those, make a slight dip, and you come to another range of peaks, 4,000 feet high. You drop on the other side, which is known as the valley of the Artibonite River, which is 100 miles long and 8 miles wide. It is not flat, but it is rolling and not characterized as flat, tillable land, without a great deal of it. Then you come to a small range of hills—this is a range of hills, and you cross, and you come to the plains of Cul de Sac, at the foot of which lies the city of Port au Prince. The plains of Cul de Sac are 20 miles long, and they are perfectly flat. Then you cross a range of mountains, running from 1,500 feet to 7,000 feet. It is the highest mountains, and you drop from there over to the other side, the top right down. There is practically no flat land on the island.

How much flat land is there in the whole place?

About 180,000 acres absolutely flat land.

Most of it is up and down hill?

Yes, will take that back: 180,000 acres.

How many people live in the country?

Two million and a half, approximately.

Are they getting more numerous?

Yes; I should say the population will never become very much larger than it will go to 3,000,000. They increase very rapidly, but they are not a hardy, sturdy race at all.

Mr. HOWE. Are they all colored people?

Gen. BUTLER. They were originally brought over from Africa. The introduction of the black man into Haiti commenced about 1565, or the slaves from Africa, about the same date as the founding of St. Domingue according to my recollection of it—it has been several years since I was there—and the importation continued during the whole of the 17th century, and by 1789, when the French Revolution broke out in France, was in full force in Haiti, the first overt act in France, you remember, was on the 14th of July, the fall of the Bastille, and the first outbreak in Haiti was in the same year, the fall of the Bastille. At that time the black population was about 400,000, the white or foreign population about 40,000. Of course, there was a considerable mingling of the whites and blacks, and about 20 per cent were mulattoes.

Do you want the caste system? Would that help you any?

Mr. HOWE. Yes; I would like to have it. At the present time there are no whites there in Haiti? I mean living there.

Gen. BUTLER. Counting the American occupation?

Mr. HOWE. Not counting the American occupation.

Gen. BUTLER. Not counting the military people?

Mr. HOWE. Not counting the military people.

Gen. BUTLER. Two hundred or two hundred and fifty.

Mr. HOWE. And the rest are colored or various degrees of mulattoes?

Gen. BUTLER. Various degrees of dark blood.

Mr. HOWE. Now, how about the caste system that you mention?

Gen. BUTLER. What we tried to provide for in the formation of the gendarmerie was a system which could be passed over to the Haitians, well understood by us all that there was a limit to our treaty, and that the French did not belong to us, and I never heard any American officer in Haiti at the time of the desire to take it. We were all imbued with the fact that we were not to have of a huge estate that belonged to minors. That was my viewpoint, the viewpoint I personally took, that the Haitians were our vassals, and we were endeavoring to develop and make for them a rich country, property, to be turned over to them at such time as our Government should see fit before the expiration of the treaty. So in order to profit by the French we, of course, read the history of their gendarmerie system, which was the cause of their downfall.

As I told you, the original colored man in Haiti was a black man. The French settlers in the early days were adventurers. For 50 years the French women came to Haiti, and the blood became mixed until in 1789 about 17 per cent of it was mulatto. By that time the French had set up their system, that is, the rich plantation owners formed one set. They only during the sugar and coffee harvest season, and indigo was a small crop. They spent the rest of their time spending the profits of their labor, or the other man's labor, in Paris. A certain number of French farmers lived in Haiti all or most of the time. They were known as the French plantation owner, or Frenchman as he called himself, and he associated with the planter. That made the planter more or less French. He kept down his associates, and he had a tendency then to seek a Frenchman of his own color, and gradually an association sprung up between the French colonist which tied them together, and they intermarried. The blacks were out of it, the pure blacks. They were the best, and the most reliable, but they were entirely out of it, just pure slaves.

It had been a custom on the part of the French planter when a child was born who had his blood in his veins to free that child and perhaps the child's children gave the mulatto or the octoroon—the name depending on the blood in his veins—property. According to the law in Haiti, if a man had one thirty-second black blood in his veins was a black; if he had one-fourth black blood, he was white. That is published in the decrees of the French. That gave a certain number of mulattoes property, due to the fact that they soon became quite prominent and prosperous, and they fraternized with the colonists. The planter was busy traveling back and forth, caring very little for what occurred in Haiti until the French Revolution broke out. The legislative bodies in Paris, the revolutionists, called on Haiti to send them representatives not having any color line or any quality. They said, "We are all Frenchmen," and they took over to France a lot of representatives of the French. They told their grievances, and the French rulers—I do not remember the names—were, Robespierre, perhaps—who were in charge at the time sought to abolish all distinction.

puted that, and in the end the planters and the blacks made inst the mulattoes and the colonists. That is the way the Among the mulattoes was the gendarmerie for the main-order, in addition to the regular French garrison. It was ter mulattoes, but they had mixed blood among their officers.
 ack and some mulatto, but their officers were natives with hen the test was put upon them they did not stand. So, in ad but three colored officers until we could teach the Haitians respective of the giver, profiting by the failure of the previous the subsequent massacre of women and children that followed, ver. We followed that principle. The three colored officers the President, as he appointed us all, as officers in his personal ey were the three most trustworthy noncommissioned officers after six months drill.

you have developed in six months drill?

at we developed in six months. We assisted him in select-ere all men of so-called good family, and most desirable to e had very little success with the Haitian officer. I tried without success. I did not give them regular commissions, use their feelings by having to reduce them, so we gave them ut any of the emoluments to try them out, and gave them ound they were brutal with the people, unnecessarily harsh;
 ity encouraged them to square old accounts with any person ad had any difficulty, which they remembered for years, so successful, although as noncommissioned officers, controlled ey were most excellent. When independent authority was became too brutal. I do not mean that they ever killed any-e always imprisoning people and causing us considerable e during the time I was in command of the gendarmerie did uly punish, even going so far as to execute, gendarmes who

The executions, of course, required the sanction and appendent of Haiti. He signed the death warrants. On one occasion for shooting a prisoner. We never tolerated abuse of public.

t about the public there? How could you describe those, ans?

e Haitian people?

e Haitian people are divided into two classes; one class wears r does not. The class that wears shoes is about 1 per cent.
 not more than one-fifth of 1 per cent of the population of I write. Many of those that wear shoes can not read and ny of the teachers can not read and write. I remember one g to a certain district money to pay a school-teacher who had Government, the gendarmerie officer took the money to the he said, "I can not sign that receipt; I can not sign my 'You are a teacher, are you not?' He said, "Yes; I am ug, but not of writing."

cent of the people of Haiti are the most kindly, generous, e-loving people I have ever known. They would not hurt
 e most gentle when in their natural state. When the others rs vied kid shoes with long pointed toes and celluloid collars, incites them with liquor and voodoo stuff, they are capable e atrocities; they are cannibals. They ate the liver of one eir natural state they are the most docile, harmless people were your relations with the ones that did not wear shoes?

 ose that wear shoes I took as a joke. Without a sense of ot live in Haiti among those people, among the shoe class.

What else did they wear besides shoes and collars?

ey wore cut-away coats, brass-head canes, stove-pipe hats ter, and anything they could put on to make themselves the people who were barefooted, the women wearing mother men dungarees half way up to their knees, with scarred hardest kind of toll, and with great blisters on their hands, as of their hands as hard as a piece of sole leather—those bsolutely trust. I went all over Haiti, living with them in their shackles, and they always gave you the best they had—thing they had in the world. They did not know the value of it, did not know anything about time, distance, or value.

Mr. HOWE. How did you protect yourself when you went among

Gen. BUTLER. I never carried a gun the whole time I was there, necessary. They would not hurt you. I took the President without a gun. He made speeches to them, encouraging their public work we wanted to undertake the President led the President's chauffeur. We rode in a Ford, but we carried an enormous coat of arms in front, with the President's coat of arms, and we went with trumpets, in a modest car, to be sure, but it was just what we wanted. My object down there was to do what they wanted out of Haiti an America, but to make out of Haiti a first-class country, and instead of importing our style of architecture develop a style of architecture suited to the colored man and the country. When you go to Haiti, Senator, as you should, in order to understand this, you must see Christophe Citadel, which is one of the western hemisphere. It is a perfect piece of Haitian architecture designed by a Frenchman and an Englishman, both engineers and architects built to match the country. The average Haitian who gets to France, and brings back some conception of a French palace, and destroys Haiti. What we wanted was clean little thatch-roofed dwellings. That is what the country can afford, and it ought to have, and then there would never be any temptation to grab it either.

Mr. HOWE. Whom did you have to contend with down there—fighting?

Gen. BUTLER. We were not really fighting anybody. We were to overcome certain obstacles created by the political element. The road of accomplishment of the object I have just pointed out.

Senator ODDIE. What percentage of the Cacos wore shoes?

Gen. BUTLER. None of the Cacos except the leaders and the officers who put up the money, etc. They were the only ones.

Senator ODDIE. How was a Caco created, trained, and developed?

Gen. BUTLER. He just grew; he had no training at all.

Senator ODDIE. How did he grow?

Gen. BUTLER. How did the revolution run?

Senator ODDIE. Yes. The revolution developed the Cacos; is that right?

Gen. BUTLER. All the discontented element that had nothing to do with the revolution, wanted a little loot would join up at this little town called Port-au-Prince, 1 mile to the westward of the Massacre River, and there they would be engaged in drinking, carousing, and debauchery, which would correspond to a training period, and then this force would move on to Fort Liberte.

Senator ODDIE. Who would start this, General?

Gen. BUTLER. This would be started by anybody who wanted to do it, and could get enough money to provide rum and the sustenance for the force, get enough rifles together.

Senator ODDIE. Where did he get them from?

Gen. BUTLER. They would be brought over from Santo Domingo for this revolution, and when Santo Domingo had one they would move on. Being near the boundary line between autonomous Republics, a man was perfectly safe in jumping over the boundary, so they would be themselves right near the boundary, so that in case they got caught they could jump over the river and be safe, and likewise they could be from the rear. Then, when the movement received sufficient strength, they would move on to Fort Liberte, which they captured, and published all over the country, and the customhouse was in their hands, which would indicate to us a source of revenue, but, as a matter of fact the customhouse had no goods, there were no exports or imports, as it was a closed port. But, to give it certain prominence, and attract more recruits to the color, they would then move on to a town called Le Tron. After spending some time in Port Liberte, burning the town and getting some more rum, they would move down to Le Tron, which they would burn and announce the capture, in order to get to a railroad and save some walking, and to give it prominence, they would cross the mountains on the trail, and where they would establish headquarters, and the government a proclamation for three or four days, a notice to join vent down and into the valey of the Grande Riviere and the town of Grande Riviere. That was the regular course of President in power would be thoroughly alarmed, and he had a navy, consisting of an old Ward liner called the Nord on board his army of 600 or 700 men, and send them up to the principal town in the north. There they would disembark, out, or ride out on the railroad, the officers or leaders in with a locomotive, if they could persuade the American them one.

American authorities?

The railroad is owned by Americans.

Are the American Government authorities?

And they would march out to the crossroads, which was at 7, where a battle would occur, and you will see the evidence of graves all around, hundreds of them, and the Government men revolutions were always licked. I do not know whether previous accounts of a victory or not, but in the last seven I licked there, and those that were too tired to run would go onists, and those that could get transportation on the way en, would take what was left in the customhouse, quite a board the Nord Alexis, and sail back to Port au Prince with news that their army had not been successful. The President would send another army, and lie in wait for them. In the meantime could advance on Cape Haitien, and of course, there would they would capture Cape Haitien and take over the custom-house proclamations, have a great many speeches, and set up an-movement would be quite large. Then it was a question of the mountains that I have described to you, those ranges, down the valleys. At one time, in one revolution, at Gonaives there was generally there was very little trouble encountered there, and farther down along the railroad track to the town of St. Marc, progress overland to St. Marc, take that with its customs on the railroad track to a place called Arcadia, which was the place for the final scene of the revolution. There they got the President, but his army—would meet the victorious army defeated and absorbed and the tragedy would be reported so, if he were fortunate and were agile, would get on a ship to the treasury for Paris. If he were not very agile, or if he had his hands near him who did not care much about him, they killed the Presidents shows.

The Presidents of Haiti. I might give you a few of the figures and 1915 they had seven Presidents. Those are the seven I speak.

Those seven revolutions follow this general course you out-

; they followed the general course, but sometimes there was a diversion. In the last revolution the slaughter by Vilbrun of the prisoners in the jail brought it to a head before the Arcadia, and he could not get away. He took refuge in the town and was finally pulled out. A mob searched the French legation and threw him into the street, where he was cut up into pieces around the streets on pieces of string, what was left was when we landed.

Do the American occupation have any such revolutions broken revolutions?

What was the nature of the active operations of the gendarmerie here?

Not the ordinary police duty. We had two instances such as I have seen with the heroism of that gendarme, little local affairs, a very period.

Were there any Cacos around then?

Gen. BUTLER. No; there were these bands that might be called they went up in thin air. They were very small, and there was no movement.

Mr. HOWE. Were they troublesome?

Gen. BUTLER. No. After that one attack on Kelly the whole of the whole band disintegrated, and after the attack on Hinche, knowing that, the band dispersed, and we never heard anything more.

Mr. HOWE. Was the attack on Hinche before or after your March, 1919?

Gen. BUTLER. That was before I left. I will describe that to you. I named Doxie, a captain of the gendarmerie, had brought $1,200 money, which made an enormous pile of Haitian bills. This money he gave to his gendarmes and to pay the police of his post. It was in a box on the day he received it he counted it, and while counting the box was open and in walked some Haitian citizens and saw the next morning at 2 o'clock, a large number, approximately estimated, Haitians attacked this little house in which he was living, and by a hammering on the front door. He thought it was a drum called, "Go on away," in Creole. As he did so the hammering was violent and the door fell in just as he got out of his bunk, and in bright moonlight a number of men armed with spears, rifles, and bayonets came into the room. The door was narrow, so that not a great number could come in at one time, and he reached for his pistol and shot three of them.

This provided a little discouragement to the rest, and they did not come long enough to give him an opportunity to face about and fire which had broken in the rear door. I do not remember how many were killed but two or three. His pistol was then empty, and the crowd came to the front, but fortunately he had a riot gun at hand, with which he shot more. The crowd then scattered. The gendarmes were in the squares up the streets, and it only lasted two or three minutes. They then pursued the scattering band, and the leader was shot by the gendarmes. The next day the whole thing was over, and there was no further trouble, and the investigation through our own secret service showed that it was an effort to get the $1,200; that Doxie was very popular with the people, and that nobody had any desire to kill him if he would have kept the $1,200.

Those were the two instances of any serious trouble until I left.

Mr. HOWE. Was it necessary for you to send out patrols with arms?

Gen. BUTLER. The whole of the country was patrolled every day for various reasons. One was to obtain from every citizen any complaints or wishes to make. The patrols were both mounted and on foot. They patrolled the trails, and listened to the stories of the natives, and the system of little cards, by which we could keep a record of the country, but not an accurate record.

Mr. HOWE. Of the movements of the patrol?

Gen. BUTLER. Of the patrol. They would be ordered to go to a plantation, and the man would be asked to indorse on the card that he had been there. That was the system that we tried to carry out, but it was not entirely successful in certain places.

Mr. HOWE. Then, outside of these two outbreaks that you have mentioned, there was no serious disorder in the gendarmerie to cope with during the time you were its commander?

Gen. BUTLER. No.

Mr. HOWE. That would carry us back, then, to December, 1918?

Gen. BUTLER. Between December, 1915, and March, 1918, the two instances I spoke of. At Arcahaie, in January, 1918, five men were killed but the firers were not seen, and although it created a sufficient warrant a telephone call, we never found out who did it, and they were the only shots that were fired.

Mr. HOWE. Now, General, who was responsible for health and public works on the island, the Americans or Haitians?

Gen. BUTLER. The Americans.

Mr. HOWE. Now, let us take them one at a time. First, let us take the health.

Gen. BUTLER. That was handled by the Americans. Under the system there was a sanitary engineer who was responsible for the health of the island.

Mr. HOWE. Who was in charge of carrying out any health work that was in existence?

ing my time the wishes of the sanitary engineer were carried by the gendarmerie, provided they did not in any way peace. Frequently I considered that certain wishes of the were unreasonable and put an unnecessarily heavy burden on the police, and I would not carry them out, not have the police ate that.

Instance, on John Brown Avenue in Port au Prince was lived in a house on a sloping hill. She was ordered by one of the inspectors, a subordinate of the sanitary engineer—

Haitian—to have her yard filled up to a certain level. This required considerable money, and she was very poor, so I notified her that I thought it was unreasonable and could not see my police arrest and punish this poor woman.

ly to whom did the sanitary engineer report?

minister of public works.

tion?

Haitian. The chief of the gendarmerie did not report to the president.

health department?

it was a public work.

under the Haitian Government, directed by the Americans, under the treaty?

provided in the treaty; yes.

ce came the funds for the health department?

se were derived from the collection of the external revenue, or were provided by the general receiver, who comes under the financial adviser.

did not come from American appropriations, then?

ad this much money to spend, that you could get from that shore?

he beginning we had a certain amount.

n for health work.

health work we had just as much as was allotted.

hat was not your business, except in so far as your general out the directions of the sanitary engineer?

; with several exceptions. Out in the smaller towns, where too expensive to maintain a direct sanitary representative, commissioned officers of the gendarmerie acted as sanitary men, and their reports were made to the sanitary engineer, of the gendarmerie.

hat policy, if any, was definitely adopted in regard to immunities?

to the time I left Haiti the steps were these: All town wells were opened, drainage effected, wells were covered in water as pure as possible, little dispensaries, wherever possible, with American doctors or members of the Hospital Corps to administer to the people. The quarantine service had been in operation to guard against the introduction of diseases.

were the dispensaries paid for, and the quarantine stations? Generally the dispensary was in the police station, because it was maintaining it elsewhere, or if the town owned a public building would be in one part, the judge in one part, and the dispensary. Every gendarmerie post had a certain amount of medicine on hand, and frequently there was no American person to whom we had a native hospital corps consisting, as I remember, of men who showed an aptitude for medicine and whom we had trained, and put around, in addition to the Americans.

the Navy doctors furnished their services there were they employed by the Haitian Government?

y were in the employ of the Haitian Government.

rt of the gendarmerie?

Gen. BUTLER. No; some of them. Three of them only were officers of the gendarmerie. The rest were with the sanitary of course, all the medical officers and all the medical personnel there on duty, who had nothing whatsoever to do with the Haitians were constantly caring for and improving the condition of the. Everybody was working for the same end, no matter who employed.

Senator ODDIE. In this matter of conserving and improving and sanitary conditions do you consider that everything that has been done, in the light of modern science and energy and

Gen. BUTLER. With the funds on hand; yes, sir. I might say the hospital in Port au Prince, which was in a deplorable condition, was restored and was conducted by Americans, with the aid of the Haitian doctors, and with the aid of the American nurses. That is true also of the hospital at Cape-Haitien. In addition we had little gendarmerie hospitals in the principal towns open to all civilians, where they were taken in case of emergency.

Senator ODDIE. I want to diverge a little, General, and ask for a definition of a caco.

Gen. BUTLER. Well, you can get fifty different definitions. The one given to me by the Haitians in whom I had the greatest trust was that the caco was a bird of prey that lives off the weaker fowl. It is a bird that makes a sound "caco," as it is called, and these bandits, being the weak, so they adopted that name. They wear a patch of red on their clothing, either a little red stripe on their trousers, or a red hat, or something to indicate the fact that they are cacos. You can get, Senator, a number of reasons for the term. There is a bird that says "caco" and the bird and seen it.

Senator ODDIE. How about the prisons?

Gen. BUTLER. The prisons were under the gendarmerie, I think, under the presidential order.

Mr. ANGELL. I have here two petitions in the form of letters from the Union Patriotique, addressed to the committee, regarding particular phases of the investigation which the committee expects to make in the future. The petitions are in French, and, in substance, they are based upon the fact that martial law in Haiti at the present time, and the censorship of the press, and the petitions stress the opposition which, as is there claimed, is now being put up by the military and civil agents of the United States to a full, free investigation by the committee in Haiti. What the specific facts are, and whether the reasons for the opposition are justified or not, I am not personally informed. What the Union Patriotique officials rely I am not personally informed of. The reasons for it, and whether the reasons be justified or not, particularly the events surrounding the inquiry conducted by the committee last year, it is a fact, of the existence of which I am personally informed, from all that I can learn, both from Haitians and from disinterested persons, that the Haitian people generally do not at this moment feel free to come forward before this committee with testimony adverse to the occupation of the island. The existence of martial law at the present time obviously plays a large part in such a feeling.

As an example of how martial law operates at the present time, the legitimate acts of a people jealous of any infringement upon their rights throughout 100 years of absolute independence, I respectfully call your attention to the fact disclosed by the second petition to the committee, accompanying it, dated October 9 of this year. This petition, accompanying it, discloses the fact that the officials of the Union Patriotique have made a respectful request of Col. Russell, the brigade commander in Haiti, couched in the most moderate terms, for permission to have a public manifestation at Port au Prince in honor of the committee, the manifestation to consist of a parade, but without any other demonstrations which could be in any wise conceived of. This request was made in writing to Col. Russell on September 25, and he sent herewith a copy of that letter of request. In reply Col. Russell has sent herewith his original letter, which I will offer:

"I have to inform you that I have received no official information regarding the visit you mention, and until such is received no action will be taken."

The visit he refers to in that letter is the visit of your committee. A similar request addressed by the Union Patriotique official to the department of the interior has brought a reply, under date of September 25, wise postponing any decision, upon the same ground.

confidence, that it is inconceivable that the Haitian people, whose entire political independence the United States has by treaty and by repeated assurances to maintain and to continued to be subjected to such humiliation. The investigation made by this committee can be a great step forward in reference of the Haitian people as to the aims and methods of the Haitian, but this investigation can not in that respect be a success for the Haitian people, during the visit of the committee to the island, and by the repression and fear of martial law. To the end, the visit of the committee to Haiti may be regarded by the Haitian people as the earnest of the desire of our Government to regain the independence of Haiti and to accomplish permanent benefits of an absolutely permanent character, I, as counsel for the Union Patriotique, respectfully urge that the present immediate need for such action initiating with the committee will result in an official proclamation from the headquarters of the committee in Haiti, announcing, following the pending arrival of the committee in Haiti, the raising of martial law for the period of its stay in Haiti, inviting a free appearance before the committee of all the reasonable complaints to make regarding the occupation or the repression of martial law, and without such a proclamation, I am convinced that the Haitian people will not regard the investigation of the committee as fair and full as to them.

And letters above referred to by Mr. Angell are here printed ( )

UNION PATRIOTIQUE.

PORT AU PRINCE, 17 Septembre 1921.

PRÉSIDENT, MESSIEURS LES COMMISSAIRES: Le 5 Août dernier, M. Sténio Vincent, à la fin de son Exposé, avait l'honneur de vous adresser votre Commission sur les conditions spéciales et très défavorables au peuple haïtien par le régime de terreur qu'entraîne la Loi Martiale. Il nous incombe aujourd'hui le devoir de vous dire que le danger qu'entraîne une telle situation pour le succès de la République et de justice que l'on attend universellement de l'initiative des Etats-Unis. Nos populations ont depuis six ans telle défiance s'étend à tout ce qui est Américain. Les gens ne se fient à l'Enquête sont obligés à toutes sortes de précautions, d'entre eux se rappellent les persécutions dont ils avaient à souffrir, avoir seulement demandé, sans succès d'ailleurs, à être reconnus par la Commission Mayo.

Messieurs les militaires et civils des Etats-Unis, sachant que l'Enquête du général est sérieuse que celle de l'Admiral Mayo et tenant beaucoup à ce qu'elle soit aussi naturelle à ce qu'elle n'ait pas de résultat, à moraliser complètement les populations par la propagande, la terreur. L'Union patriotique serait, en conséquence, reconcomission d'enquête de faire dès maintenant une déclaration de garanties qu'elle compte offrir aux citoyens haïtiens et ceux qui se présenteront devant elle pour déposer sur les autres abus commis dans ce pays par les agents militaires et civils.

Elle pourrait être contenue dans la réponse que la Commission présente supplique de l'Union patriotique. Elle serait portée au public haïtien par la publication des deux pièces. Nous n'aurons pas fait inutilement appel à la prévoyance et la Commission d'enquête, nous vous prions d'agréer.

Respectueux,
Messieurs les Commissaires,
Avec haute considération et de notre profond respect.
Le Directeur central de direction:

GEORGES SYLVAIN,
Administrateur-délégué.

M. MacCORMICK,
Président de la Commission.

MEMBRES DE LA COMMISSION
SÉNATORIALE SIÉGEANT AU CAPITOLE, Washington.

RÉPUBLIQUE D'HAÏTI
 SECRÉTAIRIE D'ÉTAT DE LA RÉPUBLIQUE
 Port au Prince, 1

Monsieur GEORGES SYLVAIN,
Administrateur Délégué de l'Union Patriotique, En Ville.

Monsieur LE DÉLÉGUÉ: Je vous accuse réception de votre lettre du 29 Septembre écoulé, m'informant que l' "Union Patriotique" d'organiser, avec le concours de la population de Port au Prince, une manifestation en l'honneur de la Commission d'enquête sénatoriale. Cette manifestation consistera en un défilé à travers les rues de Champ de Mars, au bord de mer avec fanfares et bannières, vivats.

Mon Département en prend bonne note. Relativement au contenu de votre demande, en la circonstance, il vous informe qu'il n'est pas officiellement de l'arrivée de la Commission Senatoriale Américaine. En attendant, veuillez lui faire avoir un programme de cette manifestation.

Recevez, Monsieur le délégué, l'assurance de ma parfaite confiance.

B. D.

UNION PATRIOTIQUE HAÏTIENNE.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, 5

Monsieur le PRÉSIDENT, et Messieurs les Membres de la Commission d'enquête sénatoriale siégeant au Capitole, Washington.

MONSIEUR LE PRÉSIDENT, MESSIEURS LES COMMISSAIRES: Nous avons le plaisir, le mois dernier, de signaler à votre haute attention les difficultés de la loi martiale oppose à la préparation de l'Enquête sénatoriale. Ces difficultés s'aggravent chaque jour du fait que les autorités des Etats-Unis, affectant de considérer comme des atteintes à la souveraineté des manifestations d'opinions contraires à leurs intérêts, usent de la force pour empêcher la Commission d'enquête. C'est ainsi qu'à la date du 3 de ce mois, Eugène Vieux, administrateur du Courrier Haïtien, journaliste, directeur, Messieurs Jh. Lanoue et Jolibois fils subissent pour avoir publié deux fois de suite, une condamnation imméritée aux Travaux publics, l'amende, a été arrêté pour un article que nous expédions à votre adresse, afin de vous permettre d'en apprécier par vous-même l'innocuité.

Monsieur Vieux est un vieillard de 67 ans, des plus honorables de notre pays. Il n'a jamais eu à rien reprocher jusqu'à ce jour. En même temps qu'il a paru devant le Tribunal militaire de l'Occupation un autre article, l'auteur de l'article incriminé, Monsieur Étienne Mathon, connu par ses opinions modérées, ancien Bâtonnier de l'Ordre des avocats de Port-au-Prince, Ministre des Relations Extérieures et de la Justice. Le seul motif de sa condamnation est d'être des militants de notre cause nationale et des membres de notre Union Patriotique, dont Monsieur Mathon est un dirigeant.

Par les deux lettres dont nous vous envoyons également ci-jointes, vous constaterez qu'à l'occasion d'une manifestation que nous avons organisée à Port-au-Prince pour faire accueil à votre Commission d'enquête, le Colonel Russell, Chef des forces expéditionnaires d'Haïti et Monsieur B. Dartiguenave, Secrétaire d'Etat de l'Intérieur, nous prêter leur appui, se sont rencontrés pour déclarer qu'ils s'opposent à ce que tant qu'ils n'auront pas reçu notification officielle de la visite de la Commission d'Enquête. C'est une situation certainement anormale. La Commission en notre pays devrait jusqu'à cette heure constituer une autorité pour les autorités locales?

En se piquant de n'en rien connaître, ne contribuent-elles pas à susciter la méfiance et par là à entraver toute préparation sérieuse de la part de ceux qui vous comptez diriger sur les lieux?

Du jour où l'Union Patriotique, représentant le Peuple Haïtien, déposera les plaintes et les desiderata de sa Nation devant la Commission d'Enquête formée par le Sénat des Etats-Unis et qu'en même temps les représentants du Département de la Marine ont eu à y produire le rapport de la Commission, la situation juridique s'est trouvée la suivante: d'une part, le de l'autre, le Département de la Marine Etats-Unis, partie comme arbitre entre les deux parties, le Sénat des Etats-Unis, présenté par votre Commission. Il n'est pas admissible, dans ces conditions, que la balance ne reste pas égale entre les deux parties, au moment où elles poursuivent leurs investigations. Il est particulièrement intolérable, dans l'intervalle du déplacement de la Commission d'Enquête, le fonctionnement de la Marine, abusant de l'autorité dont ils sont les détenteurs de toutes les manières à entretenir le trouble dans les affaires de l'Oeuvre de la Commission sénatoriale, sous prétexte que sa légitimité est officiellement douteuse.

Comptons-nous, Monsieur le Président, Messieurs les Commissaires, avoir signalé cette anomalie, pour que vous y mettiez bon ordre, pour toute confiance dans la justice et la loyauté qu'on doit attendre du Sénat des Etats-Unis, et dont nous sommes heureux, pour nous, de renouveler l'inébranlable attestation.

Monsieur le Président, Messieurs les Commissaires, les assurés de votre considération avec laquelle nous avons l'honneur d'être vos dévoués serviteurs.

Membres des Comités réunis de l'Union Patriotique L'Administrateur-délégué du Comité central, George Sylvain, ancien E. E. et ancien ministre plénipotentiaire d'Haiti en France et auprès du Sénat, officier de l'Instruction Publique, officier de la Légion d'honneur; Le Secrétaire général: P. Thoby, ancien Secrétaire de l'Administration d'Haiti à Washington, Délégué de l'Union Patriotique aux Etats-Unis; L'Archiviste: Ch. Rosemond, Notaire; F. L. Duval, ancien Secrétaire d'Etat, ancien Sénateur, ancien fonctionnaire de l'Ordre des avocats de Port-au-Prince; Léon Nau, ancien Doyen du Tribunal Civil de Port-au-Prince, avocat, ancien juge au Tribunal de Cassation de la République; D. Jeannot, ancien Secrétaire d'Etat, avocat; Stenio Vincend, avocat, ancien Secrétaire d'Etat, ancien Président du Sénat, Délégué de l'Union Patriotique aux Etats-Unis, ancien ministre l'Haitien Hollande.

UNION PATRIOTIQUE.

PORT AU PRINCE, 28 Septembre, 1921.

JOHN RUSSELL,

des expéditionnaires des Etats-Unis en Haiti.

Monsieur le Colonel: Nous avons l'honneur de vous informer que l'Union Patriotique propose d'organiser avec le concours de la population de Port-au-Prince une manifestation en l'honneur de la Commission d'enquête sur le moment de son débarquement—Cette manifestation consistera dans un défilé vers les rues de la ville, due Champ de Mars au bord de mer, sans discours ni vivats.

Attestation de nos sentiments patriotiques et un hommage de justice et en l'impartialité du Sénat fédéral.

Ensemble à ce que nos futurs hôtes soient, dès leur première venue au pays, favorablement impressionnés par l'accueil de la part de la population, nous plaçons à compter sur l'appui de toutes les autorités et de la population, Monsieur le Colonel, l'assurance de mes sentiments de haute estime.

(Signé)

GEORGES SYLVAIN,
Administrateur-délégué.

UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS, FIRST BRIGADE, OFFICE OF THE BRIGADE COMMANDER,
Port au Prince, Haiti, October 3, 1921.

In reply to your letter of 29 September, 1921, I have to inform you that no official information regarding the visit you mention and until further action will be taken by me.

Yours,

JOHN H. RUSSELL.

JOHN H. RUSSELL,
Port au Prince, Haiti.

Senator ODDIE. Let me ask a question. Do you not think it assumes that this committee will have rendered its decision to before completing its investigation? In other words, you realization is to be a very complete and thorough one, a part of made now, and the balance of which will be made in Haiti, and of such an order may be begging the question somewhat?

Mr. HOWE. And committing this body to a conclusion in advance of its investigation?

Mr. ANGELL. In reply to your question, Senator, I would say I think that such a request or move emanating from this committee the raising of martial law in Haiti for the period of the visit there, accompanied by the other declarations which I have suggested in any sense a decision, nor even suggesting a decision in any ultimate sense on the part of the committee. Such a move looking toward the raising of martial law, and the publishing of such a proclamation suggested, would only be taking proper and, as I regard them, necessary steps by this committee in order to obtain a fair opportunity in Haiti what has taken place during the occupation, to afford people a full and fair opportunity to come before the committee and give testimony they deem pertinent and important, and therefore the committee would not presage in any sense its final conclusion only be a step taken by it to afford it an opportunity to pursue its investigation in Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. How would a fair opportunity for this committee's investigations in Haiti be prevented by the continuance of martial law? I develop your reasons on that.

Mr. ANGELL. As I have not been in Haiti personally, I am at a disadvantage, naturally, when called upon to give specific reasons or details in the first instance, advancing the request of the organization sent before this committee; in the second instance, I venture only on a personal conviction, somewhat in support of those requests, to the large portion of the Haitian people do not feel free at the present time to come forward and offer testimony.

Mr. HOWE. For fear of what?

Mr. ANGELL. They fear—whether justified or not, I am unable to say—reprisals of some nature on the part of either the American forces or the gendarmes, or the Haitian Government officials and those who are in the Haitian Government and with the American occupation, or against those who may testify adversely to the occupation.

Mr. HOWE. What would be the effect of the removal of martial law? It would not be to remove from authority the American gendarmerie officers, and the control of all other military officers in Haiti?

Mr. ANGELL. I fail to see why the raising of martial law would be a state of affairs, because the presence of the marine forces is as stated in the opinion of the Judge Advocate General of the United States, authorized in the treaty of 1915, and that the gendarmerie force was provided for by that treaty and the subsequent conventions, and the Congress of June 3, 1916, so the raising of martial law would have no effect, as I understand it, of suspending the legality of the Haitian gendarmes and marine officers and gendarmes.

Mr. HOWE. That was not what I meant to get your opinion on. I meant the suspension or termination of martial law permit arrests and imprisonments without the supervision or control of our military officers or our officers of the gendarmerie in the employ of the Haitian Government.

Mr. ANGELL. I do not think so. I think that the gendarmerie would continue to be the local police of the country, and the suspension of martial law would be merely the restoration of civil as distinguished from military law.

Mr. HOWE. And such civil law to be administered by whom?

Mr. ANGELL. By the Haitian Government, the Haitian native authorities, and by the gendarmes as the police force of the Government.

Mr. HOWE. Do the organizations which you represent prefer the suspension of civil law by the present Government to the administration of martial law as it is now being carried on?

Mr. ANGELL. Speaking generally, I believe they do.

Mr. HOWE. In your opinion, is there more danger of persecution of those who appear before this committee from the uncontrolled action of the Haitian people than from the uncontrolled action of the t or from the military officers in control of the administration?

ur question calls for an answer based on facts of which I have knowledge to form a personal judgment.

ur opinion, has this committee carried its investigation far enough to have a knowledge of the facts on which to base its recommendation of suspension of martial law? I understand you have been at the hearings before this committee?

of the hearings. I do not think that question has been asked by or the other, so far as I can recollect.

f martial law were withdrawn, do you consider that there would be various factions in Haiti taking advantage of that condition to start their factional fights again?

h as disturbances?

es.

ject to the limitation which I have previously referred to, on account of my unfamiliarity with the detailed facts there arising from the fact that I have not had the opportunity to be in Haiti, I would not object to this effect, that I can not conceive that the Haitians are pressing for a restoration to them of the essence and substance of government now controlled by the United States would be so foolish as to start factional disturbances, riots, and the like at the very time of the visit to Haiti, and thus afford the more food for the claim that the United States are not fit to govern themselves, and that martial law must be maintained indefinitely by the presence of our military forces.

ur recommendation, or the recommendation of the society for the suspension of martial law only for the visit of this committee?

irely. They do not go beyond that, and the publication of a proclamation such as I referred to in the beginning of my report.

d you, on your own responsibility, with no more information, would you have, order the suspension of martial law during the visit of the committee?

were in a position of authority to do so?

l based only on such knowledge as I have and such representation has been made to me?

; I think I should. In doing so I might concededly err on account of my position from the military point of view, but since you ask the question, I will reply that from my own personal point of view I am upon that side rather than do anything or refuse to do anything, even apparently, and whether I agreed with the opinion of the Haitians or not, militate against their feeling that the investigation conducted by this committee will be full, fair, and impartial.

do you think that this committee has sufficient knowledge of the conditions down there, gained from its investigations which you would justify any request from it for the suspension of martial law?

I have said before, I recollect no testimony which has been given on that subject, so that it is really a question de novo which I am asking this morning, and simply based upon the two petitions presented here and the letters to and from the Union Patriotique, the Interior, and Col. Russell.

the question asked and to such responsibility as might attach in making such a request, I should say that I feel that the committee very properly hear some evidence upon that point at this time, of vital importance, on the psychological ground—that is, of the Haitian people regarding the investigation being conducted by the committee—that if such a request is to emanate from this committee very shortly. Here we are at the end of October and the committee is to go to Haiti in about three weeks, as I understand. It is to get these things done, and if the committee delays until the departure from the United States any decision on this point is based on my testimony which it might feel necessary in order to arrive at a decision.

at any fair conclusion, then I feel fairly confident that the have slipped by to make the Haitian people feel that this is g ough investigation down there. In other words, if it is to be done now or in the very immediate future.

Mr. HOWE. Have you any witnesses immediately available for such testimony?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; I have; not here in Washington, that I know of. There are some witnesses—civilian witnesses—disinterested Americans who are willing and ready to offer information on that point and on the knowledge of Haitian conditions.

In connection with the question which you put to me, Mr. [redacted] should say that the request is not merely for the raising of money, but a little wider or further than that. For example, the letter of [redacted] I read—possibly you did not hear it at the moment—said he had no official advice as to the coming of this committee to Haiti and that he could not take any action at all upon the request of the United Nations for permission to stage a parade in honor of the arrival of the committee. The request, then, would be as much addressed to the desirability of the United States forces in Haiti informed officially of the arrival of the committee, such a reasonable request as that for permission to stage a parade and demonstration upon the arrival of the committee could be granted. Mr. [redacted] refused to grant it, saying he has no knowledge of it.

Maj. McCLELLAN. As I understand, the date of the request to sell to ascertain the date of the visit of this committee antedates the date on which this committee decided tentatively on the date of sailing.

Mr. ANGEL. I believe so.

Maj. McCLELLAN. Then the reply of Col. Russell to that fide and proper, was it not?

Mr. ANGELL. I have no doubt but what it was. I have never to make of Col. Russell's reply.

Mr. HOWE. Has the society which you represent made any request of the Government of Haiti for it to make a request of the Government of the United States to suspend martial law?

Mr. ANGELL. Not that I know of. It has made a request instance of the Department of the Interior for permission to which they desire to stage there, and the Department of which likewise that it has no official knowledge of the arm mittee and can do nothing.

Senator ODDIE. I would like to ask Gen. Butler for an opinion on the raising of martial law.

Gen. BUTLER. If you raise martial law down there, Sen are any United States troops at all in Haiti, you are going them murdered.

Senator Oppie. Some of the United States troops murdered

Gen. BUTLER. Yes, sir. We are only paid soldiers; we have nothing to do with the policy of our Government. We are only sent to the front to perform acts. We have nothing to do with the reason for which we are sent there. If we have no method of protecting ourselves, you had better let us go home. I feel strongly, because I have seen men cut up on the streets of Port au Prince last year, unarmed marines, two of them, cut up in the rear. Of course the Haitian courts did nothing. Why were they sent there? Their own people for jumping on us? You raise martial law, and you say it is a fight, because the marines are human and they will not be killed. Every time the flag goes we have got to have protection for the soldiers. They should bring us away.

Senator ODDIE. Another question, General. In your opinion of the rival factions in Haiti starting trouble if martial law is

Gen. BUTLER. No, sir; I do not think the rival factions w but any person who has been harboring a grudge against take it out of him. The marines would be the ones that w marines have the strictest orders about the use of their arms allowed to go at liberty under arms; they are perfectly help

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until Monday, Oct 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Washington, D. C.

met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, Senator presiding.

Members McCormick and Oddie.

Mr. Walter Bruce Howe and Maj. Edwin N. McClellan, United States, in their respective representative capacities, as herein-

BRIG. GEN. SMEDLEY D. BUTLER, UNITED STATES
MARINES, QUANTICO. VA.—Re-

General, at the end of the hearing last Thursday we were, as I to take up the so-called corvée system in Haiti, and I to get at it would be for you to tell us briefly what the is by law, and how the gendarmerie proceeded, with the law, to build roads.

The rural code, which was one of the Haitian laws, contains a that every citizen of Haiti to either pay a road tax or work for of the roads a certain length of time each month on the roads is the same law which we have in the United States. You work. The law had not been enforced for some time prior they had no roads. When we landed in Haiti there were 3 at a cost to the Haitian Government of about $51,000 a mile.
by members of the Haitian cabinet. This road was hardly to facilitate the bringing of products to market, and to and south closer together, we decided to build roads. There a feeling of antagonism on the part of the people in the people in the south, mainly because they could not communications. There were no roads. There were rivers that they except at great danger to themselves, and this feeling had increased after another until, as I said before, they had had seven resulting in the death of thousands of people. The Haitian Government for the construction of the roads, and without roads money except by borrowing it, and nobody would lend them was perfectly proper. They were unable to pay the interest on the money they already had, and it was perfectly reasonable that they lend them any money except under the old system of getting money. We stopped. That is, a collection of bankers would lend the provision that they should have all the revenue from a that system of borrowing money was ruinous to the country.
We decided that we would attempt to market what products to raise money in that way. The only way to get those products to market where they could be sold was over the roads. We then tried and found that we could afford $8,000 a month for the roads.

Where did that money come from?

That money came from the collection of external revenues in the general receiver of customs, an American official. That amount was allotted monthly. We did not build one new road in Haiti, build a new road in Haiti, because the French had had a considerable number of roads.

The CHAIRMAN. How many years ago?

Gen. BUTLER. The French were driven out in 1804, but the signs of the old bridges and old culverts were still evident and required no new engineering on our part. We simply repaired in the condition the old roads as provided for in the rural code.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt to ask if the general can submit with a map, at this or a subsequent session, which will be passable for motor traffic before this work was undertaken, or undertaken?

Gen. BUTLER. I can show you right here on that map. There are 3 miles of road before we started, from the city of Port au Prince to 3 miles from Port au Prince called Mardissant.

The CHAIRMAN. How many roads did you build?

Gen. BUTLER. During the time I was there we repaired a considerable number of miles of road.

The CHAIRMAN. How much money did you expend on that work?

Gen. BUTLER. The roads cost about $205 a mile. We had a considerable amount of hired skilled labor to build culverts, and we bought our cement and road machinery we owned, and the rest of the money was used for the corvee.

Mr. HOWE. General, what was your source of information that the 3 existing miles of road cost $51,000 a mile?

Gen. BUTLER. The statements made to me by members of the cabinet.

Mr. HOWE. During what period were these 470 miles of road built?

Gen. BUTLER. From the 1st of July, 1916, until the date of my departure—Haiti—the 9th of March, 1918.

Mr. HOWE. Does the revival of the corvee system, or the extension of the corvee system, date from about July, 1916?

Gen. BUTLER. From July, 1916.

Mr. HOWE. Will you describe the working of the corvee system?

Gen. BUTLER. The corvee worked in this way while I had command. I had little cards printed, notification cards, and lists of the names of the men who should work on the roads given the gendarmerie officers of the district, officials of that district, and the gendarmes then delivered the cards, notifying them that on a certain date they would report at a certain place to do their work or pay a certain tax.

The CHAIRMAN. They had the option?

Gen. BUTLER. They had the option. Nobody had any money, so they had to work. During the period they were working they were housed in barracks in order to amuse them dances were given them in the evening, somewhat like a barn raising here in America. I took the President and members of his cabinet at least once a week to call on the men and make speeches to them, and impress upon them that they were working for their own country and not for the white men.

On the 7th of November, 1917, the road work on the main highway, named after the President of Haiti, had progressed to such an extent that 75 miles of the 182 had been completed between Port au Prince and Cape Haitien.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the barn raising method and the speech making method of preserving the esprit de corps of the corvee continue; did it go straight through to the end of your tour?

Gen. BUTLER. To the end of my time. We opened the La Cite with great ceremony, the President and all the members of his cabinet, with automobile loads of distinguished citizens being present, on the 1st of March. I left Haiti on about the 3d of March.

The CHAIRMAN. And during all that time had the corvee been abolished?

Gen. BUTLER. Fed?

The CHAIRMAN. And housed?

Gen. BUTLER. And housed; and not a single complaint on the subject had ever reached my ears.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there during that time instances of one district performing work in another district?

Gen. BUTLER. Not to my knowledge, and there were no complaints against it. I was well aware that this thing was capable of tremendous results.

ed by the Haitians previously, and was determined that there of that kind, and the men were only used on the roads that ed. There were plenty of people to do it, and there was no em from one place to another.

There was a density of population along the line of these ere was a density of population all along the line of these work. May I give some instances of the enthusiasm of the d work?

Yes.

There had little prizes of flags to hang on the gate posts where rticularly well done, in front of the properties. The Presi- ng with me, would stop at my request and make speeches to had done particularly well in front of their property, and hem very greatly. Men, women, and children would lay o keep the little holes filled up.

give an instance. On the 7th of November, when we had here 75 miles had been built, and about 100 more had to e cape, war had broken out in the United States, and I was e, and I wanted to see the road finished.

November, 1917, I took the President and two members of any other members of the Government to Gonaives on the and sent a band up ahead. He had been invited by the although no President had ever been there before, and they oot him if he came. But we all went up without any fire- g demonstration. We went to church on Sunday morning, orning we all rode out to the end of the road being then walked up along the road where all the corvee were working, made a speech to each gang of the corvee. They had the I said to him, "If you will trust me with some of your to the $8,000 a month I am getting, on the 1st of January d your cabinet and anybody else you want to Cape Haitien. of road to build, but we will build it in six or seven weeks, that money out of the taxes and take this additional road and issue a proclamation." They promptly voted at a meet- to turn over $400,000, which was given me on Wednesday tional food and additional effort, and after a lot of noise, ng the soldiers and the Government started immediately to behind the wheels, and on the 17th of December, five weeks er, I went to Cape Haitien in an auto, and on the 1st of ent and the Government, 27 truck loads of people, went to the first time that wheeled vehicles had ever traveled that ne French days there was a gap about 6 miles across a had to get out of their carriages and ride over on horseback. You filled that in?

s, sir; we drained it and cut the water off and embanked it.

first proposed the use of the corvee?

do not know, but I think it was a member of the Haitian ed this old law. The Government was heartily in favor of it, o introduce a letter of congratulation from the President of indicates his approval.

By all means.

reupon read the letter referred to, as follows:)

PRÉSIDENCE DE LA RÉPUBLIQUE, Port au Prince, le 10 janvier, 1918.

adarmierie d'Haïti, En Ville.

ERAL: Ma courte tournée du Nord s'est accomplie dans des éables pour que je n'éprouve pas le plaisir de vous exprimer on et de vous remercier de la part que vous avez que dans t. C'est, en effet, grâce aux grands travaux de réfection et routes publiques entrepris sous votre intelligente et éner- ie j'ai pu, en un si court espace de temps, me rendre dans le até, à ma vive satisfaction les progrès réalisés dans les l'excellent esprit qui anime leurs population. J'en augure brillant avenir de prospérité dans l'ordre et la paix.

En vous adressant mes plus cordiales félicitations, il m'est penser à vos dévoués auxiliaires à qui vous voudrez bien trans-sion de toute la gratitude de mon Gouvernement.

Veuillez agréer, mon cher Général, mes meilleurs remerciements sentiments toujours cordiaux.

[Translation.]

PRESIDENTIAL SEAT OF THE Port au Prince, Jan

To Gen. S. D. BUTLER,
 Chief of the Gendarmerie, d'Haiti, City.

MY DEAR GENERAL: My short tour of the north has been ac-conditions so agreeable that I hasten to express my entire sa-thank you for the part that you have had in this gratifying fact, thanks to the extensive work of reconstruction and repa-roads undertaken under your intelligent and energetic direction in so short a time to reach the north, where I witnessed, to m-tion, the progress realized in the regions visited and the excanimates their inhabitants. I predict for my country a brillianperity, amidst surroundings of order and peace.

Whilst tendering you my cordial felicitations, it is impossi-devoted assistants, to whom I beg you to express the gratitud-ment.

Kindly accept my sincere thanks and kind regards.

Mr. HOWE. During the continuance of this system, until you you ever receive any protest against the use of the corvée?

Gen. BUTLER. I never did, except in the case of employers and ask that the dates of the working of the men might be date to another in order that they might work on the plants

Mr. HOWE. But there was no protest against the system?

Gen. BUTLER. No.

Mr. HOWE. How long did the corvée workers have to work?

Gen. BUTLER. I do not remember the exact time prescribed

The CHAIRMAN. That is in the record, in the statement of the department.

Gen. BUTLER. They worked exactly according to the Haitian and no less.

Mr. HOWE. Did they ever attempt to escape or run away was up?

Gen. BUTLER. No; and, in fact, after the completion of the Haitien, it was with the greatest difficulty that we got 4,000 of
 They were on our hands for a month, and it worried me to c-to feed them. They enjoyed this dancing; they enjoyed the enjoyed the housing.

Mr. HOWE. How far away did they live?

Gen. BUTLER. Right around in the neighborhood; but they tion, they liked the big assembly, they liked the voodoo dancinvisits, and, in fact, when I visited Haiti last year I visited tion run by a former gendarmerie officer, who had had these 4 the road from Ennery to St. Michel, and he still had in his never been able to get rid of 1,200 of the original corvée labor-and made speeches to them through an interpreter, and there ing and yelling. He had never been able to get them to go hom-

There was not one single thing we ever did relative to the Haiti that did not have the full knowledge and consent of Haiti, because I took it all to him; I saw him daily.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know of any instances where people escorvée, or attempting to escape, were shot?

Gen. BUTLER. I do not.

Mr. HOWE. Did you ever hear of such instances?

id, but upon investigation I found them to be groundless gh what instrumentality did you recruit the corvee?

corvee was hardly recruited; it was notified, and it came.

notified it? Who carried the cards?

cards were carried around by the local patrols, by the gen-out every day, but, as I said before, in this connection we th the local Haitian officials, who knew the people much you left the corvee system was in full blast?

full blast, and, as I said before, just before I left we made the President and his cabinet and myself, in order to see it.

ave no particular knowledge of anything which might have the stopping of the corvee system?

ave not, except that I have heard it was abused.

that is not your personal knowledge?

that is not my personal knowledge. I have no personal stopped about seven or eight months after I left. I know

You were present in Haiti when the legislature was dis-re you not?

as, sir.

The testimony of other witnesses has indicated that if men ree, or prisoners, were harshly used, that harsh usage was t part to the native gendarmerie. How were the gendarmes method did you have for selecting men for service in the had recruiting regulations and requirements. We took the what was the standard?

standard was 5 feet 4 inches, if I remember correctly, to 6 originally to take only those who could read and write, but ufficient men to fill the gendarmerie. We examined them ully, and as nearly as we could, morally, and inquired about le among whom they lived in order to get the best material how much were they paid?

y were paid $10 a month and food and clothing—that is, how would that compare with the going wage in Haiti?

t was 50 gourdes a month, and the wage for an ordinary e a day, or about 25 gourdes a month.

nd he fed himself?

he fed himself; but we fed them.

ou had every reason to get the best men obtainable at that

sir. It cost us $275 per gendarme per year to feed, house, give him his medical and dental attention.

The noncommissioned officers of the gendarmerie were darmerie?

m the best class of privates.

The greater part of the commissioned officers were enlisted oned officers of the Marine Corps?

ginally, sir, all the captains and their seniors in the gen-missioned officers of the Marine Corps. All the lieutenants ed officers in the Marine Corps, first and second lieutenants.

Have any Haitians been made commissioned officers of the know?

ing my time there were two or three who were made, at the tion of the President, to act as lieutenants of his personal were not in command of the bodyguard. We had American missioned officers, but these were additional lieutenants.

Since your departure do you know whether any Haitians missioned officers of the gendarmerie?

lieve there have been some, but I am not sure.

The CHAIRMAN. If under the treaty the American Government is responsible for the gendarmerie, have you any idea about the school for the training of officers of the gendarmerie?

Gen. BUTLER. American officers?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, Americans, or natives?

Gen. BUTLER. If I had charge, I would appoint no Haitian gendarmerie, because they will abuse the natives. It is instinctive to abuse the inhabitants whenever they are given power. I would not do them, except as personal aids to the President.

The CHAIRMAN. In that connection, will you not give the impressions of the administration of justice in Haiti, whether in the 'tribunales' courts or the courts of general jurisdiction of first instance?

Gen. BUTLER. You mean, sir, whether it is well done?

The CHAIRMAN. Whether justice is sure—

Gen. BUTLER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And prompt?

Gen. BUTLER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And easy to be had by the poor man as well as the rich?

Gen. BUTLER. No, sir. In numbers and numbers of instances, we have been in jail years without trial, we discovered when we took over the system.

The CHAIRMAN. When you took over the prison system, the prisons, held by the Haitian authorities, numbers of prisoners were there for years pending trial?

Gen. BUTLER. There was no record of when they had been put in prison by their physical condition, they had been there for years, without trials and charges of any kind.

The CHAIRMAN. And in civil cases are the courts intelligent?

Gen. BUTLER. No, sir. May I give you an instance?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Gen. BUTLER. When an owner of a house desires to recover a renter—

The CHAIRMAN. A delinquent tenant?

Gen. BUTLER. A delinquent tenant, who has paid no rent for years, the court will and has, to my knowledge, made several decisions that the tenant can not be evicted until the tenant has found a place to live, and the court has fixed as much as six years for other accommodations.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think the whole judicature ought to be reformed?

Gen. BUTLER. I do, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe it can be reformed without assistance?

Gen. BUTLER. It can not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything more important to the Haitian people than the reformation of the judicature?

Gen. BUTLER. No, sir; it is the most important thing they have.

The CHAIRMAN. You regard the establishment of order, the communications, and the impartial administration of justice as more important than the judicial things that are necessary?

Gen. BUTLER. The three fundamental things that are necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any officer among the Judge and his subordinates, who, through his experience, is competent to give a report on the administration of justice in Haiti?

Gen. BUTLER. Not that I know of, sir. The Haitian courts have not been investigated with. We never investigated them.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean you had nothing to do with them?

Gen. BUTLER. Nothing to do with them. We kept our hands off the Haitian courts. We advised with the President, and urged proper judges, but we never interfered with the Haitian courts.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not know of any officer who might, in the regular line of his duties, have observed the administration of justice so that he might render an informed opinion?

Gen. BUTLER. No, sir; no officer any more than any other. I do not know of the functioning of the Haitian courts.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought that possibly somebody under the President, General, with a natural bent for the profession, might have

No, sir. The provisions of the treaty and the gendarmerie has no control over the Haitian courts, and we did not attempt

General, a moment ago you agreed that the establishment of opening up of communications, and the impartial administration the three bases of any progress. You have spoken of the ways which have been opened up. I have been interested to anything, had been done during the occupation for the im- agriculture, including the improvement of live stock, whether animals had been brought in, whether any experts in cotton or had been brought in by the occupation to improve the quality of land by the peasant, and to improve the methods of agriculture

During my time, sir, the American Government sent down from the Department of Agriculture two agricultural experts who spent, if I remember months in Haiti, and traveled all over it, accompanied by a doctor. They pointed out to us certain sections of land that should be used for agricultural products. On the strength of their recommendations, the general government land in those sections and set up, or attempted to set up, farms for the growing of beans and potatoes. We grew potatoes on about 6,800 feet, and made a number of experiments. The general government principal big farms, one near Cape Haitien in the north, and one when you go down there, and one outside of Port au Prince. We were very successful during my period, and, as I understand, the work on them is continued. The smaller district farms all disappeared, and we had no money to support them, and there may have been a lack of effort to get it know. For the breeding of cattle we made several efforts to get stock, but we were never able to get sufficient funds.

From the Haitian Government?

From the Haitian Government, to bring in the cattle, but we had no men and cane men, and private cotton concerns establish

Well, the sum, then, of the official effort was the study of the land for 8 or 10 weeks by two representatives of the Department of Agriculture, Washington, and the creation of the experimental farms of the

You see, sir, the Department of Agriculture took a part of the work of the gendarmerie. We were doing this.

I understand that.

What funds we had we had to take from the gendarmerie in the Department of Agriculture. We had no support from the Department of Agriculture. It was all effort on our part.

Did anything of the sort ever been undertaken by the Haitian Government, to your knowledge?

Not that I ever heard of. The Haitian Government, except on the part of the president himself, was not interested in our efforts.

As to the assembly, as I understand it, ordinarily there are deputies in the Haitian Congress? When they function as the deputies in the legislature, is that correct?

Yes, sir; they have the legislative corps.

Sometimes they meet together, and then they are known as a committee, is that the correct term?

That is correct, the national assembly.

Then sometimes they have met in a constitutional assembly?

That is correct.

In April, 1916, there was a national assembly terminated by the Haitian Government?

That is correct.

In 1917 there was a constitutional assembly terminated by the Haitian Government?

That is correct.

Do you have any personal part in, or have any personal knowledge of the national assembly in 1916?

Did not.

The assembly met in Port au Prince, is that right?

Gen. BUTLER. That is correct.

Mr. HOWE. Were you in Port au Prince at the time?

Gen. BUTLER. I was.

Mr. HOWE. But, in your official duties you had no official connection?

Gen. BUTLER. No official connection.

Mr. HOWE. Or private connection?

Gen. BUTLER. No private connection either.

Mr. HOWE. In 1917, when the constitutional assembly was organized, you have any connection with it?

Gen. BUTLER. I did.

Mr. HOWE. In 1916, what American officer or officers had any connection with the termination of the national assembly?

Gen. BUTLER. I do not remember. I think a lieutenant of the gendarmerie serving directly under the orders of the President of Haiti, came with the keys of the assembly room, but I do not remember coming under my notice, officially or privately.

Mr. HOWE. Did you order officers on any detail connected with that assembly?

Gen. BUTLER. No; I did not order any one, and I knew nothing about it. Mr. HOWE. And if any of your officers had been employed on that detail, you would have known it, is that correct?

Gen. BUTLER. Officially; yes. No order passed through me. A gendarmerie officer did at the palace under the personal orders of the President might not have come through me at all. They were personal orders, his bodyguard.

Mr. HOWE. In 1917, will you describe what the President ordered and the part you took in carrying out his orders?

Gen. BUTLER. Shall I give you a detailed description, Senator?

Mr. HOWE. About 10 o'clock, on the morning of the 19th of June, 1917, I was in the Haitian Cabinet, Dr. Heraux, Minister of Finance, and Mr. L. J. L. of the Interior, came to the headquarters of the gendarmerie. They were speaking English very fluently, or quite fluently. said to me that the constitutional assembly is making nasty remarks about the President.

Mr. HOWE. Would that be the constituent assembly?

Gen. BUTLER. That is the constituent assembly. He said: "The assembly is making nasty remarks about the President. They are saying he is a bad man, and he is dishonest, and that he is pro-American. At 10 o'clock they are going to impeach him, and the President, he is going to be impeached, and he say to me, 'You tell Gen. Butler to take care of them and go down there and break them up.'" I said, "That is all right, sir, but I can't do it. I can't take the gendarmerie down there and break up your legislature. If the President orders it, he will have to do it himself. However, if he issues a decree to convene the assembly, that is his own business." He said, "Let us go and see what the President wants."

So we went to the palace, and on going upstairs an aide came and whispered that the President was sick, but that he ordered me to go down with the gendarmerie and dissolve the assembly. When I saw the President, he said, "Good morning," and said he was sick. I said I was very sorry to hear that, and I would like to find out what these orders were he was trying to do. He said, "I would like to find out what these orders were he was trying to do relative to the use of the gendarmerie. He came out of his room and went into the hall into the Cabinet room and he said, 'I want the assembly dissolved.' I said, 'All right, sir, then you must write a decree. It is not my business to sign it. I can not use the gendarmerie for that purpose without your order.' He said, 'I give you my order.' He said he could not sign a decree in the presence of the members of his cabinet, but that the assembly was to be convened. I said, 'Then secure the members of the Cabinet, and sign the decree.' He said that was impossible because one of the members was in Cap-Haitien. The simplest way would be for me to go down with the military force and dissolve it. I positively refused to do it. He then sent out and secured the members of the cabinet, and a decree which had been previously written, the one I have here in my hand, was brought in to the Cabinet room, and his four cabinet ministers signed it, the President being sick. He held it in his hand and said, 'How shall we do it?'

is customary for a member of your cabinet to take this and reply."

Others looked from one to the other, and Dr. Heraux said, "I will take it. They will be hissed, and maybe they will be shot at. I looked at me and said, 'You take it.' I said, 'I am permitted: I am just a messenger, but there may be bloodshed.'" Others in the assembly room, sent there each morning before the order, at the request of the presiding officer, Mr. Stenlo, president of the Senate, and a man named Hillaire, who was a member of the House of Deputies. When meeting as a constituent assembly, but the two sat together behind the speaker's desk, and the presiding officer the gendarmes were sent each morning before the order: and that same force—the police force—was at that assembly room.

Under the command of an American officer?
Under the command of an American officer, a captain of the corps of gendarmes. When I said I was willing to carry this I well there might be shooting, as on one occasion a revolutionary casket of a murdered President right in the church, so during the ceremony when they started to shoot. It was not desired that the minister shot, so I offered to take this down, which I did. I went down amidst hisses and jeers, which had no effect, of course, except that I had a communication from the President of the Republic down from behind the speaker's desk, walked over to me and said, "I will see it," and I handed it to him and he read it and said, "I will read this to the assembly." I said, "That is the reason I am here, so that you might read it." He went up behind the speaker's desk and reading it he entered into a vicious assault upon me and the Americans, and referring to us as foreign dogs and devils in the assembly. The gendarmes, who had previously been Haitian, had taken part in this dissolving function about every six months. They had been accustomed to shoot at this stage of the game, and they were criticized they all commenced to load their rifles, which caused confusion, and we had to suspend operations until we ran out the cartridges out of their guns. I was their chief, and I was in my cause, because I paid them and fed them and treated them well. When we started, after the cartridges were withdrawn, and the gendarmes took their seats.

They were quite alarmed, and some of them took refuge under their desks. On previous occasions a number of them had been shot by the Americans. He started in again to make remarks derogatory to the Americans. The second time the gendarmes thought to themselves, as was said to their sergeants, "Surely the time has now come to shoot," and they commenced to shoot, which resulted in much confusion. We unloaded our rifles and told the officers not to allow them to do that any more; we withdrew from the meeting. And then Mr. Vincent read this, at the same time he came down from behind the desk and advanced upon me. He commenced shouting and picking up their hats and their notes and papers. The meeting was out, and the presiding officer came forward with this paper, and with a look of intense hatred upon his face, he said, "Now I am in for a cussing." Instead of that he said, "General, I am hungry." It was the end of his political career. He was waving the paper around, and realizing that the Haitian Government down there would dodge the issue and the Americans, I just reached over and took it out of his hand.

He said, "I am hungry?"
"I am hungry," which was an invitation for me to invite him out.

This free belongs to the files of the Government of Haiti but not responsible or charged with exercising undue force in displaying, and well realizing they might deny the existence of this, I wish to place it in the files of the United States Senate, if you do so.

File the original and the copy.
This is the original and the translation.

(The original of the decree referred to was filed with translation of which is as follows:)

[Translation.]

DECREE—DARTIGUENAVE, PRESIDENT OF HAITI

Considering that in order to efficiently develop its agricultural commercial resources, and to prepare a better chance of success for the generations to come, the Republic of Haiti has signed a convention with the United States.

Considering that in order to arrive at the application of this convention to derive all the benefits that it admits, certain constitutional reforms are necessary, free of party spirit and inspired by the desire to open up into the channels of progress and civilization.

Considering that it is with this purpose that the two Governments and their Legislative Corps have been organized and called upon to carry out a constitutional reform in the National Assembly, and that, far from being in accordance with the idea which gave birth to the convention of September 19, 1914 (far from) offering to foreign capital the guaranty which it expects, the National Assembly has had no other preoccupation but to give free rein to political rancor and to hinder the realization of a program undertaken jointly by the two Governments.

Considering that the national welfare makes it imperative to suppress the state of anarchy which animates the National Assembly and to take measures in order to facilitate the development of agriculture, to improve the public education, and to stabilize the finances of the nation.

With the advice of the council of the Secretaries of State.

DECREE.

ARTICLE I. The Chamber of Deputies and the Senate are hereby dissolved.

ART. II. The present decree will be published and enforced in all the Secretaries of State wherever concerned.

Delivered at the national palace at Port au Prince the 19th day of the month of the one hundred and fifteenth year of independence.

DARTIGUENAVE

OSMIN CHAMPEL

Secretary of State of the Interior

FURCY-CHATELAIN

Secretary of State of the Navy

Dr. EDMOND F.

Secretary of State of Finances and

Charge par interim with Public Works

Secretary of State of the Colonies

Mr. HOWE. Were there any subsequent developments to this constituent assembly?

Gen. BUTLER. There were. One member of the cabinet was called in the morning, and all the members called upon the President several days asking for other jobs. He was much worried about no other jobs to give them. There was no disorder. I was called, and saw the show. The old gentleman was much worried about no positions for them. There was no disorder. In fact, the people were well contented, as they expressed it.

Mr. HOWE. Was there any need for any action by the gendarmes?

Gen. BUTLER. Not the slightest.

Mr. HOWE. Did any other members of the United States Government take any action independent of the action of the gendarmerie in connection with the prorogation?

Gen. BUTLER. No; there were no marines present except the gendarmes acting as officers in the gendarmerie.

Mr. HOWE. Were you personally armed when you went down?

Gen. BUTLER. I was not.

Mr. HOWE. You carried no weapons of any kind?

Gen. BUTLER. I carried no weapon, and never did while going ou while you were at the chamber, during the time when or at any other time in the chamber, have a weapon in l not, nor on my person. None of the other officers, except form, ever carried firearms except in line with troops. The tly peaceful, and I went everywhere without arms and ersonally without firearms and never had a guard for him.

Haiti in a Ford automobile without firearms of any kind.

do you know about the state of the prisons down there n, and what, if anything, was done about the condition of the occupation?

n the prisons were turned over to us by the President, they cription. There were no records to show when the prisoners nd why they were confined, and when they were to be re-rotten with disease and filth, and it is impossible to derison in Haiti. We had an allotment of $8,000 a month for he prison system, that allotment being made by the financial nder his control derived from customs receipts. We started one in the penitentiary in Port au Prince and one in the ien. We reorganized the prison system, so that prisoners erve were transferred to the penitentiary in Port au Prince bservation, and I personally visited that prison on an aver-Those with over 30 days and less than 6 months to serve prisons at Cape Haitien and Aux Cayes, the two very big 0 days to serve, the short timers, were placed in the local the two big prisons at Cape Haitien and Port au Prince we hools. The prisoners built the prisons themselves. We concrete work, and you will see when you go down there, model prison, with concrete cells. We taught them to make automobiles, to make shoes, to make clothing, to make them the tinner's trade.

arenthetically, are there any trades in the island? Are tsmen?

; those that I have mentioned.

ou taught them, but there were none before?

yes; they had certain trades, not very well performed, any he instruction of the commissioned or noncommissioned offi-Corps who had known these trades on the outside before these men were taught. The prison system developed to we granted prisoners liberty in the evening to go home, orning the roll call showed more prisoners than we were endo you account for that?

ause they were well fed, well cared for, and well housed ically. We attended to them and took care of them. There rm given them—to the liberty prisoners—and all except the home in the evening and spend the night with their families e earnings which we derived from the sale of their products nities, that were naturally destitute during the time they arnings as we could get. We made all the clothing for the trousers, and blouses, and made ourselves nearly self-ou correct the records so that everybody in prison had a rec-ot in and as to when his term was up?

ess there was some charge against a man or something defin and started afresh.

hereafter kept these records?

hereafter kept very accurate records.

esting for the Senate to know that during the year 1917, rison work was done, there were about two violent deaths s considered by the President and all Haitians with whom ng a remarkably quiet state. Those were not shot by the ere murders.

g that year, 1917, were there any engagements between the rauders or Cacos?

that I remember.

Mr. HOWE. To go back again to the prorogation of the cons I have one more question to ask. Did you at any time, or any your orders, search the archives of the two chambers and remments?

Gen. BUTLER. I did not nor did anybody under my orders.

Mr. HOWE. On June 20 or on any other date?

Gen. BUTLER. No.

Mr. HOWE. The document which you have produced here is order of the President, you obtained from Vincent?

Gen. BUTLER. Vincent himself.

Mr. HOWE. At the moment?

Gen. BUTLER. At the moment.

Mr. HOWE. And in the presence—

Gen. BUTLER. Of all the assembly.

Mr. HOWE. Of all the assembly?

Gen. BUTLER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. There are three points we want to cover—tion, and a word about the physical condition and aspect of a after taking it.

Gen. BUTLER. Senator, I wonder if I might be permitted to this decree of the President, dissolving the senate?

The CHAIRMAN. We had it once; it is in the record.

Gen. BUTLER. Will you read it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I read it in French just now.

General, will you say something, first, about the physical towns when you assumed command and at the termination of the gendarmerie, something about the sanitation, and, about education?

Gen. BUTLER. When we took over the police of Haiti on the 1916, we found no sanitary precautions in any town in Haiti sewerage system even in Port au Prince.

The CHAIRMAN. Had the streets of Port au Prince at that ti

Gen. BUTLER. Partially paved, sir, under a concession, and continued throughout the time I was there. There was no wa of the towns, with the exception of Port au Prince and Gonaï water system in several of the larger towns, but very poor pre one fairly good hospital in Haiti, and that was run by the Haitien. The others were abominable. There was absolut sanitary nature. We immediately commenced to influence t little towns, as well as the large ones, to clean up their habit of the little towns, whenever the communal magistrate would money from his internal receipts and when we could spare an armerie funds, we bought little hand pumps and made litt Instead of the open bucket well which was filled with disease. street lanterns so that they might be able to see and go about at night; we built gutters and did whatever we could in a p the expenditure of money, to make the towns more sanitary a

The CHAIRMAN. Would they do any work, under your influ the streets?

Gen. BUTLER. Yes; they worked very well under our influ

The CHAIRMAN. Did they surface the streets in the towns?

Gen. BUTLER. Yes, sir; we surfaced the streets in the tow sidewalks, and we found in 90 per cent of the cases the hearti the part of the civil officials and of the townspeople.

Mr. HOWE. Who did the actual labor?

Gen. BUTLER. The people of the towns themselves. We had them, and they would simply fix up in front of their habitati own movement, just like the roads. Then, when a town had degree of cleanliness, and when they were very proud of it, invited the President to come to see it, and it was an occasion That was one of the methods used by us in encouraging them promise of a big fête day, with the presence of the Presid dardmerie there. They would make great efforts to clean up.

Mr. HOWE. Under whose supervision was that work done gendarmerie officer?

Gen. BUTLER. Under the local gendarmerie officer. We had with medicine, in every town, in which we had a medical office the Hospital Corps of the Navy.

the confidence of the poorer people, the peasants, in our general, one instance I would like to quote: In a town called Las the woman brought her baby to the gendarmerie office for safe- went to market. That became in the towns quite the custom, little nurseries where we took the babies and cared for them went out to work. The women do all the work; the men the women are the hard workers.

to do any work except what they have to do in accordance with it around and toast in the sun. Our sympathies were entirely because they really did work. They walked miles and miles. The life of the market women is rather interesting. One of it is the market system, because they are on the road all the left Las Cohobas one morning with a bunch of bananas, and whole week she came back one night with a bunch of another r to the banana. She spent a whole week, and she had one anas when she got back than when she started out, but she of that end of the world and she was well repaid.

Was there any complaint of the corvée system on the part of

No; the women enjoyed seeing the men work; they had been long. In fact, the market women developed this. They were e decent places to walk, instead of scrambling down the stream they came along they would almost invariably stop and throw ds. They were not required to work. They kept the nation e men built the roads.

em was deplorable. In fact, there was no school system. They , with thousands of instructors, and the other day I quoted how the character of the instructors, of sending a check for ool-teacher at Fort Liberté and instructing the gendarmerie ceipt, and the school-teacher could not sign the receipt. He teacher of writing; he was a teacher of reading. From that character of their school system. We brought from Louisiana knowledge of the Creole language. There are two languages in and one French.

Could he speak the Creole pato's? uite well.

Where did he learn that?

n Louisiana. It is similar to the Louisiana Creole. He had anges, due to the distance. It changes a little. He became t education and an adviser to the minister of public educa- was not very successful, because advising a minister, unless ower, is futile. So we in the gendarmerie branched out as ture, and began to erect modest little schoolhouses of ma- ould obtain on the ground.

Where did you get the labor?

he labor was provided in the same way that we built the

The people volunteered?

hey volunteered, and it was a long process. We hired one t together, and then the rest, in the afternoons or some t b'g piles of stone, and he would work the next day. I d found quantities of scrap, corrugated iron from burnt them Government buildings, and collected that at the ja'ls, after rebuilding the old jails, we used in the construction s. We had no windows or doors, but simply high-walled tent e time I was there we built 17 of the schoolhouses.

about the teachers?

